Justices of assize and of peace have power to inquire of and punish extortions of coroners, and also their defaults. Stat. Ibid. By the Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29. for every inquisition, not taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, which shall be taken by any coroner in any township or place contributory to the rates directed by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. the sum of 20 s. and for every mile which he shall travel from the place of his abode, the further sum of 9 d. shall be paid him out of the money arising by the said rates. And that for every inquisition taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, so much money not exceeding 20 s. shall be paid him as the justices at sessions shall think fit to allow, out of the money arising from the said rates. Provided that over and above the recompence hereby appointed for inquisitions taken as aforesaid, the coroner who shall take an inquisition upon the view of a body slain or murdered, shall have the fee of 13 s. 4 d. payable by Stat. 3 H. 2. payable out of the goods of the slayer or murderer, or out of the amercements upon the township, if the slayer or murderer escape. Coroner taking further fees guilty of extortion. Provided, that no coroner of the King's household, and of the verge of the King's palaces, nor any coroner of the Admiralty, nor of the County Palatine of Durham, nor of the city of London and borough of Southwark, or of any of the franchises belonging to the said city, nor any coroner of any city, borough, town, liberty or franchise not contributory to the rates directed by Stat. 12 G. 2. c. 29.

or within which such rates have not been usually assessed, shall be intitled to any fee, recompence or benefit given by this act.

With regard to the Punishment of Coroners for Misbehaviour.

If a coroner be remiss in coming to do his office, when he is sent for, &c. he shall be amerced by virtue of the above mentioned statute De coronatoribus. 8. P. C. 51. Salk. 377. H. P. C. 170.

If a coroner hath been guilty of any corrupt practice, bribery, &c. in taking the inquisition, amelius inquirendum may be awarded for taking a new one by special commissioners, &c. Coroners concealing felonies, &c. are to be fined, and suffer one year's imprisonment. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 9. Also for mismanagement in the coroner, filing the inquisition may be stopped. 1 Mod. 82. A coroner's inquisition is not traversable: If it be found before the coroner super visum corporis, that one was felo de se, the executors or administrators of the deceased, it is said, cannot traverse it. 3 Inst. 55. But it has been held that the inquest being moved into B. R. by certiorari, may be there traversed by the executor or administrator of the deceased. 2 Hawk. 54. And it hath been adjudged, that the inquisition of felo de se is traversable; though sugam fecit is not. 2 Leo. 152.

If a coroner be convicted of extortion, wilful neglect of duty or misdemeanor in his office, the court before whom he shall be so convicted, may adjudge that he shall be removed from his office.

Coroner of the King's Household, Hath an exempt jurisdiction within the verge, and the coroner of the county cannot intermeddle within it; as the Coroner of the King's House may not intermeddle within the county out of the verge. 2 Hawk. 45. If an inquisition be found before the coroner of the county, and the coroner of the verge, where the homicide was committed in the county, and it is so entered and certified, it will be error. 4 Rep. 45. But if a murder be committed within the verge, and the King removes before any indictment taken by the Coroner of the King's Household; the coroner of the county, and the Coroner of the King's House shall inquire of the fame: And according to Sir Edw. Coke, the coroner of the county might inquire thereof at the common law. 2 Hawk. 45. 2 Inst. 550. If the same person be coroner of the county, and also of the King's House, an indictment of death taken before him as coroner, both of the King's House, and of the county, is good. 4 Rep. 46. 2 Inst. 134.

By the Stat. 33 H. 8. 12. Par. 1 & 3. It is ordained, That all inquisitions made upon the view of persons slain, within any of the King's palaces or houses, or any other house or houses wherein his Majesty shall happen to be abiding in his royal person, shall be taken by the Coroner for the time being of the King's Household, without any assisting of another coroner of any shire within this realm, by the oaths of twelve or more of the yeoman officers of the King's Household, returned by the two Clerks Controllers, the Clerks of the Checks, and the Clerks Marshal, or one of them, of the said Household, to whom the said Coroner of the Household shall direct his precept; and the said Coroner shall certify under his seal, and the seals of such persons as shall be sworn before him, all such inquisitions before the Master or Lord Steward of the Household; who hath the appointment of such coroner, &c.

Coroner of London. By the charter of King Ed. 4. the mayor and commonalty of London may grant the office of coroner to whom they please; and no other coroner but he that belongs to the city, shall have any power there: Also the Lord Mayor, &c. may chuse two coroners in Southwark. When any one is killed, or comes to an untimely death in London, the coroner upon notice shall attend where the body is, and forthwith cause the beadles of the ward to summon a jury to make the necessary inquiry, how such person came by his death: And after inquisition taken, he shall give a certificate to the churchwarden, clerk, or sexton of the parish, to the intent the corpse may be buried: The coroner's fees here formerly amounted to 25 s. now to above double that sum; unless the friends of the deceased are poor, and then he shall execute his office for nothing. Cit. Lib. 46, 47. The coroners in London and Middlesex, and in other Cities, &c. may bail felons and prisoners in such manner as hath been heretofore accustomed. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. sect. 6. 1 Lill. Abr. 327. What anciently belonged to coroners, you may read at large in Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5, 6, 7 & 8. Britton, cap. 1. and Fleta, lib. 1. c. 18.

Corone, (Fr.) All matters of the crown, were heretofore reduced to this law head or title; they are the things that concern treason, felony, and divers other offences, by the common law, and by statute; of which some are greater, and others less, according to their nature. Sh. p. Epit. 367.

Corporal Oath, And how it is administered. See Oath.

Corporation, (Corporatio) Is a body politick or incorporate, so called, as the persons are made into a body, and of capacity to take and grant, &c. Or it is an assembly and joining together of many into one fellowship and brotherhood, whereof one is head and chief, and the rest are the body; and this head and body knit together, make the corporation: Also it is constituted of several members like unto the natural body, and framed by fiction of law to endure in perpetual succession. And of corporations some are sole, some aggregate; sole, when in one single person, as the King, a Bishop, Dean, &c. Aggregate, which is the most usual, consisting of many persons, as Mayor and Commonalty, Dean and Chapter, &c. Likewise corporations are spiritual or temporal; spiritual, of Bishops, Deans, Archdeacons, Parsons, Vicars, &c. Temporal, of Mayors, Commonalty, Bailiffs and Burgeesses, &c. and some corporations are of a mixt nature, composed of spiritual and temporal persons, such as heads of colleges and hospitals, &c. All corporations are said to be Ecclesiastical, or Lay.

Herein is to be considered:

- I. How they are created.
- II. Their Interest and Jurisdiction.
- III. How far their Acts are binding.
- IV. How they are dissolved.

I. How Corporations are created.

Bodies politick or incorporate may commence and be established three manner of ways, viz. by prescription, by letters patent, or by act of parliament; but are most commonly by patent or charter. 1 Inst. 250. 3 Inst. 202. 3 Rep. 73.

In making aggregate corporations, there must be, 1. Lawful authority. 2. Proper persons to be incorporated. 3. A name of incorporation. 4. A place, without which no corporation can be made. 5. Words sufficient in law to make a corporation. 10 Rep. 29, 123. 3 Rep. 73. The words incorpora, funcla, &c. are not of necessity to be used in making corporations; but other words equivalent are sufficient: And of ancient time, the inhabitants of a town were incorporated, when the King granted to them to have Guillem Mercatoriam. 2 Danv. Abr. 214. He that gave the first possessions to the corporation, is the founder. The parishioners or townsmen of a parish or town; and tenants of a manor, are to some purposes a corporation. Co. Lit. 95, 342. If the King grants lands to the inhabitants of B. hereditibus & successoribus suis, rendering a rent, for any thing touching these lands, this is a corporation; though not to other purposes: But if the King grants lands inhabitantibus de B. and they be not incorporated before, if no rent be reserved to the King, the grant is void. 2 Danv. 214. If the King grants Hominibus de Islington to be discharged of toll, this is a good corporation to this intent; but not to purchase, &c. And by special words the King may make a limited corporation, or a corporation for a special purpose. Ibid.

London is a corporation by prescription; but though a corporation may be by prescription, it shall be intended that it did originally derive its authority by grant from the King; for the King is the head of the commonwealth, and all the commonwealth, in respect of him, is but one corporation; and all other corporations are but limbs of the greater body. 1 Lill. Abr. 330. A mayor and commonalty or corporation, cannot make another corporation, or commonalty. 1 Sid. 290. The city of London cannot make a corporation, because that can only be created by the the crown; but London, or any other corporation, may make a fraternity. 1 Salk. 193.

No persons shall bear office in any corporation, &c. but such as have received the sacrament of the church, and taken the oaths. Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 1. But see the Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 6. confirming officers in corporations. See By-Laws.

What persons are capable of being elected members of a corporation, see Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, p. 23.

II. Of the interest and jurisdiction of corporations.

When a corporation is duly created, all incidents, as to purchase and grant, sue and be sued, &c. are tacitly annexed to it; and although no power to make laws is given by a special clause to a corporation, it is included by law in the very act of incorporating. 1 Inst. 264. A new charter doth not merge or extinguish any of the ancient privileges of the old charter. And if an ancient corporation is incorporated by a new name, yet their new body shall enjoy all the privileges that the old corporation had. Raym. 439. 4 Rep. 37. There are usually granted in charters to corporations, divers franchises; as felons goods, waifs, estrays, treasure trove, deodands, courts, and cognizance of pleas, fairs, markets, assize of bread and beer, &c. 4 Rep. 65. Actions arising in corporations may be tried in the corporation courts; but if they try actions which arise not within their jurisdictions, and encroach upon the Common law, they shall be punished for it. Lutw. 1571, 1572.

There may be a corporation without a head: but where there is a head, all acts ought to be by and to the head; nor can they sue without such head; and if he dies, nothing can be done in the vacancy. 10 Rep. 30, 32. 1 Inst. 264. If land be given to a mayor and commonalty for their lives, they have an estate by indentment not determinable: so it is, if a feoffment be made of land to a dean and chapter, without mention of successors. In case of a sole corporation, as bishop, dean, parson, &c. no chattel, either in action or possession shall go in succession; but the executors or administrators of the bishop, parson, &c. shall have them: but it is otherwise of a corporation aggregate, as a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, and the like: for they in the judgment of law never die. And yet the case of the chamberlain of London differs from all these; his successor, in his own name, may have execution of a recognizance acknowledged to his predecessor for orphanage money; and the reason is, because the corporation of the chamberlain is by custom, which hath enabled the successor to take and have such recognizances, obligations, &c. that are made to his predecessor. Terms de Ley.

Though a sole corporation cannot generally take in succession goods and chattels, &c. yet it may take a fee-simple in succession, by the word successors. 1 Inst. 8, 9, 46. Aggregate corporations may take not only goods and chattels, but lands in fee-simple, without the word successors, for the reason afore mentioned. 4 Inst. 249. And succession in a body politick, is as inheritance in a body private. If a lease for years be made to a bishop and his successors, 'tis said his executors shall have it in autre droit; for regularly no chattel can go in succession in case of a sole corporation, no more than if a lease be made to a man and his heirs, it can go to his heirs. 1 Inst. 46.

Grants of corporations are to be by deed, under their common seal, and are good without delivery; for the common seal gives perfection to corporation deeds. Daw. 44. An obligation sealed with the common seal of a corporation, if the mayor signs it, he is suable if the corporation be dissolved: but if two of the members sign it, the particular persons are not bound by it. 2 Lev. 137. Raym. 152. A release of a mayor for any sum of money due to the corporation, made in his own name, is not good in law; the corporation must join and do it by their common seal. Terms de Ley.

A corporation which hath a head, may make a personal command without writing; but a corporation aggregate without a head cannot. Lutw. 1497. A corporation aggregate may employ any one in ordinary services, without deed; though not to appear for them, in any act which concerns their interest or title. 1 Ventr. 47, 48.

Such a corporation may appoint a bailiff to take a distress, without deed or warrant. 1 Salk. 191. But cannot without deed command a bailiff to enter into lands for a condition broken; for such command without deed is void. Cro. 815.

Though a corporation cannot do an act in pais without their common seal, they may do an act upon record; and the reason is, because they are stopped by the record to say it is not their act. 1 Salk. 192. A promise to a corporation is good without deed. 2 Lev. 252. The head of a corporation aggregate may not be charged with the act of his predecessor if it be not by common seal, or for such things as come to the use of the whole body or society. 1 And. 23, 196.

A corporation may do an act in that capacity, to one of themselves in his natural capacity; and any member in his natural capacity may perform an act to the corporation in its politic capacity; and so they may sue one another, in their distinct capacities. 1 Shep. Abr. 436. Trespas for an assault and battery, &c. will not lie against a corporation; but it must be brought against the persons that do the trespass by their proper names: though if the heads of the corporation trespass on a man in his ground, action of trespass lies against them for this: process of outlawry will not lie against a corporation; nor capias or exigent, but distress. 22 Aff. 67. 39 Ed. 3. 13. 21 Ed. 4.

A corporation cannot sue, or appear in person, but by attorney: they cannot commit treason or felony, or be excommunicate, &c. They may not be executors, or administrators, be jointenants, trustees, &c. Nor shall the members of a corporation be regularly witnesses for the corporation. 10 Rep. 32. 11 Rep. 98. 1 Inst. 134. But they may be disfranchised, and then be witnesses; though not surrender by consent. Yet in some cases the judges now admit their testimony without disfranchisement, where the interest is remote. Attachment doth not lie against a corporation. Raym. 152.

Corporations may have power not only to infranchise freemen, but to disfranchise a member, and deprive him of his freedom; if he doth any act to the prejudice of the body, or contrary to his oath, &c. Though for conspiring to do any thing contrary to his duty; or for words of contempt against the chief officers, he may not be disfranchised, but he may be committed till he find sureties for his good behaviour. 11 Rep. 98. 5 Mod. 257. A corporation cannot disfranchise for breach of a by-law. 1 Lill. 331. And one wrongfully disfranchised may be restored, and have his remedy by mandamus, &c. in B. R. An alderman or freeman of a corporation cannot be removed from his freedom or place without good cause, and a custom to remove them ad libitum is void, because the party hath a freehold therein. Cro. Jac. 540.

A person may be bound to the good behaviour for words spoke against mayors, &c. but he may not be indicted for it: and if justices of a corporation duty to do right, it is a forfeiture of their exemption from the inquiry of the justices of the county. Mod. Caf. 125, 164. Head officers of corporations are to redress abuses of merchant-strangers, &c. or the franchise shall be seized, Stat. 9 Eliz. c. 3. sect. 1. and have authority in many cases by statute; for which see Mayers.

No strangers shall sell by retail any woollen or linen cloth, or mercery wares, in corporate towns, except at fairs, on pain of forfeiture, &c. But such persons may sell wares by wholesale, and cloth of their own making by retail. 1 Ed. 2 P. & M. cap. 7. Bodies politick ecclesiastical may make leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, under the restrictions in the acts 1 Ed. 13 Eliz. &c. If land is given in fee to a dean and chapter, or to a mayor and commonalty, &c. and after such body politick or incorporate is dissolved, the donor shall have the land again, and not the lord by escheat. 1 Inst. 31.

The corporation of the city of London is to answer for all particular misdemeanors, which are committed in any of the courts of justice within the city; and for all other general misdemeanors committed within the city: so 'tis conceived of all other corporations. 1 Lill. Abr. 329. If a common officer of a town doth any thing for their common nse, it is reasonable the corporate town should be answerable for it. 1 Leon. 215.

III. How far the acts of corporations are binding.

A corporation is properly an investing the people of the place with the local government thereof, and therefore their laws shall be binding to strangers; but a fraternity is some people of a place united together in respect of a mystery and business into a company, and their laws and ordinances cannot bind strangers, for they have not a local power. Salk. 193.

No masters and wardens, &c. of any mystery, or other corporation, shall make any by-laws or ordinances in diminution of the King's prerogative, or against the common profit of the people; except the same be approved by the Lord Chancellor, or Chief Justices, &c. on pain of 40*l.*

And such bodies corporate shall not make any acts or ordinances for the restraining persons to sue in the King's courts for remedy, &c. under the like penalty. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. cap. 7. Ordinances made by corporations, to be observed on pain of imprisonment, or of forfeiture of goods, &c. are contrary to Magna Charta. 2 Inst. 47, 54.

But penalties may be inflicted by by-laws, which may be recovered by distress or action of debt: and a custom for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, to commit a citizen for not accepting of the livery, &c. was held a good custom, being for the good government of the city. 5 Mod. 320.

Corporations may not, by bond, or otherwise, restrain any apprentice, &c. from keeping shop in the corporation under the penalty of 40*l.* Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 5. In acts done by corporations, the consent of the major part shall be binding, by 33 H. 8. cap. 27.

IV. How corporations are dissolved.

A corporation may be dissolved, for it is created upon a trust; and if that be broken 'tis forfeited. 4 Mod. 58.

Corporations are dissolved by forfeiture of their charter, misuser, &c. upon the writ quo warranto brought; by surrender, or by act of parliament; and if they neglect to choose officers, or make false elections, &c. it is a forfeiture of the corporation. 4 Rep. 77.

But by Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4. No corporation shall be dissolved, for any default to choose a mayor, &c. but the electors are still to proceed to election; and if no election be made, the court of King's Bench shall issue a mandamus requiring the electors to choose such mayor, &c.

By 2 Ann. c. 20. Where persons intrude into the office of mayor, &c. of a corporation, a quo warranto shall be brought against the usurpers, who shall be ousted, and fined: and none are to execute an office in a corporation for more than a year. See further Black. Com. 1 V. 467, 476, 477, 479, 484. 2 V. 430. 3 V. 80. 4 V. 57, 432. And the Index to Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annals.

With respect to corporations, or communities of old, as observed by Robertson, the forming of cities into communities, corporations, or bodies politic, and granting them the privilege of municipal jurisdiction, contributed more than any other cause to introduce regular government, police and arts, and to diffuse them over Europe. Louis the Great, in France, to counterbalance his potent vassals, conferred new privileges on the towns situated within his domaine, called Charters of community, and formed the inhabitants into corporations, or bodies politic, to be governed by a council and magistrates of their own nomination. About the same period the great cities in Germany began to acquire like immunities; and the practice quickly spread over Europe, and was adopted in Spain, England, Scotland, and all the other feudal kingdoms. See Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 32, 34, &c.

Corpe, stealing of. If any one in taking up a dead body steals the shroud, or other apparel, it will be felony. 3 Inst. 110. 12 Rep. 113. 1 Hal. P. C. 515. But stealing the corpe itself, only, is not felony. Black.

Com. 4 V. 236. But 'tis punishable as a misdemeanor by indictment at Common law.

Corpus Christi Day, Is a feast instituted in the year 1264, in honour of the blessed sacrament: to which also a college in Oxford is dedicated. It is mentioned in the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21.

Corpus cum Causa, Is a writ issuing out of the Chancery, to remove both the body and record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the King's Bench, &c. there to lie till he have satisfied the judgment. F. N. B. 251. See Habeas Corpus.

Correktor of the Staple, Is a clerk belonging to the staple, that writeth and recordeth the bargains of merchants there made. 27 Ed. 3. stat. 2. cap. 22 & 23.

Corredium and Conredium, The same with corrodium. See Corody.

Corruption of Blood, (corruptio sanguinis) Is an infection growing to the state of a man, and to his issue; and is where a person is attainted of treason or felony, by means whereof his blood is said to be corrupted, and neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him or any other ancestor: also if he is of the nobility, or a gentleman, he and all his posterity by the attainder are rendered base and ignoble: but by pardon of the King, the children born afterwards may inherit the land of their ancestor, purchased at the time of the pardon or after; but so cannot they, who were born before the pardon. Terms de Ley.

If a man that hath land in right of his wife hath issue, and his blood is corrupt by attainder of felony, and the King pardons him; in this case, if the wife dies before him, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy, for the corruption of the blood of that issue: though it is otherwise, if he hath issue after the pardon; for then he should be tenant by the curtesy, although the issue which he had before the pardon be not inheritable. 13 H. 7. c. 17.

A son attainted of treason or felony in the life of his ancestor, obtains the King's pardon before the death of his ancestor, he shall not be heir to the said ancestor, but the land shall rather escheat to the lord of the fee by the corruption of blood. 26 Ass. pl. 32 H. 8. But if a man seised of lands hath issue two sons, and the eldest is attainted in the life-time of his father, and after the father dies seised; the youngest son shall inherit the lands as heir unto his father, if the eldest son leaves no issue alive: Contra, if he hath issue, which should have inherited but for the attainder; then the land shall escheat. 1 Inst. 8, 391. Dyer 48. 3 Inst. 211.

If the father of a person attainted die seised of an estate of inheritance, during his life, no younger brother can be heir; for the elder brother, though attainted, is still a brother, and no other can be heir to his father, while he is alive; but if he die before the father, the younger brother shall be heir. 2 Hawk. P. C. 457.

Corruption of blood from an attainder is so high that it cannot be absolutely saved but by act of parliament; for the King's pardon doth not restore the blood so as to make the person attainted capable either of inheriting others, or being inherited himself by any one born before the pardon. 1 Inst. 391, 392. 2 Hawk. 458. A statute which saves the corruption of blood, impliedly saves the descent of the land to the heir; and it prevents the corruption of blood so far: also it saves the wife's dower, &c. But nevertheless the land shall be forfeited for the life of the offender. 3 Inst. 47. 1 Hawk. 107. For counterfeiting the coin or clipping, there is no corruption of blood. Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 11. So on attainder of piracy, &c. And in felony by imbezilling the King's ordnance, armour, &c. 22, 23 Car. 2. c. 23. And therefore it shall not make any disinheritance of an heir, &c. See Attainder. And Black. Com. 2 V. 251. 4 V. 381, 406, 431, 433.

Corselet, (Fr. in Lat. corpuleum) Signifies a little body: and it is used with us for an armour to cover the body or trunk of a man, wherewith pikemen commonly set in the front and flanks of the battle were formerly armed, for the better resistance of the assaults of the enemy, and the surer guard of the soldiers placed behind, who were more slightly armed for their speedier advancing to and retreating from fire. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

Cossepent, (from the Fr. corps present) Is a word signifying a mortuary: and the reason why it was thus termin'd seems to be, that where a mortuary became due on the death of any man, the best or second best was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corps.—Ego Brianus de Brompton, &c. Volo corpus meum sepeliri in prioratu majoris Malverniae inter predecessores meos, & cum corpore meo Palefridum meum cum hernefo & equum summarium, cum lesto meo, &c. In Cusack MS. penes Gul. Dugdale, Mil. See Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 6. Mortuary. And Black. Com. 2 P. 425.

Corsued Bread, (panis conjuratus) Ordeal bread: it was a kind of superstitious trial used among the Saxons, to purge themselves of any accusation, by taking a piece of barley bread, and eating it with solemn oaths and execrations, that it might prove poison, or their last morsel, if what they asserted or denied were not punctually true. These pieces of bread were first execrated by the priest, and then offered to the suspected guilty person to be swallowed by way of purgation: for they believed a person, if guilty, could not swallow a morsel so accursed; or if he did, it would choke him. The form was thus: We beseech thee, O Lord, that he who is guilty of this theft, when the execrated bread is offered to him in order to discover the truth, that his jaws may be shut, his throat so narrow that he may not swallow, and that he may cast it out of his mouth, and not eat it. Du Cange. The old form, or exorcismus panis herdeae vel casei ad probationem veri, is extant in Lindenbrogius, pag. 107. And in the laws of King Canute cap. 6.—Si quis altari ministrantium accusatur, & amicis destitutus sit, cum sacramentalibus non habeat, vadat ad iudicium quod Anglice dicitur corsued, & fiat sicut Deus velit, nisi super sanctum corpus Domini permittatur ut se purget: from which it is conjectured, that corsued bread was originally the very sacramental bread, consecrated and devoted by the priest, and received with solemn abjuration, and devout expectance that it would prove mortal to those who dared to swallow it with a lie in their mouths; till at length the bishops and clergy were afraid to prostitute the communion bread to such rash and conceited uses, when to indulge the people in the superstitious fancies, and idle customs, they allowed them to practise the same judicial rite, in eating some other morsels of bread, blest or curs'd to the like uses.

It is recorded of the perfidious Godwin Earl of Kent, in the time of King Edward the Confessor, that on his abjuring the murder of the King's brother, by this way of trial, as a just judgment of his solemn perjury, the bread stuck in his throat, and choked him.—Cum Godwinus comes in mensa regis de nece sui fratris impetretur, ille post multa sacramenta, tandem per buccellam deglutendam abjuravit, & buccella gustata continuo suffocatus interiit.—Ingulph. This, with other barbarous ways of purgation, was by degrees abolished: though we have still some remembrance of this superstitious custom in our usual phrases of abjuration; as, I will take the sacrament upon it;—May this bread be my poison;—or, May this bit be my last, &c.

Cortis, (curtis) A court or yard before a house. Blount.

Cortilatum, (curtilagium) Is also a yard adjoining to a country farm. Cartul. Glaston. MS. f. 42.

Corus, A certain corn-measure heaped up, from the Hebr. cora, a bill: eight bushels of wheat in a heap, making a quarter, are of the shape of a little hill; and probably a corus of wheat was eight bushels; for we read in Braithon, Decem coros tritici five decem quarteria. Braith. lib. 2. c. 6.

Cordus, An ancient word for custom or tribute. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 562.

Cosenage, (Fr. cousinage, i. e. kindred, cousinship) Is used for a writ that lies where the tresail, that is, the father of the besail, or great grandfather, being seised of lands and tenements in fee at his death, and a stranger enters upon the heir and abates; then shall his heir have his writ of cosenage. Brit. c. 89. F. N. B. 221. A man shall not have a writ of cosenage of the seisin of his great grandfather, but shall be put to his writ of besail:

and if a person may have a writ of aiel, he shall not bring a writ of cosenage. Also on the death of an uncle, writ of cosenage doth not lie, because assise of mort d'ancestor may be had of his seisin: and cosenage lies not between privies in blood, no more than assise of mort d'ancestor, but the party must bring nuper obiit. New Nat. Br. 492. In writs of cosenage, aiel and besail, the tenant's answer that the plaintiff is not next heir, of the same ancestor by whose death he demandeth his lands, shall be admitted and inquired; and according to the same inquisition, the justices shall proceed to judgment. Stat. 13 Ed. 3. c. 20. See Booth on Real Actions. But now ejectments are generally used.

Cosening, Is an offence where any thing is done deceitfully, whether belonging to contracts or not, which cannot be properly termed by any special name. West Symb. pag. 2. sect. 68.

Coshering. As there were many privileges inherent by right and custom, allowed in the feudal laws; so were there several grievous exactions imposed by the lords on their tenants, by a sort of prerogative or seigniorial authority, as to lie and feast themselves and their followers at their tenants houses, &c. which were called coshering. Spelm. of Parliaments. MS.

Cosinus, A word mentioned by Blount for clean.

Costard, Apple, whence costard-monger, i. e. Seller of apples. Cartular. Abbat. Rading. MS. fol. 916.

Costera, Coast, sea-coast. — Richardum T. ad custodiam costeræ maris in com. Essex, per literas nostras patentes assignavimus, &c.—Memor. in Scaccar. Pasch. 24 Ed. 1.

Costs, Are expense litis, recovered by the plaintiff in a suit, together with his damages: and if the plaintiff be nonsuit or overthrown by lawful trial in any action, the defendant shall have costs. 4 Jac. 1. c. 3. Also putting off trials, insufficient pleas, &c. on their amendment, are liable to costs: but it has been held costs ought not to be paid for the putting off a trial, where no fault was in the party against whom it is moved; for costs are only to be paid by such persons which by their occasion have caused the other party to have been at extraordinary charges: and no costs shall be allowed for unreasonable motions, but only for such as the party was necessarily put unto. 1 Lill. Abr. 335, 337. The Common law doth not give costs in any case; but they are given by statute. See Stat. of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 1.

For the defendant on a writ of error, brought to delay execution, if judgment be affirmed, costs are allowed. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. So in actions of waste; debt upon the statute for tithes; in all suits by scire facias, for malicious trespasses, &c. 13 Car. 2. cap. 2. And by some statutes double and treble costs, and damages, are given: but in personal actions, actions of trespass, assault and battery, actions on the case for words, &c. if the debt or damage amount not to 40s. or the judge do not certify that the battery was sufficiently proved, &c. no more costs shall be allowed than damages. 43 Eliz. c. 6. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9. s. 136. Where several are made defendants in action of trespass, assault, &c. and one or more is acquitted, all of them shall have costs; unless the judge certify there was reasonable cause for making them defendants. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 11.

In an action of trespass removed out of an inferior court into B. R. by habeas corpus, the plaintiff shall have full costs, though the damages are under 40s. And so it has been held in action of the case for words, where special damage is received, &c. 1 Ld. Raym. 395. 2 Ld. Raym. 1588. On a judgment on demurrer upon a plea in abatement, costs are not allowed; they are given only where the merits of the cause are determined on the demurrer. Ibid. 992. No costs shall be allowed the defendant where the suit is commenced for the use of the King. 24 H. 8. cap. 8. And costs are not awarded against executors or administrators. Ibid. Nor for or against one that sues in forma pauperis. Though it has been adjudged that the King shall pay costs for an amendment; but contra for not going to trial, &c. 1 Salt. 193. And if executors bring an action in their own right, as for conversion or trespass, &c. in their own time, and a verdict pass against them, they shall pay costs. 2 Danv. Abr. 224.

Also if a plaintiff, being admitted in forma pauperis, be afterwards nonsuited, the usual course is to tax costs, and if not paid, to punish the plaintiff by whipping; but it is in the discretion of the court to spare both. 2 Sid. 261. Where a pauper plaintiff has a decree to recover with costs; he shall be allowed no more than he is out of pocket. Præced. Canc. 219. Sed qu.? An executor, defendant in equity pays no costs. Abr. Cas. Eq. 125.

An heir at law, suing for the family estate, where he shall not pay costs, see 1 Peer Williams 482. If a sum certain is given to a stranger by statute, as where 'tis given to the prosecutor, he shall have no costs, as he had no right of action till he commenced it; so in popular actions, whether the penalty is certain or not, there shall be no costs. 1 Salk. 206. 1 Lutw. 201. Where costs are allowed, it is not necessary that the jury should give the costs; but they may leave it to the court to do it, who are best able to judge of what costs are fitting to be given. 23 Car. B. R.

It is the course of the court of B. R. to refer the taxing of the costs to the secondary of the office, and not to make any special rules for such matters; except it be in extraordinary cases. 1 Lill. Abr. 338. Attachment lies where costs are refused payment: and where a plaintiff is nonsuited, action of debt may be brought for the costs; also the defendant may have a capias ad satisfaciendum against him. 1 Nelf. Abr. 550. Where costs are given after a verdict, the court will stop proceeding in the same court till they are paid, on motion made: but when costs are given for not going on to trial, a party may proceed, tho' they are not paid. Sid. 279. Sed. qu. if on a motion, the court would not stop proceedings till costs paid?

The awarding of costs (in equity) is always discretionary in the court: and in case of a great fraud, a person may be obliged to pay such costs as shall be ascertained by the injured party's oath. 2 Vern. 123. Where damages were before recoverable, and a statute increases them to double or treble the value, the plaintiff shall recover his double or treble damages; and costs also, as parcel of the damages, shall be trebled. 10 Co. 116. a. 2 Inst. 289. Hard. 152. Carth. 297.

But where a new statute gives either single, double or treble damages, where there were no damages recoverable before, there no costs shall be allowed, because the party can have nothing more than such new statute has already given, and that is damages only; for the statute of Gloucester cannot operate to add costs to what is given by a subsequent statute; because the new statute must be construed from itself, which gives damages only. 2 Inst. 285. 1 Salk. 205. Carth. 297. See Damages, &c. And see the Table to the Statutes at Large, 4th edition, in what cases double and treble costs are given. Also see a small octavo volume relating to costs, lately published by Mr. Serjeant Sayer, containing the general law of costs, with cases on all the statutes, very useful for practitioners, &c.

N. B. Costs are given on informations for not going to trial. The King v. James, Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annals, fo. 159. Statutes which give costs are to be taken strictly. Ibid. The King v. The Inhabitants of Glastonby, 357. Where a cause of action arises in the time of an executor, he is liable for costs (as plaintiff); but where he is obliged to name himself executor, he is not bound to pay costs. Ibid. Harris and Ux' v. Hanna, fo. 204, 205. There shall be no more costs than damages, where the judge certifies on Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 6. Walker v. Robinson. Wilf. par. 1. fo. 93. 2 Stra. 1232. Costs shall follow the verdict upon a trial by consent, or on a feigned issue. Rex v. Phillips. Wilf. par. 1. fo. 261. Herbert v. Williamson. Id. 324. Costs to be allowed when a cause goes off and remains untied for want of jurors. Sparrow v. Turner, C. B. Wilf. par. 2. fo. 366. See Index to Wilf. Rep.

Costs are allowed in Chancery, for failing to make answer to a bill exhibited; or making an insufficient answer: and if a first answer be certified by a master to be insufficient, the defendant is to pay 40s. costs; 3l. for a second insufficient answer; 4l. for a third, &c. But if the answer be reported good, the plaintiff shall pay the defendant 40s. costs. An answer is not to be filed, (till when, it is not reputed an answer) until costs for contempt in not answering are paid. Præf. Attorn. 1 edit. pag. 210, 212. If a plaintiff in Chancery dismisses his bill, or the defendant; or if a decree be obtained for the defendant, costs are allowed by Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16.

Cot. In the old Saxon signifies cottage, and so is still used in many parts of England.

Cotarius, A cottager: the cotarii, or cottagers, are mentioned in Domesday.

Cote and Cot. The names of places which begin or end with these words or syllables, have the signification of a little house or cottage: there are likewise dove-cotes, which are small houses or places for the keeping of doves or pigeons. Game Law, 2 par. fol. 133, 135. See Pigeon-House.

Cotellus, Cotetia, Both signify a small cottage, house or homestead. Cowel.

Coterellus. Cotarius and coterellus, according to Spelman and Du Fresne, are servile tenants: but in Domesday and other ancient MSS. there appears a distinction as well in their tenure and quality, as in their name. For the cotarius had a free socage-tenure, and paid a stated firm or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional customary services; whereas the coterellus seems to have held in mere villenage, and his person, issue and goods, were disposable at the pleasure of the lord.—Edmund Earl of Cornwall, gave to the bon-hommes of Asherugge, his manor of Chesterton and Ambrosden—una cum villanis, coterellis, eorum catallis, serviciis, scetis, & omnibus suis ubicunque pertinentibus. Paroch. Antiq. 310.

Coteswold, Is used for sheep cotes and sheep feeding on hills: from the Sax. cote and wold, a place where there is no wood.

Cotgare, A kind of refuse wool, so clung or clotted together, that it cannot be pulled asunder. By Stat. 13 R. 2. cap. 9. It is provided, that neither denizen nor foreigner shall make any other refuse of wools but cotgare and willen.

Cotland and Cotsethland, Land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage.—Dimidia acra terra jacet ibidem inter cotland, quam Johannis Goldering tenet, ex una parte, & cotland quam Thomas Webb tenet ex altera. Paroch. Antiq. 532.

Cotsethla, Cotsetle, The little seat or mansion belonging to a small farm. — Ego Thomas de C. dedi Deo & ecclesie Malmibury unam Cotsetle in Culern, cum omnibus pertinentiis. Cartular. Malmibur. MS.

Cotsethus, A cottage-holder, who, by servile tenure, was bound to work for the lord. Cowel. Cotseti are the meanest sort of men, now termed cottagers, And cotseti are those who live in cottages.—Villani vero vel cotiet, vel perdingi, vel qui sunt hujusmodi viles, vel inopes personæ, non sunt inter legum judices numerandi. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 30.

Cottage, (cotagium) Is properly a little house for habitation, without lands belonging to it. Stat. 4 Ed. 1. But by a later statute, the 31 El. cap. 7. No man may build a cottage, unless he lay four acres of land thereto; except it be in market-towns or cities, or within a mile of the sea, or for the habitation of labourers in mines, sailors, foresters, shepherds, &c. and cottages erected by order of justices of peace, &c. for poor impotent people, are excepted out of the statute. The four acres of land to make it a cottage within this law, are to be freehold, and land of inheritance: and four acres of ground holden by copy, or for life or lives, or for any number of years, will not be sufficient to make it a lawful cottage. 2 Inst. 737. Also the four acres in fee-simple, or fee-tail, must lie near the cottage, and be occupied therewith, so long as the cottage shall be inhabited. 2 Roll. Abr. 159.

But this statute doth not extend to houses that are copyhold. 1 Bull. 50. The penalty of erecting cottages contrary to the statute, is 10l. for every erection, and 40s. a month for the continuance of it; which is inquirable in the leet, or the offenders may be punished by indictment at the quarter-sessions of the peace, &c. And no owner or occupier of any cottage shall suffer any inmates, or more families than one to inhabit therein, on pain to forfeit to the lord of the leet 10s. a month: but in in cottages built for the poor, more families than one may be placed.

Cottages are oftentimes erected on the waste at the charge of parishes, for poor impotent persons, by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, having obtained leave of the lord of the manor in writing under hand and seal; but then it must be confirmed by the justices in sessions. Mod. Just. 152. Cottagers of new erected cottages within the memory of man, ought not to have common in the lord's waste, though they have four acres of land laid to them. Wood's Inst. 445. Every cottager, &c. is obliged to work towards the repairs of the highways, or to hire an able labourer to work on the days appointed by the statute, on pain of forfeiting 1s. 6d. per day. Stat. 22 Car. 2. But see 7 Geo. 3. c. 42. And title Highways.

Cotton Library, For better settling and preserving the library kept in the house at Westminster, called Cotton-house, in the name and family of the Cottons for the benefit of the publick, a statute was made 12 W. 3. c. 7. See Stat. 5 Ann. c. 30. & 26 Geo. 2. c. 22.

Cottons. Not within 27 Hen. 8. concerning the true making of cloth, 27 H. 8. c. 12. f. 3. See the Table to the Statutes, title Cottons.

Cotuca, Coat armour. Ad arma profiliunt & milites quidem super armatura cotucas induerant, vocat. Quartelois. Walsing. 114.

Cotuchans, Boors or husbandmen, of which mention is made in Domesday.

Coucher, or Courther, Signifies a factor that continues abroad in some place or country for traffick; as formerly in Gascoign, for buying of wines. Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 16. This word is also used for the general book wherein any corporation, &c. register their particular acts. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10.

Covenable, (Fr. covenable, Lat. rationabilis) Is what is convenient or suitable.—Every of the same three sorts of goods, &c. shall be good and covenable, as in old time hath been used. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 2. Covenably indowed, that is, indowed as is fitting. 4 H. 8. c. 12. See Plowd. 472.

Covenant, (conventio) Is the consent and agreement of two or more persons to do or not to do some act or thing, contracted between them. Also it is the declaration the parties make, that they will stand to such agreement, relating to lands or other things; and is created by deed in writing, sealed and executed by the parties, or otherwise it may be implied in the contract as incident thereto. 2 Mod. Entr. 91. And if the persons do not perform their covenants, a writ or action of covenant is the remedy to recover damages for the breach of them. Ibid.

Under this head is to be considered,

- I. The several kinds of covenants, and by what words they are created.
- II. What covenants are good and binding, and by whom they may be made.
- III. Who shall take advantage of covenants, and who are bound by them.
- IV. What shall be a performance, and what a breach of covenant.

- I. Of the several kinds of covenants, and by what words they are created.

A covenant is generally either in fact or in law: in fact is that which is expressly agreed between the parties, and inserted in the deed; and in law, is that covenant which the law intends and implies, though it be not expressed in words; as if a lessor demise and grant to his lessee a house or lands, &c. for a certain term, the law will intend a covenant on the lessor's part, that the lessee shall, during the term, quietly enjoy the same against all incumbrances. 1 Inst. 384.

There is also a covenant real, and covenant personal: a real covenant is that whereby a man ties himself to pass a thing real, as lands or tenements; or to levy a fine of lands, &c. And covenant personal, is where the same is annexed to the person and merely personal; as if a person covenants with another by deed to build him a house, or to serve him, &c. F. N. B. 145. 5 Rep. 10.

Covenants are likewise inherent, that tend to the support of the land or thing granted; or are collateral to it; and are affirmative, where somewhat is to be performed; or negative; executed, of what is already done, or executory: but a covenant being to bind a man, to do something in futuro, is for the most part executory. 1 Vent. 176. Dyer 112, 271. And where a covenant shall be construed dependent upon another, and when distinct by itself, see Winch 74. 3 Cro. 107.

As to the words by which covenant may be created.

'Tis held in all cases where words that begin any sentence are conditional, and give another remedy, they shall not be construed a covenant; and yet if words of condition and covenant are coupled together in the same sentence, as Provided always, and it is covenanted, &c. in that case they may be adjudged both a condition and covenant. March 103.

The law does not seem to have appropriated any set form of words, which are absolutely necessary to be made use of in creating a covenant; and therefore it seems that any words will be effectual for that purpose, which shew the parties concurrence to the performance of a future act; as if lessee for years covenants to repair, &c. Provided always, and it is agreed, that the lessor shall find great timber, &c. this makes a covenant on the part of the lessor to find great timber, by the word agreed, and it shall not be a qualification of the covenant of the lessee. 1 New Abr. 527.

There is this difference however between a covenant and condition; a condition gives entry, and covenant gives an action only. Owen 54. A person cannot have action of covenant upon a verbal agreement, for it cannot be grounded without writing, except by special custom. F. N. B. 145.

II. What covenants are good and binding, and by whom they may be made.

All covenants between persons must be to do what is lawful, or they will not be binding; and if the thing to be done be impossible, the covenant is void. Dyer 112. But where the thing is lawful at the time of the covenant made, and afterwards the matter agreed to be done is prohibited by act of parliament, yet such covenant will be binding. 3 Mod. 39. And if a man covenants to do a thing before a certain time; and it becomes impossible by the act of God, this shall not excuse him, inasmuch as he hath bound himself precisely to do it. 2 Danv. Abr. 84.

If a person covenants expressly to repair a house, and it is burnt down by lightning, or any other accident, yet he ought to repair it; for it was in his power to have provided against it by his contract. Allyn 26, 27. 1 Lill. Abr. 149. But he is not so bound by covenant in law. Where houses are blown down by tempest, the law excuses the lessee in action of waste; though in a covenant to repair and uphold, it will not. 1 Plowd. 29. If a lessee for years, rendering rent, covenants for him and his assigns to repair the house, and after the lessee assigns over the term, and the lessor accepts the rent from the assignee, and then the covenant is broken; notwithstanding acceptance of rent from the assignee, action of covenant lies against the first lessee, on his express covenant to repair: and this personal covenant cannot be transferred by the acceptance of the rent. 2 Danv. Abr. 240.

Action of covenant also lies on covenant for payment of rent against such lessee; but not action of debt after acceptance. 3 Rep. 24. In covenant upon a demise, rendering rent, the defendant cannot say, that part of it was to be allowed; for this is a covenant against a covenant. Comb. 21.

An infant within age may bind himself apprentice; but neither at Common law nor by statute may be bound by covenant for his apprenticeship, so as to make him liable to an action of covenant, if he depart, &c. By the custom of London he may bind himself by his covenant at fourteen years old. 1 Cro. 129. Winch 63.

III. Who shall take advantage of covenants, and who are bound by them.

There may be an agreement and covenant, only to be performed by the parties themselves; and there are some covenants which none but the party and his heirs may take advantage of, being such as concern the inheritance, and descend to the heir; as knit to the estate: Covenants in gross go to the executors, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 520. 2 Danv. 235. Not only parties to deeds, but their executors and administrators, shall take advantage of inherent covenants, though not named; and every assignee of the land may have the benefit of such covenants: Likewise executors and assigns are bound by them, although not named, as a covenant to repair, &c. 5 Rep. 16, 17. 1 Cro. 552. If a man covenants with another to do any thing, his heir shall not be bound, unless he be expressly named: And yet where a lessee covenants to repair, the heir shall have the benefit of the covenant, though not named, because it runs with the land. 2 Lev. 92. 5 Rep. 8.

The grantee of reversion may bring action of covenant against a lessee, as well in the county where the demise was made, as in the county where the lands lie. Cartbaw 183. And grantees of reversions have the like remedy by action of covenant against termors, as the lessors and their heirs, &c. by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. A person covenants with another, to pay him money at a time to come, and doth not say to his executors, &c. if the covenantee die before the day, yet his executors or administrators shall have the money. Dyer 112, 257. And in every case where the testator is bound by a covenant, the executor shall be bound by it; if it be not determined by his death. 48 Ed. 3. 2. 2 Danv. 232. Assignees shall not have an action upon breach of any covenant, before their time. Cro. Eliz. 863. An assignee shall be charged in a writ of covenant for breach, after the death of the first lessee; as it is a charge on the land, i. e. in case of repairs. 2 Danv. 238.

If A. seised of land in fee, conveys it to B. and covenants with B. his heirs and assigns, to make any other assurance upon request; and after B. conveys it to C. who conveys it to D. and then D. requires A. to make another assurance, according to the covenant; if he refuses, D. shall have action of covenant against him, as assignee to B. Ibid. 236. A lessor made a lease of an house for years, excepting two rooms, and free passage to them; the lessee assigned the term, and the lessor brought covenant against the assignee for disturbing him in his passage to those rooms; and adjudged that the action lies: For the covenant goes with the tenement, and binds the assignee. (N. B. This relates to the passage.) 1 Salk. 196. If a man who leases for years, ousts the lessee, he shall have covenant against him. 48 Ed. 3. 2. But if, where a person leases lands for years, a stranger enters before the lessee, such lessee shall not have an action of covenant upon this ouster, because he was never a lessee in privity to have the action. 2 Danv. 234. A man grants a watercourse, and afterwards stops it; for this voluntary misfeasance, covenant lies. 1 Saund. 322. Though where the use of a thing is demised, and it runs to decay, so that the lessee cannot have the benefit of it, for this nonfeasance no action of covenant lieth: Nor may covenant be brought for a thing which was not in esse at the making of the lease. 2 Danv. 233.

If one makes a lease for years, reserving a rent, action of covenant lies for non-payment of the rent; for the redendum of the rent is an agreement for payment of it, which will make a covenant. Ibid. 230. A lease is made to two, and one seals the deed, but the other doth not; if he accepts the estate and occupies the land, he is bound to perform the covenants for payment of the rent, reparations, and the like. 1 Shep. Abr. 458. Where there is an agreement under hand and seal, action of covenant may be brought on it: and if a man is party to a deed, his agreement to pay amounts to a covenant, tho' formal words are wanting. 2 Mod. 91, 269. Action of covenant lies on a deed indented, or poll: also on a bond, it proving an agreement. 2 Danv. 228. 1 Lill. Abr. 346. And if one man covenants to pay another 20 l. at a day; although he may have action of debt for the 20 l. yet 'tis said he may have a writ of covenant at his election. 2 Danv. 229.

It is agreed that A. B. shall pay to C. D. 100 l. for lands in E. this is a mutual covenant, whereon action of covenant may be brought if C. D. will not convey. 1 Sid. 423. But where there are mutual covenants, and the one not to be performed before a precedent covenant, in such case the covenant is not suable till the other is performed: Though if the covenants are distinct and mutual, several actions may be brought by and against the parties. 1 Lill. Abr. 350. 2 Mod. 74. In a covenant to pay another so much money, he making him an estate in such land, &c. It has been adjudged, that if he tender the covenantor a feoffment, and offer to make livery, he may have action of covenant for the money, as if he had made a title. 3 Salk. 107. If a person covenants that he hath good right to grant, &c. and he hath no right, it is a breach of covenant, for which action of covenant lies. 2 Bul. 12. Where a man covenants that he hath power to grant, and that the grantee, shall quietly enjoy notwithstanding any claiming under him; these are distinct covenants, for one goes to the title, and the other to the possession. 1 Mod. 101. A covenant for the lessee to enjoy against all men; this extends not to tortious acts and entries, &c. for which the lessee hath his proper remedy against the aggressors. Vaugh. 111, 120.

Where there is a covenant to save harmless against a certain person, there the covenantor must save the covenantee harmless against the entry of that person, be it by wrong or rightful title: But if it be to save harmless against all persons, the entry and eviction must be by lawful title. Cro. Eliz. 213. Covenant that lands shall continue of such a value notwithstanding any act done, or to be done, extendeth only to the time of the covenant made; and 'tis said cannot extend as well to that time, as to the time future. Ibid. 43, 479. 1 Lill. 352. Where the covenant is to do a thing, and no time appointed for it, it must be done in convenient time: If it be inserted in a deed among other covenants, that the lessee shall repair, provided the lessor allows timber, &c. this will be a good covenant on both sides. 2 And. 73. Dyer 57, 150. Hob. 28.

But a covenant must wait upon and join with the grant; so that if it be to make such assurance as shall be reasonably devised, it must be of an assurance that differs not from the bargain: and when the estate to which a covenant is annexed is at an end, the covenant is gone. Hob. 276. 1 Leon. 179. In an indenture, the word covenant, is a word both of lessor and lessee; and therefore if the lessee covenants to pay the rent, this is a reservation. Tho' when there is a covenant for a lessee to repair, and he makes an under-lease to one who is in possession, the under lessee is not liable to that covenant, in law or equity. 1 Roll. Rep. 80. 1 Vern. 87.

An express covenant in a deed, will qualify the general covenant of law: though on a covenant in law, the lessee cannot charge the executors or administrators of the lessor; as he may upon an express covenant for quiet enjoyment. Dyer 257. See 4 Rep. 80. If a lessor covenant with the lessee that he shall have housebote, &c. by assignment of his bailiff, this is a good covenant; and yet it doth not restrain the power that the lessee hath by law to take those things without assignment: But if a lessee covenants, that he will not cut any timber, without the leave or assignment of the lessor; by this he will be restrained. Dyer 19, 115. A man makes a lease, wherein are divers covenants to be performed by the lessee; and after the lessee doth covenant that if any of the covenants are broken, the lessor shall enter upon the land demised, and hold it till the lessee make him amends, &c. it is good, and the lessor may take advantage thereof. Fitz. Cov. 3.

IV. What shall be a performance, and what a breach of covenants.

Not any duty or cause of action arises on a covenant, till it is broken: and as to breaches of covenant, if a person by his own act disables himself to perform a covenant, it is a breach thereof. 5 Rep. 21. Though there can be no covenant or breach, where a lease, &c. is void. Telv. 18, 19. But here although when a covenant concerns the the interest of the lease, as where 'tis for paying rent; it is void, if the lease be so: yet where covenants are collateral to the lease and interest, though that be void; the covenants may be good. Owen 136. And if a covenant to do a thing is performed in substance, and according to the intent, it is good, though it differs from the words; and on the other hand, although the covenantor performs the letter of his covenant, if he does any act to defeat the intent and use of it, he is guilty of a breach. Mod. Ent. Engl.

In covenant that a person shall hold land free from all incumbrances, and be kept indemnified from arrears of rent; there, till an action is brought, or distress made, he is not damnified: and a suit in Chancery is no breach in such case; but where a jointure, or dower is recovered, it is. Skin. 397. Moor 859. Palm. 339. If covenants perpetual are once broken, and an action is brought, and recovery thereon; upon a new breach, a scire facias shall be had on that judgment, and the plaintiff need not bring a new writ of covenant. Cro. Eliz. 5. When the intention of the parties can be collected out of a deed for the doing, or not doing of the thing, covenant shall be had thereupon. Chanc. Rep. 294. A covenant being one part of a deed, is subject to the general rules of exposition of all parts of the deed: And in a covenant the last words, that are general, shall be expounded by the first words, which are special and particular. Vent. 218. Also a later covenant cannot be pleaded in bar to a former.

When a covenant is to two persons jointly, one of them may not bring action of covenant, or plead alone, but both must join. 1 Nelf. 558. If a man is bound to perform all the covenants in an indenture, and they are all in the affirmative, he may plead performance generally. Co. Lit. 303. Covenants in the negative must be pleaded specially. Ibid. 330. When some covenants are in the negative, and some in the affirmative, the defendant is to plead specially to the negative covenants, that he had not done the thing, and performance generally as to the affirmative: (sed. qu. and vide post.) And where the negative covenants are against law, and the affirmative agreeable to law, performance generally may be pleaded. Moor 856. If any of the covenants are in the disjunctive, so that 'tis in the election of the covenantor to perform the one, or the other, the performance ought to be specially pleaded, that it may appear what part hath been performed. Cro. Eliz. 23. 1 Nelf. 573. And commonly where an act is to be done, according to a covenant, he who pleads performance ought to do it specially. 1 Leon. 136.

In debt upon bond for performance of covenants, one whereof for peaceable enjoyment, and free from all incumbrances, and another for farther assurance, &c. the defendant should plead specially, that the house was free from incumbrances at the time of the conveyance made, and not charged at any time since, and that no farther assurance had been required, or such an assurance which he had executed, &c. yet where a defendant pleaded generally, in this case it was held good. 1 Lutw. 603.

Covenants are generally taken most strongly against the covenantor, and for the covenantee. Plowd. 287. But it is a rule in law, that where one thing may have several intendments, it shall be construed in the most favourable manner for the covenantor. 1 Lut. 490. The common use of covenants is for assuring of land; quiet enjoyment free from incumbrances; for payment of rent reserved; and concerning repairs, &c. And in deeds of covenant, sometimes a clause for performance with a penalty, is inserted in the body of the deed: Other times, and more frequently bonds for performance, with a sufficient penalty, are given separate; which last being sued, the jury must find the penalty; but on covenant, only the damages. Wood's Inst. 250.

Covenant for non-payment of rent, was referred to the master as to the rent, and on payment thereof process to stay as to that, but there being another breach as to not repairing, the plaintiff might proceed for that. Ann. Wilf. Rep. Par. 1. p. 75. In an action of covenant, it is not necessary to aver that the plaintiff performed his covenants. Jedderell v. Cowell. Rep. Temp. Hardw. 343-4.

By the 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. In actions on bonds, &c. plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he pleases, and the jury may assess damages: on defendant's paying damages, execution may be stayed, but judgment shall remain to answer any farther breach, and plaintiff may have a scire facias against the defendant.

It is held an action of covenant may be laid in London, for non-payment of rent on a lease of lands in any other place. 1 Sid. 401. And if in this action, a sum be mislaid, either too little or too much; it is amendable; and not like to the action of debt, which if alledged less than it is; without shewing the rest to be satisfied, it is ill. 3 Keb. 39. 2 Cro. 247. In action of covenant, the plaintiff must have recourse to the deeds or writings, and the circumstances of time, place, &c. and take notice what particular covenant in the deed it is best to insist upon, to lay a breach right, &c. the words of covenanting are, covenant, grant, promise, and agree, &c. but there needs no great exactness in words to make a covenant. See Bonds.

Further, this word is taken for the solemn league and covenant; which was a seditious conspiracy, invented in Scotland; voted illegal by parliament, and provision is made against it, by stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4.

Covenant to stand seised to Uses, Is when a man that hath a wife, children, brother, sister, or kindred, doth by covenant in writing under hand and seal agree that for their or any of their provision or preferment, he and his heirs will stand seised of land to their use; either in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life. The use being created by the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. which conveyeth the estate as the uses are directed; this covenant to stand seised is become a conveyance of the land since the said statute. The considerations of these deeds, are natural affection, marriage, &c. and the law allows in such cases consideration of blood and marriage, to raise Use, as well as money and other valuable consideration when a use is to a stranger. Plowd. 302. There are no considerations now to raise uses upon covenants to stand seised, but natural love and affection, which is for advancement of blood; and consideration of marriage, which is the joining of the blood and marriage together: other considerations, as money, &c. for land, though the words in the deed are stand seised, yet they are bargains and sales, and without inrolment they raise no use. Carter 138. Lill. Abr. 353.

The usual covenant to stand seised to uses need not be by deed indented and inrolled: And where a man limits his estate to the use of his wife for life, this imports a sufficient consideration in itself: Also if a person covenants to stand seised to the use of his wife, son, or cousin it will raise an use without any express words of consideration, for sufficient consideration appears. 7 Rep. 40. In case of a covenant to stand seised, so much of the use as the owner doth not dispose of, remains still in him. 1 Vent. 374. And where an use is raised by way of covenant, the covenantor continues in possession; and there the uses limited, if they are according to law, shall rise and draw the possession out of him: but if they are not, the possession shall remain in him until a lawful use ariseth. 1 Leon 197. 1 Mod. 158, 160.

If on a covenant to stand seised to uses, no use doth arise, yet it may be good by way of covenant and give remedy to the covenantee in an action; as if the covenant be future, that in consideration of a marriage, lands shall descend or remain to a son and the heirs of his body on the body of his wife; in this case the covenantee may have writ of covenant upon the covenant against the covenantor. But if a covenant be that a man and his heirs, shall from henceforth stand and be seised to such and such uses, and the uses will not arise by law: here no action of covenant lies on the covenant, for this action will never lie upon any covenant but such as is either to do a thing hereafter, or where the thing is already done, and not when it is for a thing present. Plowd. 307, 398. Finb's Law 49. See Baron and Feme.

Covert Baron, A married woman. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3. See Black. Com. 1 V. 442. and Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Baron and Feme.

Coverture, (Fr.) Any thing that covers; as apparel, a coverlet, &c. but it is by our law particularly applied to the state and condition of a married woman, who is sub potestate viri; and therefore disabled to contract with any to the damage of herself or husband, without his consent and privy, or his allowance and confirmation thereof. Brañ. lib. 1. c. 10. lib. 2. c. 15, &c. Bro. Abr. When a woman is married, she is called a Feme Covert; and whatever is done concerning her, during the marriage, is said to be during the coverture: All things that are the wife's, are the husband's; nor hath the wife power over herself, but the husband: And if the husband alien the wife's land, during the coverture, she cannot gainsay it during his life; but after his death, she may recover by cui in vita. Terms de Ley. See Baron and Feme.

Covin, (Covina) Is a deceitful compact between two or more to deceive or prejudice others, as if tenant for life or in tail, conspires with another, that he shall recover the land which he the tenant holds, in prejudice of him in reversion. Plowd. 546. Covin is commonly conversant in and about conveyances of land by fine, feoffment, recovery, &c. And then it tends to defeat purchasers of the lands they purchase, and creditors of their just debts; and so it is used in deeds of gift of goods: It may be likewise sometimes in suits of law, and judgments had in them. But wherever covin is, it shall never be intended, unless it appears and be particularly found: for covin and fraud though proved, yet must be found by the jury, or it will not be good. Brownl. 188. Bridgm. 112.

If one make a lease to a person by covin, and after grant another lease to another bona fide, but without any fine or rent; in this case the second lessee may not avoid the first lease, because he is not a purchaser that comes in for money. 3 Rep. 83. On recovery by a good title, there may be covin; as where tenant for life by assent, &c. suffers a recovery by Nil dicit, without making any defence: And if a man hath a rightful and just cause of action, and of covin and consent shall raise up a tenant by wrong against whom he may recover; the covin doth so suffocate the right, that the recovery, although it be upon good title, shall not bind. Bro. Covin. 47. Co. Litt. 357. 1 Shep. Abr. 365. A is tenant for life, remainder in tail to B. and a præcipe is brought against them as jointenants, by covin between the demandant and A. and an answer procured for B. as jointenant, and they join the mise, (or issue) and after make default, whereby final judgment is given; this shall not defeat the estate of B. who may bring a writ of disceit and shall be restored to his land. Roll. Abr. 621.

If a man that has a right to certain lands, by covin causes another to oust the tenant of the land, to the intent to recover it from him, and he recovers accordingly against him by action tried; yet he shall not be remitted to his ancient right; but is in of the estate of him who made the ouster; and an assize lies against him. 2 Danv. Abr. 305. Land is aliened, pending a writ of debt, by covin, to avoid the extent thereof for the debt; the land so aliened shall be extended, when the covin appears upon the return of the elegit by the sheriff. Ibid. 311. If a man makes a deed of gift, &c. of his goods in his life-time by covin, to oust his creditors of their debts, after his death the donee or vendee shall be charged for them. See 50 H. 3. c. 6. and the several statutes of frauds. If goods are sold in market overt by covin, on purpose to bar him that hath right, this shall not bar him thereof. 2 Inst. 713.

Council. In the city of London, there are common council-men chosen in every ward at a court of wardmote held by the aldermen of the respective wards on St. Thomas's day yearly: They are to be chosen out of the most sufficient men; and sworn to give true council for the common profit of the city, &c. Lex Londonien. 117. In the court of common council, are made laws for advancement of trade; and committees yearly appointed, &c. But acts made by them, are to have the assent of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, by stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 18. and sec 19 Geo. 2. c. 8.

Counsellor, (Consiliarius) Is a person retained by a client to plead his cause in a court of judicature. A counsellor at law hath a privilege to enforce any thing which is informed him by his client, if pertinent to the matter, and is not to examine whether it be true or false; for it is at the peril of him who informs him. Cro. Jac. 90. But after the court hath delivered their opinions of the matter in law depending before them, the counsell at the bar are not to urge any thing further in that cause. 1 Lill. Abr. 355. A counsellor must not set his hand to a frivolous plea, to delay a trial; which argues ignorance or foul practice. Ibid. And as counsellors have a special privilege to practice the law, they are punishable by attachment, &c. for misbehaviour. 1 Hawk. P. C. 157. No recusant convict, or non-juror, shall practice the law, as a counsellor, or otherwise, under penalties, by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 6.

Counsell; for prisoners. No counsell is allowed a prisoner upon a general issue, on indictment of felony, &c. unless some doubtful point of law arise: The court is the prisoner's only counsell; and the behaviour of the prisoner in his own defence, is one means of discovering the truth. In appeals, and upon special pleas, &c. the prisoner shall have counsell assigned him by the court: tho' counsell is not to prompt the prisoner in matters of fact. 2 Hawk. 400, 401. Provision is made for counsell for prisoners in treason, by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 3. which is extended to trials, upon impeachments, by 20 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Count, Signifies the original declaration of complaint in a real action. As declaration is applied to personal; so count is applicable to real causes: but count and declaration are oftentimes confounded, and made to signify the same thing. F. N. B. 16, 60. In passing a recovery at the common pleas bar, a serjeant at law counts upon the præcipe, &c. See Counters and Declarations.

Countee, (Fr. Comte) Was the most eminent dignity of a subject, before the conquest; and those who in ancient times were created countees, were men of great estate: for which reason, and because the law intends that they assist the King with their counsel for the publick good, and preserve the realm by their valour, they had great privileges; as they might not be arrested for debt or trespass; or be put on juries, &c. Of old the countee was præfectus, or præpositus comitatus, and had the charge and custody of the county; but this authority the sheriff now hath. 9 Rep. 46. A countee or count, is an earl, in the law French. Law Fr. Dict.

Countenance. This word seems to be used for credit or estimation. Old Nat. Br. 111. And in the stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 4. See Contentment.

Counter, (Computatorium from the Lat. Computare) Is the name of two prisons in London, the Poultry-counter, and Woodstreet-counter, for the use of the city, to confine debtors, peace-breakers, &c. wherein if any enter, he is like to account before he gets out. Corwel.

Counterfeits. Persons obtaining any money, goods, &c. by counterfeit letters or false tokens, being convicted before justices of assize, or justices of peace, are to suffer such punishment as shall be thought fit, under death; as imprisonment, pillory, &c. Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 1. It was the opinion of Sir Edward Coke, that upon this statute the offender could not be fined; and that only corporal pains ought to be inflicted: But it hath been otherwise adjudg'd in Terry's case, who by a false note in the name of another obtain'd into his hands a wedge of silver, of the value of two hundred pounds; and on conviction thereof, was sentenced to stand in the pillory, pay a fine of five hundred pounds to the King, and be imprisoned during the King's pleasure. Cro. Car. 407. The obtaining of money from one man to another's use, upon a false pretence of having a message and verbal order to that purpose, is not (at common law) punishable by criminal prosecution; it depending on a bare naked lie, against which common prudence and caution may be a security. 6 Mod. 105. 1 Hawk. P. C. 188. Now per Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. Obtaining money, goods, &c. by false pretences, (a very vague expression) the offender is liable to fine or imprisonment, or pillory, or transportation for seven years. Counterfeiting the King's seal, or money, &c. which is treason, vide Treason: And counterfeiting Exchequer bills, bank-bills, lottery-orders, &c. which are felony. See Felony, Fraud.

Countermand, Is where a thing formerly executed, is afterwards by some act or ceremony made void by the party that first did it. And it is either actual, by deed; or implied; implied: Actual, where a power to execute any authority, &c. is by a formal writing for that very purpose put off for a time, or made void: and implied, is where a man makes his last will and testament, and thereby devises his land to A. B. if he afterwards enfeoffs another of the same land, here this feoffment is a countermand to the will, without any express words for the same, and the will is void as to the disposition of the land: Also if a woman seised of land in fee-simple, makes a will and deviseth the same to C. D. and his heirs, if he survives her; and after she intermarries with the said C. D. there by taking him to husband, and coverture at the time of her death, the will is countermanded. Terms de Ley. But if a woman makes a lease at will, and then marries, this marriage is no countermand to the lease, without express matter done by the husband to determine the will.

Where land is devised, and after a lease made thereof for years only; it shall not be a countermand of the will, which is good notwithstanding for the reversion after the lease for years is ended: But in case a man have a lease for years, and gives it by his will, and after surrenders it; it is a countermand of the devise, and the devisee shall not have his lease. Dyer 47. Goldsb. 93. If a copyholder like to die, do surrender his estate to the use of his wife or children, without any consideration of money, &c. and he recover before the presentment and admittance, it may be countermanded: 'Tis otherwise if it be to the use of a stranger. Kitch. 82. If there be a feoffment with letter of attorney to make livery and seisin; and before it is made the feoffor makes a feoffment, or bargain and sale of the land, or lease to another, it will be a countermand in law of the authority given by the letter of attorney. 2 Brownl. 291. A person may countermand his command, authority, licence, &c. before the thing is done; and if he dies, it is countermanded. There is a countermand of notice of trial, &c. in law proceedings.

Counterpart. When the several parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the several parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is usually called the original, and the rest are counterparts: tho' of late it is most frequent (and better) for all the parties to execute every part; which renders them all originals. Black. Com. 2 V. 296.

Counterplea. Is when the tenant in any real action, tenant by the curtesy, or in dower, in his answer and plea, vouches any one to warrant his title, or prays in aid of another, who hath a larger estate; as of him in reversion, &c. Or where one that is a stranger to the action, comes and prays to be received to save his estate; then that which the demandant alledgeth against it, why it should not be admitted, is called a counterplea: In which sense it is used stat. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 7. So that counterplea is in law a replication to Aid Prier; and is called counterplea to the voucher: But when the voucher is allowed, and the vouchee comes and demands what cause the tenant hath to vouch him, and the tenant shews his cause, whereupon the vouchee pleads any thing to avoid the warranty; that is termed a counterplea of the warranty. Terms de Ley. Stat. 3 E. 1. cap. 39. If on demurrer to a counterplea of the voucher upon a warranty, it be found against the vouchee, judgment shall not be peremptory, but only set vocare: 'Tis otherwise upon a plea to the writ tried by the country. Rep. 34. 4 Rep. 80.

Counter-Rolls. Are the rolls which sheriffs of counties have with the coroners of their proceedings, as well of appeals, as of inquests, &c. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10.

Countors, (Fr. Contours) Have been taken for such serjeants at law, which a man retains to defend his cause, and speak for him in any court, for their fees. Horn's Mirror, lib. 2. And as in the court of C. B. none but serjeants at law may plead; they were anciently called Serjeant Countors. 1 Inst. 17.

County, (Comitatus) Signifies the same with shire, the one coming from the French, the other the Saxons; and contains a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the better government of it, and the more easy administration of justice: So that there is no part of this kingdom that lies not within some county; and every county is governed by a yearly officer whom we call a sheriff. Fortescue, cap. 24. Of these counties, there are in England forty, besides twelve in Wales, making in all fifty-two.

County Palatine. There are four counties of special note, which are therefore term'd Counties Palatine; as Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely; and we read anciently of the counties palatine of Pembroke and Hexam, though they have long since lost their privileges. The chief governors of the counties palatine, by special charter from the King, heretofore did all things touching the administration of justice as absolutely as the prince himself in other counties, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign: But by the stat. 27 H. 8. cap. 24. their power is abridged. 4 Inst. 204, 221. The counties palatine are reckoned among the superior courts: And are privileged as to pleas, so as no inhabitant of such counties shall be compelled by any writ to appear or answer out of the same; except for error, and in cases of treason, &c. and the counties palatine of Chester and Durham, are by prescription, where the King's writ ought not to come, but under the seal of the counties palatine; unless it be writs of proclamation. Crompt. Juris. 137. 1 Danv. Abr. 750.

But certiorari lies out of B. R. to justices of a county palatine, &c. to remove indictments, and proceedings before them. 2 Hawk. P. C. 286. There is a court of Chancery in the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, over which there are Chancellors; that of Lancaster called Chancellor of the Duchy, &c. and there is a court of Exchequer at Chester, of a mixt nature, for law and equity, of which the Chamberlain of Chester is judge. There is also a Chief Justice of Chester; and other justices in the other counties palatine, to determine civil actions and pleas of the crown.

The Bishops of Durham and Ely, have those counties palatine; and if any erroneous judgment be given in the courts of the bishoprick of Durham, a writ of error shall be brought before the bishop himself; and if he give an erroneous judgment thereon, a writ of error shall be sued out returnable in B. R. 4 Inst. 218. But it has been held, that Ely is not a county palatine, only a royal franchise, having cognisance of pleas like unto the Cinque Ports. Carthew 109. Infants in counties palatine enabled to convey by order of the respective courts belonging to those counties. 4 Geo. 3. c. 16.

Counties palatine, with Jura Regalia, were probably erected at first, because they were adjacent to the enemies countries heretofore; as Lancaster and Durham to Scotland, and Chester to Wales; that the inhabitants might have administration of justice at home, and remain there to secure the country from incursions. 1 Vent. 155. The King may make a county palatine by his letters patent without parliament. 4 Inst. 201.

Counties Corporate. Besides the counties above mentioned, there are counties corporate. Stat. 3 E. 4. c. 5. And they are certain cities, with lands and territories, having liberties and jurisdiction by grant from the King: As the county of Middlesex annexed to the city of London by King Hen. 1. The county of the city of York, anno 32 H. 8. The county of the city of Chester, 42 Elix. The county of the city of Bristol, Norwich, Worcester, &c. and the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, Newcastle, &c. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. Crompt. Juris. 59. And county in another signification, is used for the county-court, kept by the sheriff within his charge, or by his deputy. Stat. 2 Ed. 6. cap. 25. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 7. See Comitatus.

County-Court, (Curia Comitatus) Is by Lambard called Conventus, in his explication of Saxon words, and divided into two sorts; one retaining the general name, as the county-court held every month, by the sheriff or his deputy: the other called the turn, held twice in every year, viz. within a month after Easter and Michaelmas; of both which you may read in Crompt. Juris. fol. 241. All administration of justice was at first in the King's hands; but afterwards when by the increase of the people the burden grew too great for him; as the kingdom was divided into counties, hundreds, &c. so the administration of justice was distributed amongst divers courts; of which the sheriff had the county-court for government of the county, and lords of liberties had their leets and law-days, for the speedier and easier administering justice therein, &c.

Before

Before the courts at Westminster were erected, the county-courts were the chief courts of the kingdom: And among the laws of King Edgar it is ordained, that there be two county-courts kept in the year, in which there shall be a bishop and an alderman, or earl, as judges; one to judge according to the common law, and the other according to the ecclesiastical law: But these united powers of a bishop and earl, to try causes, were separated by William the First, called the Conqueror; and soon after the business of ecclesiastical cognisance was brought into its proper courts, and the common law business into the King's Bench. Blount.

That the county-court in ancient times, had the cognition of great matters, appears by Glanv. lib. 1. cap. 2, 3, 4. by Bracton, and Briton, in divers places, and Fleta, lib. 2. c. 62. But the power of this court was much reduced by Magn. Chart. c. 17. and by 1 Ed. 4. cap. 1. It had formerly, and now hath the determination of certain trespasses, and debts under 40 s. And this court holdeth not plea (de jure) of any debt or damage to the value of 40 s. or above; nor of trespass vi & armis, &c.

But of debt and other actions personal above that sum, the sheriff may hold plea by force of a writ of justices, which is in nature of a commission to him to do it. 4 Inst. 266. Here the plaintiff takes out a summons, and if the defendant do not appear, an attachment or distingas is to be made out against him; but if the defendant appears, the plaintiff is to file his declaration, and after the defendant is to put in his answer or plea; and the plaintiff having joined issue, the trial proceeds, &c. whereupon, if verdict is given for the plaintiff, judgment is entered, and a fiat facias may be awarded against the defendant's goods, which may be taken by virtue thereof, and be appraised and sold to satisfy the plaintiff: But if the defendant hath no goods, the plaintiff is without remedy in this court; for no capias lies therein, but an action may be brought at common law, upon the judgment entered. Greenwood of Courts, p. 22.

No sheriff is to enter in the county-court, any plaint in the absence of the plaintiff; nor above one plaint for one cause, under penalties: The defendant in the county-court is to have lawful summons; and two justices of peace are to view the estreats of sheriffs, before they issue them out of the county-court, &c. By stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 15. Causes are removed out of the county-court, by recordare, pone, and writ of false judgment, into B. R. &c. See Stat. 23 G. 2. c. 33. for preventing delays and expences in the proceedings in the county-court of Middlesex, and for the more easy and speedy recovery of small debts in the said county-court.

County-Rates. Are those ordered by justices of peace at their quarter sessions, who may make one general rate, to answer all former distinct rates, which shall be assessed on every parish, &c. and collected and paid by the high constables of hundreds to treasurers appointed by the justices; which money shall be deemed the publick stock, and be laid out in repairing of bridges, gaols, or houses of correction, on presentment made by the grand jury, at the assizes or quarter sessions, of their wanting reparation; but appeal lies by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parishes to the justices at the next sessions, against the rate on any particular parish. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29.

Counting-House of the King's Household. (Domus Computus Hospitii Regis) Is usually called the Green Cloth; where sit the Lord Steward, and Treasurer of the King's House, the Comptroller, Master of the Household, Cofferer, and two Clerks of the Green Cloth, &c. for daily taking the accounts of all expences of the Household, making provisions, and ordering payment for the same; and for the good government of the King's Household servants, and paying the wages of those below stairs. Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 7.

Courier. (from the Fr. Courir to run) An express messenger of haste.

Couracier. A French word signifying a horse courier. 2 Inst. 719.

Court. (Curia) Signifies the King's palace, or mansion; and is more especially the place where justice is judicially administered. The superior courts are those at Westminster; and of courts, some are of record, and some not; which are accounted base courts, in respect of the rest: a court of record is that court which hath power to hold plea, according to the course of the common law, of real, personal, and mixed actions, where the debt or damage is 40 s. or above; as the King's Bench, Common Pleas, &c.

A court not of record is where it cannot hold plea of debt or damages amounting to 40 s. but of pleas under that sum; or where the proceedings are not according to the course of the common law, nor inrolled; as the county-court, and the court-baron, &c. 1 Inst. 117, 260. 4 Rep. 52. 2 Roll. Abr. 574.

Every court of record is the King's Court, though his subjects have the benefit of it; and the free use of all courts of record and not of record, is to be granted to the people: The lect and tourn are the King's courts, and of record. 2 Darw. 259. The rolls of the superior courts of record are of such authority, as no proof will be admitted against them; and they are only triable by themselves. 3 Inst. 71. But as the county-court, court-baron, &c. are not courts of record, the proceedings therein may be denied, and tried by a jury: And upon their judgments, a writ of error lies not; but writ of false judgment. 1 Inst. 117.

In the courts at Westminster, the plaintiff need not shew at large in his declaration, that the cause of action arises within their jurisdiction, it being general: Inferior courts are to shew it at large, because they have particular jurisdictions. 1 Lill. Abr. 371. Also nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, but what is expressly so alledged: And if part of the cause arises within the inferior jurisdiction, and part thereof without it, the inferior court ought not to hold plea. 1 Lev. 104. 2 Rep. 16. An inferior court, not of record cannot impose a fine, or imprisonment: But the courts of record at Westminster may fine, imprison, and amerce. 11 Rep. 43.

The King being the supreme magistrate of the kingdom, and intrusted with the executive power of the law, all courts superior and inferior ought to derive their authority from the crown. Staundf. 54: 2 Hawk. P. C. 2. Though the King himself cannot sit in judgment in any court upon an indictment, because he is one of the parties to the suit. Hawk. Ibid. The King hath committed all his power judicial to one court or other. 4 Inst. 71. And by statute it is enacted, that all persons shall receive justice in the King's court, and none take any distress, &c. of his own authority, without award of the King's courts. Stat. 52 Hen. 3. cap. 1.

It is said the customs, precedents, and common judicial proceedings of a court, are a law to the court: And the determinations of courts, make points to be law. 2 Rep. 16. 4 Rep. 53. Hob. 298. All things determinable in courts, that are courts by the common law, shall be determined by the judges of the same courts; and the King's writ cannot alter the jurisdiction of a court. 6 Rep. 11. The court of B. R. regulates all the inferior courts of law in the kingdom, so that they do not exceed their jurisdictions, nor alter their forms, &c. 22 Car. B. R. And as the court of King's Bench hath a general superintendency over all inferior courts, it may award an attachment against any such court, usurping a jurisdiction not belonging to it: But it is sometimes usual first to award a writ of prohibition, and afterwards an attachment, upon its continuing to proceed. 2 Hawk. 149, 150.

If a court, having no jurisdiction of a cause depending therein, do nevertheless proceed, the judgment in such court is coram non judice, and void; and an action lies against the judges who give the judgment, and any officer that executes the process under them: Though where they have authority, and give an ill judgment, there the party who executes the process, &c. upon the judgment, shall be excused. 1 Lill. Abr. 370. Judges of inferior courts may be punished for misbehaviour either by information or attachment. Moravias Case. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 135. Any defects in the proceedings of an inferior court cannot be amended, by the return which is not part of the record. Ibid. The King v. Holmes, 365. Where an inferior court returns its proceedings, no diminution can be alledged. Ibid. Sayer v. Curtis, 367.

Action on the case lies against the plaintiff in an action for suing one in an inferior court, where the cause of action is out of its jurisdiction. 1 Vent. 369. And if a plaintiff on a contract for a large sum, splits it into several actions for small sums to give an inferior court jurisdiction, a prohibition shall go. Mod. Caf. 90. Lord Harwicke said, he had seen good opinions, that an action of debt by original will lie in B. R. Bounds v. Allen, Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 317. And now 'tis every day's practice.

Striking, in the courts at Westminster, is punished by cutting off the right hand, and forfeiture of goods, &c. How contempts to courts are punishable by fine and imprisonment, &c. Vide Attachment. See more of Courts under Judges.

Court of Admiralty. (curia admiralitatis) Was erected as generally held, by King Ed. 3. for deciding maritime causes; and the title of its judge is Suprema curia admiralitatis Angliæ locum tenens, judex sine præfidentis. The admiralty court is not allowed to be a court of record, because it proceeds by the civil law; and the judge has no power to take such a recognisance, as a court of record may: the process and proceedings are in the name of the Lord Admiral, and by libel; and the plaintiff and defendant enter into a stipulation, or bond, for appearance, and to abide the sentence. 4 Inst. 134, 135. This court hath jurisdiction to determine all causes arising wholly upon the sea, out of the jurisdiction of a county: and a judgment of a thing done upon land is void. 1 Inst. 260. If the court of admiralty hold a plea of an agreement made at sea, but put in writing and sealed in foreign lands, a prohibition may be granted; but not if only a bare remembrance had been made of it at land. Hob. 69, 211. See Latch 11. By the custom of the admiralty, goods may be attached in the hands of a third person in causa civili & maritima. March 204.

Court-Baron. (curia baronis) Is a court which every lord of a manor hath within his own precinct: it is an inseparable incident to the manor; and must be held by prescription, for it cannot be created at this day. 1 Inst. 58. 4 Inst. 268. A court-baron must be kept on some part of the manor: and is of two natures. 1. By Common law, which is the barons or freeholders court, of which the freeholders being suitors are the judges; and this cannot be a court-baron without two suitors at least. 2. By custom, which is called the customary court: and concerns the customary tenants and copyholders, whereof the lord, or his steward is judge. The court-baron may be of this double nature, or one may be without the other: but as there can be no court-baron at Common law without freeholders; so there cannot be a customary court without copyholders or customary tenants. 4 Rep. 26. 6 Rep. 11, 12. 2 Inst. 119. The freeholders court, which hath jurisdiction for trying actions of debt, trespasses, &c. under 40*s.* may be had every three weeks; and is something like a county-court, and the proceedings much the same: though on recovery of debt, they have not power to make execution, but are to distrain the defendant's goods, and retain them till satisfaction is made. The other court-baron, for taking and passing of estates, surrenders, admittances, &c. is held but once or twice in a year, (usually with the court-leet) unless it be on purpose to grant an estate; and then it is holden as often as requisite. In this court the homage jury are to inquire that their lords do not lose their services, duties, or custom; but that the tenants make their suits of court; pay their rents and heriots, &c. and keep their lands and tenements in repair; they are to present all common and private nuisances, which may prejudice the lord's manor; and every publick trespass must be punished in this court, by amercement, on presenting the same. By statute, It shall be inquired of customary tenants, what they hold, by what works, rents, heriots, services, &c. And of the lord's woods, and other profits, fishings, &c. Stat. Extent. Manerii, 4 Ed. 1. See Complete Court-Keeper.

Court of Chivalry. (curia militaris) Otherwise called the marshal-court; the judges of it are the Lord Constable of England, and the Earl Marshal: this court is said to be the fountain of the martial law, and the Earl Marshal hath both a judicial and ministerial power; for he is not only one of the judges, but to see execution done. 4 Inst. 123. See Constable.

Court-Christan. (curia Christianitatis) Is an ecclesiastical judicature, opposed to the civil court, or lay tribunal: and as in secular courts, human laws are maintained; so in the Court Christian, the laws of Christ should be the rule. And therefore the judges are divines; as archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, &c. 2 Inst. 488. Courts Christian are so called, because they handle matters especially appertaining to Christianity; and were held heretofore by our bishops from the pope, as he challenged the superiority in all causes spiritual: but since his ejection, they hold them by the King's authority, virtute magistratus sui, &c. and as the appeal from these courts did lie to Rome, now by the Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 19. it lies to the King, in his Chancery. 4 Inst. 339, &c. These courts were complained against long before the reformation; the bishops having extended their jurisdiction so far, that they had left very little business for the secular judges; for they assumed an authority over the clergy, even in criminal cases, tho' they had no legal power, but only in the execution of the sentence of degradation, &c. and took upon them to judge in a great many other things that did not belong to them.

Court of Conscience. (curia conscientie) In the 9th year of King Hen. 8. the court of conscience in London was erected: there was then made an act of common council, that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen should assign monthly two Aldermen and four discreet Commoners, to be commissioners to sit in this court twice a week, to hear and determine all matters brought before them between party and party, between citizens and freemen of London, in all cases where the debt or damage was under 40*s.* And this act of Common Council is confirmed by Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 14. which impowers the commissioners of this court to make such orders between the parties touching such debts, as they shall find stand to equity and good conscience. Also the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. further establishes this court; the course and practice whereof is by summons, to which if the party appear, the commissioners proceed summarily; examining the witnesses of both parties, or the parties themselves on oath, and as they see cause give judgment. And if the party summoned appear not, the commissioners may commit him to the Compter prison till he does; also the commissioners have power to commit a person refusing to obey their orders, &c.

By a late statute, the proceedings of the court of conscience are regulated; and in case any person affront or insult any of the commissioners, on their certifying it to the Lord Mayor, he shall punish the offender by fine, not exceeding 20*s.* or may imprison him ten days. 14 Geo. 2. c. 10.

There are many other courts of conscience established of late years by act of parliament, too many to enumerate. See the Table to the Statutes.

Court of Delegates. (curia delegatorum) Is so called, because the judges are delegated, and sit by force of the King's commission, under the Great Seal, upon appeals to the King, in three cases. 1. When a decree or sentence is given in an ecclesiastical cause, by the archbishop, or any of his officials. 2. When any decree or sentence is given in an ecclesiastical cause in places exempt, or peculiar, belonging to the king, or an archbishop. 3. When a sentence is given in the court of admiralty in a civil and marine cause, according to the Civil law. 4 Inst. 339. Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. If the delegates in ecclesiastical causes are spiritual persons, they may proceed to excommunication, &c. This is the highest court for civil affairs that concern the church. See Appeal to Rome.

Courts Ecclesiastical. (curiæ ecclesiasticæ) Are those courts which are held by the King's authority as supreme governor of the church, for matters which chiefly concern religion. 4 Inst. 321. And the laws and constitutions whereby the church of England is governed, are, 1. Divers immemorial customs. 2. Our own provincial constitutions; and the canons made in convocations, especially those in the year 1603. 3. Statutes or acts of parliament concerning the affairs of religion, or causes of ecclesiastical cognizance; particularly the rubrics in our Common Prayer-Book, founded upon the statutes of uniformity. 4. The articles of religion, drawn up in the year 1562, and established by 13 Eliz. cap. 12. And 'tis said, by the general Canon law, where all others fail. See the 25 Hen. 8. c. 28. As to suits in spiritual or ecclesiastical courts, they are for the reformation of manners, or for punishing of heresy, defamation, laying violent hands on a clerk, and the like; and some of their suits are to recover something demanded, as tithes, a legacy, contract of marriage, &c. And in causes of this nature the courts may give costs, but not damages: things that properly belong to these jurisdictions are matrimonial and testamentary; and defamatory words, for which no action lies at law; as for calling one adulterer, fornicator, usurer, or the like. 11 Rep. 54. Dyer 240. The proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts are according to the Civil and Canon law, by citation, libel, answer upon oath, proof by witnesses, and presumptions, &c. and after sentence, for contempt, by excommunication: and if the sentence is disliked, by appeal. The jurisdiction of these courts is voluntary, or contentious: and the punishments inflicted by them are censures and punishments pro salute animæ, by way of penance, &c. They are not courts of record. Vide Consultation and Prohibition.

Court of Hustings, (curia hustingi) Is the highest court of record, holden at Guildhall, for the city of London, before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the Sheriffs, and Recorder. 4 Inst. 247. This court determines all pleas real, personal, and mixt: and here all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, rents and service, within the city of London and suburbs of the same, are pleadable in two hustings; one called hustings of plea of lands, and the other hustings of common pleas. In the hustings of plea of lands, are brought writs of right patent directed to the sheriffs of London, on which writs the tenant shall have three summonses at the three hustings next following; and after the three summonses there shall be three essoins at three other hustings next ensuing; and at the next hustings after the third essoins, if the tenant makes default, process shall be had against him by grand cape, or petit cape, &c. If the tenant appears, the demandant is to declare in the nature of what writ he will; without making protestation to sue in nature of any writ: then the tenant shall have the view, &c. and if the parties plead to judgment, the judgment shall be given by the Recorder: but no damages, by the custom of the city, are recoverable in any such writ of right patent. Practif. Solic. 416, 417. In the hustings of common pleas are pleadable writs ex gravi querela, writs of gavellet, of downer, waste, &c. also writs of exigent are taken out in the hustings; and at the fifth hustings the outlawries are awarded, and judgment pronounced by the recorder. If an erroneous judgment is given in the hustings, the party grieved may sue a commission out of Chancery, directed to certain persons to examine the record, and thereupon do right. 1 Rel. Abr. 745.

Court Leet, (leta, visus franci plegii) Is a court of record, ordained for punishing offences against the crown; and is said to be the most ancient court of the land. 2 Danv. Abr. 289. It enquires of all offences under high treason; but those which are to be punished with loss of life or member, are only inquirable and presentable here, and to be certified over to the justices of assize. Stat. 1 Ed. 3. And this court is called the view of frankpledge, because the King is to be there certified by the view of the steward, how many people are within every leet, and have an account of their good manners, and government; and every person of the age of 12 years, who hath remained there for a year and a day, may be sworn to be faithful to the King, and the people are to be kept in peace, &c. Also every one from the age of twelve to sixty years, that dwells within the leet, is obliged to do suit in this court; except peers, clergymen, &c. unless they are under the sheriff's turn. 4 Inst. 261, 263, &c.

A leet is incident to a hundred, as a court-baron to a manor; for by grant of a hundred, a leet passeth, and a hundred cannot be without a leet. Kitch. 70. Leets may be held by charter or prescription; but are commonly claim'd by prescription; and are to be kept twice a year, one time within a month after Easter, and the other within a month after Michaelmas, at a certain place within the precinct: these are the usual times of holding the leet; but if it hath been a custom to keep this court at any other time of the year, it is good if due warning be given. 1 Inst. 115. 2 Inst. 72. The steward is the judge of this court, as the sheriff is in the turn: and he hath power to elect officers, as constables, tithingmen, &c. as well as punish offenders. 6 Rep. 12. 2 Inst. 199.

A presentment in a court-leet, or sheriff's turn, after the day of presentment, subjects the party to a fine or amercement; and is not traversable, except it toucheth the party's freehold; as that one ought to cleanse the highways, &c. by reason of his tenure: though such presentment may be removed into B. R. by certiorari, where it may be traversed. Dyer 13. 2 Inst. 52. Kitch. 86. 91, &c.

A court-leet may fine, but not imprison: a steward may impose a reasonable fine for a contempt in court; or commit those who make an assay before him, in the execution of his office, or bind them to the peace or good behaviour: but he may not grant surety of the peace, unless by prescription. 8 Rep. 38. 1 Saund. 135.

The usual method of punishment in the court-leet, is by fine and amercement; the former assessed by the steward, and the latter by the jury: for both of which, the lord may have an action of debt, or take a distress, &c. Twelve freeholders, or repleaders, are to be of the jury: and the particular articles to be inquired into, by statute, are, if all that owe suit of court are present; of customs withdrawn; purprestures in lands, woods, &c. of houses set up or beat down, cottages erected contrary to law, and other annoyances; of bounds taken away; ways or waters turned or stopped; of thieves, and hues and cries not pursued; of bloodshed, escapes, persons outlawed, money coined, treasure found; abuse of bread and ale, persons keeping alehouses without licence; false weights and measure, unlawful games, offences relating to the game; offences of tanners in selling insufficient leather, of trestlers, &c. of markets, victuallers and labourers, unlawful fishing, idle persons, &c. by several statutes. All these articles are drawn up in form, and given in charge by the steward. The lord of the leet ought to have a pillory and tumbrel, to punish offenders; and for want thereof the lord may be fined, or the liberty seized. 2 Danv. 289. Also all towns in the leet are to keep stocks in repair; and the town that hath none shall forfeit 5 l. Ibid. Stewards of leets, &c. are not to receive profits to their own use, belonging to the lord, on pain of 40 l. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 5. Vide Complete Court-Keeper.

Court of Marshalsea, (curia palatii) A court of record to hear and determine causes between the servants of the King's household and others within the verge; and hath jurisdiction of all matters within the verge of the court, and of pleas of trespass, where either party is of the King's family; and of all other actions personal, wherein both parties are the king's servants; and this is the original jurisdiction of the court of marshalsea. But the curia palatii, erected by King Charles I. by letters patent, in the 6th year of his reign, and made a court of record, hath power to try all personal actions, as debt, trespass, slander, trover, actions on the case, &c. between party and party, the liberty whereof extends twelve miles about Whitehall; which jurisdiction hath since been confirmed by King Charles the Second: and the judges of this court are the steward of the King's household, and knight-marshal for the time being, and the steward of the court, or his deputy, being always a lawyer. Crompt. Jurisd. 102. Kitch. 199, &c. 2 Inst. 548.

This court is kept once a week, in Southwark: and the proceedings here are either by capias or attachment; which is to be served on the defendant by one of the knight marshal's men, who takes bond with sureties for his appearance at the next court; upon which appearance, he must give bail, to answer the condemnation of the court; and the next court after the bail is taken, the plaintiff is to declare, and set forth the cause of his action, and afterwards proceed to issue and trial by a jury, according to the custom of the Common law courts. If a cause is considerable, it is usually removed into B. R. or C. B. by an habeas corpus cum causa: otherwise causes are here brought to trial in four or five court-days. Practif. Solic. 409, 410.

By statute, the steward and marshal of the King's house are not to hold plea of freehold, &c. 28 Ed. 1. c. 3. Error in the marshalsea court may be removed into the King's Bench. 10 Ed. 3. And the fees of the marshalsea are limited by the Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 23. This marshalsea is that of the household; not the King's marshalsea, which belongs to the King's Bench.

Court Martial, (curia martialis) Is a court for punishing the offences of officers and soldiers in time of war. And it appears by our books, that if any person in commission, in time of peace, put to death any man by martial law, it is against Magna Charta, and murder. 3 Inst. 52. Though temporal acts of parliament have of late enabled our Kings to hold courts martial in time of peace, &c. By 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 13. Desertion and mutiny is punishable by a court martial: and the King, or the General of the army, may grant commissions to any field officer, &c. to call a court martial, of thirteen at least commission officers, who are to take an oath for trying truly; and sentence of death is not to be given unless nine concur: and a field-officer is not to be tried by any under the degree of a captain. By a subsequent act, courts martial may be called within the realm, for trying offenders against the laws of war out of the realm; or a deserter abroad may be sent back to his regiment to be proceeded against. And an acquittal or conviction in a court martial is a good bar to an indictment. Stat. 7 Ann. c. 4. See 1 Geo. 1. c. 9. 7 Geo. 1. c. 6. Court martial at Sea, vide Navy.

Court of Piepowders, (curia pedis pulverisati) Is a court held in fairs, to do justice to buyers and sellers, and for redress of disorders committed in them: so called, because they are most usual in summer, when the suitors to the court have dusty feet; and from the expedition in hearing causes proper thereunto, before the dust goes off the feet of the plaintiffs and defendants. 4 Inst. 272. It is a court of record incident to every fair; and to be held only during the time that the fair is kept. Doct. & Stud. c. 5. As to the jurisdiction, the cause of action for contract, slander, &c. must arise in the fair or market, and not before at any former fair, nor after the fair: it is to be for some matter concerning the same fair or market; and be done, complained of, heard and determined the same day. Also the plaintiff must make oath that the contract, &c. was within the jurisdiction and time of the fair. Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2. 2 Inst. 220.

The court of piepowders may hold a plea of a sum above 40s. and 'tis said, judgment may be given at another fair, at a court held there, and a writ of error lies upon a judgment given. Dyer 133. F. N. B. 18. This court may not meddle with any thing done in a market, without a special custom for it; but for what is done in a fair only: and not there for slanderous words, unless they concern matter of contract in the fair; as where it is for slanderous words of another, and not of his person in the same fair. Moor, ca. 854. The steward before whom the court is held, is the judge: and the trial is by merchants and traders in the fair; and the judgment against the defendant shall be quod amercietur. If the steward proceeds contrary to the statute 17 Ed. 4. he shall forfeit 5 l.

Court of Requests, (curia requisitionum) Was a court of equity, of the same nature with the court of Chancery, but inferior to it; principally instituted for the relief of such petitioners, as in conscientious cases addressed themselves by supplication to his Majesty. Of this court, the Lord Privy Seal was chief judge, assisted by the Masters of Requests; and it had beginning about the 9 H. 7. according to Sir Julius Caesar's Treatise on this subject: though Mr. Gwynn, in his Preface to his Readings, saith it began from a commission first granted by King Hen. 8.

This court having assumed great power to itself, so that it became burdensome, Mich. anno 40 & 41 Eliz. in the court of Common Pleas it was adjudged upon solemn argument, that the court of Requests was no court of judicature, &c. And by the Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 10. it was taken away. 4 Inst. 97. See Court of Conscience.

Court of the Lord Steward of the King's House. The lord steward, or in his absence, the treasurer and controller of the King's house, and steward of the mar-shalsea, may inquire of, hear and determine in this court, all treasons, murders, manslaughters, bloodtheds, and other malicious strikings, whereby blood shall be shed, in any of the palaces and houses of the King, or in any other house where his royal person shall abide. And this jurisdiction was given by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12. 3 Inst. 140. But this court was at first intended only to inquire of and punish felonies, &c. by the King's servants, against any lord or other person of the King's council. 3 H. 7. c. 14.

Court of Star-Chamber, (curia camera stellata) A court erected by 3 H. 7. c. 8. which ordained, That the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, and Lord Privy Seal, calling a Bishop, and Lord of the King's Council, and the two Chief Justices to their assistance, on bill or information might make process against maintainors, rioters, persons unlawfully assembling, and for other misdemeanors, which through the power and countenance of such as did commit them lifted up their heads above their faults, and punish them as if the offenders had been convicted at law, by a jury, &c. But this act was repealed, and the court dissolved by Stat. 17 Car. 1. c. 10.

Courts of Universities. The courts of universities of Oxford and Cambridge are of a particular nature: they were granted by charters, and confirmed by authority of parliament. See Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 29. 4 Inst. 227. These courts are called the chancellor's courts, and are kept by the vice-chancellors of the universities: their jurisdiction extends to all causes ecclesiastical and civil, (except for maihem, felony, and relating to freehold) where a scholar, servant, or minister of the universities is one of the parties to the suit. The causes are managed by advocates and proctors: and they proceed in a summary way, according to the practice of the Civil law; and the judges, in their sentences follow the justice and equity of the Civil law, or the laws, statutes and customs of the universities, or the laws of the land, at their discretion. 3 Cro. 73. If any erroneous judgment be given in these courts, appeal lies to the congregation; thence to the convocation; and thence to the King in Chancery, by his delegates Wood's Inst. 526. See Cognizance.

Courts of Wales, (curia principatus Wallie) The courts of the principality of Wales, and their jurisdiction, are settled by acts of parliament: and besides county courts, hundred-courts, courts-leet, &c. by 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 26. it is enacted, that there shall be a court of grand sessions, kept twice in every year in every of the twelve counties of Wales; and the justices of those courts may hold pleas of the crown in as large a manner as the King's Bench, &c. And also pleas of assises, and all other pleas and actions real and personal, in as large a manner as the Common Pleas, &c. And errors in judgment before any of the justices in the great sessions, shall be redressed by writ of error out of the Chancery of England returnable in B. R. The proceedings in these courts are according to the laws of England: and the King's writs ought not to go into Wales; though a quo minus out of the Exchequer is often sent thither. Sed qu. if a latitat or capias will not run into Wales?

For further satisfaction, as to the several courts within this kingdom, see 4 Inst. and Black. Com. in many places.

Court-Lands, Demains, or lands kept in the lord's hands, to serve his family. See Curtiles Terræ.

Cousenage, The writ of and proceedings therein. See Cosenage.

Couthutlaugh, (from the Sax. couth, i. e. fiens, and utlagh, exlex) Is a person that willingly and knowingly receives a man outlawed, and cherishes or conceals him: for which offence he was, in ancient time, to undergo the same punishment as the outlaw himself. Bract. lib. 3. tra. 2. cap. 13.

Cows, One milch cow is to be kept to every ten beasts, and sixty sheep, by farmers, &c. on pain of 20s. Stat. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 3.

Crafter, (crazer) A small vessel of lading; a hoy or smack. Pat. 2 R. 2. 14 Car. 2. cap. 27.

Crail, An engine made use of to catch fish. Blount.

Crane, (cranagium) Is a liberty to use a crane for drawing up of goods and wares of burden from ships and vessels, vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it: it also signifies the money paid and taken for the same. Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 11.

Crannock, An ancient measure of corn.—Quilibet debet flagellare dimidium crannock frumenti ad Semen, & duos buffellos, &c. in firma sua. Catular. Abbot. Glaston. MS. f. 39.

Craspicis, Is a word signifying a whale, viz. piscis crassus.

Crastino Sancti Vincentii, The morrow after the feast of St. Vincent the Martyr, i. e. the 22d of January; which is the date of the statutes made at Merton, anno 20 Hen. 3. There are likewise certain return days of writs in terms, in the courts at Westminster, beginning with Crastino, &c. as Crastino animarum in Michaelmas term; Crastino Purificationis beatæ Mariæ Virginis, in Hilary term; Crastino Ascensionis Domini, in Easter term; and Crastino Sanctæ Trinitatis, in Trinity term. See Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 21. 16 Car. 1. c. 6. 24 Geo. 2. c. 48.

Crates, (Lat.) Is an iron grate before a prison, used in the time of the Romans. 1 Vent. 304.

Crabare, To impeach. Si homicida divadietur ibi vel cravetur, &c. Leg. H. 1. c. 30.

Craben, or Cravent, Was a word of obloquy, where in the ancient trial by battel, the victory should be proclaimed, and the vanquished acknowledge his fault, or pronounce the word cravent, in the name of Recreantise, &c. and thereupon judgment was given forthwith; after which the recreant should become infamous, &c. 2 Inst. 248. If the appellant join'd battel, and cried cravent, he should lose liberam legem; but if the appellee cried out cravent, he was to be hanged. 3 Inst. 221. See Black. Com. 3 V. 340. 4 V. 342.

Creamer, A foreign merchant; but generally taken for one who hath a stall in a fair or market. Blount.

Creansor, creditor (of the Fr. croiance) Signifies him that trusts another with any debt, money, or wares: in which sense it is used in Old Nat. Br. 66. and 38 Ed. 3. c. 5.

Creast, or Creff, (criffa) Any imagery, or carved work, to adorn the head of wainscot, &c. like our modern cornice: but this word is now applied by the heralds to their devices set over a coat of arms. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 573.

Creche, A drinking-cup. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 104.

Creditors, Shall recover their debts of executors or administrators, who in their own wrong waste, or convert to their use the estate of the deceased, &c. Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7. Wills and devises of lands, &c. as to creditors on bonds or other specialties, are declared void; and the creditors may have actions of debt against the heir at law and devisees. 3 Ed. 4 W. & M. c. 14. And in favour of creditors, whenever it appears to be the testator's intent, in a will, that his lands should be liable for paying his debts; in such case equity will make them subject, though there are not express words; but there must be more than a bare declaration, or it shall be intended out of the personal estate. 2 Vern. Rep. 708. Where one devises that all his debts, &c. shall be first paid; if his personal estate is not sufficient to pay the creditors, it shall amount to a charge on his real estate for that purpose. Preced. Canc. 430. See Debtors and Executor.

Crech, (creca, crecca) Is a part of a haven where any thing is landed from the sea: so that it is observed, if when you are out of the main sea within the haven, you look round and see how many landing places there are, so many creeks may be said to belong to that haven. Crompt. Jurisd. fol. 110. It is also said to be a shore or bank whereon the water beats, running in a small channel from any part of the sea; from the Lat. crepido. This word is used in the Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 20. and 5 Eliz. c. 5.

Cremetum Comitatus, The sheriffs of counties anciently answered in their accounts for the improvement of the King's rents above the ancient vicontiel rents, under the title of Cremetum Comitatus, or Firma de Cremeto Comitatus, Hale's Sher. Acco. p. 36.

Crepare Oculum, To put out an eye; which had a pecuniary punishment annexed to it.—Si quis alii crepat oculum solvatur ei sexaginta solidi. Leg. H. 1. c. 78.

Cretinus, (cretena) A sudden stream or torrent. Histor. Croyland contin. 485, 617.

Crocard, A sort of old base money. See Pallards.

Crocia, The crozier or pastoral staff, so called a similitudine crucis, which bishops, &c. had the privilege to carry as the common ensign of their religious office; and being invested in their prelaties, by the delivery of such a crozier: hence the word crocia did sometimes denote the collation to, or disposal of bishopricks and abbies, by the donation of such pastoral staff; so as when the King granted large jurisdictions, exceptis crociis, it is meant, except the collation or investiture of episcopal sees, &c. Addit. to Cowell.

Crociarius, The crociary or cross-bearer, who like our virger, went before the prelate, and bore his cross.—Robertus de Wycombe, clericus episcopi Dunelm. quem vulgo crociarium ejus vocant. Liber de Miraculis Tho. Episc. Heref. MS. anno 1290.

Croft, (Sax. croftum and crosta) A little close adjoining to a dwelling-house; and enclosed for pasture or arable, or any particular use. In some old deeds crosta occurs as the Latin word for a croft; but cum toftis & croftis, is most frequent. Ingulph. It seems to be derived from the old English word craft, signifying handy craft; because such grounds are usually manured and extraordinarily drest by the hand and skill of the owner.

Croises, and croisado, Are mentioned in our ancient law books. See Croyses.

Crok, (crocus) Turning up the hair into curls or corks; whence comes crook, crooked, &c.—Sciatis quod potestatem vobis dedimus sciendendi capillos clericorum nostrorum, longas crines habentium, & ad crocos capillorum suorum deponendos, &c. Pat. 21 H. 3.

Crop, (croppa) The seeds or products of the harvest in corn, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 82.

Cross-Bows, None shall shoot in, or keep any cross-bow, hand-gun, hagbut, &c. but those who have lands of the value of 100 l. per annum: and no person shall travel with a cross-bow bent, or gun charged, except in time of war; or shoot within a quarter of a mile of any city, or market-town, unless for defence of himself or his house, or at a dead mark, under the penalty of 10 l. Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 6.

Crosses. By Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2. Crosses, beads, &c. used by the Roman Catholics, are prohibited to be brought into this kingdom, on pain of a præmunire, &c. And it was usual in former times for men to erect crosses on their houses, by which they would claim the privileges of the Templars to defend themselves against their rightful lords; but this was condemned by the Stat. Westm. 2. c. 37. It was likewise customary in those days to set up crosses in places where the corps of any of the nobility rested, as it was carried to be buried, that a transseuntibus pro ejus anima deprecetur. Walsing. anno 1291. There were several of these crosses erected over England, especially in honour to the resting-places of our Kings, on their bodies being transmitted to any distant place for burial: but these superstitious sunk in this kingdom with the Romish religion.

Croyses, (cruce signati) Is used by Britton for pilgrims, because they wear the sign of the cross upon their garments. Of these and their privileges, Bracton hath treated, lib. 5. par. 2. cap. 2. and par. 5. cap. 9. Under this word are also signified the Knightes of St. John of Jerusalem, created for the defence of pilgrims; and all those persons who in the reigns of K. Hen. 2. Ric. 1. Hen. 3. and Ed. 1. cruce signati took upon them the croisado, dedicating and lifting themselves to the wars, for the recovery of Jerusalem and the Holy Land. Greg. Syntag. lib. cap. 13, 14.

Croy, Signifieth marsh land. — Et quia palustris hujus Croyland ipsam vocem indicat, nam crudam terram & caruam significat. Ingulphus, p. 853.

Crown, (corona) Signifies the possessions and dignity of a King of any kingdom. The crown of England, according to Dr. Blackstone, is, by Common law and constitutional tion custom hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself: but the right of inheritance may, from time to time, be changed or limited by act of parliament; under which limitations the crown still continues hereditary. Black. Com. 1 V. 191. which vide. Sometimes our Kings, for political reasons, have conferred their principalities on whom they pleased, esteeming it lawful to appoint their successors after them. For Edward the Confessor appointed the crown after his decease, at several times, to William called the Conqueror, and Edgar and Harold, and Harold, after the decease of his father, upon the title left him, was crowned by the Archbishop of York; but William of Normandy having slain Harold at the battle of Hastings, he claimed the kingdom as well by the nomination of Edward the Confessor, as by right of conquest, and he was crown'd and enjoyed the kingdom for his time. Rac. Coron. 4. 27.

And to come further down, we find that the parliament, (which had the best right) have asserted their authority in these cases: the crowns of England and France were entail'd on King Henry the Fourth, and his four sons by act of parliament. Stat. 7 H. 4. c. 2. And the parliament entail'd the crown on Henry the Sixth, and his issue; also Richard the Third was recognised by parliament. But the most extraordinary instance of this nature was, the nomination and appointment of King Henry the Eighth, to whom the parliament granted power by his last will and testament to make conditions and limitations at his pleasure, for settling the inheritance of the crown; and he by his will ordained, that his son Edward should succeed him, and he dying without issue, his daughter Mary, and for her want of issue, his daughter Elizabeth to enjoy the crown in succession; with remainders to such as the King by his letters patent, &c. should appoint. Stat. 35 Hen. 8. c. 1.

After the death of King Henry 8. his son Edward the Sixth succeeded; and he was prevailed upon to appoint the Lady Jane, daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, (who married King Henry's sister) a protestant lady, by his letters patent to succeed him: but this appointment, soon after the death of K. Edward, was vacated by Queen Mary; the Lady Jane beheaded, and the protestant reformed religion eclipsed during her reign; but it revived again and received perfection, by her successor the glorious Q. Elizabeth.

By the Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1. the parliament acknowledged the Queen to be right heir to the crown; and by this act the limitation of the crown contained in 35 H. 8. is declared to stand and remain law for ever. And when King James the First came to the crown, the parliament made a recognition, that upon Queen Elizabeth's death, the crown of England, and all the kingdoms, dominions, and rights belonging to the same, did by lawful birthright and succession descend to King James. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 1.

After this we do not find that the parliament intermeddled in settling the succession of the crown till the abdication of King James the Second; when the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, lawfully representing all the estates of the people of the realm, invited over William, Prince of Orange, and the Princess Mary, (eldest daughter of King James II.) to take care of their rights and liberties; whom they declared to be King and Queen of England. And by Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 2. reciting the declaration of the Lords and Commons for securing the liberties of the kingdom, upon which the Prince and Princess of Orange accepted the crown, the said Prince and Princess were recognised King and Queen of England, &c. for their lives, and the life of the survivor of them; and after their deaths, the crown was settled on the heirs of the body of the said Princess; and for want of such issue, to the Princess Anne of Denmark, sister to the Queen, and the heirs of her body.

Also by 12 W. 3. c. 2. (after the decease of Q. Mary without issue) the Princess Sophia of Hanover (daughter of Elizabeth, eldest daughter of King James the First) was declared next in succession after King William, and the Princess Anne, and their issue; and the crown to remain to the Princess Sophia, and the heirs of her body being protestants. By virtue of which last statute, his Majesty King George the First, eldest son of the Princess Sophia, on the death of her Majesty Queen Anne without issue, the said Princess Sophia being likewise dead, came to the possession of the crown of these realms: by these last acts, papists are rendered incapable to inherit the crown of England; and subjects are absolved from their allegiance to such persons coming to the crown, and are to join in the communion of the church of England.

And this nation is not to be engaged in a war for defence of dominions not belonging to the crown.

Persons endeavouring to deprive the next in succession to the crown from succeeding, and who attempt it by any overt act, are guilty of high treason. Stat. 1 Ann. c. 2. And if any affirm by writing, &c. that the King or Queen of England cannot make laws by the authority of parliament to bind the crown, they are guilty of treason: and preaching or speaking it incur a præmunire. 4 Ann. c. 3. Affirming by writing or printing, that any other person hath a right to the crown, otherwise than according to the Stat. 1 W. & M. &c. is declared high treason. Stat. Ibid. There is no interregnum in this kingdom; for when the crown descends to the right heir, he is Rex before coronation, as there must always be a King in whose name laws are to be maintained and executed. Hill. 1 Jac. See Descent of the Crown and King.

Crown-Office. This is an office under the King's Bench, of which the King's Coroner or Attorney there is commonly Master. The Attorney General, and Clerk of the Crown exhibit informations in this office, for crimes and misdemeanors; the one ex officio, and the other usually by order of court; and here informations may be laid for offences and misdemeanors at Common law, as for batteries, conspiracies, libelling, nuisances, contempt, seditions words, &c. wherein the offender is liable to pay a fine to the King. Finch 340. Shew. 109. By Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. The Clerk of the Crown in B. R. is not to receive or file any information for trespass, battery, &c. without express order of court; nor to issue any process without taking a recognisance in 20 l. penalty to prosecute with effect; and if the party appear, and the plaintiff do not procure a trial in a year, or if verdict pass for the defendant, &c. the court shall award the defendant costs: but this act doth not extend to informations in the name of the King's Coroner or Attorney, &c. When a battery is committed privately, so that the person injured can make no proof thereof by witnesses at law; it is usual to bring an information in this office, or to prefer an indictment, the most legal method, where the party may be a witness for the King; it being his suit. Informations in the nature of quo warranto's brought by the Attorney General, against corporations, &c. Vide Quo Warranto.

Cruetum, Was a garment of purple, mix'd with many colours. — Duas patenas argentas auro ornatas cum duobus urceolis & cructo auro. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 210.

Cry de Pais, On a robbery or other felony done, hue and cry may be raised by the country in the absence of the constable, which is called cry de pais. 2 Hule's Hist. P. C. 100.

Crypta, A chapel or oratory under ground: egresse toto conventu, accepta absconsa si nox est vadit per cryptam. Du Cange.

Cuckingstool, (tumbrellum) Is an engine invented for the punishment of scolds, and unquiet women, by ducking them in water, called in ancient time a tumbrel; and sometimes a trebuchet. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 12. And Bracton writes this word tymborella. In Domesday it is called cathedra stercoris: and it was in use even in the Saxons time, by whom it was described to be cathedra, in qua rixosæ mulieres sedentes aquis demergebantur. It was anciently also a punishment inflicted upon brewers and bakers, transgressing the laws; who were thereupon in such a stool immersed over head and ears in stercore, some sinking water. Some think it is a corruption from ducking stool; others from choaking stool; quia hoc modo demersæ aqua fere suffocantur. Blount. See Cassigatory.

Cude. A cude cloth is a chrysom or face-cloth for a child baptized. Vide Chrysmale.

Cui aute Divortium, Is a writ that a woman divorced from her husband hath to recover her lands and tenement, which she had in fee simple, or in tail, or for life, from him him to whom her husband did alienate them during the marriage, when he could not gainsay it. Reg. Orig. 233. F. N. B. 240. And the heir shall have a sur cui ante divorcium, where the wife dieth before the action brought; as well as she shall have a sur cui in vita: But of an estate-tail, the heir shall not have sur cui in vita ante divorcium, but shall be put to his formedon in the descender. New Nat. Br. 454. See Black. Com. 3 V. 183.

Cui in Vita, Is a writ of entry, which a widow hath against him to whom her husband alienated her lands or tenements in his life-time; which must contain in it, that during his life she could not withstand it. Reg. Orig. 232. F. N. B. 193. If husband and wife be jointenants before the coverture, and the husband alieneth all the land, and dieth, she shall have a cui in vita for a moiety, and no more: But if they are joint purchasers, during the coverture, and he alien all the land, and dieth, his wife shall have a cui in vita of the whole land; because that during the coverture, as to purchase, they are but one person in law. F. N. B. 187. And from this reason, if husband and wife, and a third person, purchase jointly, and the husband alieneth all in fee, and dieth, the wife shall have a cui in vita of a moiety. Ibid.

Where the husband and wife exchange the lands of the wife for other lands, if the wife agree unto the exchange after the husband's death, she shall not have a cui in vita. Also if the wife do accept of parcel of the land in dower, of which she hath a cui in vita, by that acceptance she shall be barred of the residue. New Nat. Br. 430. If the husband and wife lose by default the wife's lands, after the death of her husband, she shall have a cui in vita to recover those lands so lost by default. F. N. B. 187. By Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 3. Cui in vita is given to the wife where the deceased husband lost her lands by default in his life-time: And she shall be admitted to defend her right during his life, if she come in before judgment. Likewise if tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for life, do make default, &c. the heirs and they to whom the reversion belongeth, shall be admitted to their answer, if they come before judgment: And if on default judgment happen to be given, such heirs, &c. shall have a writ of entry for recovery of the same, after the death of such tenants. See Booth on real actions, and F. N. B. and Black. Com. 3 V. 183.

Culagium, Is when a ship is laid up in the dock to be repaired. MS. Arb. Trevor. Arm. de Plac. Edw. 3.

Culpit, Is a reply of a proper officer in behalf of the King, affirming a criminal to be guilty, after he hath pleaded Not guilty, without which the issue to be tried is not joined: It is compounded of two words, viz. Cul and pri; the one an abbreviation of culpabilis, and the other derived from the French word prest, i. e. ready; and 'tis as much as to say, That he is ready to prove the offender guilty. See Black. Com. 4 V. 333.

Cultura, This word is often found in old writings, and signifies a parcel of arable land. Blount.

Culvertage, (Culvertagium) Is said by some persons to be derived from Cutum & Vertere, to turn tail: And in this sense, sub nomine culvertagii, was taken to be on pain of cowardice, or being accounted cowards. But in the opinion of others, it rather signifies some base slavery, or the confiscation of an estate; being a feudal term for the lands of the vassal forfeited and escheating to the lord: and sub nomine culvertagii, in this signification, was under pain of confiscation. Matt. Paris. Anno 1212.

Culward and Culverd, Words used for a coward, or cowardice. Chart. Temp. E. 1.

Cuna Cervisia, A tub of ale. Domesday. But this word is truly Cuva.

Cuneus, A mint or place to coin money: Cuneum moneta signifies the King's stamp for coinage; and from the word cune, is derived coin. See Coin.

Cunty=Cunty, Is a kind of trial, as appears by Bracton, in these words: In brevi de recto, negotium terminabitur per Cunty-Cunty, &c. which is taken to be the ordinary jury. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 18.

Curagulus, One who taketh care of a thing. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2.

Cura Monasterii, An officer so called, who had the charge of a monastery.

Curate, (Curatus) Is he who represents the incumbent of a church, parson or vicar, and officiates divine service in his stead: And in case of pluralities of livings, or where a clergyman is old and infirm, it is requisite there should be a curate to perform the cure of the church. He is to be licensed and admitted by the bishop of the diocese, or by an ordinary, having episcopal jurisdiction: and when a curate hath the approbation of the bishop, he usually appoints the salary too; and in such case, if he be not paid, the curate hath a proper remedy in the ecclesiastical court, by a sequestration of the profits of the benefice; but if he hath no licence from the bishop, he is put to his remedy at common law, where he must prove the agreement, &c. Right. Clerg. 127.

By statute, where curates are licensed by the bishop, they are to be appointed by him a stipend not exceeding 50*l.* per ann. nor less than 20*l.* a year, according to the value of the livings, to be paid by the rector or vicar: And the same may be done on any complaint made. Stat. 12 An. c. 2. One person cannot be curate in two churches, unless such may satisfy the law, by reading both morning and evening prayers at each place: Nor can he serve one cure on one Sunday, and another cure on the next; for he must not neglect to read morning and evening prayer in his church every Lord's day; if he doth he is liable to punishment. Comp. Incumb. 572. But it is otherwise where a church or chapel is a member of the parish-church; and where one church is not able to maintain a curate. Can. 48.

A curate having no fixed estate in his curacy, not being instituted and inducted, may be removed at pleasure by the bishop or incumbent. Noy. But there are perpetual curates, as well as temporary, who are appointed where tithes are impropriate, and no vicarage endowed: These are not removeable; and the impropriators are obliged to find them, some whereof have certain portions of the tithes settled on them. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8. Every clergyman that officiates in a church, (whether incumbent or substitute) is in our liturgy called a curate: Curates must subscribe the declaration, according to the act of uniformity, or are liable to imprisonment, &c.

Curfeu, (of the Fr. Cowrir, i. e. Tegere, and Feu, Ignis,) signifies the ringing of a bell, or evening peal, by which William the First, called the Conqueror, commanded every person to rake up or cover over his fire, and put out his light: And in many places of England at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed-time, it is said to ring curfew. Stow's Annals.

In the Welch language, curfa, signifies a beating; also, a stroke. Richard's Antiquæ Linguae Britannicæ Thesaurus.

Curia, The word was sometimes taken for the persons, as feudatory and other customary tenants, who did their suit and service at the court of the lord. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 139. And it was usual for the Kings of England, in ancient times, to assemble the bishops, peers, and great men of the kingdom to some particular place, at the chief festivals in the year; and this assembly is called by our historians curia; because there they consulted about the weighty affairs of the nation. And it was therefore called Solemnis Curia, Augustalis Curia, Curia Publica, &c. See Court.

Curia advisare vult, Is a deliberation which a court of judicature sometimes takes, where there is any point of difficulty, before they give judgment in a cause. New Book Entr. And when judgment is staid, upon motion to arrest it; then 'tis entered by the judges curia advisare vult. Shep. Epit. 682.

Curia Curus Aquæ, A court held by the lord of the manor of Gravesend for the better management of barges and boats using the passage on the river Thames from thence to London, and plying at Gravesend bridge, &c. mentioned in the Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 26.

Curia Claudenda, Is a writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he ought to make between his land and the plaintiff's, on his refusing or deferring to do the same. Reg. Orig. 155. This writ doth not lie but against him who hath a close adjoining to the plaintiff's land, who is obliged to inclose it; and it lieth not but for him who hath a freehold, &c. It may be sued before the the sheriff in the county-court, or in the common pleas : And the judgment is to recover the inclosure and damages. New Nat. Br. 282, 283.

Curia Domini, The lord's house, hall or court, where all the tenants attend at the time of keeping courts.

Curia Penticiarum, Is a court held by the sheriff of Chester, in a place there called the Pendice or Pentice : And 'tis probable its being originally kept under a Pent-house, or open shed covered with boards, gave it its denomination.

Curnock, A measure containing four bushels, or half a quarter. Flata, lib. 2. c. 12.

Curriculus, The year, or course of a year : Altum est hoc annorum Dominice incarnationis quatuor quinquagenis & quinq̄tes, quinis lustris, & tribus curriculis. This is the year 1028 ; for four times 50 make 200, and five times 200 make 1000. Then five lustra are twenty-five years, and three Curriculi, three years, making in all the very year.

Curriers, Are persons that curry and dress leather. No currier shall use the trade of a butcher, tanner, &c. or shall curry skins insufficiently tanned, or gash any hides of leather, on pain of forfeiting for every hide or skin 6 s. 8 d. And persons in London putting leather to be curried to any but freemen of the Curriers Company ; and such curriers not currying the leather sufficiently, shall forfeit the ware or the value, &c. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. The clause relating to freemen is repealed ; but if any currier do not curry leather sent him, within sixteen days between Michaelmas and Lady-Day, and in eight days at other times, on conviction before a justice, he shall forfeit 5 l. to be levied by distress, &c. yet subject to mitigation. 12 Geo. 2. c. 25. Curriers and such as deal in leather, may cut and sell it in small pieces in their shops to any persons whatsoever. Stat. Ibid. See Leather, Skins, &c.

Curstors, (Clerici de Cursu) Clerks belonging to the Chancery, who make out original writs ; and are called Clerks of Course, in their oath appointed 18 Ed. 3. stat. 5. There are of these clerks twenty-four in number, which make a corporation of themselves ; and to each clerk is allotted a division of certain counties, in which they exercise their functions. 2 Inst. 670.

Curtoziæ, A sort of light ships or swift sailers : This word is mentioned in Howden, R. 1. Applicuerunt ibi Navæ & Bufciæ 500. exceptis Galeis & curtoziis, &c.

Curtsey of England, (Jus Curialitatis Angliæ) Is where a man taketh a wife seised in fee-simple, or fee-tail general, or as heiress in special tail, and hath issue by her, male or female, born alive, which by any possibility may inherit, and the wife dies ; the husband holds the lands during his life ; and is called Tenens per legem Angliæ, or tenant by the curtesy of England ; because this privilege is not allowed in any other country, except Scotland, now belonging to England.

Four things are requisite to give an estate by the curtesy, viz. Marriage, seisin of the wife, issue, and death of the wife. 1 Inst. 30. If land descend to the wife after the husband hath issue by her ; or if the issue be dead at the time of her death, being born alive ; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy. Also if a child is born alive, 'tis not material whether 'tis baptised, or ever heard to cry, to make the husband tenant by the curtesy ; for if 'tis born alive, 'tis enough. 1 Nels. Abr. 578. But the child must be such as by possibility may inherit ; and therefore if land be given to a woman, and the heirs male of her body, and she takes husband and hath issue a daughter, and dies ; as this issue cannot possibly inherit, the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesy. Terms de Ley.

If the child is rip'd forth of the mother's belly, after her death, tho' it be alive, it will not entitle tenancy by the curtesy ; for this ought to begin by the issue, and be consummate by the death of the wife, and the estate of tenant by the curtesy should avoid the immediate descent. Ibid. A man shall not be tenant by the curtesy of a bare right, title, use, reversion, &c. expectant upon an estate of freehold, unless the particular estate is determined during the coverture ; nor of a seisin in law : But if a wife dies before a rent becomes due ; or in the case of an advowson, before the church becomes void ; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy, though the wife had only a seisin in law ; for in this case no other seisin could be attained. F. N. B. 149. 1 Inst. 29, 30, 40.

There is no tenancy by the curtesy of copyhold lands, except there be a special custom for it. And where a husband is entitled to this tenancy, if after the wife is an idiot, and her estate in the land sound : when she dies, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy, for the King's title by relation prevents it. Plowd. 263. If the wife be seised in fee of lands, and attaint of felony, but have issue by her husband, and she is hanged, &c. 'tis said the husband shall be a tenant by the curtesy : But yet the land will be forfeited according to Kitch. 159. 21 Ed. 3. 49.

A woman seised of land had two daughters, and covenanted to stand seised to the use of E. her eldest daughter in tail ; on condition that she should pay to her other daughter within a certain time 300 l. And if E. made default, or died without issue before such payment, then the land to go to the second daughter ; the mother dying, E. took a husband, and had issue, and died afterwards without any issue living, before the day of payment : It was here held, that her husband should be tenant by the curtesy. 1 Leon. ca. 233. See Kitch. 159.

Curteyn, (Curstana) Was the name of King Edward the Confessor's sword ; which is the first sword carried before the Kings of England at their coronation : And it is said the point of it is broken as an emblem of mercy. Mat. Paris. in Hen. 3.

Curtilage, (Curtilagium, from the Fr. Cour, Court, and Sax. Leagb locus) Is a court-yard, back-side, or piece of ground lying near and belonging to a dwelling-house. 4 Ed. 1. cap. 1. 35 H. 8. c. 4. 39 Elix. c. 10. 6 Rep. 64.—Mibi dici videtur curtilagium à curtillum & ago, scil. locus ubi curtis vel curtilli negotium agitur. Spelm. And though it is said to be a yard or garden, belonging to a house ; it seems to differ from a garden, for we find, cum quodam gardino & curtilagio. 15 Ed. 1. n. 34.

Curtilles Terræ, Court lands. It is recorded, that among our Saxon ancestors, the Thanes or nobles who possessed Bockland, or hereditary lands, divided them into Inland and Outland : The Inland was that which lay most convenient for the lord's mansion-house ; and therefore the lords kept that part in their own hands, for the support of their families, and for hospitality : Afterwards the Normans called these lands Terras Dominicales, the demains, or lord's lands : The Germans term'd them Terras Indominicatas, lands in the lord's own use : And the Feudists, Terras Curtilles, lands appropriate to the court or house of the lord. Spelm. of Feuds, c. 5.

Custantia, The same with Custagium, which signifies costs.

Custode admittendo, and Custode amovendo, writs for the admitting or removing of guardians. Reg. Orig.

Custodes Libertatis Angliæ Auctoritate Parliamenti, Was the style in which writs and all judicial process did run during the grand rebellion, from the murder of King Charles I. till the usurper Oliver was declared Protector, &c. mentioned and declared traitorous, by statute 12 Car. 2. c. 3.

Custodiam dare, Was taken for a gift or grant for life. Du Cange.

Custom, (Consuetudo) Is a law not written, established by long usage, and the consent of our ancestors. No law can oblige a people without their consent : So where-ever they consent and use a certain rule or method as a law, such rule, &c. gives it the power of a law ; and if 'tis universal, then 'tis common law : if particular to this or that place, then 'tis custom. 3 Salk. 112. And as to the rise of customs, when a reasonable act once done was found to be good and beneficial to the people, then they did use it often, and by frequent repetition of the act, it became a custom ; which being continued without interruption time out of mind, it obtained the force of a law, to bind the particular places, persons, and things concerned therein.

therein. Thus a custom had beginning and grew to perfection: And a good custom must be grounded on antiquity, continuance, certainty, and reason: Antiquity, for that it hath been time out of memory, or threescore years, as limited by statute; and time out of mind is where no man then living hath heard or known any proof to the contrary: If two or more witnesses can depose that they heard their fathers say it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their grandfathers say it was so also in their time; it is enough for the proof of a custom. Blount. Davis Rep. 32. Continuance of a custom ought to be without any interruption time out of memory; for if it be discontinued within time of memory, the custom is gone. Certainty, a custom must be certain, because an uncertain thing may not be continued time out of mind: And custom must be reasonable, for unreasonable things are unlawful. 'Tis otherwise said that,

Customs have four inseparable incidents: They are to have a reasonable commencement, to be certain, and not ambiguous; to have uninterrupted continuance; and not be against the King's prerogative. And the two pillars of custom, are common usage, and that they be time out of mind. Davies 32. 4 Leon. 384. A custom contrary to the public good; or injurious to a multitude, and beneficial only to some particular persons, is repugnant to the law of reason, and consequently void. 2 Danv. 424, 427. Customs ought to be beneficial to all, but may be good where against the interest of a particular person, if for the public good. Dyer 60. A custom is not unreasonable for being injurious to private persons or interests, so as it tends to the general advantage of the people. 3 Salk. 112. which vide.

A custom may be good in some cases, where a prescription is not: But customs that are good for the substance and matter of them, may yet be bad for the manner; if they are uncertain, or mix'd with any other custom that is unreasonable, &c. 2 Bulst. 166. 2 Brownl. 198. A custom extends over some place or will: A prescription extends only to particular persons. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Anally. Sharp v. Lowther, f. 293. A prescription must always be had by way of que estate. Ibid. Custom that every one who passeth over such a bridge, within the lord's manor, and which the lord doth repair, shall pay him one penny, is a good custom; but if it be to pay the lord 12 d. it will be naught, for it is unreasonable. Calib. Cop. 35. 1 Bulst. 203.

A custom that a lord shall have within his manor liberam fildam, or free-fold throughout the village; and that no other shall have it but by agreement with him, and if any take it, the lord may abate the same; this hath been held a good custom. 1 Rol. 560. The custom of a place, for all the inhabitants of the parish, to have common in a great waste of the lord's for all manner of beasts all the year; and to have liberty to water them in such a pond, and when the pond was foul to cleanse it, was adjudged good. Mich. 4 Jac. 1. 2 Brownl. 293. Contra as to common, for an inhabitant, as such, cannot have it. Gafward's Case. 6 Co. 60. A custom, that tenants of a manor shall grind all the corn they spend in their own houses, in the lord's mill, &c. is good: But a custom that every inhabitant of a house held of the lord, shall grind the corn that he spends, or shall sell, at his mill, is void. Moor, ca. 1217. Hob. 149. Custom to have a common bakehouse in a manor or parish, for all the tenants or inhabitants, is a good custom. 2 Bulst. 198.

Custom is, and must always be alledged to be in many persons, and so it may be claimed by copyholders, or the inhabitants of a place, and when it is claimed, it must be as within such a county, hundred, city, borough, manor, parish, hamlet, &c. Co. Litt. 110, 113. 4 Rep. 31. A good custom or prescription hath the force of a grant; as where one and his ancestors have had a rent time out of mind, and used to distrain, &c. But a custom that begins by extortion of lords of manors, is judged wanting a lawful commencement, and therefore void: And where custom is amongst many, and they are all dead but one, the custom is gone. Plowd. 322. Dyer 199. Customs must be construed according to vulgar apprehension: And are to be taken strictly, being in derogation of the common law. 2 Rol. Abr. 270. They are not good which are merely in the negative; but if mixed with an affirmative, they may be good. 1 Rol. 565.

A custom which may be intended to have had lawful beginning, is a good custom; otherwise not: nor will continuance of time make malum in se good. 1 Lill. Abr. 375. Customs against common right and the rule of law, are held good. 8 Rep. 126. The law takes notice of customs of Gavelkind, &c. which alter descents from the common law, in favour of all the sons, &c.

A custom may extend to and give an infant a power of doing that, which by the rules of the common law he could not do; as an infant at the age of 15, may make a feoffment of lands of the nature of gavelkind; but this, like all other customs, is to be construed strictly, and in such manner as that no prejudice may accrue to the infant thereby; and therefore such feoffment must be for valuable consideration, must be made in person, and not by attorney, cannot be with warranty, must be of lands which descend to him in gavelkind, and not of lands by purchase; and must be of lands in possession, not in remainder or reversion. 1 New Abr. 670, 671.

And customs for an eldest daughter to inherit, or a youngest son, may be good: For these, though contrary to a particular rule of law, may have a reasonable beginning. Nelf. Abr. 579. And by custom a woman may be endowed of a moiety of the husband's lands, &c. Also by custom, infants may bind themselves apprentices, &c. 2 Danv. Abr. 438.

Regularly a man cannot alledge a custom against a statute, because that is the highest matter of record in law: But a custom may be alledged against a negative statute, which is made in affirmance of the common law. 1 Inst. 115. And acts of parliament do not always take away the force of customs. Custom pleaded against custom is not good. 2 Danv. Abr. 436. A custom is to be positively alledged, by usage in fact. Lutw. 1319. General customs which are used throughout England, and are the common law, are to be determined by the judges: But particular customs, such as are used in some certain town, borough, city, &c. shall be determined by jury. Doct. & Stud. c. 7, 10. 1 Inst. 110. Consuetudo pro lege servatur, &c. saith Bracton, lib. 3. c. 3. And custom is said to be altera lex: But the judges of the court of B. R. or C. B. can over-rule a custom though it be one of the customs of London, if it be against natural reason, &c. 1 Mod. 212.

As to the manner of laying a custom, and the difference between alledging a thing by way of custom, or by way of prescription. See 6 Co. 60. Hob. 113. Cro. Eliz. 441. Poph. 201. Style 477. 1 Lev. 176. 1 Vent. 386. 3 Lev. 160. Currb. 192.

Custom of London. The city of London hath divers particular customs, different from any other place. By the custom of London, when a citizen and freeman dies, his goods and chattels shall be divided into three parts; the wife to have one part, the executors another, to discharge legacies, &c. and the children unprovided for the other third part. 2 Danv. Abr. 311, 312. If a freeman of London hath no wife, but children, the half of his personal estate goes to them, and he may dispose of the other moiety; so if he have a wife and no children, the half belongs to her; but if he have both wife and children, then one third part belongs to the wife, another third to the children, and he may dispose of the other third; and if he dies intestate, the remaining third is to be distributed according to the statute. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1139. But see 11 Geo. 1. c. 18.

An after-born child shall come in with the others, for a customary share of a freeman's estate. And where any child dies, before one and twenty, his share survives to the other children; but in case he die after that age, at which time he might make a will of it, there on his dying intestate, it shall go according to the statute of distributions. Preced. Can. 499, 537. A devise or settlement of lands, does not bar a child of his part of the personal estate by the custom: but where a wife is to have a certain sum out of the husband's estate, it shall be intended tended in satisfaction of her share. 2 Vern. 753. 1 Chan. Caf. 160.

A freeman of London dies without issue, his widow is to have her widow's chamber, and a moiety of the rest of the estate; and in an extraordinary case, she was allowed the benefit of the other moiety for life by virtue of her husband's will. 1 Vern. 132. 2 Vern. Rep. 110. By the statute 11 Geo. 1. c. 18. Freemen, by will, may now give and dispose of their personal estates, to whom they think fit; yet if they die intestate, such estates shall be subject to, and be distributed agreeable to the custom of the city. Where a freeman dies, and leaves orphan children under age, unmarried, the court of orphans hath the custody of their bodies and goods, by the custom of London: It is also the same, though he dies, or the children were born out of London. 1 Mod. 80.

By the city custom, action on the case lies for calling a married woman a whore; for in London such woman may be carted: And this reaches to all the inhabitants within London. 2 Dawv. 310. 1 Lill. 378. A woman that useth a trade in London, without her husband, is chargeable without him as a feme sole merchant: She shall plead as sole, and if condemned, be put in prison till she pay the debt; also the bail for her are liable, if she absent herself; and the husband shall not be charged. Privil. Londini. And if action of trespass be brought against a man and his wife, and the wife only arrested, &c. by the custom of London, the plaintiff may proceed against the wife. Sed qu. It is the custom of the city of London, that where a person is educated in one trade, he may set up another. 1 Saund. 312. If a debtor be fugitive, he may be arrested by the custom of London, before the day, to find better security. Hib. 86. Where two persons are bound as sureties for another, and recovery is had against one of them, he may have contribution against the other, by the city laws. 2 Dawv. Abr. 310. Debts on simple contract will maintain an action in London, as well as debts on specialty: And it is the custom of the city that action of debt shall be maintained upon such a contract against executors or administrators, who shall be chargeable therewith, as if it were upon a bond or obligation. 8 Co. Rep. 126. 5 Rep. 82.

There is a foreign attachment, by the custom of London, of money, &c. in the hands of a third person, where one man owes another any debt, &c. See Attachment.

By a custom of London, every tenant at will of any house above 40 s. per ann. in the city, ought to give, or to have, half a year's warning, on leaving it: And a landlord recovered half a year's rent, where the tenant had left the house, &c. without such warning. Comber. 384. If any custom of London be pleaded and denied, it shall be tried by writ to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, to certify whether there be such a custom; who shall make certificate by the mouth of their recorder. Cro. Car. 516. The courts at Westminster of course take notice of the customs of London; but not of any other place, without being alledged. 1 Roll. Rep. 106.

Custom of Merchants, Merchants giving characters of strangers to those who sell them goods, are liable to the debts of such strangers for the goods sold; by the custom of merchants. Lex Mercat. c. 10. f. 69. Sed qu. If two persons be found in arrear, upon an account grounded on the custom of merchants, any one of them may be charged to pay the whole sum, that both were found in arrear. 1 Lill. Abr. 376. And if two joint merchants occupy their stock and merchandise in common, one of them naming himself a merchant, shall have an account against the other, and charge him as receiver. Co. Litt. 172. By the custom of merchants, where a merchant orders his factor to buy goods of a particular person, there the merchant is debtor, and not the factor: but 'tis otherwise where the merchant orders his factor to buy goods generally, without saying of whom; here the factor is debtor, though the goods come to the use of the merchant. 1 Lill. 376. The custom of merchants as to bills of exchange, that the indorsee shall charge the first drawer before the indorser, &c. See Bill of Exchange.

Customs (Custuma) Are used for the tribute or toll that merchants pay to the King, for carrying out and bringing in merchandise. Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 21. They are duties payable to the crown for goods exported and imported, and are due to the King of common right; first because the subject hath leave to depart the kingdom, and to export the commodities thereof; secondly, for the interest which the King hath in the sea, and as he is guardian of, and maintains all the ports, wherein the commodities are exported or imported; and lastly, for that the King protects merchants from enemies and pirates. Dyer 43.

The word custom comprehends Magna & Antiqua Custuma, which is payable out of our own native commodities, as for wool, woodfells, and leather; and parva custuma, which are customs payable by merchants, strangers, and denizens; and these began in the reign of Edw. 1. when the parliament granted him 3 d. in the pound for all merchandises exported and imported. Ibid. 165. But that which is granted by parliament, is properly called a subsidy; and sometimes granted to the King for life; and there are several sorts of these subsidies, as tonnage, a duty granted out of every ton of wine imported, which was first granted by parliament to King Edward III. And poundage, a subsidy granted for all goods exported and imported, except wines, &c. and is usually the twentieth part of the value of the goods, or 12 d. in the pound; and this was first given to Hen. 6. for life. 1 Nels. Abr. 583, 584.

In the reign of Edward III. the great charter for free traffick was confirm'd: And anno 6 Ed. III. it was enacted, that no new customs could be levied, nor ancient increased, but by authority of parliament. 2 Inst. 60. But though the King cannot lay any imposition on merchandise without consent of parliament; yet by his prerogative he may restrain merchants from trading without his royal licence. In the 14th year of Ed. 3. it was enacted in parliament, that a mark should be paid as custom for a sack of wool. Anno 4 H. 8. Collectors were appointed of the subsidy of cloth of gold, silver, velvet, &c. And 1 Eliz. Duties were granted on sweets, wines, &c. And anno 12 Car. 2. c. 4. The subsidies of tonnage and poundage, &c. were granted to King Charles during his life; as they have been since to his royal successors, down to his Majesty King George III. And many and various are the duties of customs granted on foreign goods and merchandise, in the reigns of King James II. K. William, Q. Anne, and his late and present Majesty.

The tonnage duty granted to King Charles II. was for every ton of French wine, brought into the port of London, by merchants natural subjects, 4 l. 10 s. by alien strangers, 6 l. for Malmseys, Tents, Alicants, Sacks, Canaries, Malagas, Maderass, and all other sweet wines, by native subjects, 2 l. 5 s. the ton; by strangers and aliens 3 l. &c. The poundage duty was 12 d. in the pound value for all merchandise goods, according to the book of rates, except woollen cloths made in England, and for all woollen broad cloths, to be paid after the rate of each 64 pounds in weight, by subjects 3 s. 4 d. and strangers 6 s. 8 d. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

If goods and merchandise are brought by a merchant to a port or haven, and there part thereof sold but never put on land, they must pay the customs; and discharging them out of the ship into another upon the sale, amounts in law to a putting them upon the land, so that if the custom duties are not paid, the goods will be forfeited. Hill. 24 Eliz. 12 Co. Rep. 18.

By the statute 21 Geo. 2. c. 2. over and above all subsidies of tonnage and poundage, and other duties whatsoever already payable on any goods or merchandises imported, a farther subsidy of poundage of 12 d. in the pound is given to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, payable by the importer according to the rate of the fine goods, as valued in the book of rates. Unrated East India goods are to pay 5 d. per cent. of the gross price, for they shall be sold at the candle.

By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 34. If any persons, to the number of three or more, armed with offensive weapons, shall be assembled in order to be aiding in the illegal exportation of goods prohibited to be exported, or the running uncustomed goods, or the illegal relanding any goods, or rescuing the same, after seizure, from any officer, er, or from the place where they shall be lodged, or in the rescuing any person apprehended for any offence made felony by any act relating to the customs or excise, or preventing the apprehending any person guilty of any such offence; or in case any persons to the number of three or more, so armed, shall be so assisting, or if any person shall have his face blacked, or wear any mask, or other disguise, when passing with such goods, or shall forcibly hinder, obstruct, assault, oppose, or resist any officer of his Majesty's revenue, in seizing such goods, or shall maim or dangerously wound any such officer in his attempting to go on board any vessel, or shoot at or dangerously wound any such person when on board and in the execution of his office, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death. On information on oath of any person's being guilty of any of the above offences, the justice may certify the information to one of the Secretaries of State, who is to lay it before his Majesty; whereupon his Majesty may make an order, requiring the offender to surrender himself in forty days after publication thereof in the Gazette; and in default thereof, the order being published twice in the Gazette, and proclaimed in two markets near where the offence was committed, and a copy thereof affixed up in some public place there, the offender shall be attainted of felony and suffer death. Any person harbouring or aiding any such offender after the time for his surrender expired, knowing him to have been so required to surrender, being prosecuted within a year, shall be transported for seven years. Offences made felony by this act, may be sued in any county.

If any officer, &c. in the seizing, &c. such goods, or in the endeavouring to apprehend any such offender, shall be beat, wounded, maimed or killed, or the goods be rescued, the inhabitants of the rape, lath or hundred, unless the offender be convicted within six months, shall forfeit 100*l.* to the executors of any officer killed; and pay damages to any officer beat, &c. not exceeding 40*l.* and for any goods rescued, not exceeding 200*l.* A reward of 500*l.* for apprehending any offender; a person wounded in apprehending an offender to have 50*l.* extraordinary, and the executors of a person killed to have 100*l.* Ships and vessels outward-bound, are not to take in any goods, till the vessel, &c. is entered with the collector of the customs; and before departure, the contents of the lading is to be brought in under the hands of the laders, &c. Also when ships arrive from beyond sea, the masters are to make a true entry upon oath, of the lading, goods, ship, &c. under the penalty of 100*l.* And if any concealed goods are found after clearing, for which the duties have not been paid, the master of the vessel shall be subject to the like penalty. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. Officers of the customs may search ships. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. sec. 4. Having writ of assistance, may search houses, sec. 4. The penalty of abusing officers, sec. 6. Keepers of wharfs, keys, &c. landing or shipping goods, without the presence of some officer of the customs, shall forfeit 100*l.* And resisting officers of the customs, in the execution of their office, is liable to a fine not exceeding 100*l.* Stat. Ibid. But by 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. Where officers of the customs are hindered in the execution of their duty, by persons armed to the number of eight, the offenders are to be transported for seven years. If any goods are put into any vessel to be carried beyond sea; or be brought from beyond sea, and unshipped to be landed, the duties not being paid, nor agreed for at the custom house; the same shall be forfeited, one moiety to the King, the other to the seizer, &c. And by late statutes, foreign goods taken in at sea, by any coasting vessel, &c. shall be forfeited, and treble value. To prevent clandestine running of goods, foreign brandy, &c. imported in vessels under forty tons, the vessel and brandy to be forfeited: If any person conceal run goods, he shall forfeit them, and treble value; and the like penalty is inflicted for offering such goods to sale. 8 Geo. 1. c. 18. & 11 Geo. 1. c. 7. The commissioners of the customs, &c. shall cause all goods seized for unlawful importation, or non-payment of duties, to be publicly sold; and damaged wines for distillation, &c. And one or more justices of peace, of the county where any seizure shall be made by officers of run goods, &c. mentioned in informations before them, may administer an oath to any person skilled in the nature and quality of the goods, to view the same, and make a return of the species and value; and after they shall be condemned and sold. Stat. 12 Geo. 1. cap. 26.

By a late act, where three persons are assembled and armed with fire-arms, &c. to be assisting in the running of goods, they shall be guilty of felony and transported, and 50*l.* to be paid for apprehending such offenders; also the like reward to any of them for discovering others. All persons two or more in company, found passing within five miles from the sea-coasts, with any horses, cart, &c. wherein are put above six pounds of tea, or five gallons of brandy, or other foreign goods of 30*l.* value, landed without entry, and not having permits, and who shall carry offensive weapons, &c. or assault any of the officers of the customs, shall be adjudged runners of goods, and be transported as felons, and all the goods to be seized and forfeited: And suspected persons lurking near the coasts, not giving a good account of themselves, may be sent by a justice to the house of correction for a month; and informers to have 20*s.* for every offender so taken. If any person offers any tea, brandy, &c. to sale, without a permit, the persons to whom offered may seize and carry it to the next warehouse belonging to the customs or excise; and the seizers shall have a third part, &c. And watermen, carmen, porters, &c. in whose custody run goods are found, shall forfeit treble value, or be committed for three months. Ships and vessels from foreign parts, having on board tea, or brandy, rum, &c. in casks under sixty gallons, (except for the use of seamen) found at anchor, or hovering near any port, or within two leagues of the shore, and not proceeding in their voyages, unless in cases of unavoidable necessity, all such tea, &c. shall be forfeited. Persons offering any bribe to officers of the customs, to connive at the running of goods, to forfeit 50*l.* and obstructing such officers in entering or searching ships, incurs a forfeiture of 100*l.* And if an officer be wounded or beaten on board any ship, the offenders to be transported, &c. Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. There is a draw-back allowed merchants for some goods and merchandize; and they have allowances of so much per cent. out of the customs, where goods are defective, or receive damage, &c.

By statute, no customer or comptroller of the customs, shall have any ships of his own, or meddle with the freight of ships. 14 R. 2. c. 10. And no searcher, surveyor, &c. or their clerks, deputies, or servants, may have any such ships of their own; nor shall use merchandize, keep a wharf, inn or tavern, or be factor, attorney, &c. to a merchant, under the penalty of 40*l.* Stat. 20 H. 6. c. 5. Customers, collectors, or comptrollers, shall not conceal customs duly entered and paid, on pain to forfeit the treble value of merchandize so customed, and to make fine and ransom to the King. 3 H. 6. c. 3. If any persons employed about the customs and subsidies take a bribe, or connive at any false entry, they shall forfeit 100*l.* and be incapable of any employment under the King. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. Also if any officer of the revenue, shall make any collusive seizure of foreign goods, to the intent the same may escape payment of the duties, he is to forfeit 500*l.* and be incapable of serving his Majesty; and the importer and owner shall forfeit treble the value of the goods so collusively seized, &c. 5 Geo. 1. c. 11. Officers of the customs, &c. are not to trade in brandy, coffee, &c. or any exciseable liquor, on pain of 50*l.* and forfeiture of offices. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. For farther particulars concerning customs, see Table to statutes at large, 4th Edit. and see Information.

Customs and Services, Belonging to the tenure of lands, are such as tenants owe unto their lord; which being withheld from the lord, he may have a writ of customs and services. See Consuetudinibus & Servitiis.

Customs-Exchequer, Is the principal clerk belonging to the court of Common Pleas, whose office is to receive and keep all the writs returnable in that court, and put them upon files, every return by itself; and to receive of the prothonotaries all the records of Nisi prius, called the Pysses; for they are first brought in by the clerk of assize of every circuit to the prothonotary, who enters the issue in the causes, to enter the judgment: And four days after the return thereof, the prothonotary enters the verdict and judgment thereupon, into the rolls of the court; whereupon he afterwards delivers them over to the custos breviarum, who binds them into a bundle. He makes entry likewise of all writs of covenant, and the concord upon every fine; and maketh forth exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records in his office, and of all fines levied. The finis after they are engrossed, are divided between the custos breviarum and the chirographer; the chirographer always keeps the writ of covenant and the note, and the custos breviarum the concord and foot of the fine; upon which foot of the fine, the chirographer causeth the proclamations to be indorsed, when they are proclaimed. This officer is made by the King's letters patent: And in the court of King's Bench, there is also a custos breviarum & rotulorum, who fileth such writs as are in that court filed, and all warrants of attorney, &c. and whose business it is to make out the records of Nisi prius, &c.

Custos Placitorum Coronæ, An officer which seems to be the same with him we now call custos rotulorum. Bract. lib. 2. c. 5.

Custos Rotulorum, Is he who hath the custody of the rolls or records of the sessions of the peace, and also of the commission of the peace itself. He is always a justice of the peace of the quorum in the county where appointed, and usually some person of quality: But he is rather termed an officer or minister, than a judge. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. cap. 3. p. 373. The custos rotulorum in every county, is appointed by a writing signed by the King's hand, which shall be a warrant to the Lord Chancellor to put him in commission: And he may execute his office by deputy; and hath power to appoint the clerk of the peace, &c. Stat. 37 H. 8. cap. 1. By stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21. The custos rotulorum is to nominate and appoint the clerk of the peace; but not to sell the place, on pain of forfeiting the office of custos rotulorum, and other penalties, &c. The custos rotulorum, two justices of peace, and the clerk of the peace, are to enroll deeds of bargain and sale of lands of papists, &c. by 3 Geo. 1. cap. 18.

Custos of the Spiritualities, (Custos Spiritualitatis) Is he that exerciseth the spiritual or ecclesiastical jurisdiction of a diocese, during the vacancy of any see; who with us in England is the archbishop by prescription: But (according to Gwyn) some deans and chapters challenge this right by ancient charters from the Kings of this land. Cowel.

Custos of the Temporalities, (Custos Temporalium) The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the King, as supreme Lord; who as a steward of the goods and profits, was to give an account to the Escheator, and he into the Exchequer: His trust continued till the vacancy was supplied, and the successor obtained the King's writ De Restitutione Temporalium, which was usually after consecration.

Cut-purse. If any person clam & secreta, and without the knowledge of another, cut his purse or pick his pocket, and steal from thence to the value of 12 d. it is felony excluded clergy. 8 Eliz. c. 14. See Black. Com. 4 V. 241. 3 Inst. 68. See Felony.

Cutts, Flat-bottomed boats, built low and commodiously, used in the channel for transporting of horses. Stow. Annal. p. 412.

Cutter of the Tullies, Is an officer of the Exchequer, to whom it belongs to provide wood for the tullies, and to cut the sum paid upon them, &c.

Cube, Is a French word, in English kever, from whence comes keever, a tub or vat for brewing. Cowel.

Cyclas, A long garment close upwards, and open or large below. Matt. Paris. Anno 1236. speaking of the citizens of London, tells us, they were sericis vestimentis ornati, Cycladibus auri textis circumdati.

Cynbott. This word signifies the same with Cenegild. Blount.

Cypthyce, (Sax.) Irruptio in Ecclesiam. Leg. Ecel. Canoni Regis.

D.

D, (Fr.) A word affirmative for yes. Law Fr. Dia.

Dag, A gun; un Dag, a small gun, or hand-gun. See Hagus.

Dagenham-Breach, A duty is granted on coals imported in London to repair the walls, and barks thereof; to be collected and disposed by trustees, &c. Stat. 12 Ann. St. 2. c. 17. See 7 Geo. 1. c. 20. sec. 32.

Dagus or Dais, The chief or upper table in a monastery; from a cloth called dais, with which the tables of Kings were covered.

Dakir. The stat. 51 H. 3. St. 1. De compositione ponderum & mensurarum ascertains a last of hides to consist of twenty dickers, and every dicker of ten hides. See Dicker.

Dalmatica, A garment with large open sleeves, at first worn only by bishops, tho' since made a distinction of degrees; so called, because it came originally from Dalmatia.

Dalus, Dailus, Daila, A certain measure of land. — Et totam Dailam marisci tam de rossi quam de prate, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 211. In some places it is taken for a ditch or vale, whence comes dale. The dalt-prati have been esteemed such narrow slips of pasture, as are left between the ploughed furrows in arable land; which in some parts of England are called doles: The present Welsh use this word for low meadow by the river side. And this seems to be the original name and nature of Deal in Kent, where Cæsar landed, and fought the Britains: Cæsar ad Dole bellum pugnavit. Nennius.

Damage, (Dammum) Signifies generally any hurt or hindrance that a man receives in his estate: But particularly, a part of what the jurors are to enquire of and bring in, when an action passeth for the plaintiff: For after verdict given of the principal cause, the jury are asked touching costs and damages, which comprehend a recompence for what the plaintiff hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant. Co. Litt. 257. This word damage is taken in law, in two several significations, the one properly and generally, the other relatively: Properly, as it is in cases wherein damages are founded upon the statute of 2 H. 4. c. 1. and 8 H. 6. c. 9. where costs are included within the word damages, and taken as damages: But when the plaintiff declares for the wrong done to him, to the damage of such a sum, this is to be taken relatively for the wrong which passed before the writ brought, and is assessed by reason of the foregoing trespass, and cannot extend to costs of suit, which are future, and of another nature. 10 Rep. 116, 117. Greater costs may be given in some cases, than the damages laid in the plaintiff's declaration; for the plaintiff's declaration is only for the damage done him by the defendant: But the costs are given in respect of the plaintiff's suit to recover his damages, which may be sometimes greater than the damages. 1 Lill. Abr. 384.

Herein is to be considered,

- I. In what actions damages may be recovered, and against whom.
- II. How damages are to be assessed, increased, and mitigated.

- I. In what actions damages may be recovered, and against whom.

In personal and mixed actions, damages were recovered at common law: But in real actions, no damages were recoverable, because none were demanded by the count or writ: Whereas in actions personal, the plaintiff counts ad dampnum for the injury; and if he recovers no damages, he hath no costs, 10 Rep. 111, 117. In a personal action, the plaintiff shall recover damages only for the tort done before the action brought; and therein he counts for his damages: In a real action, he recovers his damages pending the writ; and therefore never counts for his damages: 10 Rep. 117. By the stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 1. Damages damages are given in real actions, assises of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, &c. and shall be recovered against the alienor of a disseisor, as well as against the disseisor himself; and the demandant shall have of the tenant likewise costs of suit; but not expenses for trouble and loss of time. 2 Inst. 288. If the disseisor make a feoffment in fee, and the disseisee dieth, the heir of the disseisee shall not recover damages against the alienor, because that branch of the Stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 1. only provides for the disseisee's remedy against the alienor, and not for his heirs; though if a person be disseised, and the disseisee dies, his heirs shall recover damages against the disseisor, from the death of his ancestor. 2 Inst. 286. And it is a rule upon this statute, that in none of the writs or actions therein mentioned, the demandant shall recover damages but from the death of his next immediate ancestor. Ibid. 288. For the insufficiency of the disseisor, the tenant shall answer the damages by this act: And if the disseisor be able to yield part and not the whole damages, both the disseisor and tenant shall be charged; and judgment is given against the disseisor and against the tenant generally. 2 Inst. 284. 2 Danv. Abr. 448.

No damages could be recovered at the common law, but against the wrong doer, and by him to whom the wrong was done. 2 Inst. 284. Damages shall be recovered in writ of admeasurement of dower; but not in a writ of admeasurement of pasture. 2 Danv. 457. In writ of partition, by one coparcener against another, it is said no damages shall be had: In a formedon, no damages shall be recovered; so in a nuper obiit, writ of account, writ of execution, &c. Ibid. 455, 456. Damages and costs are due in a writ of annuity; and if the jury find for the plaintiff, and do not assess damages, it will be error; though he may after verdict release the damages, and take judgment for the annuity. 11 Rep. 56. Dyer 320, 369.

In battery, imprisonment, and taking of goods, against three persons; one commits the battery, another the imprisonment, the third takes the goods, all at one time, all are guilty of the whole, and to be charged in damages. 3 Lev. 324. See 10 Rep. 66, 69.

II. How damages are to be assessed, increased, and mitigated.

In real actions, damages are assessed by writ of enquiry: When the jury find the issue for the plaintiff, they are to assess the damages. And in actions upon the case, &c. where damages are uncertain, it is left to the jury to inquire of them: In debt, which appears certain to the court what it is, the damages assessed by the jury are small; and the master in B. R. taxeth the costs; which is added thereto, and called damages. 1 Lill. 390. When judgment is given by default, in action of debt, the court is to assess the damages, and not the jury: So if judgment by nil dicit, in action of debt. And if on demurrer for taking goods, &c. it is adjudged for the plaintiff, though damages are found by writ of enquiry, the court may increase or mitigate the damages, because the court might have awarded them without such writ. 2 Danv. 452. In writ of trespass de clauso fracto, and when there is a writ to inquire of damages in trespass; in action on the case for slander, where the jury tax damages, or in an assise, the judges cannot increase or abridge the damages: It is otherwise on a writ of enquiry in debt, detinue, covenant, mayhem and battery; the court may increase or diminish the damages. Fitz. Damage 28. Dyer 105. Jenk. Cent. 68. In batteries and wounding, the court may increase damages given by the jury, on view of the wound, or upon affidavits made thereof, &c. But it is said the courts at Wexminster, only, can increase damages in action of assault and wounding on view, &c. and not justices of Nisi prius; though they may indorse the evidence on the posse, and on such evidence the damages may be increased in the courts above. 3 Salk. 115. If damages are too small, the court hath power to increase them: Or if the jury assess no damages, where verdict is found for the plaintiff in action of debt on bond, &c. the court may tax the damages; though it is otherwise in action on the case, &c. 2 Inst. 200. 2 Danv. 449.

It hath been holden that the judges may increase, but not decrease damages; and this is, because the party may have an attain. 2 Danv. 452. But where excessive damages have been given, or there hath been any misdemeanor in executing a writ of enquiry; the court hath sometimes relieved the defendant by a new writ of enquiry. 2 Danv. 464. And where damages are excessive, on motion the defendant may have a new trial. Style 465. 1 Nels. Abr. 587. In trespass against two, one comes and pleads Not guilty, and it is found against him; and afterwards another comes and pleads the like, and is found Guilty by another inquest; in this case, the first jury shall assess all the damages for the trespass. New Bat. Br. 236. Trespass against divers defendants, they plead Not guilty severally, and the jury finds them all Guilty: The jury must assess the damages jointly, for it is but one intire trespass, and made joint by the declaration: But if in trespass against two, the jury finds one Guilty of the trespass at one time, and the other guilty thereof at another time, there several damages may be assessed. If the plaintiff himself confesses that they committed the trespass severally, then the writ shall abate. 11 Rep. 5.

Damages may be several, where one action of trespass is brought for two several trespasses: And in action on the case, damages are divisible, and may be apportioned according to the wrong. 1 Saund. 248. Also in an action on the case upon two promises, intire damages may be given; though it be insisted that damages should be several upon each promise. 1 Roll. Rep. 423. But if action is brought for two several causes of action, one of which is not actionable, if intire damages are given, the verdict is void: Contra if the damages are several. And where damages are intirely assessed, and they ought not to be given for some part; no judgment can be given on the verdict. 10 Rep. 130. Where damages are awarded for delay of execution, and being kept out of the money, they are usually assessed by allowing the party what lawful interest he might have. 1 Salk. 208. Where the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, unless the jury finds more than 40 s. in actions of trespass, on the case, &c. See Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 6. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9. sec. 136. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9. but in willful trespass certified by the judge, plaintiff shall have costs. Per 8 W. 3. c. 11. f. 4. In action upon the case the jury may find less damages than the plaintiff lays in his declaration; though they cannot find more than is laid therein; if they do, it is error; but costs may be increased beyond the sum mentioned in the declaration for damages: Also the plaintiff may release part of the damages, upon entering up his judgment. 10 Rep. 115. In actions upon any bond, &c. for non-performance of covenants, the jury shall assess damages for those the plaintiff proves broken; and the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he thinks fit. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. Damages are not to be given for that which is not contained in the plaintiff's declaration; and only for what is materially alleged. 1 Lill. 381. When damages double or treble are given in an action newly created by statute; if no damages were formerly recoverable, there the demandant or plaintiff shall recover those damages only, and shall not have costs, being a new creation in recompence where there was none before: As upon stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12. for driving of distresses out of the hundred, &c. whereby damages are given, the plaintiff shall recover no costs, only his damages, because this action is newly given. But in an action upon the stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. of forcible entry, which giveth treble damages, the plaintiff shall recover his damages and his costs to the treble, by reason he was entitled to single damages before by the common law; and the statute, as part of the damages, increases the costs to treble; and when a statute increases damages, costs shall likewise be increased. 2 Inst. 289. 10 Rep. 116. In some cases double, treble damages, &c. are allowed: For not setting forth tithes; distresses wrongfully taken; rescous, &c. Treble damages are incurred by statute. Though if it be not found by the jury, that the plaintiff hath sustained some damage in cases where treble damages, &c. are inflicted by law, no damages can be awarded. 2 Danv. Abr. 449.

The damages laid in the declaration are to be considered as the cause of action, i. e. the cause of action ought to be taken from the sum laid in the count. Horton and Kilmere, Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annals, 5, 6.

How damages, given to a person sued for an act done in the execution of his office, are to be assessed and recovered, see Valentine and Fawcett, id. 138, 139.

Plaintiff may take judgment de melioribus damnis, where several damages are given, or enter a remittitur. Sabin v. Long, Will. Rep. par. 1. fo. 30.

The court in their discretion may increase the damages in mayhem. Id. Brown v. Seymour, par. 1. fo. 5. In debt for a penalty in articles of agreement, the jury ought to assess damages on the breach assigned, according to the Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 10. and shall not find the debt; if they do, a venire facias de novo shall issue. Id. Drage, Esq. v. Brand, par. 2. fo. 377.

In what cases double, treble, and quadruple damages are given, see Table to Statutes at Large, quarto edition, title Damages.

Damage-clear, (damna clericorum) Was a fee assessed of the tenth part in the Common Pleas, and the twentieth part in the King's Bench and Exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks, recovered in those courts, in actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, battery, &c. wherein the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary, or the chief officer of the court wherein recovered, before he could have execution for the damages: this was originally a gratuity given to the prothonotaries and their clerks, for drawing special writs and pleadings; but it is taken away by statute, and if any officer in the King's courts, take any money in the name of damage-clear, or any thing in lieu thereof, he shall forfeit treble the value. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 6.

Damage-feasant, or faisant, Is when a stranger's beasts are found in another person's ground without his leave or licence, and there doing damage, by feeding, or otherwise, to the grass, corn, woods, &c. In which case, the tenant whom they damage may distrain and impound them, as well by night as in the day, lest the beasts escape before taken; which may not be done for rent, services, &c. only in the day-time. Stat. 51 H. 3. stat. 4. 1 Inst. 142. If a man take my cattle, and put them into the land of another, the tenant of the land may take these cattle damage-feasant, though I who am the owner, was not privy to the cattle's being there damage-feasant; and he may keep them against me till satisfaction of the damages. 2 Danv. Abr. 364. But if one comes to distrain damage-feasant, and to seize the cattle, and the owner drives them out before they are taken, he cannot distrain them damage-feasant, but is put to his action of trespass; for the cattle ought to be actually upon the land damage-feasant, at the time of the distress. 1 Inst. 161. 9 Rep. 22. He that hath but the possession of, and no title to the land, may justify taking a distress damage-feasant. Plowd. 431. If a man puts cattle to pasture at so much a week with another, who after gives notice that he will not have them there any longer; in this case the owner of the ground may distrain them damage-feasant, though the cattle be in lawfully at first: so where a lessee holds after his estate is ended. 43 Edw. 3. Kelw. 69. Beasts belonging to the plough, or beasts of husbandry, sheep, horses joined to a cart, and 'tis said a horse with a rider on it, may be distrained damage-feasant, though not for rent. 1 Sid. 422, 440. But the owner may tender amends, before the cattle are impounded; and then the detainer is unlawful: also if when impounded the pound-door is open, the owner may take them out. 5 Rep. 76. A greyhound may be taken damage-feasant, running after conies in a warren: so a man may take a ferret that another hath brought into his warren, and taken conies with. If a person bring nets and gins through my warren, I cannot take them out of his hands. 2 Danv. 633. But if men are rowing up my water, and endeavouring with nets to catch fish in my several piscary, I may take their oars and nets, and detain them as damage-feasant, to stop their further fishing; though I cannot cut their nets. Cro. Car. 228. See Black. Com. 3 V. 6.

Dam, A boundary, or confinement; as to dam up, or dam out: infra damnum suum, within the bounds or limits of his own property or jurisdiction. Bract. lib. 2. c. 37.

Damifella, A light damofell or misf. Stat. 12 Ed. 1. See Pimp Feure.

Dammum absque injuria. If one man keeps a school in such a place, another may do so likewise in the same place, though he draw away the scholars from the other school; and this is dammum absque injuria: but he must not do any thing to disturb the other school. 3 Salk. 10.

Dan. Anciently the better sort of men in this kingdom had the title of Dan; as the Spaniards Don, from the Lat. Dominus.

Danegelt, or Dane-geld, (danegildum) Is compounded of the words dane and gelt, the latter in Dutch signifying money; and was a tax or tribute of 1 s. and after of 2 s. upon every hide of land through the realm, laid upon our ancestors the Saxons by the Danes, when they lorded it here. Camb. Brit. 83, 142. According to some accounts, this tax was levied for clearing the seas of Danish pirates; which heretofore greatly annoyed our coasts: but King Ethelred being much distressed by the continual invasions of the Danes, to procure his peace, was compelled to charge his people with very heavy payments called danegelt, which he paid to the Danes at several times. Hoveden par. post. Annal. 344. Ingulph. 510. Sclden's Mare Claus. 190. This danegelt was released by St. Edward the Confessor; but levied again by William the First and Second: then it was released again by King Henry the First, and finally by King Stephen. It is probable that this ancient tax might be a precedent for our land tax of 3 s. and 4 s. in the pound, when first granted.

Danclage, Was the law of the Danes when they governed a third part of this kingdom. See Merchenluge, and Black. Com. 1 V. 65. 4 V. 405.

Dangeria, A payment in money made by forest tenants, that they might have liberty to plough and sow in time of pannage or mast-feeding. Manw. For. Law.

Dapifer, (a dapes ferendo) Was at first a domestic officer, like unto our steward of the household; or rather clerk of the kitchen: but by degrees it was used for any fiduciary servant, especially the chief steward or head bailiff of an honour or manor. There is mention made in our ancient records of dapifer regis; which is taken for steward of the King's household. Cowel.

Darrein, Is a corruption from the Fr. dernier, viz. ultimus, the last; in which sense we use it: as darrein continuance, &c.

Darrein Presentment, (ultima presentatio). See Affise of Darrein Presentment, and Black. Com. 3 V. 245.

Date of a deed, Is the description of the time, viz. the day, month, year of our Lord, year of the reign, &c. in which the deed was made. 1 Inst. 6. But the ancient deeds had no dates, only of the month and the year; to signify that they were not made in haste, or in the space of a day; but upon longer and more mature deliberation. Blount. If in the date of a deed, the year of our Lord is right, though the year of the King's reign be mistaken, it shall not hurt it. Cro. Jac. 261. A deed was dated 30th March 1701, without anno Domini and anno Regni; and it was adjudged that both the year of the Lord and of the King were implicitly in the deed. 2 Salk. 658. A deed is good, though it hath no date of the day or place, or if the date be mistaken, or though it hath an impossible date, as the 30th of February, &c. But he that doth plead such a deed, without any date, or with an impossible date, must set forth the time when it was delivered. 2 Rep. 5. 1 Inst. 46. If no date of a deed be set forth, it shall be intended that it had none; and in such case it is good from the delivery; for every deed or writing hath a date in law, and that is the day on which it is delivered: and a deed is no deed till the delivery, and that is the date of it. Mod. Ca. 244. * 1 Nelf. Abr. 525.

An impossible date of a bond, &c. is no date at all; but the plaintiff must declare on the bond as made at a certain time: and if the express date be insensible, the real date is the delivery. 2 Salk. 463. Where there is none, or an impossible date, the plaintiff may count of any date. 1 Lill. Abr. 393. If there be a mistaken date, or a date be impossible, &c. the plaintiff may surmise a legal date in the declaration, whereupon the defendant is to answer to the deed, and not to the date. Yelv. 194. If a deed bears date at a place out of the realm, it may be averred that the place mentioned in the deed is in some county in England; and here the place is not traversable; without this the deed cannot be tried. 1 Inst. 261. A deed may be dated at one time, and sealed and delivered at another: but every deed shall be intended to be delivered on the same day it bears date, unless the contrary is proved. 2 Inst. 674. Though there can be no delivery of a deed before the day of the date; yet after they may. 1 elv. 138. So that a deed may be dated back on a time past, but not at a day to come. See Deed, and Black. Com. 2 V. 304.

Datibe, or Datif, (dativus) Signifies that which may be given or disposed of at will and pleasure. Stat. 9 R. 2. 11 4.

Dabata terra, Dalwath, A portion of land so called in Scotland. Skene.

Day, (dies) Is a certain space of time, containing twenty-four hours; and if a fact be done in the night, you must say in law proceedings in nocte ejusdem diei. Dicrum alii sunt naturales, alii artificiales: dies naturalis consistat de 24 horis, & continet diem solarem & noctem, & est spatium in quo sol progreditur ab oriente in occidentem, & ab occidente iterum in orientem: dies artificialis, sive solaris, incipit in ortu solis & definit in occasu. 1 Inst. 135. By this description, the natural day consists of twenty-four hours, and contains the solar day and the night: and the artificial day begins from the rising of the sun, and ends when it sets. Day, in legal understanding, is the day of appearance of the parties, or continuance of the suit where a day is given, &c. And there is a day of appearance in court by the writ, and by the roll; by writ, when the sheriff returns the writ; by roll, when he hath a day by the roll, and the sheriff returns not the writ, there the defendant, to save his freehold, and prevent loss of issues, imprisonment, &c. may appear by the day he hath by the roll. 1 Inst. 135.

In real actions there are dies communes, common days; and in all summons there must be 15 days after the summons before the appearance: and before the statute of articuli super chartas, in all summons and attachment in plea of land, there should be contained 15 days. 1 Inst. 134. As to offences in B. R. if the offence be committed in another county than where the court sits, and the indictment be removed by certiorari, there must be fifteen days between every process and the return thereof; but if it be committed in the same county where the bench sits, they may sit de die in diem; but this they will very rarely do. Ibid. There is a day called dies specialis, as in an assize in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, the attachment need not be 15 days before the appearance; otherwise it is before justices assigned: but generally in assizes the judges may give a special day at their pleasure, and are not bound to the common days; and these days they may give as well out of term as within.

There is also a day of grace, dies gratia, and generally this is granted by the court at the prayer of the demandant or plaintiff, in whose delay it is: but it is never granted where the King is party, by aid prier of the tenant or defendant; nor where any lord of parliament, or peer of the realm is tenant or defendant. And sometimes the day that is quarto die post, is called dies gratia, for the very day of return is the day in law, and to that day the judgment hath relation, but no default shall be recorded till the fourth day be past; unless it be in a writ of right, where the law alloweth no day but the day of the return. 1 Inst. 135.

There are several return days in the terms; and if either of them happen upon a Sunday, the day following is taken instead of it; for Sunday is dies non juridicus; and so is Ascension-day in Easter term, St. John Baptist in Trinity term, All Saints and All Souls in Michaelmas term, and the Purification of the Virgin Mary in Hilary term. 2 Inst. 264.

Days in Bank are days set down by statute, or order of the court, when writs shall be returned, or when the party shall appear upon the writ served. Stat. 51 H. 3. Stat. 2. & Stat. 3. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21. And by the statute de anno bissextili 21 H. 3. the day increasing in the leap-year, and the day next going before are to be accounted but one day. It is commonly said that the day of Nisi prius, and the day in Bank, is all one day; but this is to be understood as to pleading, not to other purposes. 1 Inst. 135. If a defendant appears, and the court gives a day to another term; at which day he makes default, no judgment shall be given, but process shall be awarded in this case. 2 Danv. Abr. 476. But after issue found for the plaintiff at the Nisi prius, if a day be given in Banco, and the defendant makes default, judgment shall be given against him. Ibid. 477.

To be dismissed without day, is to be finally dismissed the court: and when the justices before whom causes were depending, do not come on the day to which they were continued, whether such absence be occasioned by death, or otherwise, they are said to be put without day: but may be revived, or recontinued by re-summmons, re-attachment, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 300. Vide 1 El. 6. c. 7. Also by the Common law, all proceedings upon any indictment, &c. whereon no judgment had been given, were determined by the demise of the King, and nothing remained but the indictment, original writ, &c. which were put without day, till re-continued by re-attachment to bring in the defendants to plead de novo: though this is remedied by Stat. 4 & 5 W. 3. c. 18. and 1 Ann. c. 8. by which such process, &c. are to continue in the same force after the King's demise, as they would have done if he had lived.

In action of trespass, if the day laid in the declaration be either before or after the actual day on which the trespass is committed, it is not material, if a trespass be proved. Co. Lit. 283. a. But N. B. The day laid must be before the first day of that term of which the declaration is intitled, or if the trespass be committed within the term, there must be a special memorandum of some particular day, (if by bill) or of some general return day, (if in C. P. or B. R. by original writ) subsequent to the day whereon the trespass was committed: and so as to other actions, where the cause of action arises within the term.

Day-light. In respect to day-light, before sun-rising and after sun-setting, is accounted part of the day by the Common law; as to robberies committed in the day-time, when the hundred is liable. 7 Rep. 6. The law regularly rejects all fractions and divisions of a day, for the uncertainty. 5 Rep. 1. 1 Inst. 135. See Computation.

Day-rule. See Day-writ.

Day-writ. The King may grant writ of warrantia diei to any person, which shall save his default for one day, be it in plea of land, or other action, and be the cause true, or not; and this by his prerogative, quod nota. Br. Prerogative, pl. 142. cites F. N. B. 7.

'Tis against law to grant liberty to prisoners in execution, by other writs than day-writs, (or rules); but they shall have as many day-writs as shall be needful for attendance on commissioners, to whom the cause being matter of account was referred, and that without paying any fees, either for making or sealing them. Chan. Rep. 67. 9 Car. 1. Regault v. Cloberry.

No prisoner committed by B. R. ought to have the benefit of the day-rule of going abroad in term time, for their imprisonment is their punishment for their contempt, or misbehaviour. 2 Show. 88. pl. 80. Hill. 31 & 32 Car. 2. B. R. The King v. Dvane.

One in execution had a habeas corpus from the Lord Keeper (which they call a day-writ) returnable three or four days after its teste. By virtue of this writ, he went to the wine-licence office, but never to any inn of court or Chancery, or to the Lord Keeper's, and this in the vacation. Per Pemberton Ch. J. This is a habeas out of Chancery, which they may send at any time, and by virtue of the King's writ, the party was brought out of the prison-house, and that is justifiable. Then all the day, so long as there was a keeper with him, he was in custody still, and returning to prison at night, it is well enough, and no escape; though Chancery may examine the contempt, that is nothing to *B. Entry of the name in the petition for a day-rule, signifies little, unless it be read in court. 8 Mod. The King v. Dunbar. 240, 241.

Days-man, In the North of England, an arbitrator, or elected judge, is usually termed a dies-man, or days-man: and Dr. Hammond saith, that the word day in all idioms signifies judgment.

Dayeria, Dairy, from day, deie, Sax. dag, was at first the daily yield of milch-cows, or profit made of them. In Lorrain and Champaign they use the word dayer, for the meeting of the day-labouring people to give an account of their daily work, and receive the wages of it. A dairy in the North is called milkness; as the dairy-maid is in all parts a milk-maid: she is termed androchia by Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 87. — Comptrol. Henrici D. & Johanne uxoris sue de omnibus exitibus & proventibus de dayri domini prioris de Burnceffte. Paroch. Antiq. 548.

Daywere of Land. As much arable land as could be plough'd up in one day's work; or one journey, as the farmers still call it. Hence any young artificer who assists a master workman in daily labour, is called a journeyman. — *Confirmavi abbati & conventui de Rading, tres acras & sexdecim daywere de terra arabili. Cartular. Deadly Feud, Is a profession of an irreconcilable hatred, till a person is revenged even by the death of his enemy. It is mentioned in Star. 43 El. c. 13. And such enmity and revenge were allowed by the old Saxon laws; for where any man was killed, if a pecuniary satisfaction was not made to the kindred of the slain, it was lawful for them to take up arms against the murderer, and revenge themselves on him: and this is called deadly feud; which it is conjectured was the original of an appeal. Blount. Vide Feud, and Black. Com. 4 V. 243.

Dead Pledge, (mortuum vadium) A pledge of lands or goods. See Mortgage.

Deaf, dumb, and blind. A man who could neither speak nor hear committed felony, and was arraigned and therefore was commanded to prison. Br. Corone, pl. 216. cites 26 Edw. 3.

One was indicted for the death of a man, who could neither speak nor hear, and the court was in doubt what to do with him, &c. wherefore they thought that he should be remanded to prison. Theil. Dig. 6. lib. 1. c. 7. cites 26 Aff. 27.

One who had made his will, and became ill, and (as it seems) had left his speech; the same will was delivered into his hands, and it was said to him, that he should deliver it to the vicar, if it should be his last will, otherwise he should retain it; and he delivered it to the vicar, and this was held a good will. Theil. Dig. 6. lib. 1. cap. 7. f. 8. cites 44 Aff. 36.

It appearing by oath that the defendant was both senseless and dumb, and therefore could not instruct his counsel to draw his answer; it was ordered that no attachment, or other process of contempt, should be awarded against the defendant for not answering, without special order of the court. Cary's Rep. 132. cites 22 Eliz. Altam v. Smith.

One that is deaf and wholly deprived of his hearing cannot give, and so one that is dumb and cannot speak. Yet (according to the opinion of some) they may consent by signs and nods; but it is generally held, that he that is dumb cannot make a gift, because he cannot consent to it. Co. Inst. 107. But generally those who are deaf and dumb can, in some measure, converse with people acquainted with them by signs, with the fingers, &c. therefore qu. if a gift by such a one would not be good, if deposed to, by persons acquainted with his signs, if such persons are uninterested? See the last case under this head.

If a blind man has understanding, he may deliver a deed sealed by him. Fent. 222. pl. 75. ad suum.

The lord shall have the custody of a copyholder that is deaf and dumb; for else he shall be prejudiced in his rents and services, and adjudged for the grantee of the lord against the prochein amy of the copyholder. Cro. J. 105. pl. 43. Mich. 3 Jac. B. R. Eavers v. Skinner.

Dean, (decanus, from the Greek Δίκα, decem) Is an ecclesiastical governor or dignitary, so called, as he presides over ten canons or prebendaries at the least. And we call him a dean, that is next under the bishop, and chief of the chapter, ordinarily in a cathedral church, the rest of the society being called capitulum, the chapter. As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, the new erected by King Henry VIII. so there are two means of creating those deans: for those of the old foundation, as the dean of St. Paul's, York, &c. are exalted to their dignity much like bishops; the King first sending out his conge d'elire to the chapter to choose such dean, and the chapter then choosing, the King afterwards yielding his royal assent, and the bishop confirming him, and giving his mandate to install him: those of the new foundation, whose deaneries were translated from priories and convents, to dean and chapter, as the deans of Canterbury, Durham, Ely, Norwich, Winchester, &c. are donative, and installed by a shorter course, by virtue of the King's letters patent, without either election or confirmation; and are visitable only by the Lord Chancellor, or by special commission from the King: but the letters patent are presented to the bishop for institution, and a mandate for instalment goes forth. 1 Inst. 95. Davis 46, 47.

There are some cathedral churches which never had a dean; as that of St. David and Landaff, where the bishop is head of the chapter, and in his absence the archdeacon: and there is also a dean without a chapter, such as the dean of Battel in Suffex: then there is a dean without a jurisdiction, as the dean of the Chapel Royal, &c. in which sense this word is applied to the chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels. Spelm.

There are four sorts of deans; a dean who hath a chapter, such as the dean of Canterbury, &c. A dean without a chapter, as the dean of Bocking, who hath a court and jurisdiction to hold plea of all ecclesiastical matters arising in several parishes within his peculiar; and who is constituted by commission from the archbishop of Canterbury, like to the dean of the arches. The dean of Battel, founded by William the First, filed the Conqueror, who hath ecclesiastical jurisdiction within the liberty of Battel, and is presentable by the Duke of Montagu, and instituted and inducted by the bishop of Chichester; but not subject to his visitation. And rural deans, who had first jurisdiction over deaneries, as every diocese is divided into archdeacons and deaneries; but afterwards their power was diminished, and they were only the bishops substitutes to grant letters of administration, probate of wills, &c. And now their office is wholly extinguished, for the archdeacons and chancellors of bishops execute the authority which rural deans had through all the dioceses of England. 1 Nell. Abr. 596, 597. There are likewise deputy deputy deans and commendatory deans, who cannot confirm any grants, &c. But a commendatory dean may, with the chapter, choose a bishop. And if a dean be elected bishop, and before consecration doth obtain dispensation to hold his deanery in commendum, such dean may well confirm, &c. for his old title remains, and therefore confirmations, and other acts done by him, as dean, are good in law. Litch 237, 250. Palm. Rep. 460.

A dean and chapter are the bishop's council, to assist him in the affairs of religion, &c. to consult in deciding difficult controversies, and consent to every grant which the bishop shall make to bind his successors, &c. A dean that is solely seized of a distinct possession, hath an absolute fee in him as well as a bishop. 1 Inst. 325. A deanery is a spiritual promotion, and not a temporal one, though the dean be appointed by the King: and the dean and chapter may be in part secular, and in part regular. Dyer 10. Palm. 500. As a deanery is a spiritual dignity, a man cannot be dean and prebendary in the same church. Dyer 273. See Chapter.

Death of Persons. There is a natural death of a man, and a civil death: natural, where nature itself expires, and extinguishes; and civil, is where a man is not actually dead, but is adjudged so by law; as where he enters into religion, &c. If any person for whose life any estate hath been granted, remain beyond sea, or is otherwise absent seven years, and no proof made of his being living, such person shall be accounted naturally dead; though if the party be after proved living at the time of eviction of any person, then the tenant, &c. may re-enter, and recover the profits. Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. And persons in reversion or remainder, after the death of another, upon affidavit that they have cause to believe such other dead, may move the Lord Chancellor to order the person to be produced; and if he be not produced, he shall be taken as dead; and those claiming may enter, &c. 6 Ann. c. 18.

A man seized in fee of lands, made a lease in reversion to L. D. for ninety-nine years, to commence after the deaths of J. D. and E. D. who had then a lease in possession for the like term, if they or either of them so long lived: the plaintiff positively proved the death of J. D. but as to the death of E. D. the proof was that he had been reputed dead, and no body had heard of him for fifteen years past, and the defendant not being able to prove that he was alive at any time within seven years, this case was adjudged within the act 19 Car. 2. c. 6. Carthew 246. In law proceedings, the death of either party, between the verdict and judgment, shall not be error; so as judgment be entered in two terms. 17 Car. 2. c. 8.

Where the plaintiff dies after a verdict and before the day in bank, though the entry of the judgment be right, yet a scire facias must be sued out before execution issue. Wils. par. 1. fo. 302. Earl v. Brown.

Warrant of attorney to confess a judgment to two, one dies before the judgment entered, leave given to the survivor to enter it up. Id. par. 1. fo. 312. Todd v. Dodd.

If defendant dies before the time given to plead expires, judgment signed afterwards is irregular. Id. par. 1. fo. 315. Wallop v. Irwin.

Where on the death of parties to a suit, the writ, &c. shall abate, see 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. and Abatement, Death of Judges, &c. vide Day.

De bene esse. To take or do any thing de bene esse, is in law signification to accept or allow it as well done for the present; but when it comes to be more fully examined or tried, to stand or fall according to the merit of the thing in its own nature. As in Chancery, upon motion to have one of the less principal defendants in a cause examined as a witness, the court (not then thoroughly examining the justice of it, or not hearing what may be objected on the other side) will often order such a defendant to be examined de bene esse, viz. That his depositions shall be taken, and allowed or suppressed at the hearing of the cause, upon the full debate of the matter, as the court shall think fit; but in the interim they have a well being, or conditional allowance. 3 Cro. 68. Where a complainant's witnesses are aged, or sick, or going beyond sea, whereby the plaintiff thinks he is in danger of losing their testimony, the court of Chancery will order them to be examined de bene esse; so as to be valid, if the plaintiff hath not an opportunity of examining them afterwards; as if they die before answer, or do not return, &c. In either of which cases, the depositions taken may be made use of in the court of Chancery, or at law: but if parties are alive and well, or do return, &c. after answer, these depositions are not to be of force, for the witnesses must be re-examined. Practif. Attorn. edit. 1. p. 232.

So also at Common law, the judges frequently take bail de bene esse, that is, to be allowed or disallowed upon the exception, or approbation of the plaintiff's attorney; however, in the interim, they are good, or have a conditional allowance. Corvel. Declarations likewise are sometimes delivered de bene esse. See the books of practice. And see further Black. Com. 3 V. 383.

Debenture. A soldier's debenture, (stipendia debita) is in the nature of a bond or bill, to charge the government to pay the soldier creditor, or his assigns, the sum due upon the auditing the account of his arrears: it was first ordained by an act made during Oliver's usurpation, anno 1649, and is mentioned in the act of oblivion, 12 Car. 2. cap. 8. They use debentures likewise in the Exchequer; and debentures are given to the King's servants, for the payment of their wages, board wages, &c. Also there are custom-house debentures, &c.

Debet & detinet. Are Latin words used in the bringing of writs and actions. And an action shall be always in the debet & detinet, when he who makes a bargain or contract, or lends money to another, or he to whom a bond is made, bringeth the action against him who is bounden, or party to the contract and bargain, or unto the lending of the money, &c. But if a man sells to another a horse, &c. if he brings debt for the horse, the writ must be in the detinet only. New Nat. Br. 119. In debt against husband and wife, for a debt due from the wife before coverture, the writ shall be in the debet & detinet: so in debt against or for successors, in respect of obligations made to the predecessor, &c. Ibid. Debt against an heir, is to be in the debet & detinet, or it will be naught; if an heir be to bring debt, it shall be in the detinet: and if a man be bound to another, and makes his executor, and dies, if the money due in the time of the testator be refused to be paid by the executor, the action must be brought against him only in the detinet; and so in all actions brought by executors as executors, though the duty accrued in their own time. But debet & detinet lies by an executor on his own contract: and if a lessee for years makes his executor and dies, for rent due after the testator's death, there the action shall be in the debet & detinet. It is the like law in cases of administrators, as it is not certain what shall be recovered, only according to the assets. 5 Rep. 31. An executor upon a devisavit shall be charged in the debet & detinet, the action being upon a judgment. 1 Lill. Abr. 395. In action grounded on privity of contract; or action of escape, it must be brought in the detinet. Cro. Jac. 545, 685. But for an escape on mesne process, case lies. See Debt and Executor.

Debet & solet. Are also formal words made use of in writs: and some writs have these words in them, which ought not to be omitted. Likewise according to the diversity of the case, both debet and solet are used, or debet alone: as a quod permittat may be in the debet & solet, or in the debet only, as the demandant claims. And if a person sues to recover any right, whereof his ancestor was disseised by the tenant of his ancestor, then he useth the word debet alone in his writ, because his ancestor only was disseised, and the estate discontinued: but if he sue for any thing that is now first of all denied him, then he useth debet & solet, by reason his ancestor before him, and he himself usually enjoyed the thing sued for, until the present refusal of the tenant. Reg. Orig. 140. The writ of secta molendini is a writ of right, in the debet & solet, &c. F. N. B. 98.

Debt, (debitum) In common parlance is a sum of money due from one person to another. And if an action be brought, and plaintiff recovers judgment, he may by our law take either the person, or his real or personal estate in execution, i. e. the moiety of his real estate, or the whole of the personal, if not more than sufficient for payment of the sum recovered and charges. It may not be improper to observe, that the first hint of attaching movables, for the recovery of a debt was taken from the Canon law. Robert. Hist. Emp. Charles V. 1 V. 316.

In the legal sense of the word, debt is said to be an action which lieth where a man oweth another a certain sum of money, by obligation, or bargain for a thing sold, or by contract, &c. and the debtor will not pay the debt at the day agreed; then the creditor shall have action of debt against him for the same. And if money be due upon any specialty, action of debt only lies; for no other action may be brought for it: if a man contract to pay money for a thing which he hath bought; and the seller takes bond for the money, the contract is discharged, so that he shall not have action of debt upon the contract, but on the bond. New Nat. Br. 268.

Herein it is to be considered,

- I. In what cases it will lie, and by whom, and against whom, it may be brought.
- II. In what manner it may be brought, as where in the debt and detinet, and where in the detinet only.
- III. How it may be extinguished.

- I. In what cases debt will lie, and by whom, and against whom, it may be brought.

If one binds himself in a single obligation, or with condition, to pay money at a day; or to deliver corn, or the like, and do not perform it accordingly, the obligee may bring action of debt for it. F. N. B. 120. A man acknowledges by deed, that he hath so much of the money of J. S. due to him in his hands; here debt may be brought: and debt will lie on a talley sealed. F. N. B. 122. 1 H. 6. 55. A. delivers 20*l.* to B. to buy goods, and B. gives a receipt to A. testifying the delivery and receipt of the 20*l.* but doth not promise to deliver the goods, &c. A. may maintain debt upon this receipt. Dyer 20. 2 Bulst. 256. If a man be bound by bond to pay 20*l.* in manner following; viz. 10*l.* at one day; and 10*l.* at another day; action of debt will not lie till after the last day, it being an entire duty: but if one binds himself to pay A. B. 10*l.* at one day; and 10*l.* at another, after the first day action of debt lies for 10*l.* being a several duty. 2 Danv. Abr. 501. Sed qu. as to the first part of the proposition? for if it be a bond for payment of 20*l.* (or of 40*l.* double the sum) conditioned for payment of 10*l.* at one day, and 10*l.* at another, the bond is forfeited in law, on nonpayment of the first 10*l.* Therefore the nature of the bond, and of the condition, (if there is any) must be carefully attended to; and see Co. Lit. 292. b.

If I agree with a taylor for a certain price to make me a suit of clothes, the taylor may have a general action of debt against me for the money; though if the price is not agreed on, there lies action of the case only, or special action of debt upon the special contract, which the law may imply on a quantum meruit. Wood's Inst. 544. And debt may be made action on the case, by proving money lent, or goods delivered, &c. whereupon promise of payment is implied in law. A man owes another a sum of money, and hath his note under hand, without seal, action of debt on a mutuus lies; but the defendant may wage his law: in action of the case brought upon promise of payment, the defendant cannot wage his law. 4 Rep. 93. Action of debt lies upon a parol contract, and so doth action on the case. 1 Lill. 403. If goods or money are delivered to a third person for my use, I may have action of debt or account for them. 2 Danv. 404. Where money is delivered to a person, to be re-delivered again, the property is altered, and debt lies: but where a horse, or any goods are thus delivered, there detinne lies, because the property is not altered; and the thing is known, whereas money is not. Owen 86. 1 Nels. Abr. 603.

Debt will lie against him that lodges or tables with another; by an inn-keeper for the lodging and victuals of his guest, &c. A servant for his wages, though he do his service beyond sea. 9 Rep. 87. Debt lieth not against a master upon the buying of the servant, unless it come to the master's use, or be by his agreement. Doct.

& Stud. 137. Action of debt lies against the husband, for goods which were delivered or sold to the wife, if they come to the use of the husband. 1 Lill. 400. If one delivers meat, drink, or clothes, to an infant, and he promises to pay for them, action of debt, or on the case, will lie against the infant. Though debt may not be brought on an account stated with an infant: and what is delivered must be averred to be for the necessary use of the infant. 1 Lill. Abr. 401. That is in the plaintiff's replication, supposing the defendant pleads infancy. An attorney shall have action of debt against his client, for money, which he hath paid to any person for the client, for costs of suit, or unto his counsel, &c.

On a bond, debt lies against the heir of an obligor, who has lands by descent, if the executors have not sufficient; and the obligee may bring his action against the heir or executor, although the executor have assets. Anderf. 7. An heir mediate may be sued in debt as if he were immediate heir, &c. Though the heir may not bring action of debt for a debt due to his ancestor; if it be by specialty, by which the party is bound to pay it to him and his heirs, the executor shall nevertheless have the action. Dyer 368. F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies not against executors, upon a simple contract made with the testator. 9 Rep. 87. But debt will lie for the arrearages of an account against executors; of receipts by the testator. 2 Danv. 497.

Before the statute 32 H. 8. c. 37. the heirs or executors of a man seised of a rent-service, rent-charge, &c. in fee-simple, or fee-tail, had no remedy for the arrearages incurred in the life-time of the owner of such rents: but by that statute, the executors and administrators of tenants in fee-simple; fee-tail, or for life, of any rent, shall have action of debt for all arrearages of rent due in the life of the testator. 1 Inst. 162. 2 Danv. 492.

A feme sole seised of a rent in fee, &c. which is behind and unpaid, takes husband, and the rent is behind again, and then the wife dieth; the husband by the Common law should not have the arrearages before the marriage, but for the arrears becoming due during the coverture, he might have action of debt. Now by the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 37. the husband shall have the arrears due before marriage, and he hath a double remedy for the same. 1 Inst. 162. At the Common law, debt lies not for rent upon a lease for life, (though it doth on a lease for years) but the remedy is assise, if the plaintiff have seisin, or by distress. 3 Rep. 65.

But by Stat. 8 Ann. cap. 17. Any person having rent in arrear upon any lease for life or lives, may bring action of debt for such rent, as where rent is due on a lease for years. Action of debt will lie against a lessee, for rent due after the assignment of the lease; for the personal privity of contract remains, notwithstanding the privity of estate is gone. 3 Rep. 22. But after the death of the lessee, it is then a real contract, and runs with the land. Cro. Eliz. 555. When a lease is ended, the duty in respect of the rent remains, and debt lieth by reason of privity of contract between lessor and lessee. 2 Cro. 227. 1 Nels. Abr. 604. If debt be brought by an executor for arrears of rent ended, it is local still, and must be laid where the land lies. Hob. 37. Action of debt may be had against the lessee in any place; but if it be brought against an assignee, it must be where the land lieth: and upon the privity of contract, it is to be brought against the lessee where the land is. Latch 197, 271. 2 Leon. c. 28.

Debt for rent on a lease against assignee is local. See the case of Barker v. Dormer, Shower, 1 V. (the 2d in point of time) fo. 191. &c. an excellent case, containing much useful learning on the locality of actions; & contra in debt and covenant.

In some cases action of debt will lie, although there be no contract betwixt the party that brings the action, and him against whom brought; for there may be a duty created by law, for which action will lie. 2 Saund. 343, 366. Debt lieth against a sheriff, for money levied in execution. 1 Lill. Abr. 403. Action of debt lies against a gaoler for permitting a prisoner committed in execution to escape; because thereupon the law makes the gaoler debtor:

debtor: but where the party is not in execution, there action on the case only lies for damages suffered by the escape. 1 Saund. 218. 1 Lill. Abr. 402.

A person may have debt upon an arbitrament: also debt lies for money recovered upon a judgment, &c. And upon a recovery in the superior courts at Westminster, he must bring the action in Middlesex, the record being there; but a sci. fac. to execute judgment, must be where the original was, and follow it. New Nat. Br. 267, 268, &c. When judgment is had in the King's Bench, and a writ of error brought in the Exchequer chamber, or in Parliament; yet an action of debt will lie on the judgment: in this case, if the plaintiff levies part of his money by elegit; he may likewise bring debt for the residue. 1 Sid. 236, 184. If a man recovers debt or damages in London, on action brought there by the custom of the city, which lies not at Common law; when it is become a debt by the judgment, action of debt lies in the courts at Westminster upon this judgment. 2 Danv. 449.

Action of debt will lie for breach of a by-law; or for amercement in a court-leet, &c. 1 Lill. 400. And action of debt is sometimes grounded on an act of parliament; as upon the 2 Ed. 6. c. 13. for not setting out tithes: the 27 El. c. 13. against the hundred for a robbery, &c. Against physicians in London, for practising without licence, by 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5. By assignees of a commission of bankrupt. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15, &c. A college shall have action of debt for commons of any student, adjudged Pasch. 9 Jac. B. R. The inns of court, particularly the Inner and Middle Temple, take bonds in the name of their treasurer, &c. of students, in which, generally, two gentlemen of the society are bound as sureties. For debt to a bishop, or parson, after his death, his executors shall have the action: but of a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, &c. the successors are intitled to the action of debt. F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies on a recognisance; so upon a statute merchant, it being in nature of a bond or obligation: but it is otherwise in case of a statute staple. 2 Danv. 497.

In bringing this action, it is the general rule, that the party himself to whom the debt is originally due, whilst he doth live must bring the action; and after his death, his executors, &c. And the action must be brought against the party himself that doth originally owe the debt, whilst he is living; and after his death, it may be brought against the executor, if he make any; or otherwise against the administrator; and if the ordinary appoint none, against the ordinary himself; and if he die possessed of the goods, against his executor, &c. And also against executors of executors in infinitum. Dyer 24, 471. 3 Rep. 9. 2 Brownl. 207.

II. In what manner it may be brought, as where in the debet & detinet, and where in the detinet only. See Division I.

In debt, if it be demanded by original, the process is summons, attachment and distress; and upon a default of sufficiency, on a nihil returned, process to the outlawry, &c. And the judgment in debt, where the demand is in the debet & detinet, is to recover the debt, damages and costs of suit; and the defendant in miseria cordia: but if a defendant denies his deed, then a capias pro fine issues. 1 Shep. Abr. 523. (now out of use.) The defendant in debt pleads a release, if at the trial he makes default, the plaintiff shall have judgment for his debt, without a verdict: contra, if duress, or payment had been pleaded. Jenk. Cent. 68. Where the plaintiff in debt declares on some specialty, or contract for a sum of money, it must be certainly demanded, and no other; and the demand can't be of a lesser sum, but it must be shewn how the remainder was satisfied: but in an action upon a statute, that gives a certain sum for the penalty; though less be recovered than the plaintiff lays, it will be good. Cro. Jac. 498. If action of debt is brought on a specialty, bill, bond, lease, &c. the several writings must be well considered by which the plaintiff warrants his action, and the sum due is to be rightly set forth; and if it be debt for rent, the time of commencement, and ending, &c. Also in debt on account, the attorney must know when the accounts were made up, and before whom, what the party was to account for, and time when, which are to be laid in the declaration, &c. Comp. Attorn. 28. In debt on single bill the defendant may plead payment (before the action brought) in bar: and pending an action, on bond, &c. the defendant may bring in principal, interest and costs; and the court shall give judgment to discharge the defendant. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16.

If the action be brought for money, it must be in the debet & detinet; but if goods or chattels, it must be in the detinet only. 50 E. 3. 16. 1 Rol. Abr.—If an executor brings debt for any thing in right of his testator, it must be in the detinet only. Moor 566. 1 Rol. Abr. 602, 603.

So if an executor recovers in an action of debt upon a contract, and afterwards brings debt upon the judgment, it must be in the detinet. 1 Rol. Abr. 603. This must be understood if he sues in such second action, as executor.

If an executor brings an action upon an obligation made to the testator, where the day of payment incurred after the death of the testator, yet the writ shall be in the detinet only, for he brings the action as executor. Lane 80. S. P. 20 H. 6. 5. 1 Rol. Abr. 602. S. C.

So if a man binds himself to the testator to pay him 100l. when such a thing shall happen; if it happens after the death of the testator, yet the writ by the executor shall be in the detinet only. 20 H. 6. 6. 1 Rol. Abr. 602.

If a rent be granted to another for years, the executor of the grantee shall have an action for the arrearages of this rent incurred after the death of the testator in the detinet only, for he had it as executor. 11 H. 6. 36. 1 Rol. Abr. 602.

So if lessee for 20 years leases for 10 years rendering rent, and dies, his executor or administrator shall have action for the rent incurred after the death of the testator in the detinet only. 1 Rol. Abr. 603.

If in an account an executor recovers a debt due to his testator, in action for the arrearages thereupon, the writ shall be in the detinet only, for though the action is converted into a debt by the account, yet it is the same thing which was received in the life of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 326. Cro. Jac. 545. 5 Co. 31.

If the executor sells the goods of the testator for a certain sum, he shall have action for this in the debet & detinet. 1 Rol. Abr. 602.

If an executor having lands by an extent upon a statute made to the testator, and naming himself executor, &c. deed leases them for three years, rendering rent, &c. if an action is afterwards brought by him for this rent, it must be in the debet & detinet, because it is founded upon his own contract. Lane 80. Cro. Jac. 685. Winch 80. S. C. Brown 205. 1 Mod. 185. S. P.

So an executor, being lessee for years of a rectory in the right of the testator, may have action upon 2 E. 6. c. 13. for not setting out tithes in the debet & detinet, because founded upon a wrong in his own time, and by the statute it is given to the party grieved. Cro. Jac. 545.

Also action against an executor shall be in the detinet only, for he is chargeable no farther than he has assets. 11 H. 4. 16. 1 Rol. Abr. 603.

In an action against an executor for rent, incurred in the life of the testator, the writ shall be in the detinet only. 11 H. 6. 36. 1 Rol. Abr. 603.

But if an action be brought against an executor for the arrearages of a rent, reserved upon a lease for years, and incurred after the death of the testator, the writ shall be in the debet & detinet, because the executor is charged of his own possession. 1 Rol. Abr. 603. Cro. Eliz. 711. Moor 566. 1 Brownl. 56. Cro. Jac. 411.

If an action is brought against baron and feme, upon an obligation entered into by the feme before marriage, it shall be in the debet & detinet; for by the marriage all the personal goods and power of disposing of the real estate are by law given the husband, which he has to his own use, and not as executors, who have them only to the use of another. 5 Co. 36. 3 Leon. 206. S. C.

So if an action is brought upon a bond against the heir of the obligor, it shall be in the debet & detinet, because he hath the assets in his own right. 5 Co. 36.

III. How a debt may be extinguished.

If a man accepts an obligation for a debt due by simple contract, this extinguishes the contract, but the acceptance of an obligation, for a debt due by another obligation, is no bar of the first obligation. 13 H. 4. c. 1. 1 Roll. Abr. 604. i. e. if between the same parties.

In debt upon an obligation, the defendant cannot plead nil debet, but must deny the deed by pleading non est factum, for the seal of the party continuing, it must be dissolved eo ligamine quo ligatum est. Hard. 332.

But if the debt be due by simple contract, then he may plead nil debet, for it does not appear that there is any debt continuing. Hob. 218.

In debt for rent, if it be by deed, the proper plea is non est factum; but if it be without deed, the defendant may plead non dimisit, nothing in arrear, or that he never entered; also by the better opinion of the books, if the rent be due by indenture, the defendant may plead nil debet; for an indenture does not acknowledge a debt like an obligation, since the debt accrued by subsequent enjoyment. 2 Inst. 651. Hard. 332.

In debt for the arrears of an annuity granted for life, nil debet is no good plea, for the action is merely founded upon the deed, for without it no action can be maintained, and tho' by the death of the grantee the nature of the action is changed, the annuity being determined; yet this proves not but that the action is founded upon the deed. Keilw. 147.

But in debt for the arrears of a rent-charge, by will devised to the plaintiff's wife for life, against the administrator of the occupier of the land, nil debet is a good plea, for the will is no deed, nor wants any delivery; adjudged; and said the action was not so much grounded upon the will itself as upon the statute, by which men are enabled by will to dispose of their lands and rents issuing out thereof. Hard. 322.

In debt upon 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 13. for not setting forth tithes, Not guilty, or nil debet are good issues. 2 Inst. 651. Cro. Eliz. 621. S. P.

The reason why Not guilty is a good plea in this case is, because by the action the defendant is charged with a tort, and if he is not guilty of the tort; he does not owe the debt. So on the coal act, for not measuring with a lawful measure, or not delivering the ingrain, &c. &c.

In debt upon a contract, the defendant cannot plead the contract was for a less sum; or otherways than the plaintiff has declared, and traverse the contract in the declaration laid, but may wage his law. Moor 49. See farther Black. Com. 2 V. 464. 3 V. 153, &c. 158, 9.

Debt to the King. Under this word debitum, all things due to the King are comprehended; as all rents, fines, issues, amercements, and other duties received or levied by the sheriff; for debt in the larger sense signifies whatever any man owes. 2 Inst. 198. The King's debt is to be satisfied before that of a subject, and until his debt be paid, he may protect the debtor from the arrest of others. 1 Inst. 130. But by statute, notwithstanding the King's protection, creditors may proceed to judgment against his debtor, with a cesset executio till the King's debts be paid. 25 Ed. 3. St. 5. c. 19. Lands, &c. of the King's debtor and accountant, may be sold as well after his death, as in his life-time: But if the accountant or debtor to the King had a quietus during his life, his heir shall be discharged of the debt. 27 Eliz. cap. 3. A person being in debt to the King, purchases a lease to him and his wife, and dies: the term in the wife's hands is liable to the debt. 2 Rol. Abr. 157. Though it is said if he purchase lands to him and his wife for life, and to their heirs; such lands in the hands of the wife, are not extendible after the husband's death, for the King's debt. Dyer 255.

If a tenant in tail, becomes indebted to the King, by receipt of the King's money, or otherwise; unless it be by judgment, recognisance, obligation, or other specialty originally due to the King, or some other to his use; and then dies, the land in the hands of the issue in tail shall not be extended: But it may, in either of those four cases. 7 Rep. 21, 22. By the Common law, the King for his debt had execution of the body, lands, and goods of the debtor: By Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. c. 8. the King's debt shall not be levied on lands, where the goods and chattels of the debtor are sufficient to levy the debt; for in such case, the sheriff ought not to extend the lands and tenements of the King's debtor, or of his heir, &c. 2 Inst. 19. Also pledges shall not be distrained, when the principal is sufficient: Though in both cases it must be made appear to the sheriff; in the one, that there are goods and chattels enough, and in the other, that the sheriff may levy the King's debt on the principal. Ibid. Sheriffs having received the King's debts, upon their next account are to discharge the debtors, on pain to forfeit treble value; and the sheriffs are to give tallies to the King's debtors on payment. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 19. See Execution, and Black. Com. 3 V. 420.

The King's debtor committed by the court of Exchequer to the Fleet, brought into B. R. by habeas corpus, and surrendered in discharge of his bail, may be removed again to the Fleet by an habeas corpus from the Exchequer. Wilf. Rep. Par. 1. fo. 248. Cbitty's Case.

Debtor's Executor. If a person indebted to another makes his creditor or debtee his executor; or if such creditor obtains letters of administration to his debtor; he may retain sufficient to pay himself before any other creditors whose debts are of equal degree. 1 Rol. Abr. 922. Plowd. 543. Black. Com. 3 V. 18, &c.

Debtors. It is here held, that debt follows the person of the debtor, being on simple contract; and not of the creditor, as to actions brought, &c. 3 Keb. 163. Where a debtor is made executor of a will, the debt is said to be assets, because it is extinguished not by release, but in the way of legacy. 1 Salk. 303. By statute 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 18. Two thirds in number and value of creditors might make compositions with debtors, and bind all the rest; making oath before a master in Chancery how their debts became due, &c. But this act was repealed by 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 29. and see 10 Ann. c. 20. There have been several statutes for discharging poor insolvent debtors out of prison, where they have had no estate or effects to pay their creditors, &c. See Prisoners. And see Robert. Hist. Emp. Char. V. 1 V. 254, 5, &c. for an history of the various antient modes of proceeding, by creditors, against their debtors.

Debts, priority of. An executor or administrator in payment of debts, must observe the rules of priority; otherwise, on deficiency of assets, he must answer those of a higher nature out of his own estate. And, first, He may pay funeral charges and expences of proving the will, or taking letters of administration, and the like. Secondly, Debts due to the King on record or specialty. Thirdly, Such debts as are by particular statutes to be preferred to all others; as the forfeitures for not burying in woollen, money due on pools rates, for letters to the post-office, and some others. Fourthly, Debts of record; as judgments, (docketed according to the statute 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.) statutes and recognisances. Fifthly, Debts due on special contracts; as for rent, (for which the lessor hath often a better remedy in his own hands, by distraining) or upon bonds, covenants, and the like under seal. Lastly, Debts on simple contracts, viz. Upon notes unsealed, and verbal promises. Among these simple contracts, servants wages are, by some, with reason, preferred to any other. Black. Com. 2 V. 511.

Deceit, (Deceptio) Is a subtle trick or device, whereunto may be drawn all manner of craft and collusion, used to deceive and defraud another, by any means whatsoever, which hath no other or more proper name than deceit to distinguish the offence. West. Symb. Scit. 68. And there is a writ called Breve deceptionis that lies for one that receives injury or damage from him that doth any thing deceitfully in the name of another person; which writ is either original or judicial. Reg. Orig. 112. Old Nat. Br. 50. Deceit is an offence at Common law, and by statute: And all practices of defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his right, are punishable by fine and imprisonment; and if for cheating, pillory, &c. Serjeants, counsellors, attornies, and others, doing any manner of deceit, are to be imprisoned a year and a day; also pleaders by deceit shall be expelled the court. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 29. For obtaining money, &c. by false pretences, see 30 Geo. 2. c. 24.

If a fine be levied by deceit; or if one recover land by deceit, the fine, and the recovery, shall be void. 3 Rep. 77. And if a man be attorney for another in a real action against the demandant, and afterwards by covin between such attorney and the demandant, the attorney makes default, by which the land is lost, the tenant who lost the land shall have a writ of deceit against the attorney. F. N. B. 96.

In a præcipe quod reddat, if the sheriff return the tenant summoned, where he was not summoned, by which the defendant loseth his land by default at the grand cape returned; the tenant shall have a writ of deceit against him who recovered, and against the sheriff for his false return; and by that writ the tenant shall be restored unto his land again: And the sheriff shall be punished for his falsity. Ibid. 97. If a man bring a writ of deceit against him that recovers in the first action, and the sheriff return him summoned, upon which for non-summons in that action on finding the same the recovery is reversed; in this case the defendant shall not have writ of deceit to recover the land again, if he were not summoned: But he shall have his remedy against the sheriff. Rel. Abr. 621. And where debt was brought, and the defendant pleaded in abatement, and the plea was over-ruled; the attorneys on both sides by deceit between them, to the end the plaintiff might recover his debt, entered another judgment when it should have been a respondeas ouster; and it was held that the writ of deceit would not lie to reverse the record, but only to recover damages. Ibid. 622.

If in a suit or action, another person shall come into court and pretend he is party to the suit, and so let judgment be had, or some other damage done to the party himself; or if I have cause to have an action, and another brings it in my name, and lets judgment go against me by nonsuit, or the like; I may have this writ of deceit against him. F. N. B. 96. March 48.

If any one forge a statute, &c. in my name; and sueeth a capias thereupon, for which I am arrested; I shall have a writ of deceit against him that forged it, and against him who sued forth the writ of capias, &c. Ibid. And if a person procure another to sue an action against me to trouble me, I shall have a writ of deceit.

There are many frauds and deceits provided against by statute, relating to artificers, bakers, brewers, victuallers, false weights and measures, &c. which are liable to penalties and punishment in proportion to the offence committed. And writ of deceit lies in various cases, for not performing a bargain; or not selling good commodities, &c. 1 Inst. 357. See Action on the Case. A writ of disceit lies to set aside a fine and recovery in C. B. of lands in antient demesne. Wils. Rep. Par. 2. fo. 17. Rex v. Sergeant Mead & al. See Black. Com. 3 V. 165-6.

Decennary. A town or tithing consisting (originally) of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithing composed an hundred. The institution of decennaries (or frankpledges) is imputed to Alfred. In these decennaries the whole neighbourhood or tithing of freemen were mutually pledges for each other's good behaviour. Black. Com. 1 V. 114. 4 V. 249.

Decem Tales, Is when a full jury doth not appear at a trial at bar; then a writ goes to the sheriff apponere decem tales, &c. whereby a supply is made of jurymen to proceed in the trial.

Decies tantum, Is a writ that lies against a juror, who hath taken money of either party for giving his verdict; so called, because it is to recover ten times as much as he took: And every person that will may bring this writ and recover the same, one half whereof shall be to the prosecutor, and the other to the King. This writ also lies against embraceors that procure such an inquest; who shall be further punished by imprisonment for a year. Reg. Orig. 188. F. N. B. 171. Stat. 38 Ed. 3. cap. 13. But decies tantum doth not lie against the embraceor, if he embrace and take no money; for he ought to take money, and also embrace. Yet it lies against the jurors, although they do not give a verdict, if they take money; and so, 'tis said, if they give a true verdict, decies tantum lies, if they take money. Dyer 95. New Nat. Br. 300.

Decimation, (Decimatio) The punishing every tenth soldier by lot, was termed decimatio legionis: It likewise signifies tithing, or paying a tenth part. There was a decimation during the time of the Usurper 1655.

Deciners, Decenniers, or Doziners, (Decennarii) Derived from the Fr. Dixaine, i. e. Decas, Ten, signify in our ancient law, such as were wont to have the oversight of the Friburghs, or views of frank-pledge, for the maintenance of the King's peace; and the limits or compass of their jurisdiction was called Decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; as every person bound for himself and his neighbours to keep the peace, was stiled Decennier. Bract. lib. 3. Traçt. 2. cap. 15. These seemed to have large authority in the time of the Saxons, taking knowledge of causes within their circuits, and redressing wrongs by way of judgment, and compelling men thereunto, as appears in the laws of King Edward the Confessor, published by Lambard, Numb. 32. But of late times decennier is not used for the chief man of a Dixain, or Dozein; but he that is sworn to the King's peace, and by oath of loyalty to the Prince, is settled in the society of a dozein. A dozein seemed to extend so far as a leet extendeth; because in leets the oath of loyalty is administered by the steward, and taken by all such as are twelve years old, and upwards, dwelling within the precinct of the leet where they are sworn. F. N. B. 161. There are now no other dozains but leets; and there is a great diversity between the ancient and these modern times, in this point of law and government. 2 Inst. 73. See Black. Com. 4 V. 249.

Declaration, (Declaratio, Narratio) Is a shewing in writing the cause of complaint of the plaintiff in an action against the defendant; wherein the party is supposed to have received some wrong. And this ought to be plain and certain, because it impeacheth the defendant, and compels him to answer thereunto; it must set forth the plaintiff's and defendant's names; the nature and cause of the action; the manner thereof, &c. and the damage received. 1 Inst. 17. A count or declaration ought to contain demonstration, declaration, and conclusion: In demonstration, are included three things; Quis queritur, contra quam, & pro qua causa; in declarations, there ought to be comprised, Quomodo inter partes actio accrevit, quando & qua die, anno & loco, & cui dabitur: And in the conclusion, should be averred and offered to prove the suit and damage, &c. sustained. Terms de Ley. See Co. Lit. 303. a. &c. A declaration is an exposition of the writ, with the addition of time, circumstances, &c. and must be true and clear, for the court is not to take things in it by implication: but it is not necessary to set forth matters of fact, as in a bill in Chancery, because they are to be tried by a jury. Wood's Inst. 582. The law requires four things in declarations and pleadings, viz. 1. Truth. 2. Certainty. 3. Order. 4. Congruity. In personal actions, the day, year, and place ought to be expressed in the declaration; but not in real actions: And if in trespass the plaintiff declares, that it was committed such day, &c. and continued diversis diebus & vicibus, without shewing the days of the continuance of it, this is good: For that is to be proved in evidence, for the increase of damages. Jenk. Cent. 124.

In action of debt, upon a bond, the plaintiff in his declaration must alledge a place where the bond was made, because the jury should come from that place; and if this be omitted, the declaration is ill. Dyer 15, 39. 1 Nelf. Abr. 619. In action of covenant, no more of the deed need be mentioned in the declaration, than the covenant where the breach is assigned: And if a defendant pleads non est factum to a deed, he allows a covenant therein to be broken, as laid in the declaration, and makes the declaration good, tho' the breach be too generally assigned. 2 Cro. 369. Sed qu. But a defendant seldom relies on the plea of non est factum only, unless the deed is not in reality his, but, by leave of the court, pleads also some other plea, or pleas. In slander there should be no more inducement than is necessary: The like is to be observed in actions upon general statutes, concluding contra formam statuti, &c. But in declarations for words, the words spoke are to be laid expressly and positively; not with with an hac verba vel consimilia, nor with a quorum tenor sequitur, &c. Cro. Eliz. 645, 857. 5 Mod. 72. And where the plaintiff declares on, and recites a statute, he must recite it truly, and 'tis erroneous to misrecite it; though as to the substance of the declaration, the plaintiff might have omitted to recite it all. 1 Nelf. 616.

In action on the case upon assumpsit, the plaintiff is to declare upon the whole promise made, and not on a part of it; or on trial he will be nonsuited. 1 Danv. Abr. 266, &c. It is good to lay large and sufficient damages in declarations: And damages shall not be given for that which is not contained in the declaration, and only for what is materially alledged. 10 Rep. 115. 1 Lill. Abr. 381. If one declare upon an obligation, with an hic in curia prolatus, he must on oyer pray'd of it, shew the obligation, or the declaration will not be good. And a plaintiff declaring as executor or administrator, ought to set forth the probate of the will, and letters of administration granted, with a profert in curia; or the declaration will be naught. 2 Lill. Abr. 412.

Where there are two counts in a declaration for things of the same kind, and not averred to be different, it is not good; for the defendant is twice charged for the same thing: But on arrest of judgment in such a case, it was adjudged good after verdict, and the court will not intend them to be the same. 1 Salk. 213. If a declaration is bad, and the defendant demurs, the plaintiff may, on application to a judge, or by motion in court, (but the most usual method is by summons before a judge) obtain leave to amend on paying the costs of the demurrer, &c. But if the defendant do not take advantage of it, but pleads in bar, and the plaintiff proceeds to issue thereon, if the right is found for the defendant, the plaintiff is estopp'd by the verdict from bringing a new action: And so it is if he had demurred to the plea in bar. 1 Mod. 20, 207. Where a declaration is defective, it is sometimes aided by the statutes of jeofails, &c. but they help only matters of form, not matters of substance; for uncertainty in a declaration, which is matter of substance, is not aided by statute after verdict, as in case of trespass for taking fish, where their number or nature are not set forth. 5 Rep. 35.

The plaintiff hath two terms to exhibit his declaration against the defendant, that term being reckoned one wherein the writ was returnable: And if no declaration comes in before the rising of the court, the last day of the second term, the defendant may sign a non. prof. whereupon he shall have costs. If the defendant appears in person, the plaintiff is to declare in three days after appearance in B. R. and in other courts, at the next court. As to B. R. the plaintiff hath now two terms: and more time in taking a rule. The plaintiff's attorney is to file his warrant the term wherein he declares. Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. If one be in custody of the marshal of the court, any plaintiff may file a declaration against him, and he is obliged to plead thereto; it is the same when he is out upon bail, any other may declare against him: For when a man is in custody of the law, he is bound to answer every one's suit; and on hab. corp. a stranger to the writ by which the prisoner is arrested, may take notice of the prisoner when he is turned over to the marshal, though at the suit of another, and declare against him, without taking out process. 1 Lill. Abr. 413.

By statute, when a defendant is taken or charged in custody, upon any writ out of the courts at Westminster, or imprisoned for want of sureties for appearance, the plaintiff must declare against him before the end of the next term, and cause a copy to be delivered to the prisoner or gaoler; to which declaration the prisoner is to plead, or the plaintiff shall have judgment. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 21. But if the declaration be not enter'd, or left in the office, before the end of the next term; and affidavit is made thereof, and filed, before the end of twenty days after, &c. the prisoner, on entering his appearance shall be discharged by superseas. If a person is in custody of the marshal, &c. and the plaintiff would charge him either with an action or execution, (if in term-time) he must file a bill against him, and deliver a declaration to the turn-key, &c. and he shall lie in custody two terms, &c. but if in vacation, the plaintiff is to go to the marshall's book in the office, and make an entry quod defendens remaneat in custodia ad se &c. A. B. &c. 1 Salk. 213. And in declarations against prisoners by virtue of any process out of B. R. it shall be alledged in custody of what sheriff, bailiff, &c. such prisoner is at the time of the declaration delivered: which allegation shall be as effectual as if the prisoner was in custody of the marshal. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 21. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 21. All declarations are to be filed; for 'tis filing that makes them authentick, as the foundation of the cause depending; and before filed, they are not of record to warrant a judgment: and if the plaintiff's attorney cannot find the defendant's attorney to deliver him the declaration, filing it in the office will be a good delivery; but notice thereof must be given either to the defendant or his attorney, when they are to be found; and if the defendant do not plead, judgment shall be had against him. Pasch. 13 Car. B. R.

On filing declarations, copies thereof are served on the defendants, or their attorneys, &c. And by an order of all the judges, anno 12 W. 3. the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to deliver the defendant's attorney the original declaration; but instead of it, is to deliver a true copy of the declaration; upon delivery or tender whereof, the defendant's attorney shall pay for such copy after the rate of 4 d. per sheet, &c. and if any person refuse to pay for the copy tendered, the said copy is to be left in the office, with the clerk that keeps the files of declarations, and thereupon the plaintiff's attorney giving rule to plead, may for want of a plea sign judgment; and before any plea shall be received, the defendant's attorney is to pay for the copy of the declaration. 1 Lill. 417.

And by a late order, in every cause, where special or common bail is filed, and notice given to the plaintiff, a copy of the declaration shall be delivered to the attorney for the defendant, who shall pay for it according to the usual rate; but if the defendant's attorney, or his clerk in his absence, refuses to pay for such copy; or if it happens the habitation of the attorney for the defendant, be unknown to the attorney for the plaintiff; then it shall be lawful to leave the copy with the officer of the court appointed for filing declarations, which shall be good, giving notice, &c. Ord. Cur. Trin. 2 Geo. 2.

On the first day of the following term after delivery of the declaration, the paper of rules is to be made up, writing on the top the attorney's name and the term, and under that the names of the plaintiff and defendant, as A. B. against C. D. &c. and the paper of rules must be carried to the secondary, who will give one peremptory rule to plead in eight days, &c. A plaintiff's attorney, may amend his declaration in B. R. in matter of form, after the general issue pleaded, before entry thereof, without paying costs, or giving imparlance: But if he amend in substance, he is to pay costs, or give imparlance: And if he amend in substance, after a special plea pleaded, though he would give imparlance, he must pay costs. 1 Lill. Abr. 409.

A mistake in a declaration, the plaintiff may amend in C. B. on notice before the essoins day, and the defendant shall have no advantage of it: Also before demurrer, or issue joined, the plaintiff may amend, paying 13 s. 4 d. costs; and force the defendant to plead presently, or give him a further imparlance without paying costs: But after demurrer, or issue joined, and when the pleadings are entered on the roll, the plaintiff cannot amend his declaration, but is to enter a discontinuance, and proceed de novo. Practif. Attorn. Edit. 1. p. 147. But the courts will often give leave to amend, on motion for that purpose, plaintiff paying such costs as shall be taxed by the proper officers.

On a latitat in B. R. you may declare against the defendant in as many actions as you think fit; but you must have one original, for every action in C. B. The declaration is grounded upon the writ in the Common Pleas, and bill of Middlesex in the King's Bench: And in C. B. it is usual to declare in actions on Quare clausum fregit, as is practised on a latitat in B. R. 2 Vent. 259. One may not regularly declare in B. R. against a person that is not in custody of the marshal, or hath not filed bail; unless he be a privileged person. 21 Car. B. R. If a claration begins Queritur de Placito Transg. pro eo quod, &c. it may be a declaration in case, or it will serve for either trespass, or case. Cro. Car. 325.

The plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to set his hand to his declaration; for the defendant's attorney must receive it without, if he knows him to be the attorney in the cause. By statute, no man shall be prejudiced by the ancient forms; so that the matter of the action be fully shewn in the declaration, &c. which shall be good, though the terms are not perfectly proper. 35 Ed. 3. c. 15. Vide 27 El. c. 5. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. & 4 Ann. c. 16.

A decree in Chancery is of the like nature with a judgment at Common law. Chan. Rep. 234. 14 Car. 2. Nanny v. Martin.

Decree. The judgment of a court of equity on any bill preferred, is so called.

By the laws of England a decree (notwithstanding any contempts thereof) shall not bind the goods or moveables, but only charge the person. Chan. Rep. 193. 12 Car. 2. Howard v. Suffolk.

A defendant lay in the Fleet for breach of a decree, the plaintiff nevertheless prefers a bill to discover an estate; defendant demurred because a double execution; yet overruled. Toth. 137, 138. cites Hill. 1630. Audley v. Harris.

A sequestration may be granted in the Exchequer, as it has always been practised in Chancery where a decree is for a personal duty, otherwise the jurisdiction of the court of equity would be to little purpose, if it had not authority sufficient to see its decrees executed; per three Barons; but the Lord Chief Baron doubted, because the Lord Chief Baron Hale could never be prevailed upon to grant it, nor the Lord Montague, to whose learning, he said, he must subscribe; but by the opinion of the other three it was granted. 2 Freem. Rep. 99. pl. 109. Trin. 1687. in the Exchequer, Gawver v. Fountaine. See 7 Vin. Abr. 394, 402.

Where there is a remedy at law for one thing in a bill, which is complicated with other matters which are proper in equity, in such case equity will determine the whole matter; per Lord Chancellor. 2 Freem. Rep. 58. in pl. 64. Trin. 1680.

Where there is but one witness against the defendant's answer, the plaintiff can have no decree. Vern. R. 161. pl. 151. Pasch. 1683. Alam v. Jourdon.

Where no ordinary process upon the first decree will serve for the execution thereof, there must be a new bill to pray execution of the first decree by a second decree. 2 Chan. Rep. 127, 128. 29 Car. 2. Lawrence v. Bernety.

Verbal agreement, though subsequent to the decree, yet shall not stay the execution of it, but the remedy must be by original bill. 2 Chan. Cases 8. Mich. 31 Car. 2. Waklin v. Walball.

Whenever a decree is entered by consent, the merits after shall never after be enquired into, unless there be an objection, that the word consent be struck out of the order. MS. Tab. February 1702. Norcot v. Norcot.

On a new bill to carry a decree into execution, court may vary and alter what is thought proper; but on a rehearing, no further than the petition extends; but if the petition be against the decree in general, though particular reasons are given, the whole is open; but otherwise it is, if the petition be only against one or two particulars. See Cases in Chan. in Lord King's time 13, 14. Pasch. 11 Geo. 1. Colchester v. Colchester.

The rule of court is, that on appeal the whole cause is open; but on a rehearing, only so much as is petitioned against; if all do not petition, it is open only to the petitioners. See Cases in Chan. in Lord King's time 24. Trin. 11 Geo. 1. Hayward v. Colley.

Decree may be altered upon proper application the same term it is so pronounced, without a rehearing. MS. Tab. May 1725. Vaughan v. Blake. No original bill can be to vacate a decree signed and inrolled. G. Equ. R. 185. Hill. 12 Geo. Floyd v. Mansell. Matters proper to be excepted to upon the master's report, shall never be objected to a decree after the report confirmed. MS. Tab. April 28, 1726. Parker v. Stanley. All appeals from the Rolls are to be made to the Lord Chancellor, and decrees made at the Rolls must be signed or approved of by the Chancellor to make them decrees of the court of Chancery. MS. Tab. March 13, 1727. Morse v. Dubois.

A decree gained by fraud, may be set aside by petition, as well as a judgment at law by motion; a fortiori may such decree be set aside by bill. 3 Wms's Rep. 111. Pasch. 1731. Seldon v. Fortescue Aland. If a decree be obtained and inrolled, so that the cause cannot be reheard, then there is no remedy but by bill of review, which must be an error appearing on the face of the decree, or on matters subsequent thereto, as a release, or a receipt discovered since. 3 Wms's Rep. 371. Trin. 1735. Taylor v. Sharp. See Black. Com. 3 V. 451.

Decretals. (Decretales) Are a volume or books of the Canon Law, so called, containing the decrees of sundry Popes; or a digest of the canons of all the councils that pertained to one matter under one head. See Canon Law.

Decurfare, Signifies to bring into order. Mon. Aug. Tom. 1. p. 243.

Dedbania, Ded bane, Sax. An actual homicide, or manslaughter. Leg. H. 1. c. 85.

Dedi, Is a warranty in law; as if it be said in a deed or conveyance, That A. B. hath Given, &c. to C. D. it is a warranty to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 304. Also dedi imports a power of giving any thing. Heb. 12.

Dedication-Day, (Festum Dedicacionis) the feast of dedication of churches, or rather the feast-day of the saint and patron of a church; which was celebrated not only by the inhabitants of the place, but by those of all the neighbouring villages, who usually came thither; and such assemblies were allowed as lawful: It was usual for the people to feast and drink on those days; and in many parts of England, they still meet every year in villages for this purpose, which days are called Fasts or Wakes.

Edictum Potestatem, Is a writ or commission given to one or more private persons, for the speeding some act appertaining to a judge, or some court: And it is granted most commonly upon suggestion, that the party who is to do something before a judge, or in court, is so weak that he cannot travel; as where a person lives in the country, to take an answer in Chancery; to examine witnesses in a cause depending in that court; to levy a fine in the Common Pleas, &c.

Edictum Potestatem de Retorno faciendo. As the words of writs do command the defendant to appear, &c. anciently the judges would not suffer the parties to make attorney in any action or suit, without the King's writ of Dedimus Potestatem, to receive their attorney: But now by statutes, the plaintiff or defendant may make attorney in suits without such writs. New Nat. Br. 55, 56. See the Table to the 4th Edit. of the Stat. tit. Attornies.

Deed, (Factum) Is an instrument in parchment, or paper, but chiefly in parchment, comprehending a contract or bargain between party and party; or an agreement of the parties thereto, for the matters therein contained: And it consists of three principal points, writing, sealing, and delivery; writing, to express the contents; sealing, to testify the consent of the parties; and delivery, to make it binding and perfect. Terms de Ley. Some have enumerated ten things as necessarily incident to a deed. (1) Writing. (2) In parchment (vellum) or paper. (3) A person able to contract. (4) By a sufficient name. (5) A person able to be contracted with. (6) By a sufficient name. (7) A thing to be contracted for. (8) Apt words required by law. (9) Sealing. And (10) Delivery. Co. Litt. 35. b.

The word scriptum or writing doth not import a deed; for a contract may be in writing, and not by deed, and if so, it is but a parol agreement: But a deed may be effectual, although it does not mention, in the beginning, by or to whom it is made. 1 Ed. Raym. 28.

1. As to the writing of a deed. All the matter and form thereof must be written before the sealing and delivery of it; for if a man seals and delivers an empty piece of parchment or paper, although he therewithal gives commandment that an obligation or other matter shall be written in it, which is done accordingly, yet this will not make it a good deed. Co. Litt. 171. Perk. S. 118, 119. See Moor 28. Healey 136, 7.

A deed may be written in any hand, as in text, court or Roman hand; or in any language, as in Latin or French,

• French, and is as good as a deed writtten in English and in a secretary hand. 2 Co. 3.

If there be any alteration, rasure, or interlining made in any part of the deed before the delivery of it, this will not hurt the deed.

But in such cases it is policy to make a memorandum of it upon the back of the deed, and to give the witnesses notice of it, (this is now usually done in the attestation of the deed thus: Sealed and delivered, the word — being first interlined, &c.) For otherwise, if it be in any place material, as in the name of the grantor, grantee, in the limiting of the estate, or the like, and it cannot be proved to be done before the sealing and delivery of it, especially if it be a deed poll, it is very suspicious. Co. Litt. 37, 225. Perk. S. 125, 126, 127, 128, 155.

It may be written either in a piece of loose paper or parchment, or in a paper or parchment sewed in a book. Bro. Oblig. 67. Co. Litt. 137, 139. But the paper or parchment must in most cases be stamped.

As to the parties contracting.

It is to be observed, That some persons are disabled by Common law, and some by statute; some are absolute, and some are secundum quid only; as in case of infants, feme covert, ideots, persons non compos mentis, aliens, tenants in tail, ecclesiastical persons, and others, some of which may not make any deeds or estates by them at all; others but so and so limited and qualified. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 28.

Disabilities to make deeds, &c. are chiefly amongst persons of none-sane memory, infants, aliens, women who have husbands, men who have wives, &c. persons born deaf and dumb, persons attaint of treason or felony, or in a præmunire, clerk convict, tenant in tail, ecclesiastical persons, as bishops, parsons, and the like, with respect to lands, &c. they hold as such, joint-tenants, tenants in common, coparceners, disseisors, disseisees, &c.

And this in some of them is in part, and temporal only, but in others of them, it is absolute, universal, and perpetual.

He who has but an estate-tail in land, can only make a lease of it for his own life by deed, or such a lease as is within the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28.

Ecclesiastical persons cannot make a lease of their ecclesiastical lands for longer than their own lives, or such a lease as is warrantable by the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 10. and 1 Jac. 1. cap. 3. and others.

And he who has only an estate for his own or another's life, or a lease for years of land, may give, grant or charge it at his pleasure for so long as his estate lasts; and it will be good to all purposes, and against all persons for that time.

And a man who has an estate in land to him and his wife, and his heirs, may make what estate he will of it, and this will be good against all but his wife, and that for her life only. 7 Co. 12. Co. Litt. 42. Perk. f. 182.

As to the naming and description of the parties and persons in deeds:

The names of the parties to deeds serve only to distinguish persons, and to make the person intended certain; and therefore it is safe to describe the person intended by his true and proper names of baptism and surname; and if it be a corporation, by the true name whereby it was made; yet mistakes in this, unless they be very gross, will not hurt, nilil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat. Bulst. 21, 22. 2 Bulst. 302, 303. Co. Litt. 3. Perk. f. 36.

But if the name of baptism or surname be mistaken, as John for Thomas, or Adderley for Adderby, this is dangerous. Moor 407, 897. And see 2 Bulst. 70. Perk. f. 39.

'Tis also prudent to add the addition of each party, as to the place of residence, with his or her degree, profession, or mystery.

There are many descriptions of grantors and grantees; as (1) Proper names of baptism and surnames, and the names of corporations, or bodies politick or corporate.

(2) Names of dignities, office, and the like. And these (of both sorts) will admit a description made good by reputation. And so land will pass to one, by the name of a son, who is a bastard; so to one by the name of a wife, who is not a wife, if they be reputed or known by that name. Hob. 32.

There must be such a person in esse at the time of the deed made as is named, and he must be able to give, and capable to receive that which is given or granted by the deed. Plowd. 345. Co. Litt. 2, 3. Perk. 43, 52.

And therefore if an annuity be granted to the right heirs of J. S. he being then living, this is void; for there is none such, nor can be whilst he lives. Perk. f. 52.

So primogenit. proli of A. and B. and they have no issue yet born. Cro. Car. 22.

If a man gets another name by common esteem than his right name, and he is known by his other name, his deed made by this other name may be good. 6 Co. 36. Co. Litt. 3. Perk. f. 41.

The mistake is less dangerous where any other part of the deed, or some other addition, shall make the person intended certain. 6 Co. 36. Co. Litt. 3. Perk. f. 40.

With respect to the capacity of the person to be contracted with:

All persons male or female, ecclesiastical or temporal, and all bodies natural or politick, are capable to take by grant, or to be contracted with, unless disabled by their being non compos mentis, &c. as before, as to the disabilities to grant, &c.

The King, for the greatness of his person, is disabled to take by deed in pais; and therefore if a feoffment be made to him there, and livery of seisin be made upon it, this will be void; but he is to take by matter of record, which is of a higher nature than a deed. Fitz. Fait and Feoffment 21.

Leases made to him by colleges, deans and chapters, or any other having a spiritual or ecclesiastical living, against the statute 13 Eliz. c. 10. are restrained by the same act, as well as leases made to common persons. 5 Co. 14.

If a lease is made to husband and wife for their lives, the remainder to the heirs of the survivor; this is a good remainder notwithstanding the uncertainty. Godb. Case, 167.

If a lease be made to the husband, habendum to the wife, the habendum to her is void, for she is a stranger to the premises of the deed. 3 Leon. 32, 33, 34.

Concerning the name of the grantee:

It is to be remarked, That grantees, &c. must not only be persons in being, and capable to take by grant, &c. by the name in the deed mentioned, but they must also be sufficiently named and described one way or other, and he himself, and not a stranger, must take by the deed; and some that cannot grant or give, yet may take or receive. And a grant made to two, three, or twenty such persons, is good. Co. Litt. 2, 3. Perk. f. 43.

If a grant be in all other respects well made, except the omission of the name of the grantee, if it does not express who shall take by it, it is void.

There are divers sorts of names and nominations of persons, or bodies politick or corporate, that may take, whereof there are divers sorts; as first, the proper names or surnames, wherein notwithstanding there may be ambiguity of a gift or grant to my son John, (having two of that name,) perhaps it may be made good by an averment which John is meant.

There are also other names or descriptions, as by some dignity, office, or the like; as the Earl of Hertford, Lord Treasurer, and the like: And this will admit of a description made good by reputation, though not by truth; as land will pass even by conveyance to one by the name of son who is a bastard, by the name of wife who is not such, if he or she be so reputed or known by that name. 27 Edw. 3. 85. Bulst. 3.

But the safe way in the cases of common persons is, to name the parties grantor or grantee, &c. by their names of baptism and surname, &c. Co. Litt. 3.

For where the grant intends to describe the person of the grantee by his proper name, and omits or mistakes his Christian name or surname; commonly the deed is void, unless there be some special matter to help it.

And yet if the grant does not intend to describe the grantee by his known name, but by some other matter, there it may be good, by a description of the person, without either name of baptism or surname. Co. Litt. 3.

A bishop by the name of Bishop of London, may take without any other name. Co. Litt. 3. Bult. 21.

As to the thing to be contracted for:

All corporeal and immoveable things, such as are said to lie in livery, as honours, offices, villages, manors, messuages, cottages, lands, meadows, pastures, woods, advowsons, moors, marshes, furzes, heaths, mines, quarries, and the like; and some incorporeal things that are incident and appendant to them, are grantable from any man to another man in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life or years at first, and transmissible and assignable afterwards by the grantee thereof in infinitum at pleasure. Co. Litt. 20.

A grant may be of a moiety, third, fourth, or fifth, or other certain part of a manor, or of land, by the name of a third, fourth, fifth, or other certain part, and good. Co. Litt. 190.

So of a third or fourth part of tithes, and the like. Dyer 84.

And all incorporeal things, such as are said to lie in grant, as rents and services; and of these not only such as are reserved upon any estate made of land, but such as are granted out of land, feignories, commons, vicarages, advowsons in gross, estovers, dignities, ways, waters, fishings, franchises, ferries, leets, waifs, estrays, and some offices. All these and the like things are grantable by one to another in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life or for years at first, and de novo, but they are grantable and assignable over in infinitum. But these things may not be granted otherwise than by deed. Co. Litt. 144. Fitz. Grant, 145. Perk. f. 87, 91, 103. Bro. Grant, 3. 3 H. 6. 20. 9 H. 6. 12.

And if a man has a rent reserved on a particular estate, he may grant over parcel of it.

And of whatsoever a fine may be levied, a grant by deed of the same thing may be made.

A grant of an acre of land covered with water, is good. Co. Litt. 4.

Rents and services reserved upon any estate, and rents granted out of land (it is said) are grantable over in infinitum; but one may not grant rent out of a rent, nor may one grant over a rent which he has till he has seisin of it. Perk. f. 88, 89. Bro. Grant, 171.

With regard to the words requisite in a deed:

They depend upon the estate intended to be conveyed. If a man would purchase lands or tenements in fee-simple it behoves him to have these words in his purchase, To have and to hold to him and to his heirs; for these words, his heirs, (only) make the estate of inheritance, in all feoffments and grants. But this is to be understood of natural bodies: For if lands be given to a sole body politick or corporate, (as to a bishop, parson, vicar, master of an hospital, &c.) there to give him an estate of inheritance in his politick or corporate capacity, he must use these words, To have and to hold to him and his successors. Co. L. 8. &c.

If an estate-tail is intended to be created, the words must be, To have and to hold to him and to the heirs of his body. See title Fee.

The necessity of the word heirs or successors, as the case requires, is therefore absolutely necessary in conveyances of estates of inheritance; for if a man purchases lands by these words, To have and to hold to him for ever; or by these words, To have and to hold to him and his assigns for ever: In these two cases he has but an estate for term of life. See Co. Litt. 8. b. &c.

As to sealing and delivery:

A deed sealed and delivered, 'tis said may be good without signing; for the seal is the essential part of the deed: But 'tis usual to have deeds signed; and there must be witnesses to the sealing and delivery, who are to indorse or under-write their names thereon. 1 Inst. 7. 10 Rep. 93. The signing is of great use, for the subscribing witnesses to the deed may be dead, when proving their death, and the hand-writing of the party executing the deed, will be sufficient to establish the same. If a writing is not sealed, it cannot be a deed: And if the print of the seal be utterly defaced, the deed is insufficient, so that it cannot be pleaded; but it may be given in evidence. 3 Inst. 169. 5 Rep. 23.

If any deed be read false to an illiterate person, though he sign, seal, and deliver it, it shall not be his deed, to bind him: Though if he does not require the deed to be read, and seal and deliver it, he is bound by the same. 2 Rep. 3. 2 Rol. Abr. 28. And if he that is to seal the deed, cause a stranger covinously to read it false, to make the same void; this will not hurt the deed. 12 Rep. 90. Hob. 96. If another person seal my deed, and I take it after sealed and deliver it as my deed; it is held to be good. Perk. Sect. 130. See Co. Litt. 171.

If two make a deed, and one of them seals it at one time, and the other at another time; this is as good as if they sealed it together. Lane 32.

If a deed concludes with these words, In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand; and the party writes his name, and puts his seal; this is a good deed, although no mention be made of putting his seal to it. Hethy 75.

If I have sealed my deed, and after I deliver to him to whom it is made, or to some other by his appointment, and say nothing, this is a good delivery.

So if I take the deed in my hand, and use these, or the like words, here take him, or this will serve; or I deliver this as my deed, or I deliver him you; these are deliveries.

So if I make a deed of land to another, and being upon the land, I deliver the deed to him in the name of seisin of the land; this is a good delivery.

So if the deed be sealed, or lying in a window, or on a table, and I use these, or the like words, There be it, take it as my deed: this is a good delivery, and perfects the deed; for as a deed may be delivered by words without acts, so may it also be delivered by acts without words. 9 Co. 137. Dyer 167, 192. Co. Litt. 36, 49. 35 Aff. pl. 6.

Regularly there may not be two deliveries of a deed, for where the first doth take effect, the second is void: Unless it be where the deed is delivered to a stranger as an escrow; or when a deed, good at first, becomes void afterwards by the breach of the seal; or a feme covert seals a deed, and after being sole delivers it again, &c. Perk. Sect. 154. Co. Litt. 48. 5 Rep. 119. The delivery of any deed may be alleged at any time after the date; but not before. Dyer 315. A deed may be good without all the orderly and formal parts; but without delivery by the party himself, or his attorney lawfully authorized, to the party to whom made, or some other to his use, it is no deed: And the delivery may be either absolute or on condition. 1 Inst. 35. 2 Rep. 5.

If a deed sealed, lieth on the table, and the grantor saith to the grantee, Take that as my deed, or this will serve, &c. it is a good delivery: But if it be thus left when sealed, and the party to whom made takes it up, this is no delivery, without some words. Though where parties have come for that purpose, and done every thing but delivery; it has been adjudged a good delivery in law. Cro. Eliz. 7. 1 Leon. 140. Of deeds there are two sorts, deeds indented, and deeds poll; which names principally arise from the form of them, the one being cut in and out at top, dentwise, and the other plain: that is shaved close, from whence it takes the name of deed poll. See Black. Com. 2 V. 296. A deed indented is defined to be a deed consisting of two parts, or more, for there are deeds tripartite, quadripartite, sextipartite, &c. in which it is expressed, that the parties have to every part thereof interchangeably set their several seals; and for that it contains more parts than one, each part is indented, or cut one of them into the other, that thereby it may appear they belong to one business or contract. West. Symb. Sect. 47.

A deed poll is said to be a deed testifying that only one of the parties to the agreement hath put his seal to the same, where such party is the principal or only person, whose consent or act is necessary to the deed: And it is therefore a plain deed, without indenting, and is used when the vendor, for example, example, only seals, and there is no need of the vendee's sealing a counterpart, because the nature of the contract is such, as it requires no covenant from the vendee, &c. Co. Litt. 55.

The several parts of deeds by indenture, are belonging to the feoffor, grantor, or lessor, who have one; the feoffee, grantee, or lessee, who have another; and some other persons, as trustees, a third, &c. and the deed-poll which is single, and of but one part, is delivered to the feoffee, or grantee, &c. All the parts of a deed indented, in judgment of law, make but one intire deed; but every part is of as great force as all the parts together, and they are esteemed the mutual acts of either party, who may be bound by either part of the same, and the words of the indenture are the words of either party, &c. But a deed poll is the sole deed of him that makes it, and the words thereof shall be said to be his words, and bind him only. Plowd. 134, 421. Lit. sect. 370. And there are other divisions of deeds; some are absolute, and some conditional; some inrolled, and others not inrolled; some concerning the realty, some the personalty, &c. and some have in them matter of gift or grant; and others matter of discharge.

There are several kinds of deeds, by which lands pass from one man to another; as of bargain and sale, feoffment, lease and release, indentures to lead the uses of fines and recoveries, settlements, leases, assignments, exchanges, mortgages, &c. And deeds have several formal parts, viz. The premises, habendum, reddendum, condition, covenants, warranty, date, sealing, &c. The premises set forth the proper names of the parties, with their additions of place and quality; and comprehend the certainty of the lands and tenements to be conveyed, with the consideration of the deed, as money, natural love, &c. the premises also contain the exceptions, if there be any, out of the land granted; as of timber, mines, &c. and in many deeds there may be an occasion of a recital of former deeds in the premises, particularly in assignments of leases, mortgages, &c. The habendum names the certainty of the estate granted, for what time the grantee is to have it, and to what use: and it sometimes qualifies the estate, so that the general implication of it, which by construction of law passes in the premises, by the habendum may be controlled; but not if the estate is expressed in the premises. Likewise an habendum may explain the premises, to prevent wrong; and sometimes the premises are thereby enlarged. A freehold cannot be granted by deed with habendum at a day to come: and a deed or lease; habendum from henceforth, includes the day on which it was dated: but habendum a die datus excludes it. The reddendum is that clause in the deed which reserveth some new thing to the grantor; as rent, suit, service, &c. and is usually made by the words yielding, paying, doing, &c. A lessor cannot reserve to any but himself, his heirs and executors, &c. nor can he reserve to himself parcel of the annual profits, such as the herbage of the land; for that would be repugnant to the grant, it being a part thereof.

Conditions and covenants in deeds are for the holding or not holding of the estate granted, on performance of some act: and a condition relating to a real estate, is a quality annexed by him that hath the estate, interest or right in the same, whereby the estate granted may be defeated, enlarged, or created, upon an uncertain event. Conditions are expressed by these words, viz. upon Condition, Provided, So that, &c. and Provided always, and it is covenanted, is a condition, by force of the proviso, and a covenant, by virtue of the other words; though sometimes a proviso shall amount to a covenant, and sometimes be taken for a limitation, exception, reservation, explanation, &c.

The warranty in deeds is to secure the estate to the grantee and his heirs, &c. and is a covenant real, annexed to the land granted, by which the grantor and his heirs are bound to warrant the same to the grantee and his heirs, and that they shall quietly hold and enjoy it; or upon voucher, &c. the grantor shall yield other lands, to the value of what shall be evicted. Where a feoffor grants away all his estate in the land, and is not bound to warrant the title, but the feoffee is to defend it at his peril; the feoffee shall have all the deeds, as incidents to the land, although not granted in express words: but where the feoffor warrants the land, it is otherwise: the feoffor shall have them to defend the title; and the feoffee must trust to his warranty, and have only such deeds as concern the possession, &c.

In quitrents whereof, &c. ascertains the date of the deed; and is as well part of it, as what is written before. 1 Inst. 6, 47, 201, 365. Plowd. 152. Wood's Inst. 224, 225, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 624, &c. Deeds of bargain and sale are to be inrolled, by Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 16. A copy of a bargain and sale inrolled shall be as sufficient as the original deed, by Stat. 10 Ann. c. 18. sect. 3. But estates in fee are now generally granted and conveyed by indentures of lease and release. And all deeds are to be registered in the counties of York and Middlesex. Stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 4. 5 Ann. c. 18. 6 Ann. c. 35. 7 Ann. c. 26. 8 Geo. 2. c. 6. 25 Geo. 2. c. 4. And it is much to be wished that registers were universally established throughout the kingdom.

In deeds, the consideration is a principal thing to give them effect: and the foundation of deeds ought always to be honest. That a deed was executed upon a corrupt agreement debors, the deed may be averred in pleading. See the case of Collins and Blantern, a new and very peculiar case. Wilf. Rep. per. 2. fo. 341, &c. The plea was settled both by Mr. Serjeant Howitt (now Lord Lyfford, Chancellor of Ireland) and Mr. Serjeant Glyn. Passe Latin, or false English, will not make a deed void: but raiture or interlineation in a material part, will render the same void; unless some memorandum be made thereof on the back of the deed, testifying its being done before sealing. 1 Rol. Rep. 40. If words are blotted out in a deed, by a grantee or lessee himself, although it be not in a place material, it will make the deed void. Dyer 261. This must mean after execution. It has been adjudged, where an estate cannot have its essence without a deed, there if the deed is rased in any material part, after the delivery, it makes the estate void: but if the estate may have essence without a deed, then notwithstanding it is created by deed, and that deed is rased, it shall not destroy the estate, but the deed. 1 Nels. Abr. 625. When a chose in action is created by deed, the destruction of such deed is the destruction of the duty itself; as in case of a bond, bill, &c. though it is not so, where an estate or interest is created by a deed. 3 Salk. 120.

If a deed be suppressed, on proof made that it came to the party's hands, and of its contents, the person injured, will have the same benefit to hold the estate, as if the deed could be produced. 2 Vern. Rep. 280. A person committed for burning a deed, see 2 Vern. 561. Abr. Cas. Eq. 169. An indorsement on a deed, at the time of the sealing and delivery, is a part of the same: but if an indorsement be after the delivery, it is a new deed. Mod. Cas. 237. Deeds, if fraudulently made; when got by corrupt agreement, as on usurious contract; and when made by force or duress, &c. are void: so they are for uncertainty, and by reason of infancy, coverture, or other disability in the makers, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 28. 1 Inst. 253. 11 Rep. 27. A deed may be good in part, and void in part; or good against one person, and void as to another: if all the parts of a deed made by law stand together, no one part shall make the whole void. And if a deed by any construction of law can be construed to have legal operation, the law will not make it utterly void, though it may not operate according to the purport of the deed: also the law will transpose and marshal clauses in deeds, to come at their true meaning; but not to confound them. Where the words of a deed may have a double intendment, one standing with law, and the other contrary to it; the intendment that standeth with law shall be taken. 1 Lill. Abr. 421. 1 Inst. 42, 217. 1 Slep. Abr. 540.

There are four grounds for the exposition of deeds. 1. That they may be beneficial to the taker. 2. That where the words may be employed to some intent, they shall never be void. 3. That the words be construed according to the intention of the parties, and not otherwise; and the intent of the parties shall take effect, if it may possibly stand with law. 4. That they are to be consonant to the rules of the law. And deeds shall have a reasonable exposition, without injury against the grantor, to the greatest advantage age of the grantee. They are to be expounded upon the whole, and if the second part contradicts the first, such second part shall be void; but if the latter part expounds or explains the former, which it may do, both of them shall stand. Plowd. 160. Raym. 142. 6 Rep. 36. 1 Inst. 313. 1 Rel. Rep. 375. The first deed of a person, and last will, stand in force. In deeds indented, all parties are estopped, or concluded, to say any thing against what is contained in the deed. 1 Inst. 45. And where a deed is by indenture between parties, none can have an action upon that deed, but he who is a party to it; but where 'tis a deed poll, one may covenant with another who is not a party to it, to do certain acts, for the non-performance whereof he may bring an action. 2 Lew. 74. Where a man justifies title under a deed, he is to produce the deed: if a deed is alledged in pleading, it must be shewed to the court, that the court may judge of the validity of it, and whether there are sufficient words to make a good contract; and when it is shewn to the court, the deed shall remain in court all the term, in the hands of the custos brevium; but at the end of the term, it shall be delivered to the party. If the deed is denied, it must remain in court till the plea is determined. 10 Rep. 88. Wood 235. A deed set forth with a proferat hic in curia, remains in court in judgment of law all that term; and any person may, during that term, have benefit by it, though he hath it not ready to shew: the adverse party may take any advantage by the deed that it will afford him. 5 Rep. 74. 1 Nelf. 625. But now the deed is not actually brought into court, but generally remains in the hands of the party's attorney, who gives oyer and copy of it to the attorney of the other party, if demanded. Deeds sealed and delivered cannot be pleaded, &c. if not stamped according to law. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 21. Every deed that is pleaded, shall be intended to be a deed poll; except it be alledged to be indented: and if it begins, This indenture made, &c. though it be not indented, it may be a good deed poll. 5 Rep. 20. The indenting is now considered as only matter of form, and many deeds are called indentures, beginning with the words, This indenture, though not actually indented. Besides, there are articles of various kinds which do not begin with these words, and yet are called deeds or articles of agreement, &c. and that is good in law. A deed poll commonly begins thus: To all people to whom these presents shall come, &c. Or, Know all Men by these presents, &c. See Accomplished Conveyancer, Vol. I. edit. 2.

Deeds, stealing of. At Common law, bonds, bills, and notes, which concern mere choses in action, were held not to be such goods whereof larceny might be committed: but by Sat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. they are put upon the same footing, with respect to larcenies, as the money they were meant to secure. Black. Com. 4 P. 234.

Deemsters, (from the Sax. dema, a judge or umpire) Are a kind of judges in the isle of Man, who without process, or any charge to the parties decide all controversies in that island; and they are chosen from among themselves. Camb. Brit.

Deer-fold, A park or deer-fold; Sax. deer, fera, and fald, stabulum. Cowel.

Deer-hayes, Are engines, or great nets made of cords to catch deer; and no person not having a park, &c. shall keep any of these nets, under the penalty of 40s. a month. Stat. 19 H. 7. cap. 11.

Deer-stealers, There are several laws, for the punishment of deer-stealers; as by 3 Jac. 1. c. 13. None shall kill or chase any deer, in any park or inclosed ground, on pain of suffering three months imprisonment, and to pay treble damages: and persons not having 40l. per ann. in lands, or worth 200l. in goods, &c. are not to use any gun, bow, dog, &c. to kill deer; and their guns, &c. may be taken from them. By the 13 Car. 2. cap. 10. It is ordained, That whoever shall course, kill, hunt, or take away any red, or fallow deer, from any parks, &c. shall be liable to a penalty of 20l. And the Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10. inflicts a penalty of 20l. for unlawful hunting and coursing of any deer; and 30l. for taking, wounding, or killing, to be levied by distress; which is to be divided into three parts; one whereof to go to the informer, another to the poor, and the other to the owner of the deer; and if no distress can be had, the offenders shall be imprison'd a year, and set on the pillory, &c.

Pulling down pales or walls of parks, &c. where deer are inclosed, by this act is punished with three months imprisonment: and the offences are determinable by justices of peace of the county where committed. Also by 5 Geo. 1. c. 15. & 28. Persons guilty of deer-stealing may be indicted before a judge of gaol delivery, and in that case be transported to the plantations for seven years: and persons otherwise convicted before they are discharged, are to enter into bond of 50l. Penalty, to the person injured for future good behaviour; keepers of parks, killing deer without consent of the owners, incur a forfeiture of 50l. and others pulling down walls and fences of parks, are liable to the penalties inflicted by 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10. for killing of deer.

Thus stood our laws till the great insolences of the Waltham Blacks made a further provision necessary, when by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. it was enacted, That if any persons armed with swords, fire-arms, or other weapons, and having their faces blacked, or being otherwise disguised, shall appear in any forest, park, &c. and unlawfully hunt or kill any deer; rob any warren, &c. or shall set fire to any house, or shoot at any person in a dwelling-house, or other place; or send any letter without a name subscribed, or with a fictitious name, demanding money of any person, &c. they shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy: and 50l. reward is given for the apprehension of the offenders. This statute is continued for five years, by 12 Geo. 1. cap. 30. and made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42.

Persons convicted a second time of hunting, or taking away deer in uninclosed forests, &c. or coming armed with an intent to hunt or take them, who shall beat or wound any keeper, &c. shall be transported for seven years. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. Before the charta de foresta, 9 H. 3. to hunt the King's deer, in any forest or park was felony; but that charter ordained, that none should lose either life or member for killing the King's deer. 2 Rel. Rep. 120. And the hunting in any forest, &c. with visors or painted faces in the day-time, or in the night, with or without such visors, if the party conceal the same, it is felony by Stat. 1 H. 7. c. 7. So that we may observe there is some agreement between our antient laws and modern statutes. A person was convicted on the statute of deer-stealing, and it appearing by the conviction, that the deer were not in a park inclosed, &c. upon motion in B. R. the conviction was quashed. Mieb. 9 W. 3. Mod. Just. 161. A conviction of deer-stealing may be removed by certiorari into B. R. but the party doing it is to give bond in the penalty of 60l. to the justice of peace before whom convicted, to prosecute such certiorari, and pay the forfeiture due by the conviction, or render his person in a month after the conviction confirmed, &c. 5 Geo. 1. c. 15. c. 28. See Game.

De essendo quietum de Celonio, Is a writ that lies for those who are by privilege free from the payment of toll; on their being molested therein. F. N. B. 226.

De expensis militum, A writ commanding the sheriff to levy the expences of a knight of the shire for attendance in parliament, being 4s. per diem by statute: and there is a like writ de expensis civium & burgenfium, to levy 2s. per diem, for the expences of every citizen and burges of parliament. Stat. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 11. 4 Inst. 46.

De facto, Signifies a thing actually done; that is done indeed. A King de facto is one that is in actual possession of a crown, and hath no lawful right to the same; in which sense it is opposed to a King de jure, who hath right to a crown, but is out of possession. 3 Inst. 7.

Defamation, (defamatio) Is when a person speaks scandalous words of another, or of a magistrate, &c. whereby they are injured in their reputation; for which the party offending shall be punished according to the nature and quality of his offence; sometimes by action on the case at Common law, sometimes by statute, and sometimes by the ecclesiastical laws. Defamation is also punishable by the spiritual courts; in which courts it ought to have three incidents, viz. First, It is to concern matters spiritual, and determinable in the ecclesiastical courts; as for for calling a man heretick, schismatick, adulterer, fornicator, &c. Secondly, That it be a matter spiritual only; for if the defamation concern any thing determinable at the Common law, the ecclesiastical judges shall not have cognisance thereof. And Thirdly, Although such defamation be merely spiritual, yet he that is defamed cannot sue for damages in the ecclesiastical courts; but the suit ought to be only for punishment of the fault, by way of penance. Terms de Ley. See Action on the Case for Words, also Prohibition.

Default, (Fr. default) Is commonly taken for non-appearance in court, at a day assigned; though it extends to any omission of that which we ought to do. Braet. lib. 5. tract. 3. Co. Lit. 259. If a plaintiff makes default in appearance in a trial at law, he will be nonsuited; and where a defendant makes default, judgment shall be had against him by default. In action of debt upon bond, if the defendant pleads a release, and issue is thereupon joined, if at the trial the defendant makes default, the plaintiff may pray judgment by default; because by the plea the duty is confessed, and therefore no inquest need be taken by default: but if the defendant plead Non est factum, by that plea the duty is denied, and therefore the plaintiff must prove the bond, whereupon he will be intitled to a verdict for the penalty, with costs of suit. In trespass, if the defendant plead a release, and then make default, the plaintiff cannot pray judgment by default; but an inquest is to be taken, because damages are uncertain. 1 Salk. 216.

Tenant in tail, tenant in dower; by the curtesy, or for life, losing their lands by default, in a præcipe quod reddat brought against them; they are to have remedy by the writ quod ei deforciat, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4. And in a quod ei deforciat, where the tenant joined issue upon the mere right, and the jury appearing, the defendant made default; it was adjudged, that in such case final judgment shall be given: but if the tenant had made default, it would be otherwise, for then a petit cape must issue against him, because it may so happen that he may save his default. 1 Nels. Abr. 627. By default of a defendant, he is said to be generally out of court to all purposes, but only that judgment may be given against him: and no judgment can be afterwards given for the defendant. Ibid. 628.

When two are to recover a personal thing, the default of one is the default of the other: contra, where they are to discharge themselves of a personalty; where the default of the one is not the default of the other. 6 Rep. 25. 1 Lill. Abr. 425. In an action against two, if the process be determined against one, and the other appears; he shall be put to answer, notwithstanding the default of his companion. 2 Danv. Abr. 480. Where the baron is to have a corporal punishment for a default, there the default of the wife shall not be the default of the husband: but otherwise it is where the husband is not to have any corporal punishment by the default. Ibid. 472, 473.

If a defendant imparl to another day in the same term, and make default at the day, this is a departure in despite of the court: and when the defendant after appearance, and being present in court, upon demand makes departure, it is in despite of the court, and the entry is, Et præd. tenens, licet solemniter exactus, non revent, sed in contemptum curiæ recessit, & defaultam fecit, &c. Co. Lit. 139. Before a verdict is taken by default, the cryer of the court calls the defendant three times; and if he doth not appear, the plaintiff's counsel prays, that the inquest may be taken by default: he is called three times, to shew if he hath any challenge to the jurors; and if he doth not appear upon the cryer's calling, then the capiatur per default is indorsed on the back of the panel. 1 Lill. 425.

Suffering judgment to go by default, is an admission of the contract declared on. Sira. 612. After the inquest is taken by default, the defendant can make no suggestion on the roll. Sir. 46. Default, and sayer of default, made a large title in the old books of law. See 52 H. 3. c. 9, 13, 18, & 24. 3 Ed. 1. c. 1. & 42. & 12 Ed. 1.

Default in criminal Cases, An offender indicted appears at the capias, and pleads to issue, and is let to bail to attend his trial, and then makes default; here the inquest in case of felony shall never be taken by default, but a capias ad audiendam juratam shall issue; and if the party is not taken, an exigent; and if he appear on that writ, and then make default, an exigi facias de novo may be granted: but where upon the capias or exigent the sheriff returns capi corpus, and at the day hath not his body, the sheriff shall be punished, but no new exigent awarded, because in custody of record. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202.

Default of Jurors. If jurors make default in their appearance for trying of causes, they shall lose and forfeit issues, unless they have any reasonable excuse proved by witnesses, in which case the justices may discharge the issue for default. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6.

Defeasance, (from the Fr. desfaire, to defeat) Signifies a condition relating to a deed, which being performed, the deed is defeated, and rendered void, as if it never had been made. The difference between a common condition and a defeasance is, that the condition is annexed to, or inserted in the deed; and a defeasance is a deed by itself, concluded and agreed on between the parties, and having relation to another deed. The defeasance may generally (as in the case of a bond, &c.) be indorsed on the back of the deed. To make a good defeasance it must be, 1. By deed, for there cannot be a defeasance of a deed without deed; and a writing under hand doth not imply it to be a deed. 2. It must recite the deed it relates to, or at least the most material part thereof, (unless it be on the back, as mentioned before.) 3. It is to be made between the same persons that were parties to the first deed. 4. It must be made at the time, or after the first deed, and not before. 5. It ought to be made of a thing defeasible. 1 Inst. 236. 3 Lev. 234. Inheritances executed by livery, such as estates in fee, or for life, cannot be subject to defeasance afterwards, but at the time of making the feoffment, &c. only: but executory inheritances, such as leases for years, rents, annuities, conditions, covenants, &c. may be defeated by defeasance made after the things granted. And it is the same of obligations, recognisances, statutes, judgments, &c. which are most commonly the subject of defeasance, and usually made after the deed whereto they have relation. Plowd. 137. 1 Rep. 113.

If a man acknowledge a statute to another, and enters into a defeasance, that if his lands in such a county should be extended, the statute should be void; the defeasance will be good, and not repugnant, because it is by another deed: but the condition of a bond not to sue the obligation, is void for repugnancy, being in the same deed. Moor 1035. Although the condition of an obligation, where it is repugnant to it, be void; it is otherwise in case of a defeasance, made after the bond, for this shall be good notwithstanding: as where the obligee afterwards grants by deed to the obligor, that he will not sue thereon at all; or not till such a time, or that it shall be discharged, &c. 20 H. 7. 24. Fitz. Bar. 71.

Where a proviso goes by way of defeasance of a covenant, it must be pleaded on the other side, otherwise, where by way of explanation, or restriction of the covenant; per Holt Ch. J. 2 Salk. 574. pl. 2. Hill. 10 Will. 3. B. R. Clayton v. Kinsman.

If A. be bound in a bond to B. in 20l. and he makes a defeasance to C. that if he pay him the like sum, the obligation made by A. shall be void; this is no good defeasance, because it is not made between the same parties: though if a statute be entered into, to husband and wife, and the husband alone make a defeasance, it may be good. 14 H. 8. 101. 2 Sbe. Abr. 488. It has been held, that if a disseisor release his right to the tenant of the land, and after there is a defeasance between them, that if the releasor shall pay so much, the release to be void; by this it will not be defeated: and yet such a release may be avoided by a condition or defeasance made at the time of making it. Bro. Defas. 6. Plowd. 137. 1 Inst. 236. A statute, &c. may be defeasant condition of performing a will, and paying legacies to other persons. 1 Cro. 837. If a defeasance of a statute be made, and after another defeasance is made by the same parties, the first defeasance becomes void thereby; and the second only is in force, as in a will. 2 Danv. Abr. 481.

Where a statute is acknowledged to two persons, and one of them makes a defeasance, it is said to be a good discharge. Ibid. 480. If execution be sued out before the time in a defeasance is past, it shall be set aside. 1 Lill. 426. In a defeasance of a deed of lands, the person to whom made covenants that on payment of a certain sum, on such a day, he will transfer and reconvey the estate back again: and that the maker shall enjoy till default, &c. If the defeasance be of a judgment, he covenants that on payment of the money, he will enter satisfaction on the record: if of a statute or bond, that on payment it shall be void, &c. Law of Securities 144, 146, 148, &c. Vide Mortgage.

Defence, In a legal signification, is applicable to a plea, and is that which the defendant ought to make immediately, after the count or declaration, viz. That he defends all the wrong, force, and damages, where and when he ought, &c. And by defending the force and wrong, he excuses himself of the wrong furnished against him, and makes himself party to the plea; and by defending the damage, he affirms the plaintiff able to be answered unto: so that if he will shew any disability in the plaintiff, then he ought to omit the defence of the damage, and demand judgment if the party shall be answered unto: for the residue of the defence, the defendant admits the power of the court to hear and determine their pleas. Terms de Ley.

A defence is sometimes a full defence, and that is where the plea begins with these words, Venit & defendit vim & injuriam quando, &c. and this is usual in personal actions: but there is another defence in real actions, where the plea begins Venit & dicit, &c.

After the defendant has made a full defence in trespass, by adding the words quando, &c. to the venit & defendit vim & injuriam, he cannot plead in disability, that the plaintiff is an alien born, &c. but he ought to omit the quando, because by that word the defendant hath admitted that the plaintiff hath capacity to sue. Carth. 230. Pasch. 4 W. & M. in B. R. Jentree v. Jenkins. See 7 Vin. Abr. tit. Defence.

In every præcipe, where land is demanded, the defence must be venit & defendit jus suum, &c. As in a writ of intrusion, writ of formedon, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 629. A defendant cannot plead any plea, before he hath made a defence; though this must not be intended absolutely, for in a scire facias, a defence is never made. 3 Lev. 182. See the subject of defence in pleading well treated of, Black. Com. 3 V. 296, 7.

Defend, (defendere) In our ancient laws and statutes signifies to forbid: and there is a statute intitled, Statutum de defensione portandi arma, &c. 7 Ed. 1. In divers parts of England we commonly say, God defend, instead of God forbid. Blount.

Defendant, (defendens) Is the party that is sued in a personal action; as tenant is he that is sued in action real.

Defendemus, Is an ordinary word used in grants and donations; and hath this force, that it binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if any one go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given, other than what is contained in the deed of donation. Braet. lib. 2. c. 16. See Warranty.

Defender of the Faith, (fidei defensor) Is a peculiar title belonging to the King of England, as Catholicus, to the King of Spain; and Christianissimus, to the King of France, &c. These titles were given by the Popes of Rome; and that of Defensor Fidei was first conferred by Pope Leo the Tenth, on King Henry the Eighth, for writing against Martin Luther, and the bull for it bears date quinto Idus Octob. 1521. Lord Herbert's Hist. Hen. 8. 105. But the Pope, on King Henry's suppressing the houses of religion, at the time of the reformation, foolishly sentenced him to be deprived of his title, and deposed from his crown; though in the 35th year of his reign his title, &c. was confirmed by parliament; which hath continued to be used by all succeeding Kings to this day. Lex Constitutionis, 47, 48.

Defendere se per Corpus suum, To offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Braet. lib. 3. cap. 26.

Defendere unca manu, Words signifying to wage law, and a denial of the accusation upon oath. See Manus.

Defensa, A park or place fenced in for deer, and defended as a property for that use and service.—Idem dux facit instaurare prædictam parcam de feris defensæ Leicestrensis. H. Knighton, sub ann. 1352.

Defensiva, The Lords or Earls of the Marches, who were the wardens or defenders of their country, had the title of Defensiva. Cowel.

Defenso, That part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn and hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding, was antiently said to be in defenso: so of any meadow ground, that was laid in for hay only. It was likewise the same of a wood, where part was inclosed and fenced up, to secure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle. Mon. Angl. Tom. 3. p. 306.

Defensum, An inclosure of land, or any fenced ground. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 114.

Deficiencies, Act for making good the deficiencies, and preserving the publick credit, &c. Stat. 1 Ann. c. 13.

Deforcement, (deforciamētum) Is where any one is cast out of his lands or possessions by force: or it is a withholding lands or tenements by force from the right owner. Co. Lit. 331. A deforcor is one that overcomes and casts forth by force and violence, and differs from disseisor; first, because a man may disseise another with force; and next, for that a person may deforce another, who never was in possession; as if several have right to lands; as common heirs, and one entering keeps out the rest, the law saith he deforceth, not disseiseth them. And (according to Littleton) he who is enfeoffed by tenant in tail, and put in possession, by keeping out the heir of him in reversion who hath right to the land, the tenant in tail being dead doth deforce the heir, though not disseise him, because he entered during the life of the tenant in tail, when the heir had no present right. Also a deforcor differs from an intruder, by reason a man is made an intruder by a wrongful entry only into land void of a possessor: and a deforcor is he that holds out against the right heir. Braet. lib. 4. c. 1. Britt. c. 33. Litt. 138. F. N. B. 118. As force and violence are opposite to the peace and justice of the kingdom; and it is a disgrace to the law, that any person should presume to enter forcibly into the possession of another, before the law hath decided his title therein; therefore divers statutes have been made for reformation of these abuses, as among others the Stat. 5 R. 2. cap. 7. See Forcible Entry.

Deforcor, deforciator, (from the French forceur, expugnator) Signifies one that overcometh, and casteth out by force. Britton, cap. 53. Old Nat. Brew. fol. 118. Littleton, in his chapter of Discontinuance, fol. 117. Braet. lib. 4. cap. 1. See more of this in Pulton de Pace Regis, fol. 34, 35. And see Deforcement.

Deforciant, Mentioned in the Stat. 23 El. c. 3. is the same with a deforcor. See Black. Com. 2 V. 350. 3 Vs 174.

Deforciatio, Is used for a distress, or holding of goods for satisfaction of a debt. Paroch. Antiq. 293.

Degradation, (degradatio) Is an ecclesiastical censure, whereby a clergyman is divested of his holy orders, and there are two sorts of degrading, by the Canon law; one summary, by word only; the other solemn, by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his order or degree. Selden's Titles of Hon. 787. Degradation is otherwise called deposition; and in former times the degrading of a clerk was no more than a displacing or suspension from his office: but the Canonists have since distinguished between a deposition and a degradation; the one being now used as a greater punishment than the other, because the bishop takes from the criminal all the badges of his order, and afterwards delivers him to the secular judge, where he cannot purge himself of the offence whereof he is convicted, &c.

There is likewise a degradation of a Lord, or a Knight, &c. at Common law; when they are attainted of treason; as Hill. 18 Ed. 2. Andrew Harcla, Earl of Carlisle, who was also a Knight, was degraded, and when judgment of treason was pronounced against him, his sword was broken over his head, and his spurs hewn off his heels, &c. And there is a degrading by act of parliament; for by Stat. 13 Car. 2. cap. 16. William Lord Monson, Sir Henry Mildmay, and others, were degraded from all titles of honour, dignities, and preheminences, and none of them to bear or use the title of Lord, Knight, Esquire, or Gentleman, or any coat of arms for ever after. See as to Peer, Black. Com. 1 V. 403.

Dehors, (Fr.) A word used in ancient pleading, when a thing is without the land, &c. or out of the point in question. Vide Hors de son fee.

De injuria sua propria, absque tali causa, Are words used in replications, in actions of trespass, or on the case. 1 Litt. Abr. 427. De injuria sua propria is a good plea, where it comes in excuse of an injury alledged to be done to the person of the plaintiff; or where a defendant justifies in defence of his possession, if the title doth not come in question. 8 Rep. 86. When one justifies by command or authority derived from another; or if a defendant justifies by authority at Common law, as a constable by arrest for breach of the peace; or if he justifies by act of parliament, &c. De injuria sua propria is a good replication. Cro. Eliz. 539. 2 Salk. 628. See De son Tort Demesne.

Dei Juvicium. The old Saxon trial by ordeal was so called; because they thought it an appeal to God, for the justice of a cause, and verily believed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence. Domesd.

Deis, The high table of a monastery. See Dagus.

Delatūra, A Saxon word, signifying an accusation: and sometimes it hath been taken for the reward of an informer. Leges H. 1. c. 46. Leges Inæ 20, apud Brompton.

Delegates, Are commissioners of appeal appointed by the King under the Great Seal; in cases of appeals from the ecclesiastical court, &c. by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. See Court of Delegates.

Delf, (from the Sax. delfan, to dig, of delve) Is a quarry or mine, where stone or coal, &c. are dug. Stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 7. We still retain the word delves for dig, in some parts of this kingdom.

Deliverance. When a criminal is brought to trial, and the clerk in court asks him whether he is Guilty, or Not guilty, to which he replies Not guilty, and puts himself on God and his country, the clerk wishes him a good deliverance.

Delivery of Deeds, On executing them, to give them perfection, &c. See Deed.

Demand. (Fr. demande, Lat. postulatum) Signifies a calling upon a man for any thing due. And there are two manner of demands, the one in deed, the other in law: in deed, as in a præcipe quod reddat, there is an express demand: in law, every entry on land, distress for rent, taking of goods, &c. which may be done without words, is a demand in law. 8 Rep. 153. Mr. Nelson, in his Abridgment of the Law, vol. 1. pag. 630. says, there are three sorts of demands; one in writing, without speaking, and that is in every præcipe; one without writing, being a verbal demand of the person, who is to do or perform the thing; and another made without either word or writing, which is a demand in law, in cases of entries on lands, &c. And an entry on land, and taking a distress, are a demand in law of the land and rent; so the bringing an action of debt for money due on an obligation is a demand in law of the debt. 1 Litt. 432. Debts, claims, &c. are to be demanded and made in time, by the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. and other statutes; or they will be lost by law.

Where there is a duty, which the law makes payable on demand, no demand need be made; but if there is no duty till demand, in such case there must be a demand, to make the duty. Fris. 3 Ann. 1 Litt. 432. Debt on bond, to be paid presently upon demand, is a duty presently, and requires no demand. Cro. Eliz. 548. And upon a penalty the party need not make a demand, as he must in the case of a nomine pænæ; for if a man be bound to pay 20*l.* on such a day, and in default thereof to pay 40*l.* the 40*l.* must be paid without demand. 1 Mod. 89. If a man leases land by indenture for years, reserving a rent payable at certain days, and the lessee covenants to pay the said rent at the days limited; the lessor is intitled to his rent, without demand, for the lessee is obliged to pay it at the days, by force of his covenant. 2 Danv. Abr. 101. But if a lessor makes a lease rendering rent, and the lessee covenants to pay the rent, being lawfully demanded, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent, without a demand. Ibid. 102.

A person makes a lease for life, or years, reserving a rent upon condition, that if the lessee doth not pay the rent at the day, that then without any demand it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter; by this special agreement of the parties, the lessor may enter on non-payment of the rent, without any demand. Ibid. 100. A lease for years, with condition to be void, on non-payment of the rent, is not void unless the rent be demanded, and an entry made: and an interest shall not be determined, without an actual demand. Hob. 67, 331. 2 Mod. 264. But now by the statutes relative to rents, an ejectment may be maintained without an actual entry. See 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. sect. 2. & 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. sec. 16.

A demand is to be legal, and made in such manner as the law requires: if it be for rent of a messuage and lands, it ought to be made at the messuage, at the fore door of the house, the most notorious place: where lands and woods are let together, the rent is to be demanded on the land, as the most worthy thing, and on the most publick part thereof: if wood only be leased, the demand must be made at the gate of the wood, &c. 1 Inst. 201. Poph. 58. Vide Dyer 51. 1 Leon. 425. Cro. Eliz. 209. He that would enter for a condition broken, which tends to the destruction of an estate, must 1. Demand the rent. 2. Upon the land, if there is no house. 3. If there is a house, at the fore door; though it is not material whether any person be in the house or no. 4. If the appointment is at any other place off from the land, the demand must be at that place. 5. The time of the demand is to be certain, that the tenant may be there, if he will, to pay the rent: and the last time of demand of the rent, must be such a convenient time before the sun-setting of the last day of payment, as the money may be numbered. Also the lessor or his sufficient attorney is to remain upon the land, the last day on which the rent due ought to be paid, until it be so dark that he cannot see to tell the money: and if the money thus demanded is not paid, this is a denial in law, though there are no words of denial; upon which a re-entry may be made, &c. 1 Inst. 201, 202. 4 Rep. 73. A demand ought to be in the presence of witnesses: and demands are released by a release of all demands; which discharges all freeholds, rights of entry, actions, &c. But see 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. sect. 2. before referred to. N. B. Leases are now generally so made, as to render any demand unnecessary, i. e. with a proviso that if the rent shall be in arrear for such a certain space of time, it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter, &c.

As a release of suits is more large than of quarrels or actions; so a release of demands is more large and beneficial than either of them. By a release of all demands all executions, and all freeholds, and inheritances, executory, are released: by a release of demands to the disseisor, the right of entry in the land, and all that is contained therein, is released. And he that releaseth all demands, excludes himself from all actions, entries, and seizures; but a release of all demands, is no bar in a writ of error to reverse an outlawry. Coke, lib. 8. fol. 153, 154.

Demandant, (petens) All civil actions are prosecuted either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant, in actions real; and plaintiff, in personal actions: in a real action, lands, &c. are demanded. Co. Litt. 127.

Demeine, Demajn, or Demesne, (dominium, domanium) Is a French word otherwise written domaine, and signifieth patrimonium domini. Demajns, according to common speech, are the lord's chief manor-place, with the lands thereto belonging; which he and his ancestors have from time to time kept in their own manual occupation, for the maintenance of themselves and their families: and all the parts of a manor, except what is in the hands of freeholders, are said to be demajns. Copyhold lands have been accounted demajns, because they that are the tenants hereof are judged in law to have no other estate but at the will of the lord; so that it is still reputed to be in a manner in the lord's hands: but this word is oftentimes used for a distinction distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor hath in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee demised at a rack rent, and such other land appertaining to the manor, which belongeth to free or copy-holders. Bracl. lib. 4. tracl. 3. c. 9. Fleta, lib. 5. cap. 5. As demains are lands in the lord's hands manually occupied, some have thought this word derived from de manu; but it is from the Fr. demaine, which is used for an inheritance, and that comes from dominium, because a man has a more absolute dominion over that which he keeps in his hands, than of that which he lets to his tenants. Blount.

Domanium properly signifies the King's lands in France, appertaining to him in property: and in like manner do we in some sort use it here in England; for all lands, it is said, are either mediately or immediately from the crown; and when a man in pleading would signify his land to be his own, he saith, that he is seised thereof in his demain, (or rather demesne) as of fee; whereby is meant, that although his land be to him and his heirs, it depends upon a superior lord, and is held by rent or service, &c. Litt. lib. 1. cap. 1. From this it hath been observed, that lands in the hands of a common person cannot be true demains: and certain it is, that lands in the possession of a subject, are called demains in a different sense from the demain lands of the crown. For demains, or domains, in the hands of a subject, have their derivation a domo because they are lands in his possession for the maintaining of his house: but the domains of the crown are held of the King, who is absolute lord, having proper dominion; and not by any feudal tenure of a superior lord as of fee. Wood's Inst. 139.

Demain is sometimes taken in a special signification, a opposite to frank-fee: for example, 'Those lands which were in the possession of King Edward the Confessor are called ancient demains, and all others frank fee; and the tenants which hold any of those lands are called tenant in ancient demain, and the others tenants in frank fee, &c. Kitch. 98. See Ancient Demesne. See further Black. Com. 2 V. 90, 286.

Demise, (dimissio) Is applied to an estate either in fee for term of life, or years, but commonly the latter: it is used in writs for any estate. 2 Inst. 483. The word demise, in a lease for years, implies a warranty to the lessee and his assignee; and upon this word action on the covenant lies against the heir of the lessor, if he oust the lessee: it binds the executors of the lessor, who has fee simple, or fee-tail; where any lessee is evicted, and the executor hath assets; but not the lessor for life's executors without express words, that the lessee shall hold his whole term. Dyer 257. Jenk. Cent. 35. The King's death is in law termed the demise of the King, to his royal successor, of his crown and dignity, &c.

Demise and Redemise, The conveyance by demise and redemise is where there are mutual leases made from one to another on each side, of the same land, or something out of it; and is proper upon the grant of a rent charge, &c.

Demurrer, (in Latin demorare, from the Fr. demeurer) Is a kind of pause or stop, put to any action upon point of difficulty, which must be determined by the court, before any farther proceedings can be had therein: for in every action the controversy consists either in fact or in law; in fact, that is tried by the jury; but if in law, the judge with his associates, proceeds to judgment; and whatever they conclude stands firm without any appeal. Smith d. Repub. Angl. lib. 2. c. 13. But error lies. This demurrer is in our records expressed in Latin by moratur in lege: and when any action is brought, and the defendant saith that the plaintiff's declaration is not sufficient for him to answer unto: or when the defendant pleads, and the plaintiff says, that it is not a sufficient plea in law, and the defendant says, that it is a good plea; and thereupon both parties submit to the judgment of the court, this is a moratur in lege. 1 Lil' Abr. 435. So that a demurrer is an issue joined upon matter of law, to be determined by the judges; and is a abiding in point of law, and a referring to the judgment of the court, whether the declaration or plea of the adverse party is sufficient in law to be maintained. Finch, lib. 4. cap. 40. 1 Inst. 71.

A demurrer may be to the writ, count, or declaration, or to any part of the pleadings: also a demurrer may be to a demurrer, as where the demurrer is double, and he that demurs assigns one error in fact, and another in law, which is ill, and may be demurred unto on the other side. 1 Lil' 438. But it is now a dubious point whether a demurrer may be demurred unto. In the case mentioned is example, qu. if 'tis demurrable, as the demurrer is good for the cause assigned in law, though it may be bad for the fact?

A demurrer is admitting the matter of fact, since it refers the law arising on the fact, to the judgment of the court; and therefore the fact is taken to be true on such demurrer, or otherwise the court has no foundation on which to make any judgment. Gillb. Hist. of C. P. 55. But a special demurrer admits only facts well pleaded.

As a demurrer at Common law did confess all matters formally pleaded; so now by the statute a general demurrer does confess all matters pleaded though informally, according to the forms meant by the statute 27 Eliz. 5. for such forms are now not material, not being expressed in demurrer. Hob. 233. at the end of pl. 295. Mich. 12 Jac. in the case of Hoard v. Bukeroville.

Demurrers to pleas, &c. are general, without shewing any particular causes; or special, where the causes of demurrer are particularly set down: and the judgment of the court is not to be prayed upon an insufficient declaration or plea, otherwise than by demurrer; when the matter comes judicially before the court. If in pleadings, &c. a matter is insufficiently alledged, that the court cannot give certain judgment upon it, a general demurrer will suffice; and for want of substance, a general demurrer is good: but for want of form, there must be a special demurrer, and the causes specially assigned. Pract. Antenn. edit. 1. p. 84. And as he that demurs generally, confesseth all matters of fact that are well and sufficiently pleaded; so he that makes a special demurrer, can take no advantage of any other matter of form, but what is expressed in his demurrer; though he may take advantage of matter of substance, if the demurrer be special, and the causes not set down. 10 Rep. 88. The practice is now, on a special demurrer, to take advantage of any real error, though not expressed, in the causes assigned. Demurrers likewise are either in actions at law, or in suits in equity.

It is allowed a good cause of demurrer in Chancery, that a bill is brought for part of a matter only, which is proper for one intire account, because the plaintiff shall not split causes, and make a multiplicity of suits. Vern. 29. pl. 24. Hill. 1681. in case of Purefoy v. Purefoy.

If an original bill be brought for matters, part of which are in a former bill and decree, and part new, or by way of supplemental bill; the court will on a demurrer, to so much as was contained in the former decree, send it to a master to see what was, and what was not in the first bill, and allow the demurrer accordingly. G. Eq. R. 184. Hill. 12 Geo. 1. in Canc'.

By statute, judges are to proceed to give judgment in actions, according to the right of the cause, after demurrer joined, without regard to defects of proceedings, except such as are expressed with the demurrer; but this not to extend to indictments, &c. in criminal prosecutions, &c. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 5. See note preceding as to the modern practice and usage. By 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. The causes of demurrer are to be specially set down, or the judges shall give judgment without regarding any imperfections in writs, declarations, pleadings, &c. if sufficient matter appear, upon which to give judgment. A defendant is to demur where he may do it; for if the defendant pleads in any case, where he can demur, he shall not afterwards take advantage in arrest of judgment, writ of error, &c. Plowd. 182. Unless in cases not aided by the statutes of amendments and rescuits; as to which see Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Amendment. There cannot be a demurrer in abatement; and where a defendant demurs only in abatement, the court may give final judgment: but it may be to a plea in abatement. 1 Salk. 220. 1 Nelf. Abr. 634.

After the plaintiff and defendant have joined issue, which goes to the whole, neither of them can demur, without consent of the other: but defendant may demur to one part of a declaration, and plead to the other part thereof, with a quoad, &c. And where there is an issue to part of the defendant's plea, and a demurrer to other part of it, the plaintiff, before or after judgment given on the demurrer, may try the issue; though it is usual to give judgment on the demurrer first. 1 Lill. Abr. 437. 1 Inst. 71. 1 Saund. 80. See infra. But there may be a demurrer to evidence. Though now 'tis usual to take exceptions to evidence at the bar at Nisi prius, ore tenus, which is tantamount to a demurrer. If doubts arise, cases are made, or points reserved, and a verdict taken, subject to the opinion of the court. See tit. Demurrer to Evidence. If a defendant pleads to part, and demurs to part; the demurrer shall first be determined, and the issue last; because upon the trial of the issue, the jury may assess damages as to both. Palm. 517. Where there is a demurrer in part, and issue is joined upon the other part, and the plaintiff hath judgment on the demurrer; here he may enter a Non. Prof. as to the issue, and proceed to a writ of inquiry upon the demurrer: But otherwise he cannot have such writ of inquiry. 1 Salk. 219.

A demurrer is to be signed, and argued on both sides by counsel; and if a party be delayed in his proceedings by demurrer, he may move the court to appoint a short day after, to hear counsel on the demurrer, and the court will grant it. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. After a demurrer is joined, the plaintiff having entered it in the roll, delivers the roll to the secondary, and makes a motion for a Consilium or day to argue it, which the court grants of course, on the secondary's reading the record; then the demurrer must be entered by the plaintiff in the court-book with the secondary, who on his rule sets down the day appointed for argument, at least four days before the demurrer is argued: And paper-books are made and delivered to the judges.

The demurrant argues first, and the court will hear but two counsel on a day, viz. one of a side, and seldom give judgment the same day; and if desired on either side, (unless the case be very plain), the court will hear further arguments the next term. The whole record is not to be read, on opening the demurrer; except the same be to the declaration only: But where it appears to be for delay, the whole record will be heard by the court, though there be a plea, &c. And if it be found merely for delay, judgment shall be given presently. If the major part of the judges of the court cannot determine the matter on the demurrer, it is to be sent into the Exchequer Chamber to be determined by all the judges of England. 1 Inst. 71. Practif. Attorn. Edit. 1. p. 154.

When the court gives judgment on demurrer in debt for the plaintiff in the action, the judgment is for the plaintiff to recover his debt, costs and damages; but if it be in action of the case, a writ of inquiry of damages must be awarded, before the plaintiff can have final judgment. If judgment on the demurrer is for the defendant in the action, the judgment is, that the plaintiff Nihil capiat per breve, or per billam, and that the defendant eat sine die. Wood's Inst. 603. General demurrer being entered, it cannot be afterwards waved, without leave of the court, but a special demurrer generally may, unless the plaintiff hath lost a term, or the affizes by the defendant's demurring. In C. P. if defendant demurs to the plaintiff's replication, merely for delay, the plaintiff may sign judgment by default. But that practice does not yet prevail in B. R. The general formal words of a demurrer are, Quod breve vel nar. vel placitum, &c. Materiaque in eodem content. minus sufficiens in lege quæst., &c. 1 Lill. 435.

Demurrer to Evidence, Is where a question of law doth arise thereupon: As if the plaintiff produces in evidence, any records, deeds, writings, &c. upon which a question of law arises, and the defendant offers to demur upon it; and then the plaintiff must join in demurring, or waive his evidence. So if the plaintiff brings witnesses to prove a fact, and a matter of law ariseth upon it; if the defendant admits their testimony to be true, there also the defendant may demur in law: And so may the plaintiff demur upon the defendant's evidence. And in these cases, the counsel for the plaintiff and defendant agree the matter of fact in dispute; and the jury are discharged; and the matter of law is referred to the judges to determine. But where evidence is given for the King, in an information or other suit, and the defendant offers to demur upon it, the King's counsel are not obliged to join therein; but the court ought to direct the jury to find the special matter. And indeed because juries of late usually find a doubtful matter specially, demurrers upon evidence are now seldom used. 5 Rep. 104. 1 Inst. 72. 2 Inst. 426. If the court doth not agree to a demurrer, to the insufficiency of evidence in a civil cause; they ought to seal a bill of exceptions, &c. 9 Rep. 13. See preceding note on this subject.

Demurrer to Indictments, If a criminal joins issue upon a point of law in an indictment or appeal, allowing the fact to be true, as laid therein, this is a demurrer in law: And if the indictment or appeal proves good in law, in the opinion of the judges, they proceed to judgment and execution, as if the party had been convicted by confession or verdict. And though by the criminal's demurrer, he refuseth to put himself upon trial by jury, yet he shall not, as in other cases, be put under the pain first & dure; for a demurrer is allowed to be tried by the judges, and not by the inquest. And he that is condemned on demurrer, is said to be convicted; for whoever is adjudged, is convicted by law. 2 Inst. 178. H. P. C. 243. S. P. C. 150. 1 Hawk. P. C. 14. But see 2 Hawkins 334.

Demy Sanguine, Is the half blood: Where a man marries a woman, and hath issue by her a son, and the wife dying he marries another woman, by whom he hath also a son; now these two sons, though they are called brothers, are but brothers of the half blood, because they had not both one father and mother: And therefore by law they cannot be heirs to one another; for he that claims as heir to another by descent, must be of the whole blood to him from whom he claimeth. Terms de Ley.

The half blood are intitled under the statutes of distribution to any equal share of the personal estate with the whole blood.

Den. The name of places ending in den, as Biddenden, &c. signify the situation to be in a valley, or near woods; from the Sax. Den, i. e. Vallis, Locus, Sylvestris. Blount.

Den and Strond, Is a liberty for ships or vessels to run or come ashore; and K. Ed. 1. by charter granted this privilege to the Barons of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1.

Dena tetræ, A hollow place between two hills; and the word dena is used for a little portion of woody ground, commonly called a coppice.—Et una parva dena sylvæ. Domesd.

Denarii, A general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

Denarii de Caritate, Customary oblations made to Cathederal Churches about the time of Pentecost, when the parish priests and many of their people went in procession to visit their mother church: This custom was afterwards changed into a settled due, and usually charged upon the parish priest; though at first it was but a gift of charity, or present, to help to maintain and adorn the bishop's see. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston MS. f. 15.

Denarius, An English penny: it is mentioned in the Stat. Ed. 1. De compositione mensurarum, &c.

Denarius Dei, God's penny, or earnest money given and received by the parties to contracts, &c. Cart. Ed. 1. The earnest money is called Denarius Dei; or God's Penny, because in former times, the piece of money so given to bind the contract, was given to God, i. e. To the church, or the poor.

Denarius S. Petri, An annual payment of one penny from every family to the Pope; during the time that the Roman Catholic religion prevailed in this kingdom, paid on the feast of S. Peter. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 25. See Peter-Pence.

Denarius tectius Comitatus. Of the finæ and other profits of the county-courts, originally when those courts had superior jurisdiction before other courts were erected, two parts were reserved to the King, and a third part or penny to the Baron of the county; who either received it in specie at the assize and trials, or had an equivalent composition for it out of the Exchequer. Paroch. Antiq. 418.

Denbera,

Denbera, (From the Sax. Den, a vale, and berg, a barrow or hog.) A place for the running and feeding of hogs, wherein they are penn'd; by some called a Swine-comb. Cowel.

Denizen, (Fr. Donation) Is an alien enfranchised, and made a subject by the King's letters patent; and is called denizen, because his legitimation proceeds ex donatione Regis, from the King's gift. Such a one is enabled in many respects, to do as the King's native subjects do, to purchase and possess lands, enjoy any office or dignity; and when he is thus enfranchised, he is said to be under the King's protection, or esse ad fidem Regis Angliæ; before which time he can possess nothing in England. But notwithstanding this, it is short of naturalization; for a stranger naturalized may inherit lands by descent, which a denizen cannot: and in the charter, whereby a person is made a denizen, there is commonly contained some clause that expressly abridges him of that full benefit which natural subjects enjoy. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 5. cap. 25. 2 Inst. 741. When the King makes a denizen by letters patent, he may purchase lands, and his issue born afterwards may inherit them; but those he had before shall not; and though a denizen is enabled to purchase, he cannot inherit the lands of his ancestors; but as a purchaser he may enjoy them; and he may take lands by devise. 1 Inst. 8. 11 Rep. 67. 5 Rep. 52. Aliens made denizens are incapable of offices in the government, to be members of parliament, &c. by Stat. 12 W. 3. cap. 2. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4. It is so high a prerogative to make aliens subjects and denizens, that the King cannot grant this power over to any other. 7 Rep. Wood's Inst. 22. See Co. Litt. 8. a. 129. a. the subject fully treated, and Black. Com. 1 V. 374. 2 V. 249.

Denfiring o' Land, Is the casting parings of earth, turf, and stubble into heaps, which when dried are burnt into ashes, for a compost on poor barren land. This method of improvement is used on taking in and inclosing common and waste ground; and in many parts of England is called burn-beating, but in Staffordshire and other counties, they term it denfiring of land.

De non Detinendo, To be discharged of tithes. See Moccus Detinendi.

De non Residentis Clerici Regis, Is an ancient writ where a parson is employed in the King's service, &c. to excuse and discharge him of non-residence. 2 Inst. 624.

Dentrix, A fish with many teeth. Chart. Hen. 6. Monast. Ramsey.

Deoband, (Deo dandum) Is a thing given as it were to God, to appease his wrath, where a person comes to a violent death by mischance, not by any reasonable creature; and is forfeited to the King, or grantee of the crown; and if to the King, his almoner disposes of it by sale, and the money arising thereby he distributes to the poor: Altho' if forfeited to the lord of a liberty, it ought to be thus distributed. 3 Inst. 57. 5 Rep. 110. 1 Nels. 635. The original of deobands is said to come from the notion of purgatory; for when a person came to a sudden and untimely death, without having time to be shrived by a priest; and to have the extrem unction administered to him, the thing which had been the occasion of his death, became deoband; that is, was given to the church, to be distributed in charity, and to pray for the soul of such deceased person out of purgatory. 1 Lill. 443.

There are several examples of forfeitures in cases of deobands; as if a man in driving a cart, falls so as the cart-wheel runs over him, and presseth him to death; the cart-wheel, cart, and horses are forfeited to the lord of the liberty: for omnia quæ movent ad mortem sunt deobanda. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5. But it hath been observed, that at this day, if a man be killed by the wheel of a cart drawn with horses, the jury find that, only, deoband which was the immediate cause of his death, viz. the wheel; which is then seized by the lord of the manor, and converted to his own use. 1 Nels. 639. For in the present enlightened age, juries are not much pleased with this obsolete law. If a man riding over a river, is thrown off his horse by the violence of the water, and drown'd, his horse is not deoband; for the death was caused per cursum aquæ. 2 Co. 483. Where one under fourteen years of age, falls from a cart, horse, &c. they are not deoband; but if a horse strikes and kills such a person, it is deoband. 3 Inst. 57. And if a person wounded by any accident, as of a cart, horse, &c. die within a year and a day after, what did it, is deoband: So that if a horse strikes a man, and afterwards the owner sells the horse, and then the party that was stricken dies of the stroke, the horse, notwithstanding the sale, shall be forfeited as deoband. Plowd. 260. 5 Rep. 110.

If one falls out of a vessel in salt water, the vessel is not deoband, as accidents at sea are frequently happening; but if one fall out of a vessel in fresh water, it is said to be otherwise. Wood's Inst. 212. Things fixed to the freehold; as a bell hanging in a steeple, a wheel of a mill, &c. unless severed from the freehold, cannot be deobands. 2 Inst. 281. And there is no forfeiture of a deoband, till the matter is found of record, by the jury that finds the death; who ought also to find and appraise the deoband. 5 Rep. 110. 1 Inst. 144. After the coroner's inquisition, the sheriff is answerable for the value, where the deoband belongs to the King; and he may levy the same on the town, &c. Wherefore the inquest ought to find the value of it. 1 Harok. 67.

Grants of deobands how to be enrolled, 3 & 4 Will. & Ma. c. 22. sect. 1: Deobands were likewise the goods and chattels of felo de se, &c. 1 Lill. 443. See Black. Com. 1 V. 300.

De onerando pro rata Portionis, Is a writ that lies where a person is distrained for rent, that ought to be paid by others proportionably with him. F. N. B. 234. If a man hold twenty acres of land, by scalty and twenty shillings rent; and he aliens one acre to one person, and another acre to another, &c. the lord shall not distrain one alienee for the whole rent, but for the rate and value of the land he hath purchased, &c. And if he be distrained for more, he shall have this writ. New Nat. Br. 586.

Departure, Is a word in our law properly applied to a defendant, who first pleading one thing in bar of an action, and being replied unto, in his rejoinder, he quits that and shews another matter, contrary to, or not pursuing his first plea, which is called a departure from his plea: Also where a plaintiff in his declaration sets forth one thing, and after the defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication shews new matter different from his declaration, this is a departure; as in Coke's Institutes, The defendant demurred, because it was a departure from the declaration. Plowd. 7, 8. 2 Inst. 147. But if a plaintiff in his replication depart from his count, and the defendant takes issue upon it; if it be found for the plaintiff, the defendant shall take no advantage of that departure: Though it would have been otherwise, if he had demurred upon it. Raym. 86. 1 Lill. Abr. 444.

If a man plead a general agreement in bar, and in his rejoinder alledge a special one, this is a departure in pleading: And if an action is brought at Common law, and the plaintiff by his replication would maintain it by virtue of a custom, &c. it hath been held a departure. 1 Nels. Abr. 638. Where a matter is omitted at first, it is a departure to plead it afterwards. Ibid. If in covenant, the defendant pleads performance; and after rejoins that the plaintiff ousted him, it is a departure from his plea. Raym. 22. In debt upon bond for performance of covenants in a lease, the defendant pleaded performance; and afterwards in his rejoinder set forth that so much was paid in money, and so much in gages, &c. upon demurrer it was adjudged a departure from the plea; because he had pleaded performance, and afterwards set forth other matter of excuse, &c. 1 Salk. 221.

Debt upon bond for performance of an award, made for payment of money; if the defendant plead performance, and the plaintiff having replied and assigned a breach of non-payment, &c. the defendant rejoins that he is ready to pay the money at the day, &c. this is a departure from his plea; for performance is payment of the money, and payment, and ready to pay, are different issues. Sid. 10. 4 Leon. 79. In debt upon bond for non-performance of an award, the defendant pleads that the award was, that he should release all suits to the plaintiff, which he had done; the plaintiff replies that such an award was made, made, but that the award was further, that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff such a sum, &c. the defendant rejoins that true it is, that by the award he was to pay the plaintiff the said sum, but that the award was also, that the plaintiff should release to the defendant all actions, &c. which he had not done; on demurrer this was held a departure from the plea, being all new matter. 2 Bulst. 39. Godb. 155. 1 Nelf. 637.

After nullum fecerunt arbitrium, the defendant cannot plead that the award is void, without being a departure from the former plea: And if where nullum award is pleaded; then the award is set forth, and a joinder that it was not tendered, it is a departure. 1 Lev. 133. Lut. 385. A departure must be always from something that is material; or it will not be allowed: if in trespass for taking goods, the plaintiff reply, that after the taking, the defendant converted them to his own use, this being an abuse makes a trespass; and the conversion is either trover or trespass at the plaintiff's election, so that by his replication he may make it trespass, and be no departure. 1 Selt. 221, 222. In circumstances of time, &c. laid as to promises, the plaintiff is not tied to a precise day; for if the defendant by his plea, force the plaintiff to vary, it is no departure from his declaration. 1 Nelf. 640, 641. And if another place be mentioned in the replication, in action of debt; as this is a personal thing, 'tis no departure, because he who is indebted to another in one place, is so in every place. Sid. 228.

If new matter which explains or fortifies the bar be rejoined by the defendant, it is not a departure. Wils. Rep. Par. 2. fo. 8. Long v. Jackson. See farther as to departure, Id. Par. 2. fo. 97, 98, &c. Palmer v. Stone and another. And Co. Litt. 304. a. A departure being a denial of what is before admitted, is a saying and unsaying, and for that one issue cannot be joined upon it, 'tis naught for the uncertainty. 1 Lill. 444. See Black. Com. 3 V. 310.

Depopulation, (Depopulatio) Is a wasting or destruction; a desolation or unpeopling of any place, by fire, sword, pestilence, &c. 12 Rep. 30.

Depopulatores Agroium, These were great offenders, by the ancient Common law; so called, because by prostrating and ruining of houses of habitation of the King's people, they as it were depopulated towns and villages, leaving them without inhabitants. Stat. 4 Hen. 4. cap. 2. 3 Inst. 204.

Depopulatio Agroium, Destroying and ravaging country, an offence where the benefit of clergy was denied at Common law. 2 Hal. pl. 333. Black. Com. 4 V. 366.

Deposition, (Depositio) Is the testimony of a witness otherwise called a deponent, put down in writing by way of answer to interrogatories exhibited for that purpose, in Chancery, &c. Proof in the High Court of Chancery is by depositions of witnesses; and the copies of such regularly taken and published, are read as evidence at the hearing: And depositions taken in one cause, may be used at the hearing of another cause, when they are between the same parties, &c. without motion; but in a cause between other parties, though touching the same matters this will not be allowed, without special order of court neither will depositions in other courts be permitted to be read, without such order. Practis. Attorn. Edit. 1. 233, 234.

After a witness is fully examined, the examinations are read over to him, and the witness is at liberty to alter, or amend any thing, after which he signs them, and then and not before, the examinations are complete, and good evidence. Wms. Rep. 415. Pasch. 1718. by the reporter. The same practice prevails in the Commons, in Ecclesiastical causes.

Where a witness was examined in a cause in Chancery and before signing his examination died, the Master of the Rolls upon advising with a Master in Chancery then in court, denied the making use of the depositions, as being not perfect. Wms. Rep. 414. Pasch. 1718. Copland v. Stanton.

But where after an order for publication, defendant examined a witness, and then perceiving the irregularity (it being after publication) the defendant on the usual affidavit by himself, his clerk in court, and solicitor, that they had not, nor would see any of the depositions, got an order to re-examine this witness; but before re-examination the witness died; upon affidavit of this, Ld. Ch. Parker ordered, that the defendant might make use of the depositions, the re-examination of him being prevented by the act of God. Wms. Rep. 415. cites Mich. 1720. Debvox v. —.

Depositions in the Chancery after a cause is determined, may be given in evidence in a trial at bar in B. R. in a suit for the same matter, between the same parties, if the party that deposed be dead; but not otherwise, for if he be living, he must appear in person in court to be examined, &c. 1 Lill. Abr. 445. And where witnesses in a cause are going to sea, or long journies, the court of B. R. will give leave to examine them on interrogatories, at a judge's chamber, in the presence of the attorneys on both sides; which depositions in such case shall be admitted to be good evidence. Ibid. And we apprehend the court of Common Pleas will do the same.

Depositions of informers, &c. taken upon oath before a coroner, upon an inquisition of death; or before justices of peace on a commitment or bailablement of felony, may be given in evidence at a trial for the same felony, if it be proved on oath that the informer is dead, or unable to travel, or kept away by the procurement of the prisoner; and oath must be made that the depositions are the same that were sworn before the coroner or justice, without any alteration. 2 Harek. P. C. 429.

In the case of Sir John Fenwick, against whom a bill of attainder was passed, in the 8th of William the Third, the Commons resolved that what one Goodman (a witness who was gone away, and as supposed by Sir John's procurement) had sworn on a former trial, should be read against him. — Tho' it was strenuously opposed in the house, by 110 against 181. See Chandler's Debates, 3. 45. ante & post. In the House of Lords there was protest against this proceeding (the bill passing in the Lords House, 68 against 61.) Debates in the House of Lords, 1 V. 463, 4.

Depositions taken before a coroner, cannot be given in evidence upon an appeal for the same death; because it is a different prosecution from that wherein they were taken: And it has been adjudged, That the evidence given by a witness at one trial, could not in the ordinary course of justice be made use of against a criminal, on the death of such witness, at another trial. 2 H. P. C. 430.

It was adjudged in the Earl of Strafford's trial, that where witnesses could not be produced, by reason of sickness, &c. their depositions might be read, for or against the prisoner on a trial of High Treason; but not where they could be produced in person: And that depositions by a witness before a justice of peace, might, at the prisoner's desire, be read at the trial; in order to take off the credit of the witnesses, by shewing a variance between such depositions and the evidence given in court. Ibid.

But let us caution the student how he takes for law, some peculiar determinations, as to evidence in the cases of Lord Strafford, and Sir John Fenwick.

Deposition is used in the law in another sense, viz. To signify the depriving a person of some dignity: And deposition is also taken for death; and dies depositionis, the day of one's death. Littleton's Dict.

Deprivation, (Deprivatio) Is a depriving or taking away; as when a bishop, parson, vicar, &c. is deposed from his preferment. Of deprivations there are two sorts, deprivatio a beneficio, and ab officio; the deprivation a beneficio is when for some great crime, &c. a minister is wholly deprived of his living: And deprivation ab officio is where a minister is for ever deprived of his orders, which is also called deposition or degradation; and is commonly for some heinous offence meriting death, and performed by the bishop in a solemn manner. Blount. Deprivatio a beneficio is an act of the spiritual court, grounded upon some crime or defect in the person deprived, by which he is discharged from his spiritual promotion or benefice, upon sufficient cause proved against him. 1 Nelf. Abr. 641.

Deprivation may also be by a particular clause in some act of parliament: the deprivation of bishops, &c. is declared lawful by statute 39 Eliz. c. 8. And by the King's commission, as he hath the supremacy lodged in him, a bishop may be deprived: for since a bishop is vested with that dignity by commission from the King, 'tis reasonable he should be deprived, where there is just cause, by the same authority: but the canons direct, that a bishop shall be deprived in a synod of the province; or if that cannot be assembled, by the archbishop; and twelve bishops at least, not as his assistants, but as judges: though quæ, if this canon was ever received in England? Young Clergyman's Lawyer 105.

It has been adjudged, that an archbishop may deprive a bishop for simony, &c. for he hath power over his suffragans, who may be punished in the archbishop's court for any offence against their duty. 1 Salk. Rep. 134. The causes of deprivation are many: if a clerk obtains a preferment in the church, by simoniacal contract; if he be an excommunicate, a drunkard, fornicator, adulterer, infidel, schismatick or heretick; or guilty of murder, manslaughter, perjury, forgery, &c. If a clerk be illiterate, and not able to perform the duty of his church; if he be a scandalous person in his life and conversation; or basely is objected against him; if one be a mere layman, and not in holy orders; or under age, viz. the age of twenty-three years, be disobedient and incorrigible to his ordinary; or a nonconformist to the canons; if a parson refuse to use the common prayer, or preach in derogation of it; do not administer the sacraments, or read the articles of religion, &c.

If any parson, vicar, &c. have one benefice with cure of souls, and take plurality, without a faculty or dispensation: or if he commit waste in the houses and lands of the church, called dilapidations; all these have been held good causes for deprivation of priests. Degg's Parson's Counsellor, 98, 99, &c. 3 Inst. 204. And refusing to use the common prayers of the church; plurality of livings, &c. are causes of deprivation ipso facto, in which case the church shall be void, without any sentence declaratory; and avoidances by act of parliament need no declaratory sentence: But in other cases there must be a declaratory sentence. Dyer 275.

Where a benefice is only voidable, but not void before sentence of deprivation, the party must be cited to appear; there is to be a libel against him, and a time assigned to answer it, and also liberty for advocates to plead, and after all a solemn sentence pronounced: Though none of these formalities are required, where the living is made ipso facto void. Can. 122. If a deprivation be for a thing merely of ecclesiastical cognizance, no appeal lies; but the party has his remedy by a commission of review, which is granted by the King of mere grace. 26 H. 8. Moor 781.

Deputy, (Deputatus) Is he that exercises an office, &c. in another man's right: whose forfeiture or misdemeanor, shall cause him, whose deputy he is, to lose his office. The Common law takes notice of deputies in many cases, but it never takes notice of under-deputies; for a deputy is generally but a person authorized, who cannot authorize another. 1 Lill. Abr. 446. A man cannot make his deputy in all cases; except the grant of the office justify him in it, and where it is to one, to execute by deputy, &c.

And there is great difference between a deputy and assignee of an office; for an assignee hath an interest in the office itself, and doth all things in his own name; for whom his grantor shall not answer, unless in special cases. But a deputy hath not any interest in the office, but is only the shadow of the officer, in whose name he doth all things. And where an officer hath power to make assigns, he may implicitly make deputies, for cui licet quod majus est, non debet quod minus est non licere. And a sheriff may make a deputy, or under-sheriff, although he have not such express words in his patent. Corwel.

A deputy cannot make a deputy; because it implies an assignment of his whole power, which he cannot assign over; but he may empower another to do a particular act. 1 Salk. 96. Pasch. 13 Will. 3. B. R. per Holt Ch. J. in delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Parker v. Kett. Litt. 379.

Judges cannot act by deputy, but are to hold their courts in person; for they may not transfer their power over to others. 2 Hawk. P. C. 3. But it has been adjudged, that recorders may hold their courts by deputy. 1 Lev. 76. 1 Nelf. 643. The office of Custos Brevirum and Chirographer in C. B. cannot be executed by deputy. 1 Nelf. Abr. 644. A steward of a court may make a deputy; and acts of an under-steward's deputy have been held good in some cases. Cro. Eliz. 534.

A sheriff may make a deputy; it is incident to his office, though no express power is given by his patent; and he hath equal power with the High Sheriff. 9 Rep. 49. A coroner ought not to execute his office by deputy, it being a judicial office of trust; and judicial offices are annexed to the person. 1 Lill. 446. If the office of parkerhip be granted to one, he may not grant this to another; because it is an office of trust and confidence. Terms de Ley.

A bailiff of a liberty, may make a deputy. Cro. Jac. 240. And a constable may make a deputy, who may execute the warrant directed to the constable, &c. 2 Danv. 482.

When an office descends to an infant, idiot, &c. such may make a deputy of course. 9 Rep. 47. Where an office is granted to a man and his heirs, he may make an assignee of that office; and by consequence a deputy. 9 Rep. A deputy of an office, hath no interest therein, but doth all things in his master's name, and his master shall be answerable; but an assignee hath an interest in the office, and doth all things in his own name, for whom his grantor shall not answer, unless in special cases. Terms de Ley.

A superior officer must answer for his deputy in civil actions, if he is not sufficient: but in criminal cases it is otherwise, where deputies are to answer for themselves. 2 Inst. 191, 466. Doct. & Stud. c. 42.

Det, (From the Sax. Deor, Fera) The names of places beginning with this word, signify that formerly wild beasts herded there together.

Deraign or Dereyn, (Disfractio) Seems to be derived literally from the Fr. De frayer, i. e. To confound and disorder, or to turn out of course or displace; as deraignment or departure out of religion. Stat. 31 H. 8. cap. 6. And deraignment and discharge of their profession. 33 H. 8. c. 29. Which is spoken of those religious men that forsook their orders or profession; and so doth Kitchen use it, where he says the lessee entered into religion, and afterwards was derained, p. 152. In our Common Law this word is used diversely; but generally to prove any thing, viz. to deraign that right, deraign the warranty, &c. Glanv. lib. 2. cap. 6. F. N. B. 146. If a man hath an estate in fee with warranty, and enfeoffs a stranger with warranty, and dies; and the feoffee vouches the heir, the heir shall derain the first warranty, &c. Plowd. 7. And jointenants and tenants in common shall have aid, to the intent to deraign the warranty paramount. 31 H. 8. cap. 1. See Bracton, lib. 3. traB. 2. cap. 28. Britton applieth this word to a summons that they be challenged as defective, or not lawfully made, cap. 21. And Skene confounds it with our waging and making of law. See Lex Deraignia.

Dereleft, (Dereleftus) Is any thing forsaken or left; or wilfully cast away. Dereleft lands left by the sea belong to the King. 2 Nelf. Abr. 903.

If the sea shrink back so slowly that the gain be by little and little, i. e. by small and imperceptible degrees, it is said it shall go to the owner of the lands adjoining. Black. Com. 2 V. 262. So that the former part of the position must be understood to mean, where an island in the sea is formed, or a large quantity of new land appears. See Black. Com. ib.

Descender, Writ of formedon in. A writ which lieth, where a gift in tail is made, and the tenant in tail alienes the lands entailed, or is disseised of them and dies; the heir in tail shall have this writ against him, who is then the actual tenant of the freehold. F. N. B. 211, 212. Black. Com. 3 V. 192.

Descent of lands, tenements, &c. See Discent.

Description.

Description, (descriptio) In deeds and grants there must be a certain description of the lands granted, the places where the lands lie, and of the persons to whom granted, &c. to make them good. But wills are more favoured than grants as to those descriptions; and a wrong description of the person will not make a devise void, if there be otherwise a sufficient certainty what person was intended by the testator. 1 Nelf. Abr. 647. If there are several descriptions of one person in a will, they must all agree at the time of the will executed, in name, circumstances, &c. or the devise to such is void. Ibid. And where a first description of land, &c. is false, though the second is true, a deed will be void: contra if the first be true, and second false. See 3 Rep. 2, 3, 8, 10, 28, 33, 34, &c.

Desertion. If any one deserts from the King's armies in time of war, whether by land or sea, in England or in parts beyond the seas, is by the standing laws of the land (exclusive of the annual acts of parliament to punish mutiny and desertion) and particularly by Stat. 18 Hen. 6. c. 19. & 5 Eliz. c. 5. guilty of felony, but not without benefit of clergy. But by Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 2. Clergy is taken away from such deserters, and the offence is made triable by the justices of every shire. Black. Com. 4 V. 101.

De son tort Demesne. Are certain words of form used in actions of trespass, &c. by way of replication to the defendant's plea: i. e. that he did it de son tort demesne, &c. modo & forma. That he did it of his own wrong, without any such cause, &c. in manner and form, &c. When the defendant in jure proprio, or as a servant to another, claims any interest in a common, or to a way, &c. De son tort generally is not good: but if the defendant justifies as servant, there it may be good, with a traverse of the commandment, it being material; for the general replication de son tort is properly when the defendant's plea consists merely of matter of excuse, and no matter of interest. 8 Rep. 67. 1 Lil. Abr. 428. There ought to be a conclusion to the country, in a replication of de son tort; because the replication should make an issue of it. 3 Lev. 65. But there cannot be variety of matter put in issue; as matter of record, and matter of fact, &c. 3 Lev. 65. 2 Leon. 108.

Despitus. Signifies, in our antient law books, a contemptible person. Fleta, lib. 4. cap. 5. par. 4.

Desubito. To weary a person with continual barkings, and then to bite; which is provided against by old laws. — Si canis hominem desubitet, aut mordeat tacitus, in prima culpa reddantur sex sol. Leg. Alured. 26.

Detachare. To seize or take into custody another person's goods, &c. by attachment or other course of law. Corwel.

Detainer. See Forcible Entry and Detainer.

Determination of will. The exertion of any act of ownership by the lessor, puts an end to, or determines an estate at will. See Black. Com. 2 V. 146.

Detinet. A word used in writs, which is necessary in the writ of detinue, &c. See Debet & Detinet.

Detinue, (detinendo) In the Common law is like actio depositi in the Civil law, and is a writ which lies against him, who having goods or chattels delivered to keep, refuseth to re-deliver them. In this action the thing detained is generally to be recovered, and not damages; but if one cannot recover the thing itself, he shall recover damages for the thing, and also for the detainer. Wood's Inst. 542. Detinue lies for any thing certain and valuable, wherein one may have a property or right; as for a horse, cow, sheep, hens, dogs, jewels, plate, cloth, bags of money, sacks of corn, &c. It must be laid so certain, that the thing detained may be known and recovered; and therefore for money out of a bag, or corn out of a sack, &c. it lies not; for the money or corn cannot in this case be known from other money or corn; so that the party must have an action on the case, &c. 1 Inst. 226. F. N. B. 138. Yet detinue may be brought for a piece of gold, of the price of 22s. tho' not for 22s. in money; for here is a demand of a certain particular piece. 2 Danv. Abr. 510.

If a man receiving money from a banker, put part thereof into his bag, and while he is telling the rest the bag is stolen; no action of detinue, &c. lies; because by putting up the money, he had appropriated it to his own use. Comb. 475. A man lends a sum of money to another, detinue lies not for it, but debt: but if A. bargains and sells goods to B. upon condition to be void if A. pays B. a certain sum of money at a day; now if A. pays the money he may have detinue against B. for the goods, though they came not to the hands of B. by bailment, but by bargain and sale. Cro. Eliz. 867. 2 Danv. 510.

If a man delivers goods to A. to deliver to B. B. may have detinue, for the property is in him: and where he delivers them to B. and after grants them to D. he shall not have detinue after the grant, but the grantee shall have it. Telv. 241. 1 Bulst. 69. When goods are delivered to one, and he delivers them over to another, action of detinue may be had against the second person, and if he delivers them to one that has a right thereto, yet it is said he is chargeable: also if a person to whom a thing is delivered dieth, detinue lieth against his executors, &c. or against any person to whom the thing comes. 2 Danv. Abr. 511.

A man may have a general detinue against another that finds his goods: though if he deliver any thing to A. to re-deliver, and he loses it, if B. finds it and delivers it to C. who has a right to the same, he is not chargeable to me in detinue, because he is not privy to my delivery. 7 H. 6. 22. 9 H. 6. 58. Though trover is the common action for goods found, or wrongfully detained, where there was at first a legal possession.

In actions of detinue, the thing must be once in the possession of the defendant; which possession is not to be altered by act of law, as seizure, &c. And the nature of the thing must continue, without alteration, to intitle this action. F. N. B. 138. If I find goods, and before the owner brings his action, I sell them; or they are recovered out of my hands upon an execution, or outlawry against the owner, &c. he cannot have detinue against me. 12 E. 4. 8. 27 H. 8. 13. or trover. But action of detinue will lie against him that finds goods, if they are waited by wilful negligence. Dr. & Stud. 129.

A man buys cloth or other things of another, on a good and perfect contract; if the seller keeps the things bought, detinue lieth. Dyer 30, 203. Where one takes my goods into his custody to keep them for me, and refuses to restore them; although he have nothing for the keeping of them, this action will lie. 4 Rep. 84. 29 Aff. pl. 28. If I deliver to one a trunk that is locked with things in it, and keep the key myself, and something be taken out of it, writ of detinue lieth not for this: but if the trunk and all that is in it be taken away, there it lies. 11 Rep. 89. 4 E. 3.

This action will not lie, where a man delivers goods to me, and I bid him take them again, if he refuses to do it: or where one takes my goods or cattle by wrong as a trespasser; or by way of distress for rent or as damage feasant, &c. Nor for a horse sick, when it is taken or lent; if he dies of that sickness. Bro. Detin. 242. 43 E. 3. 21. 21 E. 4. And if it be a ring that is delivered to another, and he breaks it, it is doubted whether action of detinue may lie; because the thing is altered, and cannot be returned as it was: but action on the case lieth. And although where goods are found, and sold, &c. detinue lies not: yet action upon the case of trover and conversion may be brought. 12 E. 4. 8. 18 E. 4. 22.

To bring detinue, the plaintiff is to set forth the time and thing delivered, to what use the same was delivered, and the time appointed for the re-delivery thereof, with its value, &c. If for a thing bought, he must shew when he bought it, and what he paid, and the time for delivery: also in trover, the nature and value of the things are to be shewn, the time and place when and where the plaintiff was possessed of them, and how they came to the defendant's hands, with the conversion, &c. Practif. Solic. Actions of detinue are not so frequently brought as formerly; for actions of trover and conversion are had in their stead, where the conversion changes the detinue to action of the case; and thereby the tedious proceedings as to garnishment, &c. are now out of use. 10 Rep. 57. 1 Inst. 286. See Trover.

Detinue of Charters. A man may have detinue for deeds and charters concerning land; but if they concern the freehold, it must be in C. B. and no other court. Action of detinue lies for charters which make the title of lands; and the heir may have a detinue of charters, although he hath not the land: if my father be disseised, and die, I shall have detinue for the charters, notwithstanding I have not the land; but the executors shall not have the action for them. Nere Nat. Br. 308. If a man keep my charters from me, concerning the inheritance of my land, and I know the certainty of them, and the land; or if I be in a chest, &c. and I know not their certainty, I may recover them by this writ: so where lands are given to me and J. S. and my heirs, and he dies, if another gets the deeds; and if tenant in tail give away the deed of entail, and then die, his issue may bring a writ of detinue of charters. Co. Lit. 286. 1 Rep. 2. T. N. B. 128. But if the tenant in fee simple do give away his deeds of land, his heir may not have this action: and in case a woman great with child by her deceased husband's charters from his daughter and heir that concern the land during the time she is with child; this writ will not lie against her. 21 E. 3. 17.

Detinue was brought for a deed, and the plaintiff had a verdict, that the defendant detained the deed, and the jury gave 20*l.* damages, but did not find the value of the deed; and then there issued out a disfringas to deliver the deed, or the value, and afterwards a writ of inquiry was awarded for the value: whereupon the jury found a different value from what the first verdict found; and it was adjudged good. Raym. 124. 1 Nelf. Abr. 649. In detinue of charters, if the issue be upon the detinue, and it is found that the defendant hath burnt the charters, the judgment shall not be to recover the charters, which it appears cannot be had; but 'tis said it shall be for the plaintiff to recover the land in damages. 2 Rol. Abr. 101. 2 Danc. Abr. 511. For detaining of deeds and charters concerning the inheritance of lands, or an indenture of lease, the defendant shall not wage law; but in a common action of detinue he may do it. 1 Inst. 295.

Detinue of Goods in Frank-marriage, Is on a divorce betwixt a man and his wife; after which, the wife shall have this writ of detinue for the goods given with her in marriage. Mich. 35 E. 1. New Nat. Br. 308.

Detrahere, Signific a punishment to be torn in pieces with horses. — Apostata, sacrilegi, & hujusmodi, detrahere debent & comburi. Ficta, lib. 1. cap. 37. But we know not, now, of any such punishment by our laws.

Detunicare, To discover or lay open to the world. Matth. Westm. 1240.

Devadivatus, Is where an offender is without sureties or pledges. Si homo in villa delinquit & devadivatus fuerit, nil inde babeat prepositus regis. Domesday.

Devastabit, or Devastaverunt bona Testatoris, Is a writ that lies against executors or administrators, for paying debts upon simple contract, before debts on bonds and specialties, &c. for in this case they are liable to action as if they had squandered away the goods of the deceased or converted them to their own use; and are compellable to pay such debts by specialty out of their own goods, to the value of what they so paid illegally. Dyer 232. But if an executor pays debts upon simple contract, before he hath any notice of bonds, it is no devastavit; and regularly this notice is by an action commenced against him for the debt, which doth not oblige him to take notice of it himself, nor of a judgment against his testator, because he is not privy to acts done either by or against him. 1 Mod. 175. 1 Lev. 215. Sed qu. as to a judgment docketed, if the law doth not presume that sufficient notice?

Where an executor, &c. payeth legacies before debts, and hath not sufficient to pay both, 'tis a devastavit. Also where an executor sells the testator's goods at an undervalue, it is a devastavit; but this is understood where the sale is fraudulent; for if more money could not be had, it is otherwise. Kelov. 59. 1 Nelf. Abr. 649. Executors keeping the goods of the deceased in their hands, and not paying the testator's debts; or selling them, and not paying off debts, &c. or not observing the law which directs them in the management thereof; or doing any thing by negligence or fraud, whereby the estate of the deceased is misemployed, are a devastavit, or waste; and they shall be charged for so much de bonis propriis, as if for their own debt. 8 Rep. 133. But the fraud or negligence of one executor is not chargeable on the rest, where there are several executors. 1 Rol. Abr. 929.

There are some cases in the old books, in which it hath been held, if an executor wastes the goods of the testator, and afterwards makes his executor, and dies, leaving assets, that an action of debt will not lie against the executor of the wasting executor, upon a suggestion of a devastavit or waste by the first executor; because 'tis a personal wrong which died with him. 3 Leon. 241. But in this case there is a difference between a lawful executor and an executor de son tort; for as an executor de son tort possesses himself of the goods wrongfully, if he afterwards wastes them, and dies, leaving assets, his executor shall be charged upon the suggestion of a devastavit in his testator, because he came wrongfully by the goods, and therefore the wrong shall not die with his person. 2 Lev. 133. And before the statute 30 Car. 2. c. 7. it has been decreed in equity against the executor of a lawful executor, who had wasted the goods, and died, that such executor should be liable to make good to the creditors of the testator, so much as the first executor had wasted, and so far as he had assets of the said first executor. 1 Chanc. Rep. 257.

By that statute 'tis enacted, That if an executor de son tort wastes the goods, and dies, his executors shall be liable in the same manner as their testator would have been if he had been living. And it has been since adjudged, that a rightful executor, who wastes the goods of the testator, is in effect an executor de son tort for abusing his trust; and therefore his executor or administrator may be liable to a devastavit. 3 Mod. 113.

Debt lies against an executor in the debit and detinet, where there is a judgment against his testator, upon a suggestion only, that he had wasted the goods; and this is a more expeditious way than the old method of sci. fac. inquiry, which was issued to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against the executor de bonis propriis, and thereupon the sheriff returned a devastavit, &c. 1 Lev. 147. 1 Nelf. 653.

A husband is to be charged for waste done by his wife dum sola: but the husband is not chargeable after the death of a wife executrix, on suggestion of a devastavit in a declaration against him. Cro. Car. 603. Lutw. 672. And it has been adjudged, that a feme covert executrix cannot do any waste during the coverture; though for waste done by the husband she shall be charged, if she survive him; but then it must be on a judgment obtained against him, and not on a bare suggestion of a devastavit, &c. 2 Lev. 145. If an executor or administrator confesses judgment, or suffers it to go by default, he thereby admits assets, and is estopped to say the contrary in an action on such judgment suggesting a devastavit. Will. Rep. par. 1. fol. 258. Skelton v. Hawling, Executor. See Debit & Detinet, and Executor.

Devenerunt, A writ heretofore directed to the escheator on the death of the heir of the King's tenant under age and in custody, commanding the escheator that by the oaths of good and lawful men he inquire what lands and tenements by the death of the tenant came to the King. Dyer 360. This writ is now disused; but see Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 11. for preventing frauds and abuses in his Majesty's Customs.

Devest, (devestire) Is opposite to invest. As invest signifies to deliver the possession of any thing to another; so devest signifieth the taking it away. Fend. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Devise, (from the Fr. deviser, to divide or sort into parcels) Is properly where a man gives away any lands or tenements by will in writing. And he who gives away his lands in this manner, is called the devisor; and he to whom the lands are given, the devisee. A devise in writing is, in law construction, no deed; but an instrument by which lands are conveyed. And antiently where lands were deviseable, it was by custom only; for at Common law, in favour of heirs, no lands or tenements in fee simple were deviseable by will; nor could they be transferred from one to another but by solemn livery and seisin; matter of record, or sufficient deed, or writing. Inst. 111. 2 Inst. 386; &c. But now it is otherwise by by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 1. And see 34, 35 H. 8. c. 5. 'Tis said, that words of recommendation and desire in a will are always held to be a devise; as where the testator gives a legacy to one, willing him to do such a thing. Ec. Preced. Canc. 201, 202.

Devise to the first and eldest son not heir at law to his father, is a good devise to the second son. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annyl. 96. Marwood ex dim. Fennel & al' v. Darrel.

Ord. de Sempringham, p. 748.

Dicker, or Dicker of Leather, Is a certain quantity, consisting of ten hides, by which leather is bought and sold: there are also dickers of iron, containing ten bars to the dicker. This word is thought to come from the Greek δίζας, which signifies ten. Domesday.

Dittores and Ditium: The one signifies an arbitrator; and the other the arbitrament. — Protulit dictum suum & sententiam pro Rege Angliæ. Malmf. p. 384.

Ditum de Kenelworth, An edict or award, between King Henry the Third and his Barons and others, who had been in arms against him: so called, because it was made at Kenelworth castle in Warwickshire, anno 51 Hen. 3. It contained a composition of those who had forfeited their estates in that rebellion, which composition was five years rent of the lands and estates forfeited.

Ditum clausum extremum, Was a writ issued out of the court of Chancery to the escheator of the county, upon the death of any of the King's tenants in capite, to inquire by a jury of what lands he died seised, and of what value, and who was the next heir to him; and the same ought to be granted at the suit of the next heir, &c. for upon that, when the heir came of age, he was to sue livery of his lands out of the King's hands. F. N. B. 251.

Dies. There are several sorts of days, i. e. days natural, artificial, and legal; and Sunday is not only dies non juridicus as to legal proceedings, but also as to contracts. 2 Inst. 264. See Day.

Dies datus, Is a day or time of respite given to the defendant in a suit by the court. Brake.

Dies Marchie, Was the day of congress or meeting of the English and Scotch, appointed annually to be held on the marches or borders, to adjust all differences between them, and preserve the articles of peace. — Conveniantur ad diem marchie & conventum fuit inter eos pro commodo pacis, &c. Tho. Walsingham, in Ric. 2. p. 307.

Dieta, A day's journey. — Omnis rationabilis dieta constat ex viginti miliaribus. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 28. And in this sense it is used by Bracton, lib. 3. trad. 2. c. 16.

Diet, (conventus) An assembly; as the diet of the Empire, of Ratisbon, &c.

The diets of the empire of Germany were the same with the assemblies of March and of Man, held by the Kings of France. They meet at least once a year. Every freeman had a right to be present. They were assemblies in which a monarch deliberated with his subjects, concerning their common interest. But when the princes, dignified ecclesiasticks, and barons, acquired territorial and independent jurisdiction, the diet became an assembly of the separate states, which formed the confederacy of which the Emperor was the head. While the constitution of the empire retained its primitive form, attendance on the diet was a duty; and a neglect to attend, punishable with loss of vote, and heavy penalty: but when the members became independent states, the right of suffrage was annexed to the territory or dignity, not to the person. Robert. Hist. Emp. Charles V. 1 V. 383, &c. which see.

Among the Anglo Saxons here, in England, there was from time to time an assembly of the whole nation (i. e. of all freemen) called wittena gemot, similar to the diets of the empire. In this assembly was lodged the whole legislative power of the community; here was the supreme authority, over all persons and in all causes, ecclesiastical as well as civil. Squire's Anglo Sax. Government, 165, &c.

Dieu & mon Droit, God and my Right, the motto of the royal arms, intimating that the King of England holds his empire of none but God; first given by King Rich. 1.

Dieu son Rit, Are words often used in our old law: and it is a maxim in law, That the act of God shall prejudice no man. Therefore, if a house be blown down by tempest, thunder or lightning, the lessee or tenant for life or years, shall be excused in waite: likewise he hath by the law a special interest to take timber, to build the house again for his habitation. 4 Rep. 63. 11 Rep. 82. So when the condition of a bond consists of two parts in the disjunctive, and both are possible at the time of the obligation made, and afterwards one of them becomes impossible by the act of God, the obligor is not bound to perform the other part. 5 Rep. 22. And where a person is bound to appear in court, at a certain day, if before the day he dieth, the obligation is saved, &c. See Bond.

Difacere, To destroy: and diffactio is a maiming any one. Leg. H. 1. c. 64, 92.

Difforciare Rectum, To take away, or deny justice. Matt. Paris. anno 1164.

Digest, The book of Pandects of the Civil law; which hath its name from its containing Legalia præcepta excellenter Digesta. Du Cange.

Dignity, (dignitas) Signifies honour and authority; reputation, &c. And dignity may be divided into superior and inferior: as the titles of Duke, Earl, Baron, &c. are the highest names of dignity; and those of Baronet, Knight, Serjeant at Law, &c. the lowest. Nobility only can give so high a name of dignity, as to supply the want of a surname in legal proceedings: and as the omission of a name of dignity may be pleaded in abatement of a writ, &c. so it may be where a peer, who has more than one name of dignity, is not named by the Most Noble. 2 Hawk. P. C. 185, 239. No temporal dignity of any foreign nation can give a man a higher title here than that of Esquire. 2 Inst. 667. See Addition and Discent.

Dignity Ecclesiastical, (dignitas ecclesiastica) Is defined by the Canonists to be administratio cum jurisdictione & potestate aliqua conjuncta; of which there are several examples in Duarenus, de Sacris Eccles. lib. 2. c. 6. Dignities ecclesiastical are mentioned in the Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 31 & 32. And of church dignities, Cambden in his Bri-tannia, p. 161. reckons in England 544.

Dignitaries, (dignitarii) Are those who are advanced to any dignity ecclesiastical; as a Bishop, Dean, Archdeacon, Prebendary, &c. But there are simple Prebendaries, without cure or jurisdiction, which are not dignitaries. 3 Inst. 155.

Dilapidation, (dilapidatio) Is where an incumbent on a church living suffers the parsonage house or outhouses to fall down, or be in decay for want of necessary reparation: or it is the pulling down or destroying any of the houses or buildings, belonging to a spiritual living, or destroying of the woods, trees, &c. appertaining to the same; for it is said to extend to the committing or suffering any wilful waste, in or upon the inheritance of the church. Dugg's Parf. Counf. 89. It is the interest of the church in general to preserve what belongs to it for the benefit of the successors; and the old canons, and our own provincial constitutions require the clergy sufficiently to repair the houses belonging to their benefices; which if they neglect or refuse to do, the bishop may sequester the profits of the benefice for that purpose, &c. Rights Clerg. 143. And by the Canon law, dilapidations are made a debt, which is to be satisfied out of the profits of the church; but the Common law prefers debt on contracts, &c. before debt for dilapidations. Hern. 136.

The prosecution in these cases may be brought either against the incumbent himself, or against his executors or administrators; and the executor or administrator of him in whose time it was done or suffered, must make amends to the successor: and if you proceed against the incumbent, then it is proper in the spiritual court: likewise you may proceed in that court against an executor, or the successor may have an action of the case or debt at the Common law, in which action he shall recover damages in proportion to the dilapidations. 1 Nels. Abr. 656.

By statute, if any Parson, &c. shall make a gift of his goods and personal estate to defraud his successor, as to dilapidations, such successor may have the same remedy in the spiritual court against the person to whom such gift is made, as he might have against the executors of the deceased Parson. 13 Eliz. cap. 10. And money recovered for dilapidations, is to be employed in the reparations of the same houses suffered to be in decay, or the party recovering shall forfeit double the value of what he receives, to the king, by Stat. 14 Eliz. cap. 11.

Where in our books it is said, that dilapidations are suable for only in the ecclesiastical court, that is to be intended when the suit is grounded upon the Canon law; for an action of the case might have been brought at Common law, by the successor against the executors of the dilapidator. Parf. Counf. 97, 98. If a Parson suffers dilapidations, and afterwards takes another benefice, whereby his former benefice becomes void, his successor may have an action against him, and declare that by the custom of the kingdom he ought to pay him tantas denariorum summas quantæ sufficient ad reparandum, &c. 3 Lev. 268. In case a Parson comes to a living, the buildings whereof are in decay by dilapidations, and his predecessor did not leave a sufficient personal estate to repair them, so that he is without remedy; he is to have the defects surveyed by workmen, and attested under their hands in the presence of witnesses, which may be a means to secure him from the incumbrance brought upon him by the fault of his predecessor. Country Parson's Companion, 60.

Dilatory Pleas, Are such as are put in merely for delay; and there may be a demurrer to a dilatory plea, or the defendant shall be ordered to plead better, &c. The truth of dilatory pleas is to be made out by affidavit of the fact, &c. by Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. sect. 11. See Plea.

Outlawed, i. e. de lege ejus. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 45.

Willigout, Pottage formerly made for the King's table, on his coronation day: and there was a tenure in serjeanty, by which lands were held of the king, by the service of finding this pottage, at that great solemnity. 39 H. 3.

Disinherited, Is used in our records for a moiety, or one half. — Sciant quod ego Matilda filia Willielmi le F. dedi Waltero de S. dimidietatem illius burgagii, &c. — Sine dat. ex libro Chart. Priorat. de Leominster.

Diminishing the coin, A species of treason. See 18 Eliz. c. 1. and Coin.

Diminution, (diminutio) Is where the plaintiff or defendant in a writ of error alledges to the court that part of the record is omitted and remains in the inferior court not certified; whereupon he prays that it may be certified by certiorari. Co. Ent. 232, 242. Of course diminution is to be certified on a writ of error; though if issue be joined upon the errors assigned, and the matter is entered upon record, which is made a confilium, in this case there must be a rule of court granted for a certiorari to certify diminution, 1 Lill. Abr. 245. Diminution cannot be alledged of a thing which is fully certified; but in something that is wanting, as want of an original, or a warrant of attorney, &c. 2 Lev. 206. 1 Nels. Abr. 658. And if on diminution alledged, and the plaintiff in error certify one original, &c. which is wrong; and the defendant in error certifies another that is true; the true one shall stand. Cro. Jac. 597. Cro. Car. 91. After a writ of error brought, and the defendant hath pleaded in nullo est erratum, he cannot afterwards alledge diminution; because by that plea he affirmeth or alloweth the record to be such as is certified upon the writ of error. Godb. 266. But in some cases, diminution hath been alledged, after in nullo est erratum pleaded, ex gratia curiæ; though not ex rigore juris. Palm. 85. And there is an instance, that the court in such a case hath awarded a certiorari, to inform their conscience of the truth of the record in C. B. where the defendant in error had not joined in nullo est erratum. 1 Nels. 658.

Dismissory Letters, (literæ dimissorie) Are such as are used where a candidate for holy orders has a title in one diocese, and is to be ordained in another: the proper diocesan sends his letters dimissory directed to some other ordaining bishop, giving leave that the bearer may be ordained, and have such a cure within his district. Cowel.

Diocese, (diocesis) Signifies the circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction. For this realm hath two sorts of divisions; one into shires or counties, in respect to the temporal state; and another into dioceses, in regard to the ecclesiastical state, of which we reckon twenty-one in England, and four in Wales. 1 Inst. 94. Also the kingdom is said to be divided in its ecclesiastical jurisdiction into two provinces of Canterbury and York; each of which provinces is divided into dioceses, and every diocese into archdeaconries, and archdeaconries into parishes, &c. Wood's Inst. 2.

The bounds of dioceses are to be determined by witnesses and records, but more particularly by the administration of divine offices. To which purpose, there are two rules in the Canon law: in one case, upon a dispute between two bishops upon this head, the direction is, that they proceed in the business, by ancient books or writings, and also by witnesses, reputation, and other sufficient proof: in the other case, where the question was, by whom a church built upon the confines of two dioceses should be consecrated, the rule laid down is, that it should be consecrated by the bishop of that city, who before it was founded, baptized the inhabitants, and administered to them other divine offices. Gibf. 133.

The jurisdiction of the city is not included in the name of diocese, so saith the Canon law: and accordingly, in citations to general visitations, directed to the clergy, it is ordered to cite the clergy of the city and diocese. Gibf. 133.

A bishop may perform divine offices, and use his episcopal habit, in the diocese of another, without leave; but may not perform therein any act of jurisdiction, without permission of the other bishop. Gibf. 133.

A clergyman dwelling in one diocese, and beneficed in another, and being guilty of a crime, may, in different respects, be punished in both; that is, the bishop in whose diocese he dwells, may prosecute him; but the sentence, so far as it affects his benefice, must be carried into execution by the other bishop. Gibf. 134.

Disability, (disabilitas) Is when a man is disabled, or made incapable to inherit any lands, or take that benefit which otherwise he might have done: which may happen four ways; by the act of an ancestor, or of the party himself, by the act of God, or of the law. 1. Disability by the act of the ancestor, is where the ancestor is attainted of treason, &c. which corrupts the blood of his children; so that they may not inherit his estate. 2. Disability lity by the act of the party, is where a man binds himself by obligation, that upon surrender of a lease, he will grant a new estate to the lessee; and afterwards he grants over the reversion to another, which puts it out of his power to perform it. 3. Disability by the act of God, is where a person is non sane memorie, whereby he is incapable to make any grant, &c. So that if he passeth an estate out of him, it may after his death be made void; but it is a maxim in law, That a man of full age shall never be received to disable his own person. 4. Disability by the act of the law, is where a man by the sole act of the law, without any thing by him done, is rendered incapable of the benefit of the law; as an alien born, &c. Terms de Ley. 5 Rep. 21. 4 Rep. 123, 124. 8 Rep. 43.

There are also other disabilities, by the common law, of ideocy, infancy, and coverture, as to grants, &c. And by statute in many cases: as papists are disabled to make any presentation to a church, &c. Officers not taking the oaths, are incapable to hold offices: Foreigners, though naturalized, to bear offices in the government, &c. 11 Rep. 77. Stat. 12th & 13th W. 3. c. 2. 1 Geo. 2. st. 2. c. 4. A person shall not be admitted to disable himself to avoid an office of charge, &c. no more than a man shall be allowed to say that he was an Idiot, &c. to avoid an act done by himself. Cartbrow's Rep. 307. And the statutes do not exempt and disable dissenters from bearing offices; but they must submit to a fine, if they do not qualify themselves. Hill. 6 Will. 3. Skinner 576, 577. But it hath lately been solemnly determined in the House of Lords, in the case of the Chamberlain of London, and that a dissenter was not finable for refusing the office of Sheriff. See Capacity.

Disabdicare, To deny, or not acknowledge a thing: It is mentioned in Hengham Magna, cap. 4.

Disagreement, Will make a nullity of a thing, that had essence before: And disagreement may be to certain acts, to make them void, &c. Co. Lit. 380. See Agreement.

Disalt, According to Littleton, is to disable a person. Lit. tit. Discontinuance.

Disboscatio, A turning wood ground into arable or pasture.

Disccarcare, (From Dis and Cargo) Is to unlade a ship or vessel by taking out the cargo or goods. — Et prædictum, &c. Carcare & disccarcare fecit ibidem mercandis & denariis quæstunque. Placit. Parl. 18 Ed. 1.

Disceit, A writ or action for fraud and deceit. See Deceit.

Discent, (Lat. Descensus, Fr. Discent) Is an order or means whereby lands or tenements are derived unto any man from his ancestors; And is either by common law, custom or statute: By common law, as where one hath land of inheritance in fee-simple, and dieth without disposing thereof in his life-time, and the land goes to the eldest son and heir of course, being cast upon him by law. 1 Inst. 13, 237. Discent of fee-simple by custom, is sometimes to all the sons, or to all the brothers, where one brother dieth without issue; as in gavelkind: Sometimes to the youngest son, as in Borough English; and sometimes to the eldest daughter, or the youngest, &c. according to the customs of particular places. 1 Inst. 110, 140, 175. Litt. 210, 211. And discent by statute of fee-tail, is as directed by the manner of the settlement or limitation, pursuant to the Stat. West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 1.

Discent at common law is lineal, or collateral: Lineal is a discent downward in a right line, from the grandfather to the father, the father to the son, son to the grandson, &c. and the lineal heir shall first inherit. Collateral is a discent which springeth out of the side of the whole blood, as another branch thereof; such as the grandfather's brother, father's brother, and so downward. 1 Inst. 10, 11. Therefore if a man purchaseth lands in fee-simple, and dies without issue, for default of the right line, he which is next of kin in the collateral line of the whole blood, though never so remote, comes in by discent as heir to him; for there is a next of kin by right of representation, and by right of propinquity or nearness of blood. Litt. 2. 1 Ventr. 415. 3 Rep. 40.

To have land in fee-simple by discent, a person must be heir of the whole blood; he is to be the next, and most worthy of blood, to the ancestor; and he ought to be heir to him that was last actually seized. Where lands descend to the son from the father, and he enters on the lands, and dies seized thereof, without having any issue, this land will descend to the heirs of the part of the father, who are of the whole blood; and if there are none such, the land shall escheat: so where lands descend on the part of the mother. Litt. Sect. 4. 1 Inst. 13. And there is a maxim in law, that where lands descend on the part of the father, the heirs of the mother shall never inherit; and when lands descend on the part of the mother, the heirs of the father shall never inherit. 1 Inst. 14. But it has been resolved, that a fine and render of lands, claimed by a party, as heir at law ex parte materna, will alter the quality of the estate; so that it shall descend to the heir ex parte paterna. 6 Rep. 63. Cartbrow 141.

Also if a man seized of land, as heir of the part of his mother, make a feoffment, and take back an estate to him and his heirs; this as a purchase alters the discent, and if he die without issue, the heir of the part of the father shall inherit it. 1 Inst. 12. There is a difference between discents from father and mother to their children, and discents between brothers and sisters; for a son or a daughter need be only of the blood of either the father or mother, which hath the inheritance, to inherit them: Though the brothers and sisters must be of the same father and mother, to inherit one another. Nov 68.

If a man hath issue two sons by divers venters, the younger brother of the half blood shall not have land purchased by the elder brother, on his dying without issue; but the elder brother's uncle or next cousin shall have it. 1 Inst. 14. The elder brother of the whole blood shall have land by discent, purchased by a middle or younger brother, if such die without issue; (for as to discents between brethren, the eldest is the most worthy of blood to inherit to them as well as to the father). And if there be no brother or sister, the uncle shall have it as heir, and not the father: And yet it may afterwards come to the father, as heir to the uncle; likewise if the father hath issue another son or daughter, after the discent to the uncle, that issue may enter upon the uncle, and hold the estate. Lit. 3. 3 Rep. 40. The next and most worthy of blood are the male, and all descendants from him, before the females; and the female on the part of the father, before the male or female of the part of the mother: And the eldest brother, and his posterity, shall have lands in fee-simple before any younger brother: Also a sister of the whole blood shall be preferred, and take before the younger brother, which is of the half blood; but such a younger brother, though he may not be heir to a brother, for want of the whole blood, yet he may be heir to his father, or his uncle. 1 Inst. 14. 3 Rep. 41.

All the descendants from a person who by our laws might have been heir to another, hold the same right as that common root from whom they are derived: so that the son, or grandchild, whether son or daughter of the eldest son, takes before the youngest son; and a son or grandchild of the eldest brother before the youngest brother: And so it is through all degrees of discents; by representation, the proximity is transferred from the root to the branches, and gives them the same preference, as next and worthiest of blood. Hale's Hist. L. 237.

The great grandchild of the elder brother, whether it be a son or a daughter, shall here be preferred as the heir before the younger brother; for though a female be less worthy than the male, yet she stands in right of representation of the eldest brother, who was more worthy than the younger. Hale's Hist. L. 237.

As to being heir to him that was last seized: If tenant in fee-simple hath a son and a daughter by one woman or venter, and a son by another venter, and dies seized, and the eldest son dies without issue, before actual seisin, the younger brother as heir to the father shall have the estate; but but if the elder brother had entered on the lands, the sister would have it as heir to him. 1 Inst. 11, 15. Lit. 8. None can inherit any lands as heir, but only the blood of the first purchaser; as if the father make a purchase, the blood of the mother shall not have the estate: But if a son purchases, and there is no heir on the side of the father, the land shall go to the heirs on the side of the mother; for they are of the blood of the son of the first purchaser, and he had the blood of both father and mother. Lit. 4. 1 Inst. 12. So that there is a difference where the son purchases lands in fee-simple, and where he cometh to them by descent. Land thus purchased may go to the heirs of the father and mother of the purchaser; unless it be once attached in the heir of the part of the father, for then the heirs of the mother cannot have it, because they are not of the blood of him who was last seised. 49 E. 3. 12. Finch 119. Where for want of heirs of a purchaser, of the part of his father, or when such heir had not entered, the lands descend to the line of the mother; there the heirs of the mother of her father's side, shall take in succession, before her heirs of the part of her mother. Hale's Hist. L. 247. Plowd. 444.

The law takes no notice of the disability of the father in case of descent, but only of the immediate relation of brothers and sisters, as to their estates; so that the inability of the father doth not hinder the descent between them: for example, A man had issue a son and a daughter, and was attainted of treason, and died; the son purchased lands, and died without issue; and it was adjudged that, notwithstanding the attainder of the father, the daughter shall take by descent from her brother, because the descent between them was immediate, and the law doth not regard the disability of the father. 4 Leon. 5. 1 Nelf. Abr. 645.

If there be father and son, and the son is attainted of treason or felony in the father's life time, and yet outlive his father, the land by descent shall not come to such son, nor any of his issue; but if he die before the father, it will descend to his other children. 4 Rep. 31, 124. And where a person seised of lands, hath issue two daughters, if one of them commits felony, after the father's death, both daughters being alive, a moiety shall descend to one daughter, and the other shall escheat. 1 Inst. 163.

Inheritances may descend but not ascend: And in the right line, children inherit their ancestors without limitation; but the ancestors may not take from their children, for the father can never come to the lands which his son hath purchased, by lineal ascent; though he may by collateral ascent, where the son's lands come to the uncle, and then to the father. In the collateral line, the uncle inherits the nephew, and the nephew the uncle. Lit. 3. 3 Rep. 40. Vaugh. 244.

Lands and tenements in fee-simple descend, first, to the eldest son as heir, and to his issue; the sons first, in order of birth; and for want of sons, to the daughters equally, who inherit as one heir; if the eldest son hath no issue, then to his next eldest brother of the whole blood, and his heirs, and for want of a brother, to his sister or sisters of the whole blood, and their issue; if there be no brother or sister, to the uncle and his issue; and for want of an uncle, to an aunt or aunts, and their issue and if there be none such, then to cousins in the nearest degree of consanguinity. Bacon's Elem.

And in case of lands purchased by brethren; after uncles and aunts, the lands shall descend to the father, and the half blood, and their issue, (who come in after the father, being of the whole blood to him, though not to one another) and for want of uncle, father, and half blood, to the next of kin in the collateral line. Wood's Inst. 218.

In descent of estates-tail, half blood is no hindrance; because the issue are in per formam doni, and always of the whole blood to the donee. 3 Rep. 41. A man hath issue an elder son, born out of the King's allegiance, and after hath another son within the realm; the younger son shall have lands by descent from his father in this case, and not the elder who had never any inheritable blood in him. 1 Co. Inst. 8. which vide. If one die seised of land, in which another hath right to enter, and it descends to his heir; such descent shall take away the other's right of entry, and put him to his action for recovery thereof. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 33. Co. Litt. 237. But a descent of such things as lie in grant, as advowsons, rents, commons in gross, &c. puts not him who hath right to his action. 1 Inst. 237. 2 Danv. Abr. 561. And a descent shall not take away the entry of an infant; nor of a feme covert, where the wrong was done to her during the coverture. 2 Danv. 563.

For farther information concerning the rules of descent, see an excellent treatise on this subject by Dr. Blackstone, entitled, The Law of Descents. And see his Commentaries, 1 V. 193, 4. 2 V. 201. and 4 V. 406, 414. And a perfect Table of Descents, by which the course of descent appears at one view. 2 V. 240. See Kindred and Heir.

Descent being created by law, and the most ancient title, an heir is in by that, before a grant, or devise, &c. 'Tis a rule in law, that a man cannot raise a fee-simple to his own right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a purchase, either by conveyance or devise; for if he devise lands to one who is heir at law, the devise is void, and he shall take by descent. Dyer 54, 126. And 'tis the same where the lands will come to the heir, either in a direct or collateral line; or where the heir comes to an estate by way of limitation, when the word heirs is not a word of purchase. Ibid. A father hath two sons by several venters, and devises his land to his wife for life, and after her decease to his eldest son; tho' the son doth not take the estate presently on the death of his father, he shall be in by descent, and not by purchase, and the devise shall be void as to him. Style 148. 1 Nelf. Abr. 645. But 'tis said he may make his election, and take by devise, if he pleases.

A man being seised of lands which he had by the mother's side devised them to his heirs on the part of his mother; and it was adjudged that the devisee shall take by descent. 3 Lev. 127. And when the heir takes that which his ancestor would have taken if living, he shall take it by descent, and not by purchase. 2 Danv. 557. But generally where an estate is devised to the heir at law, attended with a charge, as to pay money, debts, &c. in such case he takes by purchase, and not by descent. Tho' conditions to pay money have been construed only a charge in equity; and that they do not alter the descent at Common law. 1 Lut. 593. 1 Salk. 241. A man can have lands no other way than by descent or purchase. And descent is the worthiest means whereby land can be acquired.

Descent of Crown-Lands. All the lands whereof the King is seised in jure coronæ, shall secundum jus coronæ attend upon and follow the crown; so that to whomsoever the crown descends, those lands and possessions descend also. And if the heir to the crown be attainted of treason; yet shall the crown descend to him, and without any reversal the attainder is avoided. Plowd. 247. Co. Litt. 15. Sed qu. tho' a doctrine laid down, when Henry the Seventh came to the crown? However 'tis a nice point, the doctrine will hold good, if the Prince can support himself on the throne. He may take the French King's motto, Ultima ratio regum, as proof demonstrative, and positive.

The dignity of the crown of England, for want of heirs male, is descendible immediately to the eldest daughter, and her posterity; and so it has been declared by act of parliament: And by Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 22. Regnum non est divisibile. The eldest sister of a King, as well as the eldest daughter, shall inherit all his fee-simple lands by descent: And half blood is no impediment to the descent of lands of the crown. Co. Litt. 15, 165. But a daughter of the whole blood shall not inherit where there is a son of the half blood; as where the King hath issue a son and a daughter by one venter, and a son by another venter, and purchases lands, and dies; afterwards the eldest son enters and dies also without issue, the daughter shall not have these lands, or any other fee-simple lands of the crown, but they shall descend to the younger brother. Plowd. 245. 34 H. 6. A person coming to be King by descent of the part of his mother, makes a purchase of land to him and his heirs, and dies without issue, this land shall descend to the heir on the part of the mother; nuances, because there is a mean or immediate estate. 1 Rep. 140. Co. Lit. 335. 3 Danv. 575.

If there be tenant in tail, remainder to his right heirs, and he makes feoffment in fee, this is a discontinuance; though such tenant that made the feoffment, hath the fee in him. 2 Danv. 572. A man is tenant for life, the remainder in tail, remainder in fee, and the tenant for life makes a feoffment to him in remainder in fee; this is such a discontinuance of the estate-tail, as produceth a forfeiture. 3 Rep. 59. If a tenant in tail be disseised, and after release with warranty to the disseisor, it will be a discontinuance: so if he release or confirm to tenant for life. Lit. Sect. 135. 1 Rep. 44. And if, where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in tail, the tenant for life levies a fine to his own use; and after tenant for life, and he in remainder join in a feoffment by letter of attorney, this is a discontinuance of the estate-tail and the fee. Dyer 327.

If tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and the condition is broken, the issue may enter notwithstanding this discontinuance. Litt. 632. Tenant in tail grants all his estate to another, though with livery and seisin; and if that other person make a feoffment in fee, it will not be a discontinuance to take away the entry of him in reversion or remainder. Litt. 145. 1 Rep. 46. 10 Rep. 97. A lease is made for life, remainder in tail; and he in remainder in tail disseises the tenant for life, and makes a feoffment in fee, and dies without issue, and then tenant for life dieth; this is no discontinuance to him in reversion. Litt. 146. 1 Brown 36. And if tenant in tail of a rent, common, advowson, or the like, grant it in fee, it is not a discontinuance: nor where such tenant granteth any thing out of land, &c. Litt. 138. Finch's Law 193.

Where a tenant in tail of a manor makes a lease for life, not warranted by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, of part of the demesnes, this is a discontinuance of this parcel; and it is said makes it no parcel of the manor. 2 Rol. Abr. 58. By statute, a husband is restrained from alienation, and discontinuing of the wife's land. 32 H. 8. cap. 28. And a wife, tenant in tail with the husband; or having an estate in dower, &c. from making any discontinuance of the lands of the husband, after his death. 11 H. 7. cap. 20. Likewise ecclesiastical persons, as bishops, deans, &c. from alienating or discontinuing their estates. 13 Eliz. cap. 10. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 3.

There can be no discontinuance by tenant in tail of the gift of the crown, 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 20. Nor by tenant in tail of fee farm rents, to bar the remainder vested by the statute, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. s. 6. And some discontinuances at Common law are now made bars as to the issue in tail; though still discontinuances in some cases, to him in remainder, &c. such as fines, with proclamations by statute 4 H. 7. cap. 24. 32 H. 8. cap. 36. If the husband levy a fine with proclamations, and dieth, the wife must enter, or avoid the estate of the conveyee within five years, or she is barred for ever, by the Stat. 4 Hen. 7. c. 24. For the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 28. doth help the discontinuance, but not the bar. 1 Inst. 326. Husband and wife tenant in special tail, the husband alone levied a fine to his own use, and afterwards he devised the land to his wife for life, the remainder over, rendering rent, &c. The husband dies, the wife enters and pays the rent, and dies: in this case it was adjudged, that the fine had barred the issue in tail, but not the wife. Dyer 351. The entry of the wife in this case was a disagreement to the estate of inheritance, and an agreement to the estate for life: but if the wife had not waived the inheritance, the estate tail as to the wife had remained. 9 Rep. 135.

If lands be given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, and the husband maketh a feoffment in fee, and dieth; the wife is helped by the statute 32 H. 8. c. 28. and so is the issue of both their bodies. 1 Inst. 326. The husband is tenant in tail, the remainder to the wife in tail, the husband makes a feoffment in fee; by this, the husband, by the Common law, did not only discontinue his own estate tail, but his wife's remainder: but by statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28. after the death of the husband without issue, the wife may enter by the said act.

Though if the husband hath issue, and maketh a feoffment in fee of his wife's land, and his wife dieth; the heir of the wife shall not enter during the husband's life, neither by the Common law nor by the statute. Ibid.

A discontinuance may be defeated, where the estate that worked it is defeated; as if a husband make a feoffment of the wife's land upon condition; and after his death, his heir enters on the feoffee for the condition broken; now the discontinuance is defeated, and a feme may enter upon the heir. 1 Inst. 336. The titles of discontinuance of estates and reverses, were formerly large titles in our books; but they are abridged by the statute law.

Discontinuance of Plea, Is where divers things should be pleaded to, and some are omitted; this is a discontinuance. 1 Nelf. Abr. 660, 661. If a defendant's plea begin with an answer to part, and answers no more, it is a discontinuance: and the plaintiff may take judgment by nil dicit, for what is not answered: but if the plaintiff plead over, the whole action is discontinued. 1 Salk. 139. Debt upon bond of 500*l.* the defendant as to 225*l.* part of it, pleads payment, &c. And upon demurrer to this plea, it was adjudged that there being no answer to the residue, it is a discontinuance as to that, for which the plaintiff ought to take judgment by nil dicit. 1 Salk. 180. Where no answer is given to one part, if the plaintiff pleads thereto, he cannot have judgment according to his declaration; for which reason it may be a discontinuance of the whole. 1 Nelf. 660. But this is helped after verdict by 32 H. 8. c. 30.

Discontinuance of Process, Is when the opportunity of prosecution is lost for that time; or the plaintiff is dismissed the court, &c. And every suit, whether civil or criminal, and every process therein, ought to be properly continued from day to day, &c. from its commencement to its conclusion; and the suffering any default or gap herein, is called a discontinuance: the continuance of the suit by improper process, or by giving the party an illegal day, is properly a miscontinuance. 2 Hawk. 298. Where an action is long depending, and continued from one term to another, the continuances must be all entered, otherwise there will be a discontinuance; whereupon a writ of error may be brought, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 660. If the plaintiff in a suit doth nothing, it is a discontinuance, and he must begin this suit again: and where it is too late to amend a declaration, &c. or the plaintiff is advised to prosecute in another court, he is to discontinue his suit, and proceed de novo. Com. Law Cam. Plac. 171. But a discontinuance of an action is not perfect till it is entered on the roll, when it is of record. Cro. Car. 236.

The plaintiff cannot discontinue his action after a demurrer joined, and entered; or after a verdict, or a writ of inquiry, without leave of the court. Cro. Jac. 35. 1 Lill. Abr. 473. In actions of debt or covenant, after a demurrer joined, the court will give leave to discontinue, if there be an apparent cause, as if the plaintiff through his own negligence is in danger of losing his debt: but if the demurrer be argued, then he shall not have leave to discontinue; nor where he brings another action for the same cause, and this is pleaded in abatement of the first action. Sid. 84. It has been ruled, upon a motion to discontinue, that the court may give leave after a special verdict; which is not compleat and final; but never after a general verdict. 1 Salk. 178. 1 Nelf. 663.

An appeal may as well be discontinued by the defect of the process or proceeding in it, as it may be by the insufficiency of the original writ, &c. For by such defect, the matter depending is as it were out of court. 1 Lill. 473. A discontinuance or miscontinuance, at Common law reverses a judgment given by default, and discontinuance upon a demurrer is error; but a miscontinuance after appearance is not so. 8 Rep. 150. 46 E. 3. 30.

Discontinuance of process is helped at Common law by appearance; and by Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 30. All discontinuances, miscontinuances and negligences therein, of plaintiff or defendant, are cured after verdict. 2 Danv. 352. The death of the King is not a discontinuance of any suit; and no suit before justices of assize, or justices of peace, &c. will be discontinued by a new commission.

Stat. 1 Ed. 6. cap. 3. See 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. 1 Ann. Stat. 1. c. 8. On the discontinuance of suits, it is usual to give the defendant costs. See Continuance.

The plaintiff hath been allowed to discontinue after a special verdict, and argument thereon; and after the court have delivered their opinion; but it is discretionary in the court, and in hard actions they will not allow it. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annyl, 200, 201. Beecher and Lawson.

Discobert, Is used in the law for a woman unmarried or widow, one not within the bonds of matrimony. Law Fr. Di.

Discovery, Is the act of revealing or disclosing any matter by defendant in his answer to a bill filed against him in a court of equity.

A man is not bound to discover what may subject him to the penalty of an act of parliament. Vern. 109. pl. 98. Mich. 1682. Bird v. Hardwick.

But, where several are parties in an unlawful or clandestine trade, and one of them brings a bill of discovery against the other, it is no good plea that their answer may subject them to the penalty of an act of parliament, for by their going on in such trade, they seem to have entirely waived that unlawfulness as between themselves; so the plea was disallowed, and they were ordered to answer. G. Equ. R. 186. Hill. 12 Geo. 1. Galsworthy v. Sidwell.

Defendant shall not discover any thing against himself to charge himself with the penalty of a bond of arbitration. Chanc. Rep. 142. 15 Car. 1. Bishop v. Bishop.

The husband devised to his wife an estate and more in several goods and things, to be held and enjoyed by her during her widowhood. On a bill brought against her to discover, whether married or not, in order to prove a forfeiture of her estate, she demurred, and the bill was dismissed. 2 Chanc. Rep. 68. 24 Car. 2. Manning v. Monning.

The difference is between causes criminal and civil; if an offender be once legally convicted of an offence, whereby he ought to forfeit his estate, then it is lawful and proper to prefer a bill to discover what estate in lands and goods he then had; as in case of an outlawry or attainder, &c. for that the effect of such a bill is only to discover what is forfeited already, and not to discover a cause of forfeiture. Arg. Hard. 145.

Discretion. (Discretio) When any thing is left to any person to be done according to his discretion, the law intends it must be done with sound discretion, and according to law: And the court of B. R. hath a power to redress things that are otherwise done, notwithstanding they are left to the discretion of those that do them. 1 Lill. Abr. 477. Discretion is to discern between right and wrong; and therefore whoever hath power to act at discretion, is bound by the rule of reason and law. 2 Inst. 56, 298. And though there be a latitude of discretion given to one, yet he is circumscribed, that what he does be necessary and convenient; without which no liberty can defend it. Hob. 158. The assignment of fines on offenders committing affrays, &c. And the binding of persons to the good behaviour, are at the discretion of our judges and justices of peace. 1 Hawk. P. C. 132, 138. And in many cases, for crimes not capital, the judges have a discretionary power to inflict corporal punishment on the offenders. 1 Hawk. 445. Infants, &c. under the age of discretion, are not punishable for crimes; and want of discretion is a good exception against a witness. Ibid. 434. See Arg.

Disfranchisement, Is to take away one's freedom or privileges. It is the contrary to enfranchisement. And corporations have power to disfranchise members, for doing any thing against their oaths; but not for contempts, &c. 11 Rep. 98. See Corporation.

Disinherit, Is an old word which signifies as much as disfranchising; mentioned in the Stat. 20 Ed. 1. and 8 R. 2.

Disinherit, One that disinheriteth, or puts another out of his inheritance. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 39.

Dismes, (Decime) Are tithes, or the tenth part of all the fruits of the earth, and of beasts, or labour, due to the clergy. It signifieth also the tenths of all spiritual livings given to the prince, which is called a perpetual dime. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 3. cap. 35. And formerly this word signified a tax or tribute levied of the temporality. Hollingsh. in H. 2. f. 111. The laws of dismes or tithes; See Tithes.

Disparagement, In a legal sense was used for matching an heir in marriage under his degree, or against decency. Co. Lit. 107. Magn. Chart. c. 6.

Dispauper When a person by reason of his poverty, is admitted to sue in forma pauperis; if afterwards, before the suit is ended, the same party have any lands or personal estate fallen to him, or be guilty of any thing whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he is put out of the capacity of suing in forma pauperis, and is said to be dispaupered. See Forma Pauperis.

Dispensation. By the 25 Hen. 8. cap. 21. The Archbishop of Canterbury has power of dispensing in any case, wherein dispensations (not contrary to the law of God) were formerly granted by the see of Rome; and may grant dispensations to the King, as well as to his subjects: But such dispensations shall not be granted out of the realm, &c. And during the vacancy of the see of Canterbury, the guardian of the spiritualities may grant dispensations. The Archbishop of Canterbury grants dispensations, not only in his own province, but in the province of York; and the Archbishop of York, and other bishops, dispense as they were wont to do, by the common law and custom of the realm. Wood's Inst. 26. Every bishop of common right has the power of institution into benefices, and of dispensing in common cases, &c. Ibid. 505. Dispensations to hold pluralities; see Chaplain.

Dispensations of the King. If a dispensation by the Archbishop of Canterbury, is to be in extraordinary matters, or in a case that is new, the King and his Council are to be consulted; and it ought to be confirmed under the broad seal. The King's authority to grant dispensations remains as it did at common law; notwithstanding the Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21. 1 Cro. 342, 601. The dispensation of the King, &c. makes a thing prohibited, lawful to be done by him who hath it: But malum in se will not admit of a dispensation. March Rep. 213. Where the subject hath an immediate interest in an act of parliament, the King cannot dispense with it; but where the King is intrusted with the management thereof, and the subject interested by way of consequence only, he may. March 214, 216. This must be where the King is, by the act itself impowered to dispense with it. When an offence wrongs none but the King; or if the suit is only the King's for the breach of a penal law, that is not to the damage of a third person, the King may dispense: But in case the suit is the King's, for the benefit of another, he cannot. Faugh. 334, 339, 344, &c.

The dispensing power of the King is fully considered by Dr. Blackstone. See Com. 1 V. 142, 185, 342. 4 V. 429, 433.

Dispensation by non obstante. Formerly if any statute tended to restrain some prerogative incident to the person of the King, as the right of pardoning, or of commanding the service of the subject for the publick weal, &c. which were inseparable from the King, by a clause of non obstante, he might dispense with it. 2 Hawk. 390. But as in the reign of King James II. the dispensing power was carried so high as to render the execution of our necessary laws in a manner dependent on the pleasure of the Prince; by Stat. 1 W. & M. Sess. 2. cap. 2. It is enacted, That no dispensation by non obstante, of, or to any statute, or any part thereof, shall be allowed; but that the same shall be held void, and of none effect, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute. The dispensation by non obstante was brought into this kingdom by the Pope; and first used by Hen. 3. Fryn's Animadver. on 4 Inst. fol. 129.

Disparage, Is to scandalize or disparage. Blount.

Disseize, To break open a seal.—Sepulto patre testamentum disseizatum est. Neubrigenensis, lib. 2. c. 7.

Disseisin, (From the Fr. Disseisin) Signifies an unlawful dispossessing a man of his right. As where a person enters into lands or tenements, and his entry is not lawful, and keeps him that hath the estate from the possession thereof. Bract. lib. 4. c. 3. And disseisin is of two sorts; either single disseisin, committed without force of arms; or disseisin by force, but this latter is more properly deforcement. Brit. cap. 42, 43. By Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 29. No man is to be disseised or put out of his freehold, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or the law: And by statute, the dying seised of any disseisor of or in any lands, &c. having no right therein, shall not be a dissein in law, to take away an entry of a person having lawful title of entry; except the disseisor hath had peaceable possession five years, without entry or claim by the person having lawful title. 32 Hen. 8. c. 33. But if a disseisor having expelled the right owner, hath such peaceable possession of the lands five years without claim, and continues in possession so as to die seised, and the land descends to his heirs, they have a right to the possession thereof till the person that is owner recovers at law; and the owner shall lose his estate for ever, if he do not prosecute his suit within the time limited by the statute of limitations. Bac. Elem. And if a disseisor levy a fine of the land whereof he is disseised, unto a stranger, the disseisor shall keep the land for ever; for the disseisee against his own fine cannot claim, and the converse cannot enter, and the right which the disseisee had, being extinct by the fine, the disseisor shall take advantage of it. 2 Rep. 56. But this is to be understood, where no use is declared of the fine by the disseisee; when it shall enure to the use of the disseisor, &c. by Bridgman, C. J. 1 Lev. 128.

If a feme sole be seised of lands in fee, and is disseised, and then taketh husband; in this case, the husband and wife, as in right of the wife, have right to enter, and yet the dying seised of the disseisor, shall take away the entry of the wife, after the death of the husband. 1 Inst. 246. If a person disseises me, and during the disseisin, he or his servant cut down the timber growing upon the land, and afterwards I re-enter into the land, I shall have action of trespass against him; for the law, as to the disseisor and his servants, supposes the freehold to have been always in me: But if the disseisor be disseised, or if he makes a feoffment, gift in tail, lease for life or years, I shall not have an action against the second disseisor, or against those who come in by title: For all the mesne profits shall be recovered against the disseisor himself. 11 Rep. 52. Keilw. 1.

A disseisor in assise, where damages are recovered against him, shall recover as much as he hath paid in rents chargeable on the lands before the disseisin. Jenk. Cent. 189. But if the disseisor or his feoffee sows corn on the land, the disseisee may take it whether before or after severance. Dyer 31, 173. 11 Rep. 46. Where a man hath a house in fee, &c. and locks it, and then departs; if another person comes to his house, and takes the key of the door, and says that he claims the house to himself in fee, without any entry into the house, this is a disseisin of the house. 2 Danv. Abr. 624. If the feoffor enters on the land of the feoffee, and makes a lease for years, &c. it is a disseisin, though the intent of the parties to the feoffment, was, that the feoffee should make a lease to the feoffor for life. 2 Rep. 59. If lessee for years is ousted by his lessor; this is said to be no disseisin. Cro. Jac. 678.

A man who enters on another's land, claiming a lease for years, who hath not such lease, is a disseisor: though if a man enters into the house of another by his sufferance, without claiming any thing, it will not be a disseisin. 9 H. 6. 21, 31. 2 Danv. 625. If a person enters on lands by virtue of a grant or lease, that is void in law, he is a disseisor. 2 Danv. 630. A lessee at will, makes a lease for years, it is a disseisin, at the election of the lessor at will: But it is the disseisin of the lessee at will, not of the lessee for years. Hill. 7 Car. B. R. If a man enters into the land of an infant, though by his assent; this is a disseisin to the infant, at his election. 11 Ed. 3. Aff. 87. And if a person commands another to enter upon lands, and make a disseisin, the commander is a disseisor, as well as such other; unless the command be

If a man forces another to swear to surrender his estate to him, and he doth so, it will be a disseisin of the estate. So forcibly hindring a person from tilling his land, is a disseisin of the land. 1 Inst. 161. But if one enter wrongfully into the lands of another, and he accepts rent from such person, he shall not afterwards be taken for a disseisor. Dyer 173. Where any person is disturb'd from entering on land, it is a disseisin: A denial of a rent, when lawfully demanded, is a disseisin of the rent. 1 Inst. 153. Also hindring a distress for rent, by force; or making rescous of a distress, are a disseisin of the rent. 2 Danv. 624, 625. An infant, or feme covert, may be a disseisor; but it must be by actual entry on lands, &c. A feme covert shall not be a disseisor, by the act of the baron: If he disseises another to her use, she is not a disseisor; nor if the wife agrees to it during the coverture: Yet if after his death, she agrees to it, she is a disseisor. Ibid. 626, 627. Assizes that lie against Disseisors are called writs of disseisin; and there are several writs of entry in disseisin, of which some are in the per, and others in the pet, &c. But writs of assise on disseisin, are now disused; and the feigned action of ejectment is introduced in their place. 'Tis not amiss to be acquainted with this learning; but trespass and ejectment supply the place of almost every kind of assise. See Assise of Novel Disseisin, and Em.

Disseisor, is in general he that disseises or puts another out of his land, without order of law: And a disseisee is he that is so put out. 4 H. 4. As the King in judgment of law can do no wrong, he cannot be a disseisor. 1 E. 3. 8. A disseisor is to be fined and imprisoned; and the disseisee restored to the land, &c. by Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 3. Where a disseisor is disseised, it is called disseisin upon disseisin.

Disseisers, Are separatists from the church, and the service and worship thereof. At the Revolution a law was enacted, That the statutes of Q. Eliz. and K. James I. concerning the discipline of the church, should not extend to Presbyterian disseisers: But the persons dissenting, are to subscribe the declaration of 30 Car. 2. c. 1. and take the oaths, or the declaration of fidelity, &c. And they must not hold their meetings, till their place of worship is certified to the bishop, &c. or to the justices at their quarter-sessions, and registered there; also they are not to keep the doors of their meeting-houses locked, &c. If any person disturbs them in their worship, on conviction at the sessions, he shall forfeit 20 l. Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 18. f. 18. And there are a great many statutes relating to disseisers besides the toleration act: As the 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 1. 23 Eliz. c. 1. 3 Jac. 1. c. 24. 13 Car. 2. c. 1. 17 Car. 2. c. 2. and 22 Car. 2. c. 1. 1 W. & M. c. 18. 10 Ann. c. 2. 1 Geo. 3. c. 6, &c. See Church, &c.

Distillers, Of strong waters and spirits, setting up any tun, cask, &c. or using any private warehouse or cellar, without notice given to the officer of excise, shall forfeit 20 l. and 10 l. for working stills, but at such appointed hours, to be levied by warrant of two justices of peace. Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 13. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 4. 21. If any distiller shall use a private pipe for conveyance of distilled liquor, he forfeits 100 l. And private stills to be seized, for which a search may be made by officers of excise by virtue of a justice's warrant. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 4. Distillers, &c. are to make an entry of all warehouses for keeping brandy, on pain of 20 l. and forfeiture of the liquors; and brandy shall not be sold but in warehouses and places entered, under the penalty of 40 s. per gallon, by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 20. All mixed or compound waters or spirits, commonly called cordons, &c. in the possession of distillers, are liable to a duty of 5 s. per gallon; and enow to be made of stills, &c. under penalty of 20 l. And none of the said mixed liquors shall be exposed to sale, but in some place that is entered, on pain of forfeiting 20 s. a gallon; and if any distiller, distill, or sells any spirits, not of full proof he shall pay the like forfeiture: Also sellers or retailers of any compound liquors, in less quantities than a gallon, are to take out a licence at the excise-office for the same, and and pay down 20*l.* and selling without such licence, to forfeit 50*l.* Selling brandy about streets, in any wheelbarrow, or on a shed, or other place, incurs a penalty of 10*l.* leviable by justices of peace: But this act shall not extend to arrack, rum, citron water, Irish usquebaugh, &c. Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 17.

The duty on compound waters or spirits, and French brandy, &c. taken off, and duties granted of 1*s.* and 2*s.* per gallon, to be raised in the same manner as excise upon beer, and ale, &c. And distillers or other persons may export spirits, drawn from corn of Great Britain, on oath, and that duties are paid, and shall be allowed a drawback of 4*l.* 18*s.* per ton, &c. Cyder used in distillation, is exempted from duty; but distillers using it otherwise, shall forfeit 5*l.* Stat. 6 Geo. 2. cap. 17. No distillers or others, shall retail any brandy, rum, arrack, Geneva, &c. by any name, in any less quantities than two gallons, without taking out a licence, and paying 50*l.* to the next office of excise, &c. on pain of forfeiting 100*l.* and shall pay 20*s.* per gallon: And the retailers to make a true entry of all their warehouses, shops, cellars, and the liquors therein, under the penalty of 20*l.* and 40*s.* for every gallon concealed, or making any clandestine increase, &c.

Officers for the duties may enter warehouses, &c. and take an account of liquor; and persons refusing them entrance shall forfeit 50*l.* None may contract with any workman or servant, to pay him his wages, so much in money, and the rest in brandy, &c. And hawkers and sellers of brandy about the streets, &c. to forfeit 10*l.* or be committed for two months. But physicians and apothecaries, may use spirituous liquors in medicines for sick persons; and distillers may exercise any other trade. 9 Geo. 2. c. 23. Where any persons are not able to pay the fines, commissioners of excise to advance the rewards for information out of money in their hands; and the offenders to be committed to the house of correction, and there stript naked from the middle and whipped, &c. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 17. Occupiers of any house or place, where any spirituous liquors shall be sold less than two gallons, if privy thereto, are to be deemed retailers thereof, and forfeit 100*l.* And if any persons to the number of five or more, in a riotous manner assemble to rescue offenders, or to assault, beat or wound informers, they shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and be transported. 11 Geo. 2. c. 26.

By the 16 Geo. 2. c. 8. Great duties laid on spirituous liquors by former statutes, and on licences for retailing the same, are repealed, and other duties granted; and no persons shall retail any distilled spirituous liquors, or strong waters, in publick or private, without taking out a licence from the commissioners of the excise, &c. and paying 20*s.* yearly, on pain of forfeiting 10*l.* or to be committed to the house of correction, and there kept to hard labour two months. These licences are not granted to any persons, but those only that keep taverns, inns, ale houses or coffee-houses; and they must be first licensed to sell ale or spirituous liquors by two or more justices of peace, to be enabled to retail such liquors: But none shall be deem'd a retailer, who does not sell it to be drank in any place belonging to him, or send it abroad, in less quantities than a pint. Stat. 16 Geo. 2. cap. 8. By the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. All penalties by the Stat. 16 Geo. c. 8. and by this act imposed, may be sued for, recovered, levied, and mitigated by such ways and means as any penalty may be sued for by any law of excise: But the justice may, if he think proper, instead of levying the penalty, commit the offender to the house of correction, to be kept to hard labour for two months, and be whipt before discharged.

Licences granted as aforesaid to any person, who shall afterwards, during the continuance of his licence, exercise the trade of a distiller, grocer, or chandler, or keep a distillery shop for sale of spirituous liquors, shall be void, and the offender forfeit 10*l.* Every person, who shall retail spirituous liquors to be drank in his house, &c. or retail or send the same abroad in less quantities than two gallons, without a licence, shall be deemed a retailer, and forfeit 10*l.* for every offence. Where offenders are not able to pay the penalties, but in lieu thereof are sent to the house of correction, the commissioners of excise may order a reward to the informer, not exceeding 5*l.* by the Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 39.

Distillers within the bills of mortality may have licences on payment of 5*l.* yearly. Distillers in partnership to have but one licence. And no distiller shall have a licence, unless, inhabiting in the city of London, he pay to church and poor rates, for the value of 20*l.* and in any other parts for the value of 10*l.* in the parish he exercises his said trade: And he shall not, by virtue of such licence, retail spirituous liquors but in his own shop, under the penalty of 10*l.* And if he sells any spirituous liquors to be drank, or suffer it to be drank in his shop, he shall forfeit 10*l.* All such penalties to be sued for, &c. as above is mentioned. And every person found tipling in a distiller's shop, shall forfeit 20*s.* And by the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 12. additional duty is laid on spirituous liquors.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. No distiller shall have a licence to sell spirituous liquors. And no person shall be licensed: but such as pay to church and poor. By Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 13. Commissioners, &c. within the limits of the head office of excise in London, may grant licences for retailing spirituous liquors to persons renting houses of 12*l.* per annum, though not rated to the poor's rate. By the Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. Distillers selling spirituous liquors to be unlawfully retailed, or to unlicensed retailers, shall forfeit treble the value of the liquors. And for the laying an additional duty upon spirituous liquors, and restraining the retailing of spirituous liquors; see farther in the said Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. and 26 Geo. 2. c. 13. See also Stat. 33 Geo. 2. c. 9. who are to be deemed common distillers, and for the penalty on malt distillers making gin.

N. B. On the Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 8. there were many debates in the House of Lords, and the Bishops strongly opposed the bill, it being to lay a small duty per gallon, on the liquor at the still head, and a licence to cost but 20*s.* to be granted only to such as had licences to sell ale, whereby greater opportunities were given to the poor, to come at pernicious spirituous liquors, contrary to the end proposed by those who favoured the bill. See Debates in the house of Lords, 8 Vol. from fo. 349, to 415, inclusive.

Distress, (Distressio). Signifies most commonly any thing which is taken and distrained for rent behind, or other duty: And by the common law, distresses for rent were not to be sold, but only detained for enforcing payment of the rent; but this is altered by statute. A man may take a distress for homage, fealty, or any services; for fines and amercements; and for damage-feasant, &c. And the effect of it is to compel the party either to replevy the distress, and contest the taking in an action against the distrainer; or, which is more usual, to compound and pay the debt or duty, for which he was distrained.

There are likewise distresses in actions compulsory to cause a man to appear in court: And of these there is a distress personal, of a man's moveable goods, and profits of lands, &c. for contempt in not appearing after summon'd; and distresses real, upon immoveable goods. And none shall be distrained to answer for any thing touching their freeholds, but by the King's writ. 52 Hen. 3. c. 1.

Distress is also divided into finite and infinite: Finite, is that which is limited by law, how often it shall be made to bring the party to trial of action, as once, twice, &c. And infinite, is without limitation, until the party appears; which is likewise applicable to jurors not appearing: Then it hath had a further division into a grand distress, and ordinary distress; the former whereof extends to all the goods and chattels which the party hath within the county. F. N. B. 904. Old Nat. Br. 43, 113. Brit. c. 26. p. 52.

Hervin is to be considered:

- I. Who may distrain, and for what.
- II. At what time and in what manner the distress should be made.

I. Who may distrain, and for what.

Of common right a person may distrain for rents, and all manner of services; and for rent reserved upon a gift in tail, lease for life, years, &c. though there be no clause of distrain in the deed, so as the reversion be in himself: But on a feoffment in fee, a distrain may not be taken, unless expressly reserved in the deed. 1 Inst. 57, 205. Doctor and Student, cap. 9. See Co. Lit. 204.

A man grants a rent out of the manor of D. and further, that if the rent be behind, the grantee shall distrain for it in the manor of S. this is a rent of the manor of D. and only a penalty on the other manor. 1 Shep. Abr. 567. If a person seised of land in fee, demise it to one upon condition to pay his wife 5 l. a year rent, and if it be behind and in arrear, that he shall distrain for it; the wife may take a distrain for the rent. Dyer 3, 48. There is a lord and tenant by 3 l. rent and fealty, the lord dies, and his wife is endowed of the thirds of the feignory; here she may distrain for one pound, and the heir for two pounds: So if a rent be divided amongst parceners, each of them may have a distrain for her part; but this may not be till the partition is made. Bro. 45.

If one jointenant make a gift in tail, of the land, reserving a certain rent, and the rent be in arrear; he may not distrain the beasts of the other jointenant. 33 H. 6. 35. But if A. and B. are tenants in common, and A. leases his moiety to C. for years, rendering rent, and C. lease it to B. if the rent is behind, A. may take a distrain of the cattle of B. his fellow tenant in common. 7 Rep. 23. Moor 558. To justify taking a distrain, the party must see he hath good cause to distrain; that he have power to take the distrain, and from the person from whom he takes it; that the thing for the quality of it, be distrainable, and he distrain it in due time and place, &c. He who takes a distrain for another, ought to have good warrant for doing of it; and must do it in his name: And a bailiff or servant, may distrain for his master. 1 Cro. 748. 2 Cro. 436. Godb. 110. A distrain ought to be made of such things whereof the sheriff may make replevin, and deliver again in as good plight and condition as they were at the time of the taking. 1 Inst. 47.

Distraints are to be of a thing valuable, whereof some body hath a property; things feræ naturæ, as dogs, conies, &c. may not be distrained. 1 Roll. Abr. 664, 666. It is the same of cattle of the plough, beasts of husbandry, sheep, or horses joined to a cart, with a rider upon it. 1 Vent. 36. This means a distrain for rent, &c. contra of a distrain damage feasant.

But it has been adjudged that horses may be taken from a cart loaded; though it has been a disputed case, whether they could be separated. Sid. 422. Raym. 18. A horse with a rider upon his back; or a horse in an inn, or put into a common; an ax in a man's hand, cutting down wood; or any thing a person carries about him; utensils and instruments of a man's trade or profession, or the books of a scholar; corn in a mill, or goods in a market to be sold for the use of the publick; materials in a weaver's shop, for making of cloth; another person's garment in the house of a tailor, &c. are not distrainable: Nor is any thing that is fixed to the freehold of a house, as a furnace, doors, windows, boards, &c. 1 Sid. 422. 440. 1 Inst. 47. 2 Danv. Abr. 641.

But goods, cattle, not of the plough, &c. sheaves of corn; corn in the straw, or threshed; and carts with corn, (but not victuals) hay in a barn, or ricks of hay, money in a bag sealed, though not out of a bag, &c. may be distrained for rent: And so may cattle or goods driving to market, if put into a pasture by the way, and beasts of a stranger, in the landlord's ground, being levant and couchant, and having well rested themselves there. 1 Inst. 47. 1 Lutw. 214. Mod. 385. If a driver of cattle asks leave of the lessor to put his cattle into ground for a night, and he gives leave, as well as the lessee; yet 'tis said he is not concluded from distraining them for rent. 2 Vent. 59. 2 Danv. 642.

Relief given in equity in these cases. See Chancery. 2 Vern. 129. But the goods of a carrier are privileged, and cannot be distrained for rent, though the waggon wherewith loaded, is put into the barn of a house, &c. on the road. 1 Salk. 249. If the fences of another man's ground be out of repair, and the neighbour's cattle escape there, and are levant and couchant, without any fresh pursuit after them, they may be distrained for rent; for the land is debtor for the rent, and the landlord must resort thither, and is not to inquire whose cattle they are which he finds therein. 1 Roll. Rep. 124. 1 Nelf. Abr. 667. But if the owner freshly pursues the cattle, they are not distrainable; because they are supposed to be always in his view and possession.

If the owner of the cattle is to maintain the fences, in such case, if they escape into another's ground, they may be distrained before levant and couchant, and notwithstanding fresh pursuit. 1 Nelf. Ibid. And distraints for rent are to be reasonable, and not excessive; and not to be taken in the King's highway, or the common street; or in the ancient fees of the church. 51 H. 3. 4. 52 H. 3. c. 15. 9 Ed. 2. 1. c. 9. And where a distrain is taken, it may be replevied in five days; if the tenant and owner of the goods do not in that time after taken, and notice given, and of the cause, left at the dwelling-house, &c. replevy the same according to law; then the person distraining may with the under sheriff of the county, or constable of the place, &c. (who are required to be assisting) cause the goods to be appraised by two sworn appraisers, and sold to satisfy the rent, &c. leaving the overplus in the constable's hands for the use of the owner. Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5.

All distraints for rent must be made on the premises, by the common law; But by statute, if any tenant fraudulently removes goods from off the premises, the landlord may in five days seize such goods wheresoever found, as a distrain for the rent in arrear; unless the goods are sold for a valuable consideration before the seizure. 8 Ann. c. 17. By 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. thirty days allowed. And whereas before that statute, for rent due the last day of the term, the lessor could not distrain; because the term ended before the rent was due; (and the lessee had the whole day to pay it); and it was the same, where the lessee held over his term, for rent incurred during the term. Co. Litt. 47. Now by the stat. 8 Ann. c. 17. where leases are expired, a distrain may be taken, provided it be done within six months, and during the landlord's title and tenant's possession.

Distraints for services are to be on the land: But for an amercement in a leet, the distrain may be taken any where within the hundred, as well out of the land, as on it, wherever the cattle are of him that is amerced; for the amercement charges only the person, and not the land; and for this a distrain may be taken in the high street. 2 Danv. Abr. 644, 645. The lord cannot distrain for amercements in a court-baron, without a prescription; though he may in the leet: And the goods and cattle of another, may not be taken in distrain on any ground, for an amercement, &c. set upon me in a court-leet or court-baron. 11 Rep. 44. 12 H. 7. 13. For services a distrain cannot be taken but where the services are certain; or may be reduced to a certainty. Ca. Litt. 96.

II. At what time, and in what manner, the distrain should be made.

A distrain for rent cannot be made in the night: Nor may gates, &c. be broke open to make a distrain; or the landlord enter into the tenant's house for that purpose, unless the doors are open. 1 Inst. 142, 161. One may break an inner door of a house, &c. to take the distrain; if the outer doors be open. Camb. 17. Rep. Temp. Hardw. Annals. p. 168. Browning v. Darn and others. Where a landlord comes to distrain cattle, which he sees on the tenant's ground, if the tenant, or any other, to prevent the distrain, drives the cattle off the land, the landlord may make fresh pursuit, and distrain them: Tho' if before the distrain, the owner of the cattle renders his rent, and a distrain is taken afterwards, it is wrongful. 1 Inst. 107, 160.

Two distraints cannot be taken for one rent, if there were sufficient goods when the first distrain was made; but if there were not then a sufficient distrain, there may. Cro. El. 13. Lutw. 1536. But by stat. 17 Car. 2. cap. 1. When the value of cattle distrained shall be found not to be of the value of the arrears of rent, for which the distress taken, the person distraining, his executors, &c. may take further distresses, for such arrears. 1 Nelf. 670.

A distress of cattle must be brought to the common pound, or be kept in an open place; and if they are put into a common pound, the owner is to take notice of it at his peril; but if in any other open place, notice is to be given to the owner, that he may feed them; and then if the cattle die for want of food, the tenant shall bear the loss; and the landlord may distrain again for his rent. 5 Rep. 90. 1 Inst. 47, 96. See infra. Where one impounds cattle distrained, he cannot justify the tying them in the pound: If he ties a beast, and it is strangled, he must answer it in damages. 1 Salk. 248. If the person distraining put the distress in a broken pound, and the distress escapes, he can have no action for the same: 'tis otherwise if from another pound, without his default, when he may have action of trespass. Salk. Ibid. By statute, none shall drive a distress out of the county, on pain to be fined and amerced: and no distress of cattle shall be driven out of the hundred where taken to any pound, except to a pound overt in the same county, and not above three miles distant; nor shall any distress be impounded in several places under the penalty of 5*l.* and treble damages. 32 H. 3. c. 4. 1 P. & M. cap. 12.

After a distress is in the pound, it is said to be in custodia legis, so that the owner of it hath no absolute property therein; and therefore he cannot sell or forfeit it, nor may the same be taken in execution, &c. but it must be as a pledge or means to help the party distraining to his debt or duty. Co. Litt. 190. Finch's Ley 135. Cattle distrained may not be used, because by law they are only as a pledge; unless it be for the owner's benefit, by milking, &c. 2 Cro. 148.

When a distress is taken of household goods, or other dead things, they are to be impounded in a house, or other pound covert, &c. And if the distress is damaged, the distrainer must answer it. Wood's Inst. 191. And they are to be removed immediately; except corn or hay, by Stat. 2 W. & M. sess. 1. cap. 5. But if a landlord doth not remove goods immediately, but quits them till another day, during which time they are taken away, it is not a rescous, for want of possession. Mod. Ca. 215. 1 Nelf. 672. See the next head.

Where goods are unlawfully distrained, the owner may rescue them, before they are impounded; but not afterwards. 1 Inst. 47. But the safest way is to replevy, as there are few cases in law, where a man is allowed to be his own judge, if any. If lands lie in several counties, a distress may be made in one county for the whole rent. 1 Inst. 154. And if a landlord comes into a house, and seizes upon some goods as a distress, in the name of all the goods in the house; this is a good seizure of all. 6 Mod. 215. If any distress and sale be made where there is no rent due, the owner of the goods distrained shall recover double the value of the goods, and full costs, by 2 W. & M. Sess. 1. c. 5. Also by the Common law, if a lord or other person shall distrain several times for his service or rent, when none is in arrear, the tenant may have an assise de sovrein distress, &c. F. N. B. 176. See Recapition, Replevin and Rescous.

By the Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20. Justices in their warrants of distress, are to limit a time for the sale of the goods; the constable making such distress may deduct the reasonable charges of detaining, keeping, and selling such distress, out of the money arising by the sale; and the overplus, if any, after such charges, and also the penalty or sum of money, shall be fully paid, shall be returned to the owner of the goods distrained; and the constable, if required, shall shew the warrant to the party whose goods are distrained, and suffer a copy thereof to be taken.—This act not to alter, or repeal the statutes, 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. and 1 Geo. 1. c. 6. relating to Distresses on Quakers for Tithes and Church Rates. See the Statutes 2 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5. 6 Ann. c. 14. 8 Ann. c. 14. and 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Distress for rent by 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. which has much altered our law in this case: if any tenant of lands or tenements shall fraudulently carry away his goods, to prevent distress, the landlord may, within thirty days after, distrain them where-ever they shall be found, as if they had been on the premises; but no such goods shall be distrained, if sold bona fide for valuable consideration before seizure, to any person nor privy to the fraud. Tenants committing such fraud, or others assisting, shall forfeit double the value of the goods carried off, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. And where they shall not exceed 50*l.* value, the landlord may exhibit a complaint before two justices of peace, who are to examine the fact, and enquire into the value of the goods, and thereupon order the offender to pay double value, leviable by distress and sale; and for want thereof, commit the offender to the house of correction for six months. Landlords, or their agents, may, with the assistance of a constable, seize any goods fraudulently concealed in any house, outhouse, &c.

And in case of a dwelling-house, on oath first made to some justice, of reason to suspect that such goods are therein, may break open the same, and distrain them: they may also distrain for rent and cattle, or stock of their tenants, feeding in any common; or corn, grass, hops, fruits, &c. growing on the land, which they shall cut, gather, cure and lay up when ripe, in any proper place, giving notice to the tenant within a week where lodged, and dispose thereof towards the satisfaction of the rent and charges; the appraisement to be taken when cut or cured: but if after a distress so taken, before the product be ripe and gathered, the tenant shall pay the rent, and charges of the distress, the said distress shall cease. Persons may secure distresses lawfully taken, and sell them upon the premises in like manner as may be done off the same, by 2 W. & M. Sess. 1. c. 5. And any persons may go to and from the premises, to view, appraise, buy, or take away the goods of the purchaser; and if a rescous be made for the distress, the persons aggrieved shall have the remedy given by the said statute. Distresses made for rent justly due, shall not be unlawful, nor distrainers, trespassers ab initio, for any irregularity in the disposition thereof; but the parties grieved to have satisfaction for special damage, in an action of the case, &c. But no tenant shall recover by such action, if tender of amends hath been made before the action brought. And in all actions of trespass, or on the case relating to the entry, distress, or sale, made by landlords for rents, the defendants may plead the general issue, and if the plaintiffs become non-suit, &c. shall recover double costs of suit. Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. See Least. Vide the Statute.

Distress of the King. By the Common law no subject can distrain out of his fee or seignory; unless cattle are driven to a place out of the fee, to hinder the lord's distress, &c. But the King may distrain for rent service, or fee-farm, in all the lands of the tenant where-soever they be; not only on lands held of himself, but of others: where his tenant is in actual possession, and the land manured with his own beasts, &c. 2 Inst. 132. 2 Danv. Abr. 643.

Distress of a Town. If a town be assessed to a certain sum, a distress may be taken in any part, subject to the whole duty. 2 Danv. 643.

Distribution of intestates estates, according to the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. may be sued for as well in the Chancery, as in the Ecclesiastical Court: and if the persons appointed to have it, die before a distribution made, their shares go to their executors, &c. 2 Chan. Rep. 374. Where the remainder or surplus of an estate, not disposed of by will, shall go and remain to the next of kin, by the statute of distributions. Vide 2 Fern. 361, 676. See Administrator, also Executor and Intestates, and 29 Car. 2. c. 3. 1 Jon. 2. c. 17. and 14 Geo. 2. c. 20.

Distributione Saccarid. A Statute so called. 51 H. 3. c. 4.

Distress (districus). A territory, or place of jurisdiction: the circuit wherein a man may be compelled to appear; also the place in which one hath the power of distraining: and where we say hery de seu fee, out of the fee, it has been used for extra districtum suum. Brit. c. 120.

Distringas. Is a writ directed to the sheriff, or other officer, commanding him to distrain a man for a debt to the King, &c. or for his appearance at a day. There is a great a great diversity of this writ; which was sometimes of old called constringas. F. N. B. 138. There is also a distingas against persons intitled to privilege of parliament.

Distingas Juratores, Is a writ directed to the sheriff, to distrain upon a jury to appear; and return issues on their lands, &c. for non appearance. Where an issue in fact is joined to be tried by a jury, which is returned by the sheriff in a panel upon a venire facias for that purpose; thereupon there goes forth a writ of distingas jurator, to the sheriff, commanding him to have their bodies in court, &c. at the return of the writ. 1 Lill. Abr. 483. And the writ of distingas jur ought to be delivered to the sheriff so timely, that he may warn the jury to appear four days before the writ is returnable, if the jurors live within forty miles of the place of trial; and eight days if they live farther off. Ibid. 484. There may be an alias, or pluries distingas jur where the jury doth not appear.

Dividends of Bankrupts Effects. Assignees within twelve months after commission issued, to give twenty-one days notice of a meeting for a dividend, then produce their accounts, and verify them on oath if required, when the commissioners are to direct a dividend. Within eighteen months after the commission, a final dividend is to be made. See Black. Com. 2 P. 487, 488, and the statutes concerning Bankrupts.

Dividend in the Exchequer, Is taken for one part of an indenture. 10 Ed. 1. c. 11.

Dividend in the University, Is that part or share which every one of the fellows do justly and equally divide among themselves of their annual stipend.

Dividend in Law Proceedings, A dividing of fees and perquisites between officers arising from writs, &c. Practif. Solic.

Dividend of Merchants, Is where a just share of profits in trade, is assigned to any one.

Dividend in Stocks, A dividable proportionate share of the interest of stocks, erected on publick funds; as the South Sea, India, Bank, and African stocks, &c. payable to the adventurers half yearly.

Divisa, Hath various significations: sometimes it is used for a device, award or decree: sometimes for devise of a portion or parcel of lands, &c. by will: and sometimes it is taken for the bounds or limits of division of a parish, or farm, &c. As divisas perambulare, to walk the bounds of a parish; in which sense it has been extended to the division between countries, and given name to towns, as to the Devises, a town in Wiltshire, situate on the confines of the West Saxon and Mercian kingdoms. Leg. H. 2. cap. 9. Leg. Inæ, c. 44. Leg. H. 1. c. 57. Cowel.

Distil on the Neck. A tormenting engine made of iron, straitening and winching the neck of a man with his legs together, in a horrible manner, so that the more he stirreth in it the straiter it presseth him; formerly in use among the persecuting papists. Fox's Acts sub R. H. 8.

Divorce, (divortium a divorcendo) Is a separation of two, de facto married together, made by law: it is a judgment spiritual; and therefore if there be occasion, it ought to be reverfed in the spiritual court. Co. Lit. 335. And besides sentence of divorce; in the old law, the woman divorced was to have of her husband a writing called a bill of divorce, which was to this effect, viz. I promise that hereafter I will lay no claim to thee, &c.

There are many divorces, mentioned in our books; as causa præcontractus; causa frigiditatis; causa consanguinitatis; causa affinitatis; causa professionis, &c. But the usual divorces are only of two kinds, i. e. a mensa & thoro, from bed and board; and a vinculo matrimonii, from the very bond of marriage. A divorce a mensa & thoro dissolveth not the marriage; for the cause of it is subsequent to the marriage, and supposes the marriage to be lawful: this divorce may be by reason of adultery in either of the parties, for cruelty of the husband, &c. And as it doth not dissolve the marriage, so it doth not debar the woman of her dower; or bastardise the issue, or make void any estate for the life of husband and wife, &c. 1 Inst. 235. 3 Inst. 89. 7 Rep. 43. The woman under separation by this divorce, must sue by her next friend; and she may sue her husband in her own name for alimony. Wood's Inst. 62.

A divorce a vinculo matrimonii, absolutely dissolves the marriage, and makes it void from the beginning, the causes of it being precedent to the marriage; a præcontract with some other person, consanguinity or affinity, within the Levitical degrees, impotency, impuberty, &c. On this divorce dower is gone; and if by reason of præcontract, consanguinity, or affinity; the children begotten between them are bastards. 1 Inst. 335. 2 Inst. 93, 687. But in these divorces, the wife, 'tis said, shall receive all again that she brought with her, because the nullity of the marriage arises through some impediment; and the goods of the wife were given for her advancement in marriage, which now ceaseth: but this is where the goods are not spent; and if the husband give them away during the coverture without any collusion, it shall bind her: if she knows her goods unspent, she may bring action of detinue for them; and as for money, &c. which cannot be known, she must sue in the spiritual court. Dyer 62. Nelf. Abr. 675. This divorce enables the parties to marry again. But in the other cases, if either party wants to marry any other person, a power for so doing must be obtained by act of parliament.

Where lands were formerly given to husband and wife, and the heirs of their bodies in frank marriage; if they had been afterwards divorced, the wife was to have her whole lands; and by divorce an estate tail of baron and feme, 'tis said, may be extinct. Godb. 18. After sentence of divorce is given in the spiritual court causa præcontractus, the issue of that marriage shall be bastards, so long as the sentence stands unrepealed: and no proof shall be admitted at Common law to the contrary. 1 Inst. 235. 1 Nelf. 674. And issue of a second marriage in such case, may inherit until the sentence is repealed. 2 Leon. 207. Though it is not so where the divorce is a mensa & thoro, for adultery, &c. in which case the marriage still continues. Cro. Car. 462. And if after a divorce a mensa & thoro, either of the parties marry again, the other being living, such marriage is a mere nullity; and by sentence to confirm the first contract, she and her first husband become husband and wife to all intents, without any formal divorce from the second. 1 Leon. 173. Also on this divorce, as the marriage continues, marrying again while either party is living, hath been held within the statute, 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. Felony, for having married a second husband or wife, the former being alive; where a woman was divorced, and inhibited by the statute not to marry during her husband's life. Cro. Car. 333. 1 Nelf. 674.

A divorce for adultery was anciently a vinculo matrimonii; and therefore in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the opinion of the church of England was, that after a divorce for adultery, the parties might marry again; but in Foliambe's case, H. 44. El. in the star-chamber, that opinion was changed; and archbishop Bancroft, by the advice of divines, held, that adultery was only a cause of divorce a mensa & thoro. 3 Salk. 138.

On a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, by reason of præcontract, &c. the parties may marry again: and in divorces for adultery, several acts of parliament have allowed the innocent party to marry again. Sentence of divorce must be given in the life of the parties, and not afterwards: but it may be repealed in the spiritual court, after the death of the parties. 1 Inst. 33, 244. 7 Rep. 44. 5 Rep. 98. Upon the divorce of a man and his wife, equity will not assist the wife in recovering dower, at the husband's death, but shall leave her to the law; neither ought the spiritual court to grant her administration, she not being such a wife as is intitled to it; nor will the Chancery decree her a distributive share. Preced. Canc. 111, 112. A divorce shall be tried by the bishop's certificate; and not by a jury.

Disturnal, Signifies as much land as can be ploughed in a day, with an ox; in some authors, it is written diuturna. Blount.

Docket, or Dogget, Is a brief in writing on a small piece of paper or parchment, containing the effect of a greater writing. 2 U. 3 P. & M. cap. 6. West Symbol. par. 2. feff. 106. And when rolls of judgments are brought into C. B. they are docketed, and entered on the docket of that term; so that upon any occasion you may soon find out a judgment, by searching these dockets, if you know the attorney's name. Exemplification of decrees in Chancery are also docketed. See Practif. Astorn edit. 1. p. 155. 166.

Dogs. The law takes notice of a greyhound, mastiff dog, spaniel and tumbler; for wrover will lie for them. 1 Cro. 125. 2 Cro. 46. A man hath a property in a mastiff, and where a mastiff falls on another dog, the owner of that dog cannot justify the killing the mastiff, unless there was no other way to save his dog, as that he could not take off the mastiff. 1 S. 84. 3 Salk. 139. The owner of a dog is bound to muzzle him if mischievous, but not otherwise; and if a man doth keep a dog, that useth to bite cattle, &c. if after notice given to him of it, his dog shall do any hurt, the master shall answer for it. Ibid. By Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 18. Very severe penalties are inflicted on dog-stealers.

Doctrines, illegal, affecting, or publishing. Several statutes have been made on this subject, as to the publication of news, &c. See 13 Car. 2. c. 1. 1 Edm. c. 3. 13 Eliz. c. 1. 6 Ann. c. 7. And also see Blount P. C. 60. as to misprison against the King's person and government, by speaking or writing against them, &c. and Black. Com. 2. p. 123.

Dog-Days, (die caniculares). Are the hottest time of the year, by reason the sun is then in Leo: they are reckoned sixty-four in all, tertius idus Julii usque ad idus Septembris.

Dog-days. Is a manifest depredation of an offender against venison in a forest, when he is found drawing after a deer, by the scent of a hound led by his master, or where a person hath wounded a deer, or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and is caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the fangs. Mansfield, par. 2. cap. 8.

Dogger. A light ship or vessel; as a Dutch dogger, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 1.

Dogger-ships. Are ships brought in these ships. Stat. ibid.

Dogger-ships. Fishermen that belong to dogger-ships. 25 H. 8. c. 2.

Doggin, or dait. Was a base coin of small value, prohibited by the Stat. 3 Off. 5. c. 1. We still retain the phrase, in common saying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a dait.

Do Latu, (facere legem) Is the same with to make law. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 12.

Dole, (dole) A Saxon word signifying as much as part or portion in the law; and anciently where a meadow was divided into several shares, it was called a dole meadow. 4 Jac. 1. cap. 13. See Dalus.

Doleful, Dole is to be the share of gab, which the gabmen, yearly employed in the North Sea, do customarily receive for their allowance. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 7.

Dolehouse, (law) A recompence or amends, for a feat or wound. Stat. Dist. Lib. Mansf. Reg. cap. 23.

Dolus, A piece of foreign coin, going for about 47. 6d. See Mansf.

Domicellus, (Sax.) Signifies liber judicialis, as appears by the laws of K. Ed. 1. This, 'tis said, was a book of summe of the English Saxons, wherein the laws of the ancient Saxon Kings were contained. Leg. Hen. c. 20.

Dome, or Domes, (from the Sax. dom) A judgment, sentence, or decree. And several words and in law, as Allegem, condemn, &c. from whence they may be applied to a jurisdiction of a lord, or a king. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. fol. 154. Also dome is a dim of a church; such as St. Paul's, &c.

Dome-book, or Liber judicialis. A book composed under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom, containing the local customs of the several provinces of the kingdom. This book is now lost. Black. Com. 1. p. 62. 65. See ibid. p. 404.

Domesday, (liber judicialium vel consuetudinum Anglie) Is a most ancient record, made in the time of William I. called the Conqueror, and now remaining in the Exchequer fair and legible, consisting of two volumes; a greater and a less; the greater containing a survey of all the lands in England, except the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, Durham, and part of Lancashire, which it is said were never surveyed, and excepting Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk; which three last are comprehended in the lesser volume. There is also a third book, which differs from the others in form more than matter, made by the command of the same King. And there is a fourth book kept in the Exchequer which is called Domesday; and though a very large volume, is only an abridgment of the others. Likewise a fifth book is kept in the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, which has the name of Domesday, and is the very same with the fourth before mentioned. Our ancestors had many dome-books: King Alfred had a roll which he called Domesday; and the Domesday book made by Will. I. referred to the time of Edward the Confessor, as that of King Alfred did to the time of Ethelred. Vide ante. The fourth book of Domesday having many pictures, and gile letters in the beginning, relating to the time of King Edward the Confessor, this led him who made notes on Finsbury's Register into a mistake in p. 14. where he tells us, that liber Domesday factus fuit tempore regis Edwardi.

The book of Domesday was begun by six justices, assigned for that purpose in each county, in the year 1081, and finished anno 1086. And it is generally known, that the question whether lands are ancient demesne, or not, is to be decided by the Domesday of Will. I. from whence there is no appeal; and it is a book of that authority, that even the Conqueror himself submitted some cases, wherein he was concerned, to be determined by it. The addition of day to this Dome-Book was not meant with any allusion to the final day of judgment, as most persons have conceived; but was to strengthen and confirm it, and signifieth the judicial decisive record or book of damning judgment and justice. Hammond's Annales. Camden calls this book Gubermis Libere Consuetudinis, the Tax Book of King William; and it was further called Magna Rollo Winton. The dean and chapter of York have a register styled Domesday; so hath the bishop of Worcester; and there is an ancient roll in Chester castle, called Domesday Roll. Blount. The editor (J. M.) hath been informed, that two learned gentlemen are transcribing Domesday for publication, which will be a very valuable acquisition to the publick.

Doms-men, Judges, or men appointed to doom, and determine suits and controversies: hence apud me, I deem, or judge. Vide Doms-men.

Domicellus. Is an old obsolete Latin word, anciently given as an appellation or addition to the King's natural sons in France, and sometimes to the eldest sons of noblemen there; from whence we borrowed these additions: as several natural children of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, are styled domicelli by the charter of legitimation. 20 R. 2. But according to Thorn, the domicelli were only the better sort of servants in monasteries.—Domicellus Abbas et Domicelli et Servientes Monasterii, p. 1748, 1750.

Domicellum. Is sometimes used to signify danger; but otherwise, and perhaps more properly, it is taken for power over another; sub domigerio alicujus vel manu esse. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 1. cap. 19.

Domsina. A title given to honourable women, who anciently in their own right of inheritance held a barony. Paroch. Antiq.

Dominica in Ramis Dalmatarum, Palm Sunday. Anno 23 Ed. 1.

Dominium. Signifies right or regal power. Paroch. Antiq. 498.

Dominus. This word prefixed to a man's name, in ancient times usually denoted him a knight, or a clergyman; and sometimes a gentleman, not a knight, especially a lord of a manor.

Domo Negrande. Is a writ that lies for one against his neighbour, by the fall of whose house he fears a damage and injury to his own. Reg. Orig. 153.

Domus Conversorum. Was an ancient house built or appointed by King Hen. 3. for such Jews as were converted to the Christian faith; but King Ed. 3. who expelled the Jews from this kingdom, deputed the place for the custody of the rolls and records of the Chancery. See Rolls.

Domus Dei. The hospital of St. Julian in Southampton, so called. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. 440.

Donatio Mortis Causa, A death-bed disposition of property so called, viz. when a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods, (under which have been included bonds, and bills drawn by the deceased upon his banker) to keep in case of his decease. This gift, if the donor dies, needs not the assent of his executor; yet it shall not prevail against creditors: and is accompanied with this implied trust, that, if the donor lives, the property thereof shall revert to himself, being only given in contemplation of death or mortis causa. Prec. Chan. 269. 1 P. Wms. 406. 411. 3 P. Wms. 357. Black. Com. 2 V. 514.

Donative, (donativum) Is a benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his order. F. N. B. 35. And donatives are so termed, because they began only by the foundation and erection of the donor. Clergym. Law 120. The King might of ancient time found a church or chapel, and exempt it from the jurisdiction of the ordinary: so he may by his letters patent give licence to a common person to found such a church or chapel, and make it donative, not presentable; and that the incumbent or chaplain shall be deprived by the founder and his heirs; and not by the bishop, which seems to be the original of donatives in England. Gwin's Readings.

When the King founds a church, &c. donative, it is of course exempted from the ordinary's jurisdiction, though no particular exemption is mentioned; and the Lord Chancellor shall visit the same: and where the King grants licence to any common person to found a church or chapel, it may be donative, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the bishop, so as to be visited by the founder, &c. 1 Inst. 134. 2 Roll. Abr. 230. The resignation of a donative must be to the donor or patron, and not to the ordinary; and donatives are not only free from all ordinary jurisdiction, but the patron and incumbent may charge the glebe to bind the successor; and if the clerk is disturbed, the patron may bring quare impedit, &c. Also the patron of a donative may take the profits thereof when it is vacant. 1 Inst. 344. Cro. Jac. 63.

If the patron of a donative will not nominate a clerk, there can be no lapse: but the bishop may compel such patron to nominate a clerk by ecclesiastical censures; for though the church is exempt from the power of the ordinary, the patron is not exempted: and the clerk must be qualified like unto other clerks of churches; no person being capable of a donative, unless he be a priest lawfully ordained, &c. Yelv. 61. Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. 1 Lill. 483.

There may be a donative of the King's gift with cure of souls, as the church of the Tower of London is: and if such donative be procured for money, it will be within the statute of simony. Mich. 9 Car. B. R. A parochial church may be donative, and exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction. Godolph. 262. The church of St. Mary le Bone in Middlesex is donative, and the incumbent being cited into the spiritual court, to take a licence from the bishop to preach, pretending that it was a chapel, and that the parson was a stipendiary; it was ruled in the King's Bench that it was a donative; and if the bishop visit, the court of B. R. will grant a prohibition. 1 Med. 90. 1 Nels. Abr. 676.

If a patron of a donative doth once present his clerk to the ordinary, and the clerk is admitted, instituted, and inducted, then the donative ceaseth; and it becomes a church presentative. 1 Inst. 344. But when a donative is created by letters patent, by which lands are settled upon the parson and his successors, and he is to come in by the donation of the King, and his successors; in this case, though there may be a presentation to the donative, and the incumbent come in by institution and induction, yet that will not destroy the donative. 2 Salk. 541. All bishopricks, being of the foundation of the King, they were in ancient time donatives. 3 Rep. 75.

Donis, Statute de, The statute of Westm. 2. viz. 13 Ed. 1. c. 1. called the statute de donis conditionalibus. This statute revives, in some sort, the ancient feudal restraints which were originally laid on alienations, by enacting, that from thenceforth the will of the donor be observed; and that the tenements so given, (to a man and the heirs of his body) should at all events go to the issue, if there were any; or if none, should revert to the donor. See very judicious observations, &c. on this statute, Black. Com. 2 V. 112.

Donor, and Donce. Donor is he who gives lands or tenements to another in tail, &c. And the person to whom given is the donee.

Dormitory, (dormitorium) Is the common room or chamber, where all the freres, or religious of one convent sleep and lay all night. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 11.

Dossal, A word used for hangings or tapestry. — Dossile seu Tapeſtum. Mat. Par.

Dote Assignanda, Is a writ that lay for a widow, where it was found by office, that the King's tenant was seised of lands in fee, or fee tail at the day of his death, and that he held of the King in chief, &c. In which case, the widow came into the Chancery, and there made oath, that she would not marry without the King's leave; whereupon she had this writ to the escheator, to assign her dower, &c. But it was usual to make the assignment of the dower in the Chancery, and to award a writ to the escheator, to deliver the lands assigned unto her. Stat. 15 Ed. 4. cap. 4. Reg. Orig. 297. F. N. B. 263. See Dower.

Dote unde nihil habet, Is a writ of dower, that lies for the widow against the tenant who bought land of her husband in his life-time, whereof he was solely seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, and of which she is dowable. F. N. B. 247. See Dower.

Double Plea, (duplex placitum) Is where a defendant alledgeth for himself two several matters, in bar of the plaintiff's action, when one of them is sufficient; which shall not be admitted: as if a man plead several things, the one not depending upon the other, the plea is accounted double, and will not be allowed; but if they mutually depend on each other, and the party may not have the last plea without the first, then it shall be received. Kirch. 223. And where a double plea that is wrong, is pleaded; if the plaintiff reply thereto, and take issue of one matter; if that be found against him, he cannot afterwards move in arrest of judgment; for by the replication it is allowed to be good. 13 Ed. 4. 17.

If a man pleads two or more matters, when he is compelled to shew them, it makes not the plea double; so it is where two distinct things are pleaded, which require but one answer: and in case a man pleads two several matters or things, and only one is material, the other being surplusage, or but matter of inducement, and needing no answer, the plea is not double. Hob. 197. Where there are several inducements to a plea, they shall not make the plea double: and double pleas are allowable in assizes of novel disseisin, &c. but not in other actions. Just. Cant. 75.

By Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. ſect. 4. It shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with the leave of the same court, to plead as many several matters thereto, as he shall think necessary for his defence. That is, in so many separate and distinct pleas, and where there are more pleas than one. By virtue of this statute defendant is said to plead double, by leave of the court.

An heir shall not have leave to plead non per defectum with another plea, except he make affidavit that he has non per defectum; nor shall an administrator have leave to plead plene administravit, and no assets, without an affidavit that he has no assets. 10 Mod. 334. Trin. — Gr. B. R. Carrington v. Warren. See gr. If this practice of making an affidavit in these cases is now in use? Yet see Notes in C. B. 228. 234.

A motion was made for liberty to rejoyn double, as being within the equity of the act, which allows pleading double. But the court said, that they thought that this would be intirely inconvenient, and out of the reason of the act, and and therefore refused it. 2 Barnard. Rep. 6. Trin. 5. Geo. 4. Anon.

After a judge's order for time to plead, pleading an issuable plea, defendant moved to plead double matter, and the question was, whether a rule for that purpose ought to be granted or not? The court took time to consider, and after conferring with the judges of other courts, gave defendant leave to plead double, pleading issuable pleas, and taking short notice of trial. Notes in C. B. 244. Mich. 210 Geo. 2. Leighton v. Leighton.

Defendant had pleaded non assumpsit infra sex annos, and moved to add to that plea, non assumpsit generally, which was denied. After defendant had pleaded a single plea, he cannot have leave to plead double. Notes in C. B. 245. Hill. 10 Geo. 2. Nevill v. Fisher.

The court gave defendant leave to plead double, viz. a distress for damage feasant and for time in arrears. This is not stronger than Nec gully and liberam testamentum, solviti ad diem, and a marital debt, which have been granted. Notes in C. B. 247. Trin. 11 & 12 Geo. 2. Baynes v. Lutwidge.

All pleas ought to be single, that the jury may not be troubled and perplexed with too many things at once. Smith's Rep. Angl. lib. 2. c. 13.

Double Quarrel. (duplex querela) Is a complaint made by any clerk, or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical; as to give sentence, institute a clerk, &c. and seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed: the effect whereof is, that the archbishop taking notice of the delay, directs his letters under his authentical seal to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the ordinary within a certain number of days to do the justice required, or otherwise to appear before him or his official, and there alledge the cause of his delay: and to signify to the ordinary, that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear and shew cause against it, he himself, in his ex parte of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the justice that is due. Corwell.

Doubles. (Fr.) Signify as much as letters patent. Stat. 14 H. 6. c. 6.

Doyen Peters. Were trivialis poets, assigned at the instance of the barons in the reign of K. H. 1. to be privy counsellors to the King, or rather conservators of the kingdom.

Dover Castle. The constable of Dover castle shall not hold plea of any foreign county within the castle gates, except it concern the keeping of the castle; nor shall he distrain the inhabitants of the ports, to plead elsewhere or otherwise than as they ought, according to the charters, &c. 2 Ed. 1. c. 7.

Dowry. To give or endow, from the Latin word do.

Dowager. (Latinata, dotissa) A widow endowed; applied to the widows of Princes, Dukes, Earls, and other great personages.

Dowager. (Queen) Is the widow of the King, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as Queen consort. Betwixt her and high treason to conspire her death, or violent her chastity; because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. But no man can marry her, without special licence from the King, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. 2 Inst. 18. See Riley's Pleas. Park. 672. and Black. Com. 1. p. 264.

Dowry. (dotarium) Is a portion which a widow hath of the lands of her husband after his death, for the sustentance of herself, and education of her children. 1 Inst. 30.

Under this head is to be considered,

- I. The several kinds of dowry.
- II. What women shall be endowed, and of what estate.
- III. Of the assignment and administration of dowry.
- IV. What shall be allowed a bar of dowry.
- V. Of the proceedings in dowry.

I. Of the several kinds of dowry.

There were formerly five kinds of dowry in this kingdom. 1. Dowry by the Common law, which is a third part of such lands or tenements whereof the husband was sole seised in fee-simple, or fee-tail, during the coverture; and this the widow is to enjoy during her life.

2. Dowry by custom, which is that part of the husband's estate to which the widow is intitled after the death of her husband, by the custom of any manor or place, so long as she lives sole and chaste, and this is more than one third part, for in some places she shall have half the land, as by the custom of garthland; and in divers manors the widow shall have the whole during her life, which is called her free bench: but as custom may enlarge; so it may abridge dowry to a 4th part. 1 Inst. 33.

3. Dowry ad ostium ecclesie, made by the husband himself immediately after the marriage, who named such particular lands of which his wife should be endowed; and in ancient time it was taken, that a man could not by this dowry, endow his wife of more than a third part, though of less he might: and as the certainty of the land was openly declared by the husband, the wife after his death might enter into the land of which she was endowed without any other assignment. 1 Inst. 34. Litt. Sect. 39.

4. Dowry ex assensu patris, which likewise was of certain lands named by a son who was the husband, with the consent of his father, and always put in writing as soon as the son was married; and if a woman thus endowed, or ad ostium ecclesie, after the death of her husband, entered into the land allotted her in dowry, and agreed therein, she was concluded to claim any dowry by the Common law. Litt. Sect. 41.

5. Dowry de la plus belle, which was where the wife was endowed with the fairest part of her husband's estate; but of all these writs of dowry, the two first are now only in use. 1 Nels. Abr. 679.

II. What women shall be endowed, and of what estate.

Dowry is much favoured in law, being for the benefit of widows: wherefore the wife of one non compos mentis, of an idiot, outlaw, or one attainted of felony, may be endowed: but not of a person attainted of treason; nor the wife of an alien, Jew, &c. 1 Inst. 33, 37. Stat. 1 Ed. 6. cap. 12. 5 Ed. 6. c. 11.

The wife of a man who is banished shall have dowry in his life-time; 'tis held otherwise, if he is profess'd in religion: and a jointress of a banish'd husband, shall enjoy her jointure, in his life. 1 Inst. 333. Park. 5, 307.

If a woman be of the age of nine years, at the death of her husband, she shall be endowed of whatsoever age he be; because after the death of the husband, the marriage is adjudged lawful. 1 Inst. 33. Where the husband's estate is such, that by no possibility issue begotten on his wife might inherit as heir to him; there the wife may not be endowed: as if lands are given to a man and the heirs he shall beget on his present wife, and she dies; and then he takes another wife, she shall not have dowry: but in case land be given to the husband and wife in tail, the remainder in tail to the husband, and the first wife dying without issue, he marries another wife; this second wife will be entitled to dowry, after his death. Litt. Sect. 53. 40 E. 3. 4. 2 Shep. Abr. 63. For here he hath an estate in tail. The wife of a tenant in common, but not a jointenant, shall have dowry; and she shall hold her part in common with the tenants in common. Kitch. 160.

The wife of a fel de se shall have dowry. Plow. 261. a. 262. a. So if the husband be outlawed in trespass, or any civil action, for this works no corruption of blood, or forfeiture of lands. Bro. 82. Perk. 388. Co. Litt. 31. a.

If a woman being a lunatick kill her husband, or any other, yet she shall be endowed, because this cannot be felony in her who was deprived of her understanding by the act of God; so though she be of sound mind, and refused to bring an appeal of his death, when he is killed by another, yet she shall be endowed; for this is only a waiver of that privilege the law has given her to be avenged of her husband's murderer; so it seems if she refuses to visit and assist her husband in his sickness, yet she shall be endowed, for this is only undutifulness, which which the law does not punish with the loss of her entire subsistence. Perk. 364, 365.

With respect to the estate whereof a woman is dowable.

By our law, all the goods and chattels of the wife, are the husband's; and if she be an inheritrix, the husband holds her land during her life; also if he hath issue by her, he shall hold it for his own life, by the curtesy of England: And if he have any land in fee, whereof he is possessed during the marriage, she is to have a third part thereof for her life, as her dower; though she bring nothing to the husband, and whether she have issue by him or not. Lit. 36.

There are three things to intitle dower, viz. Marriage, seisin, and death of the husband: the marriage, must be good and lawful; and continue to the husband's death; and a wife shall be endow'd of a seisin in law, as well as of a seisin in deed; as where lands and tenements descend to the husband, before entry, he hath but a seisin in law, and yet the wife shall be endow'd although it be not reduc'd to an actual possession. 1 Inst. 31, 32, &c. And it is not necessary that seisin should continue during the coverture; for if the husband alien the lands, &c. the wife shall be nevertheless endow'd. Ibid. 32, 33. If lands are exchange'd by the husband for other lands, the wife may be endow'd of which lands she will, as the husband was seised of both; though she may not be endow'd of the lands given and taken in exchange. 1 Inst. 31.

Where the estate, which the husband hath during the marriage, is ended, there the wife shall lose her dower. New Nat. Br. 333. But of an estate-tail in lands determined, a woman shall be endow'd; in like manner as a man may be tenant by the curtesy of her lands. 1 Inst. 31. And if a wife be endow'd of her third part, and afterwards evicted by an elder title; she shall have a new writ of dower, and be endow'd of the other lands. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. Though this is, where it is the immediate estate descended to the heir; and not when it is the estate of an alienee. 9 Rep. 17. The wife is dowable where lands were recovered against the husband by default or covin: and a woman deforced of her dower shall recover damages, viz. the value of her dower from her husband's death. 13 E. 1. 20 H. 3. If the husband doth not die seised, after demand and refusal to assign dower to her, she shall have damages from the time of the refusal. Fink. Cent. 45. She shall be endow'd of a reversion, expectant on a term of years; and of a rent reserved thereon. Lutw. 729. If the husband hath only an estate for life, remainder to another in tail, though the remainder over is to his heirs, the wife shall not be endow'd. 2 Danv. 656. A woman shall not be endow'd of the goods of her husband; nor of a castle, or capital messuage: But of all other lands and tenements she may. 1 Inst. 35.

A grantee of a rent in fee or tail, dies without heir, his wife shall be endow'd: But not where the rent arises upon a reservation to the donor and his heirs, on a gift in tail, and the donee dies without issue; for this is a collateral limitation. Plowd. 156. F. N. B. 149. If during the coverture, the husband doth extinguish rents by release, &c. yet she shall be endow'd of them; for as to her dower, in the eye of the law, they have continuance. 1 Inst. 32. And where a rent is descended to the husband, but he dies before any day of payment; notwithstanding the wife shall be endow'd of it. 1 H. 7. 17. If lands are given to the husband and wife in tail, and after the death of the husband, the wife disagrees, she may recover her dower; for by her waving her estate, her husband in judgment of law was sole seised ab initio. 3 Rep. 27. If lands are improved, the wife is to have one third according to the improved value. 1 Inst. 32. And if the ground delivered her be sowed, she shall have the corn. 2 Inst. 81.

Dower is an inseparable incident to an estate in tail or fee that cannot be taken away by condition: If one seised in fee of lands make a gift in tail, on condition that the wife shall not have dower, the condition is void. 6 Rep. 41. If tenant in tail die without issue, so that the land reverts to the donor; or in case he covenants to stand seised to uses, and dies, his wife will be endow'd: And a wife of land by the husband to his wife by will, is no bar of her dower, but a benevolence. 2 Rep. 34. Yelp. 51. Bro. Dower 69. It is held, that land devised to a man's wife, who is intitled to dower of his lands (it not being mentioned in satisfaction of her dower) shall be taken as a voluntary gift, and not any recompence or bar of dower: And in this case the widow brought a writ and recover'd, against which the heir could have no relief. Preced. Canc. 152. A person grants and conveys land to D. and his heirs, on condition, to redeem the same back, &c. which afterwards he does, and dies; here D.'s widow may nevertheless be endow'd. Ab. Cas. 217. A. is tenant in tail of lands, the remainder to B. in tail, remainder to A. in fee; if A. bargains and sells the land to C. and his heirs, the wife of the bargainee shall have dower, determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. 10 Rep. 96. And if a feoffment be made upon condition to reassign; and the feoffee take a wife, she may have her dower till reassignment, or an entry made for not doing it: And so 'tis of other defeasible estates. 2 Rep. 59. Perk. Stat. 428. If one be disinherited, and after marry, if he die before entry, his wife shall not have dower: And where a person recovers land in a real action, and before his entry or execution made he dieth, the wife shall not be endow'd of this land. 2 Rep. 56. Perk. 397. In these cases the husband was not actually seised, sed in re, as before observed, where there is a seisin in law, she shall be endow'd. 1 Inst. 31, 32, &c. So that these rules depend on the construction of what is, and what is not a seisin, in law. And see Diz. IV. towards the end, and Perk. 379, 380.

Of copyhold lands a woman shall not be endow'd, unless there be a special custom for it; but if there be a custom to be endow'd thereof, then she shall have the assistance of such laws as are made for the more speedy recovery of dower in general, being within the same mischief, and therefore shall recover damages within the statute of Merton. 4 Co. 32. Hob. 216. 5 Co. 116.

Of times women were not dowable till 32 H. 8. c. 7. for before that statute times were not a lay fee, but now they are dowable of them. Seyl's P. R. 122. 11.

Of an advowson, be it appendant or in gross, a woman shall be endow'd, for this may be divided as to the fruit and profit of it, viz. to have the third presentation. See Perk. 343, 344. F. N. B. 148, 150. Ca. Lit. 32. Cre. Jac. 621. Cre. Elic. 360. 1 Rel. Abr. 683. Ca. Lit. 379. 3 Lam. 155. Cre. Jac. 691.

The estate, of which the husband must be seised, must be an estate in fee-simple, fee-tail general, or where the husband is seised as heir of the special tail, which necessarily excludes defendible freeholds; therefore if a man makes a lease for life, rendering rent to him and his heirs, and after marry, and die, his wife shall not be endow'd of this rent, because it is but a defendible freehold; nor of the land, because not seised during the coverture. 1 Rel. Abr. 676. Plow. 256. 10 Co. 98. See a Dow. 656.

III. Of assignment and administration of dower.

At common law, dower is assigned by the sheriff, by the King's writ, or by the heir, &c. by agreement among themselves: And the wife cannot enter otherwise into her dower. 1 Inst. 15. By the ancient law of England, till Magna Charta, a woman was to continue a whole year in her husband's house, for the assignment of her dower. 2 Inst. 17. By our Statute, a widow shall immediately after her husband's death leave her marriage inheritance; and remain in his chief house forty days, within which time dower is to be assign'd her of the third part of all his lands. &c. 3 H. 1. c. 7. The assignees of the lands is so be for her life; and if lands are assign'd to a woman for years, in recompence of dower; this is no bar of dower; for it is not such an estate therein as she should have. 2 Danv. Abr. 681. Also where other land is assigned to the woman, that is no part of the lands wherein she claims dower; that assignment will not be good or binding: And there must be certainty in what is assigned; otherwise though it be by agreement, it may be void.

void. 4 Rep. 2. 1 Inst. 34. If a wife accept and enter upon less land than the third of the whole, on the sheriff's assignment, she is barred to demand more. Moor 679. But if where a wife is intitled to dower of the lands of her first husband; her second husband accepts of this dower less than her third part, after his death she may refuse the same, and have her full third part. Fitz. Dower, 121.

If a wife having right of dower in the land, accept of a lease for years thereof after the death of her husband, it suspends the dower; though not such acceptance of a lease before the husband's death. Ec. for then the wife has only a title to have dower, and not an immediate right of dower. Bro. ca. 372. Fitz. Cent. 15. A widow accepting of dower of the heir, against common right, shall hold it subject to the charges of her husband; but otherwise it is if she be endowed against common right by the sheriff. 2 Danw. 672. By provision of law, the wife may take a third part of the husband's lands, and hold them discharged. Ibid. If dower be assign'd a woman on condition, or with an exception; the condition and exception are void. Cro. Eliz. 541. Detaining of charters concerning the same land of which the widow demands her dower, is a good plea by the heir in delay of her dower: But if she delivers up the evidences, she shall have judgment; though if she denies the demand, and it is found against her, she loses her dower. Ec. 109. 9 Rep. 19.

Where there are three manors, one of them may be assign'd to the wife in dower in lieu of all the rest, though it is said that a third part of every manor ought to be assign'd. Moor 12, 47. The sheriff may assign a rent out of the land in lieu of dower; and her acceptance of the rent will bar dower out of the same land, but not of other lands. 2 And. 31. Dyer 91. 1 Nell. Abr. 680. When no division can be made of what the wife is dowerable, dower is to be assigned in a special manner; as of the third presentation to a church, the third toll-dish of a mill; common certain, a third year; the third part of the profits of an office, fair, market, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 678.

A woman intitled to dower cannot enter till it be assigned to her, and set out either by the heir, tenant or sheriff in certainty. 1 Roll. Abr. 681. Dyer 343. Plowd. 529. Bro. 16. Ca. Lit. 34. b. 37. a. b.

None can assign dower but those who have a freehold, or against whom a writ of dower lies; therefore a tenant by statute merchant, statute staple, or elegit, or lessee for years cannot assign dower, for none of these have an estate large enough to answer the plaintiff's demand. Perk. 403, 404. Ca. Lit. 35. Bro. 63, 94. 1 Roll. Abr. 681. 6 Co. 57.

If a woman be dowerable of land, meadow, pasture, wood, &c. and any of these be assigned in lieu of dower of all the rest, it is good, though it be against common right, which gives her but the third part of each; for the heir's enjoyment of the residue sufficiently accounts for her title to what she has. 1 Roll. Abr. 683. Macr. pl. 42. 66.

If lands whereof a woman hath no right to be endowed, or a rent out of such lands be assigned in lieu of her dower, this does not bar her demand of dower, for she having no manner of title to those lands, cannot without livery and seisin be any more than tenant at will, which is no sufficient recompence for an estate for life, which her dower was to be. Perk. 407. Ca. Lit. 34. 4 Co. 1. Ca. Lit. 169. Bro. 3.

As to admeasurement of dower.

If the husband at age assign to the wife more land in dower than she ought to have, he himself shall have a writ of admeasurement of dower at full age by the Common law; so if too much be assigned in dower by the heir within age, or his guardian in chivalry; and the heir dies, his heir shall have such writ, to rectify the assignment; but the heir, in whose time the assignment of too much was by the guardian, cannot have such writ till his full age, because till then the interest of the guardian continues; and if any wrong be done, it is to the guardian himself, and not to the heir; if a disseisor assigns too much, the heir of the disseisor shall have admeasurement by the Common law. F. N. B. 148. Co. Lit. 39. a. 2 Inst. 367.

If the heir within age, before the guardian enters, assigns too much in dower, the guardian shall have a writ of admeasurement of dower by the statute of W. 2. c. 7. before which statute the guardian had no remedy, because the writ of admeasurement being a real action, lay not for the guardian, who had but a chattel; also by the same statute it is provided, that if the guardian pursue such writ feintly, or by collusion with the wife, the heir at full age shall have a writ of admeasurement, and may allege the feint pleading or collusion generally. 2 Inst. 367.

If the wife after assignment of dower improves the lands, so as thereby they become of greater value than the other two parts, no writ of admeasurement lies; so if they be of greater value, by reason of mines open at the time of the assignment, no writ of admeasurement lies, because the land in quantity was no more than she ought to have; and then 'tis lawful to work the mines, which were open at the time of such assignment. F. N. B. 149. 2 Inst. 368. 5 Co. 12.

IV. What shall be deemed a bar of dower.

If a wife levies a fine with her husband, she debars herself of her dower: And if a common recovery be had against the husband and wife, of the husband's lands, it shall bar the wife of her dower. 2 Rep. 74. Plowd. 514. Where a woman releases her right to him in reversion, her dower may be extinguish'd. 8 Rep. 151. If a wife commits treason or felony; or if she elope from her husband, and live with the adulterer willingly, without being reconciled to the husband, she shall lose and forfeit her dower; but if the husband be reconciled to her, and she lives with him again, she shall be endow'd. 2 Inst. 453. Dyer 106. And if after elopement of the wife, her husband and the demean themselves as husband and wife, it is evidence of reconciliation. Dyer 106. If a man grants his wife with her goods to another, and the wife by virtue of the grant lives with the grantee during the life of the husband, this shall forfeit her dower; for she lived in adultery, notwithstanding the grant. 1 Inst. 135. 2 Danw. 662. 2 Inst. 435.

When a jointure is made of lands after marriage, the wife may waive it, and demand her dower: But it is otherwise when made before marriage, according to the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 10.

If a jointure be made to the wife during the coverture, and after the husband and wife levy a fine thereof; yet this is no bar to her dower of any other lands of her husband's, because the jointure being made after the marriage, she had election after the death of the husband to refuse it, and claim dower, and not before, and then the fine levied of the jointure before her time for election of dower was come, can be no bar for electing of dower when it is come. 1 Bull. 173. 1 Leon. 285. Dyer 358.

If a woman takes a lease for life of her husband's lands after his death, she shall have no dower, because she cannot demand it against herself; and if she takes a lease for years only, yet she shall not sue to have dower during these years, because it was her own act to suspend the fruit and effect of her dower during that time. Perk. 350. F. N. B. 149. Mo. pl. 193.

If a recovery be had against the husband by collusion, this shall not bar the wife of dower; as if the recovery be by confession, or reddition, which are always understood to be by collusion, the husband always acting and concurring in obtaining of them; but it seems to have been a very great doubt, whether a recovery by default should not be a bar: and the better opinion being that such recovery was a bar at Common law; therefore the statute of W. 2. cap. 4. was made, which ordains that notwithstanding such recovery by default, &c. pleaded, the tenant shall moreover in bar of the dower shew his right to the woman recovered; and if it be found that he had no right, then shall the demandant recover her dower, notwithstanding such recovery by default against her husband. 2 Inst. 349. Perk. 376.

By the statute of W. 2. cap. 4. it appears that if the recoverer had right, then the wife is barred; therefore if the heir of the disseisor be in by descent, and the disseisor enters upon him, and marries, and the heir of the disseisor recovers by default, or reddition, in a writ of entry, in nature of an assise, and the husband dies, his wife shall not have dower, because he, who recovered, had right to the possession by the descent; aliter, if this disseisin, descent, &c. were after marriage, because the husband was seised before of a rightful estate during the coverture, whereof his wife had title of dower, which cannot be defeated by the disseisin, descent and recovery, which all happened during the coverture. Perk. 379, 380.

If the husband levy a fine with proclamation of his lands, and dies, his wife is bound to make her claim within five years after his death; otherwise she shall be barred of her dower; for though her title of dower was not consummate at the time of the fine levied; yet it being initiate by the marriage and seisin of the husband, the fine begins to work upon it presently after the husband's death; and if she does not claim it within five years after, she shall be barred. 2 Co. 93. 10 Co. 49, 99. 3 Inst. 216. Hob. 265. Mo. pl. 154, 879. Dyer 224. 13 Co. 20.

V. Of the proceedings in dower.

The wife is, as soon as she can after the decease of her husband, to demand her dower, lest she lose the value from the time of his death: And in action of dower, the first process is summons to appear: And if the tenant or defendant do not appear, nor call an effoin, a grand cap lies to seize the lands, &c. But on the return of the writ of summons, the attorney for the tenant or defendant may enter with the filazer that the tenant appears, and prays view, &c. Then a writ of view goes out, whereby the sheriff is to shew the tenant the land in question; upon the return of which writ of view, the tenant's attorney takes a declaration, and puts in a plea; the most general one is, ne unques seixie, &c. viz. that the husband was never seised of any estate, whereof the wife can be endowed; and when issue is join'd, you must proceed to trial, as in other actions: Upon trial, the jury are to give damages for the mean profits from the death of the husband (if he die seised) for which execution shall be made out; and then you have a writ to the sheriff to give possession of a third part of the lands. Pract. Soli. p. 335, 336. A widow may recover her dower in cessat executio, in case there be any thing objected precedent to the title of dower, &c. till that is determined. 1 Nelf. 684, 687. 1 Salk. 291. Judgment in dower is to recover a third part of lands and tenements per Metas & Bendas. A wife may have her writ of dower against an heir, an alienage, a disseisor, &c. or against any one that has power to assign dower; if the lord enters on the land for an escheat, she may bring it against him, but to the King she must sue by petition. 9 Rep. 10. Plowd. 141. Dyer 263. 1 Inst. 59. This writ was brought against eight persons feoffees of the husband after marriage, two confessed the action, and the other six pleaded to the issue; here the demandant had judgment to recover the third part of two parts of the land, in eight parts to be divided: And after the issue being found for the demandant against the six, she recovered against them the third part of the six parts of the same land as her dower. Dyer 187. 1 Co. Inst. 32.

At the Common law, before the statute of W. 2. c. 39. if a woman had accepted any part of her dower, though never so small, of any one tenant in any one county or town, she had no other remedy for the residue, but by a writ of right of dower; for if she brought a writ of dower unde nihil habet, it was a good plea in abatement, that she had accepted such a part of such a tenant, in such a town or county; which being a great mischief to the woman is remedied by that statute, which provides that it shall be no plea in abatement, to say that she hath received part of her dower of any other person before the writ purchased; and this extends as well to guardian in chivalry as to the tenant of the land, because such guardian is to render her dower. 2 Inst. 261.

As to damages in dower they are given by the statute of Merton, c. 1. but that statute extends only to the possessory action of dower unde nihil habet, and not to the writ of right of dower, because they are intended to be given for the detention of the possession; and on writs of right, where the right itself is questionable, no damages are given, because no wrong done till the right be determined; also that statute extends only to lands, whereof the husband died seised; and therefore judgment for the damages was reversed, because the jury did not find that the husband died seised; for otherwise she shall have no damages; as if the husband aliens and takes back an estate for life, the wife shall recover dower, but no damages; because this dying seised was only of an estate of freehold; but if he makes a lease for years only, rendering rent, she shall recover a third part of the reversion with a third part of the rent and damages, because there he died seised as the statute speaks. Co. Lit. 32. Dyer 284. pl. 33. Yelv. 112. Dr. and Stud. lib. 2. c. 13. f. 166. 2 Inst. 80.

Damages must be after demand of dower, for the heir is not bound to assign this provision till demanded, because the law casts the freehold of the whole upon him, which he cannot divide without the concurrence of the wife; but a demand in pais before good testimony is sufficient; and if the heir appear the first day on summons, and plead that he hath been always ready, and still is, to render her dower; she may plead such request, and issue may be taken upon it, but the feoffee of the heir cannot plead non tempus pretit, because he had not the land all that time since the death of the ancestor, and therefore she shall recover the mesne profits, and damages against him, and if he hath not provided his indemnity and recompence against the heir, it is his own folly. Co. Lit. 32.

If the heir or feoffee assign dower, and the wife accepteth thereof, she loses her damages, because having the dower, which is the principal, she cannot sue for the damages, which are but consequential or accessory. Co. Lit. 33. a.

Damages are given in dower from the death of the husband, and to the return of the writ of enquiry, though the writ of seisin issued a year before, but was not executed. Dobson v. Dobson and others. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annals 19, &c. Where there are two jointenants in dower, and one dies after judgment for damages, and his heir and the other jointenant bring error, the value from the time of the judgment to the affirmance, cannot be recovered against the surviving plaintiff in error only. Id. Kent & Kent, 50. See 2 Stra. 971. On a writ of dower, damages cannot be awarded by the 16. Car. 2. without speeding a writ of enquiry. Same case, Annals 51.

As in great estates jointures of lands are usually made in lieu and satisfaction of dower, these actions of dower are not so frequently brought as they were formerly.

Tem. 2. fol. 598.* And according to Spelman, they are such as at the coming of Will. 1. called the Conqueror, being put out of their estates, were afterwards restored thereunto; on their making it appear that they were owners thereof, and neither in auxilio, or consilio, against him. Spelm.

Drengage, (Drengagium) The tenure by which the drenches or *drenge*s held their lands. Trin. 21 Ed. 3. Ebur. & Northumb. Rot. 191.

Drift of the Forest, (Agitatio animalium in Foresta) Is a view or examination of what cattle are in the forest, that it may be known whether it be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts are, and whether they are commonable, &c. These drifts are made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest; when all the cattle of the forest are driven into some pound or place inclosed, for the purposes afore-mentioned; and to the end it may be discovered whether any cattle of strangers be there, which ought not to be common. Manu. par. 2. c. 15. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13. 4 Inst. 309.

Drinklean, (in some records Potura Drinklean) Was a contribution of tenants, in the time of the Saxons, towards a potation, or ale, provided to entertain the lord, or his steward.

Drodenne, Signified with our Saxon ancestors, a grove, or woody place, where cattle were kept; and the keeper of them was called Drofnan. Domelday.

Drofland, or Drofland, Another Saxon word, signifying a tribute or yearly payment made by some tenants to the King, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets. Cowel.

Droit, Right, Is the highest writ of all other real writs whatsoever, and hath the greatest respect, and the most assured and final judgment; and therefore is called a writ of right, and in the old books droit. Co. Litt. 138. There are divers of these writs used in our law, such as the following.

Droit de Ransom.

Droit de Retour.

Droit de Vaine.

Droit de Vaine.

Droit de Vaine.

Droit de Vaine.

All these several writs of right, and their various uses, see Refts. and Writs, and the several titles to which these writs belong.

Dromones, Dromes, Dromunda, Signified at first high ships of great burden, but afterwards those which we now call men of war. Walsing. Anno 1292. — Tres majores naves subsequenter, quas vulgo dromones appellant. — Mat Paris. sub ann. 1191.

Drobers, Are those that buy cattle in one place to sell in another: They are to be married men and householders, and be licensed by statute, 5 Eliz. c. 12. And if they drive their cattle on the Lord's day, they shall forfeit 20 s. by 1 Car. 1. c. 1.

Druggeria, A place of drugs, or druggists shop: And druggists and their wares. Vide Coffie.

Drunkenness, Is an offence for which a man may be punished in the Ecclesiastical court; as well as by justices of peace by statute: And by 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. And 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. If any person shall be convicted of drunkenness by the view of a justice, oath of one witness, &c. he shall forfeit five shillings for the first offence, to be levied by distress and sale of his goods; and for want of a distress shall sit in the stocks six hours: And for the second offence, he is to be bound with two sureties in ten pounds each, to be of the good behaviour, or be committed. And he who is guilty of any crime, through his own voluntary drunkenness, shall be punished for it as if he had been sober. Co. Litt. 247. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2. It has been held, that drunkenness is a sufficient cause to remove a magistrate: And the prosecution for this offence by the statutes of 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. was to be, and still may be, before justices of peace in their sessions, by way of indictment, &c. Equity will not relieve against a bond, &c. given by a man when drunk, unless the drunkenness is occasioned through the management or contrivance of him to whom 'tis given. Johnson v. Medlicott, n. 3 P. Wall. 130. See 1 Inst. 247. Plovid. 19. & Black. Com. 4 V. 25. 26.

Dry Exchange, (Cambium Siccum) Is a term invented in former times for the disguising and covering of usury; in which something was pretended to pass on both sides, whereas in truth nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called dry. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 5. See Cowel.

Duces tecum, Is a writ commanding a person to appear at a certain day in the court of Chancery, and to bring with him some writings, evidences, or other things which the court would view. Reg. Orig. So subpoenas duces tecum, are often sued out at Common law, to compel witnesses, to produce, on trials, at Nisi prius, deeds, bonds, bills, notes, books, &c. memorandums, &c. which are in their custody or power, and which relate to the issue in question. But if they are in the possession or power of the adverse party or his attorney, 'tis customary, to give notice to the attorney to produce them, and on proof made in open court, before the judge of Nisi prius, of such notice, the court generally compels the attorney, or his client, to produce the same, if material.

Duces tecum lites languidus, A writ directed to the sheriff, upon a return that he cannot bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus; then the court grants a babeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum lites languidus. Book. Entr. But this is now out of use; and certainly where the person's life would be endangered by removal, the law would never permit it to be done.

Ducking-Stool. See Castigatory.

Dues, ecclesiastical, nonpayment of. Various dues to the clergy, are cognizable in the spiritual court; which makes decrees for their actual payment. Offerings, oblations, and oblationes, not exceeding the value of 40 s. may be recovered in a summary way, before two justices of peace. By 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 6. Black. Com. 3 V. 89, 90.

Duel, (Duellum) in our ancient law is a fight between persons in a doubtful case, for the trial of the truth. Plac. But this kind of duel is disused; and what we now call a duel is a fighting between two, upon some quarrel precedent: Wherein, if a person is killed, both the principal and his seconds are guilty of murder, and whether the seconds fight or not. H. P. C. 47, 51. But this cannot mean as to the principals, where a quarrel arises, and they suddenly draw and fight, without deliberating. It is said by some, that the seconds of the the person killed are equally guilty, by reason of the encouragement which they give by joining with him: But this is contradicted by others. 1 Hawk. 82. Where two persons in cool blood meet and fight upon a precedent quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of murder; and cannot excuse himself by alledging that he was first struck by the deceased, or that he had declined to meet him, was prevailed upon to do it by his importunity, or that it was not his intent to kill, but only to vindicate his reputation, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 81.

If two persons quarrel over night, and appoint to fight the next day; or quarrel in the morning, and agree to fight in the afternoon; or such a considerable time after, by which it may be presumed the blood was cooled; and then they meet and fight a duel, and one kill the other, it is murder. 3 Inst. 52. H. P. C. 48. Kel. 56. And whenever it appears, that he who kills another in a duel, or fighting on a sudden quarrel, was master of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder; as if after the quarrel he fall into another discourse, and talk calmly thereon; or alledge that the place where the quarrel happens is not convenient for fighting; or that his shoes are too high, if he should fight at present, &c. Kel. 56. 1 Lev. 180.

If one challenge another, who refuses to meet him, but tells him that he shall go the next day to such a place about business and then the challenger meets him on the road, and assaults the other; if the other in this case kill him, it will be only manslaughter; for here is no acceptance of the challenge, or agreement to fight: And if the person challenged refuseth to meet the challenger, but tells him that he wears a sword, and is always ready to defend himself; if then the challenger attack him, and is killed by the other, it is neither murder nor manslaughter, if necessary in his own defence. Kel. 56.

It is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel; or to be the messenger of such a challenge; or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight, or by dispersing letters for that purpose, full of reflection, &c. 1 Sid. 186. 3 Inst. 158. And persons convicted of barely sending a challenge, have been adjudged to pay a fine of 100 l. to be imprisoned for a month, and make a public acknowledgment of their offence, and to be bound to their good behaviour. 1 Hawk. P. C. 135. 138. The court of King's Bench hath often granted informations against persons sending or giving challenges.

See Lord Bacon's charge touching duels, in his works, quarto edit. 2 V. 563. And a decree of the Star-chamber against duels, 2 V. 571. See farther as to duels, Black. Com. 4 V. 145, 185, 199. and Robert. Hist. Emp. Char. V. 2 V. 303, 4.

Duke, (Lat. Dux, Fr. Duc, a Ducendo) Signified among the ancient Romans, duxorem exercitus, such as led their armies; since which they were called duces, and were governors of provinces, &c. In some nations, the sovereigns of the country are called by this name; as the Duke of Savoy, &c. In England, the title of Duke is the next dignity to the Prince of Wales: And the first Duke we had in England was Edward the Black Prince, so famed in our English histories for heroick actions; who was created Duke of Cornwall in the 11th year of King Edw. 3. After which, there were more made in such manner as that their titles descended to their posterity; and during the late reigns their number hath been greatly increased. They are created with solemnity, per insigniam gladii, cappæ & circuli aurei in capite impositionem. Catod. Brit. p. 166. See Black. Com. 1 V. 397, 408.

Dum fuit infra ætatem, Is where an infant maketh a feoffment of his lands; when he cometh of full age, he may have this writ to recover those lands and tenements which were so aliened: And within age, he may enter into the land and take it back again, and by his entry he shall be remitted to his ancestor's right. New Nat. Br. 426. If the husband and wife alien the wife's land, during the nonage of both of them, the wife at her full age after the death of the husband, shall have a writ of dum fuit infra ætatem. M. 14 E. 3. By this writ to the sheriff, he shall command A. that he render to B. who is of full age, two messuages and lands, &c. which B. demised to him, while he was within age, as he saith; or into which the said A. hath not entered, but by C. to whom he said B. the same demised; and unless, &c. F. N. B. 477.

Dum non fuit compos mentis, Is a writ that lies where a man that is not of sound memory aliens any lands or tenements, then he shall have this writ against the alienee. And he shall alledge that he was not of sane memory, but being visited with infirmity, lost his discretion for a time, so as not to be capable of making a grant, &c. New Nat. Br. 429. But see Disability. The law seldom allows a man to falsify himself. As to the writ, see F. N. B. 202.

Dun, Down, In which termination it hath ended into den, signifies a mountain or high open place; so that the names of those towns which end in dun, or den, as Ashden, &c. were either built on hills, or near them in open places. Domsday.

Dunsetts, Those who dwell on hills or mountains. Dunum and Duna, A down or hill: And dunarium is used in the same sense. Char. dat. 25 Ed. 3. Penns. Decret. & Cap. Eccl. Cant. Christ. Onan.

Duodena, A jury of twelve men—Tunc Justiciar. ad duodena foris alia duodena. Walsing. 126.

Duobus manu. Twelve witnesses to purge a criminal of an offence. See Jurasse duodecim manu, and Black. Com. 2 V. 343.

Duobus Quarta, A process ecclesiastical; double quarrel.

Duplicate, Is used for the second letters patent, granted by the Lord Chancellor, in a case wherein he had before done the same; which were therefore thought void. Crompt. Juris. fol. 215. But it is more commonly a copy or transcript of any deed or writing, account, &c. or a second letter, written and sent to the same party and purpose as a former, for fear of miscarriage of the first, or for other reasons: This word is mentioned in the Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 20. 'Tis also the name of a prisoner's discharge, given by the quarter sessions, &c. to an exigent debtor, who takes the benefit of an act, for relief of imprisoned debtors, with respect to the imprisonment of their persons.

Duplicity in pleading. This must be avoided, as it begets confusion. Every plea must be simple, intire, connected, and confined to one single point: It must never be entangled with a variety of distinct independent answers to the same matter; which must require as many different replies, and introduces a multitude of issues upon one and the same point. The Stat. of 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. which gives leave to plead several pleas by permission of the court, is, for this reason of great service; because, a man may plead a variety of matters in single pleas, in bar to the action. See Black. Com. 3 V. 311. See also Montesquieu De L'Esprit des Loix. Liv. vi. ch. 4.

Durante absentia, Administration. An administration granted when the executor is out of the realm, to continue in force till his return.

Durante minore ætate, Administration. An infant can't act as executor till seventeen, during which minority this administration is granted.

Durden, A thicket of wood in a valley. Cowel.

Durety, (Duritia) Is where one is wrongfully imprisoned or restrained of his liberty contrary to law, till he seals a bond or other deed to another; or threatened to be killed, wounded, or beaten if he doth not do it: And a bond or deed so obtained is void in law. Bract. in his Abridgment, joins durety and minors together, i. e. hard-ship and threatnings: If one under a just cause of being imprisoned, killed, &c. enters into a bond so fit, that threatens him, it is durety per minas, and may be pleaded to avoid the bond: But it must be a threatening of life or member, or of imprisonment, and not of a charge only; or to take away goods, &c. 1 Inst. 166. 2 Inst. 483. But it has been adjudged, that if a man makes a deed by durety done to him by taking of his cattle, tho' there be no durety to his person, yet then shall avoid the deed. 2 Darv. Abr. 686. If a person threaten another to make a deed to a third person, it is by duress, and void; as if such third person had made the threatening. 2 Inst. 482. 3 Inst. 92. 4 Inst. 97. And where a man is imprisoned until he makes a bond at another place; if afterwards he doth it when at large, the bond is by duress, and void.

But if a person be arrested upon an action at the suit of another, and the cause of action is not good, if he make a bond to a stranger, it is not duress; though if he make it to the plaintiff, it is, and being sued upon the bond, he may plead it was made by duress, and so avoid it: Also the party shall have an action for the false imprisonment itself. 1 Rep. 119. Park. Sess. 16. Crompt. Jur. 296. 1 Lill. Abr. 494. If one imprisoned make an obligation by duress, and after he is at large takes a defeasance upon it; this will stop him to say it was made per duress. And where A. and B. by duress to B. seal a bond or deed, it may be good as to A. that was never threatened. 3 H. 6. 15. Bro. 19. Mich. 7 Jac. 7. If a man be lawfully in prison, and makes an obligation against his agreement and will, he may avoid it by duress: Though it is otherwise if he do it of his good will. 43 E. 3. 10. 2 Baro. 686.

A man shall not avoid a deed by a duress to a stranger. For it hath been hold that none shall avoid his own deed for the imprisonment or danger of any other than of himself only. Cas. Jac. 187. And yet a son shall avoid a deed by duress to the father: And the husband shall avoid a deed made by duress to the wife; though a stranger shall not avoid a deed made by duress to his master, or the master the deed sealed by duress of his servant. 2 Baro. 686. If a man is taken by virtue of a process issuing out of a court that hath not power to grant it; or in custody on a false charge of felony, &c. and for his deliverment and discharge gives bond, &c. this may be avoided, as taken by duress. Cra. El. 646. 4 Inst. 93. Allen 92.

A statute merchant may be avoided by audita mendaciis, because it was made by duress, or imprisonment. A will shall be avoided by duress or menace of imprisonment. A fioffment made by duress is voidable; but not void. But no averment shall be taken against a deed inrolled, that it was made by duress. 1 Roll. Abr. 862. 2 Baro. 686. A marriage had by duress is voidable: And by statute, obligations, statutes, &c. obtained of women by force, to marry the persons to whom made, or otherwise, unless for a just debt, are declared void. 31 H. 6. c. 9. If a person executes a deed by duress, he cannot plead non est factum, because it is his deed; though he may avoid it by special pleading, and judgment of assise, &c. 5 Rep. 119. Records may not regularly be said to be made by duress, and therefore shall not be avoided by this plea or pretence. 2 Shep. Abr. 319.

Durham. The bishoprick of Durham was dissolved, and the King to have all the lands, &c. by stat. 7 Ed. 6. But this act was afterwards repealed, and the bishoprick new elected, with all jurisdiction ecclesiastical and temporal annexed to the county palatine. The justices of the county palatine of Durham may levy rates of lands in the county: And writs upon proclamation, &c. are to be directed to the bishop. 3 Elm. c. 27. 31 Elm. c. 2. Also writs to elect members of parliament in the county palatine of Durham shall go to the bishop or his chancellor, and be returned by the sheriff, &c. Stat. 21 Car. 2. c. 9.

As in the county palatine of Durham, see Black. Com. 1. 7. 116. As to its courts, see Black. Com. 3. 7. 78 and 4 Inst. 206. 213. 215.

Durety. Signifies spem without wounding or bloodshed, vulgarly spem without.

Dutty Feet. Dutty Feet; pedlars or traders who have no settled habitation, and they give their name from their feet being covered with dirt, by their continual travelling. See Superior Court.

Dutty of Lancaster. Is a court of the Dutty Chamber of Lancaster held at Westminster before the Chancellor, for matters concerning the lands and franchises of the dutty. And the proceedings in this court are by English bill, as in Chancery. 4 Inst. 204. The original of it was in Henry the Fourth's days, who obtaining the crown of England by deposing Richard II. and having the dutty of Lancaster by descent in right of his mother, was seized thereof as King, and not as Duke. But at length by authority of parliament he passed a charter, whereby the possessions, liberties, &c. of the said dutty were severed from the crown, and so left to posterity.

Of this court, Gwin (in his preface to his Readings) says thus: The court of the dutty of Lancaster grew out of the grant of King Edward III. who gave that dutty to his son John of Gaunt, and endowed it with royal rights and privileges; and for as much as it was afterwards extinct in the person of King Henry IV. by reason of the union thereof with the crown, the same King (suspecting himself to be more rightfully Duke of Lancaster, than King of England) determined to save his right in the dutty, whatever should befall the kingdom; and therefore he separated the dutty from the crown, and settled it in the natural persons of himself and his heirs, as if he had been no King. In which estate it continued during the reigns of Hen. 5. and Hen. 6. But when Edw. 4. recovered the crown, and recontinued the right of the House of York, he appropriated that dutty to the crown again, so that he suffered the court and officers to remain as he found them; and in this manner it came together with the crown to Hen. 7. who approving the policy of Henry, and by whose right he obtained the kingdom, made a like separation of the dutty, and so left it. It is now under the superior county palatine. Vide Lancaster Office of this Court, see Chancellor of the Dutty of Lancaster.

The court of the dutty chamber of Lancaster, (according to Blackstone) is a special jurisdiction, held before the Chancellor of the dutty or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to the lands holden of the King in right of the dutty of Lancaster, which is a thing very distinct from the county palatine, and comprizes much territory which lies at a vast distance from it; as particularly a very large district within the city of Westminster. It seems that the courts of Chancery and Exchequer, on the same side have a concurrent jurisdiction with this court. 4 Inst. 206. 1 Chanc. Rep. 55. Tubb. 145. Hardr. 171. Black. Com. 3. 7. 78.

Duties of person. Allegiance is the duty of the people, protection the duty of the magistrate; but they are reciprocally the rights, as well as duties of each other. Allegiance is the right of the magistrate, and protection the right of the people. Black. Com. 3. 7. 123.

Duty. Any thing that is known to be due by law, and thereby recoverable, is a duty before it is recovered; because the party interested in the same hath power to recover it. 1 Lill. 495.

Dwelling house. A man may assemble people together lawfully (at least if they do not exceed eleven) without danger of raising a riot, rout, or unlawful assembly, in order to protect and defend his house; which he is not permitted to do in any other case. 1 Hal. P. C. 547. Black. Com. 4. 7. 224.

Dwindle. signifies any thing consumed; from whence comes the word dwindle.

Dyers. No dye may dye any cloth with orchel; or with Brazil, to make a false colour in cloth, wool, &c. on pain of 20 s. Stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 21. Dyers are to fix a seal of lead to cloths, with the letter M. to show that they are well washed, &c. or forfeit 3 s. and not to use logwood in dying, on pain of forfeiting 20 s. Stat. 21 Elm. c. 9. Repealed 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 31. 26. And penalties are inflicted on dyers, who dye any cloths deceitfully, and not being dyed throughout with wool, indico and mather; also marks shall be put to the cloths dyed, &c. Dyers in London are subject to the inspection of the Dyers Company, who may appoint searchers; and out of their limits, justices of the peace are persons to appoint them: Opposing the searchers, entails 10 s. penalty, by stat. 13 Geo. 1. c. 24.

Dynges. An officer that hath the care and oversight of the dutty and drains in fenny countries; as of Dynges fen, &c. mentioned in the stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 71.

Drage or Drong. A misanthropic flag over the dead; from the Teutonic drang to drudge and drudge, whence it is a laudatory term. Quint.

Drengum. A dier or dog. —Faint can totu at ples dytend, to sing harvest home. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

E.

Ealeus. From the Sax. Eale, Cervisia, & Hui, Domus. An ale-house: In the law of King Alfred we often find this word.

Ealtes. The privilege of assising and selling ale and beer. It is mentioned in a charter of King Hen. 2. to the abbot of Glashbury.

Ealderman. (or Ealdorman). Among the Saxons was as much as Earl with the Danes. Camd. Brit. 107. Also an elder, senator, &c. Ealdermen or aldermen, are now those that are associated to the mayor or chief officer in the common council of a city or borough town. Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. See Aldermen, and Black. Com. 1 V. 398. and Squire's Ang. Sax. Gov. 161, 197, 220, n. and 257, n. and Lord Lyt. Hist. H. 2. V. 2. 215.

Earl. (Sax. Eorle, Lat. Comes) This title was a great title among the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage, there being no title of honour used by our present nobility that was likewise in use by the Saxons except this of Earl; which was usually applied to the First in the Royal Line. Verfagan deriveth this word from the Dutch Ear, i. e. Honour, and Estel, which signifies Noble: But whence soever it is derived, the title Earl was at length given to those who were associates to the King in his council and martial actions; and the method of investiture into that dignity was per cincturam gladii, without any formal charter of creation. Dugdale's Warwicksh. 302. William the First, called the Conqueror, gave this dignity in fee to his nobles, annexing it to this or that county or province; and allotting them for the maintenance of it a certain portion of money arising from the prince's profits, for the pleadings and forfeitures of the provinces. Camd. And formerly one Earl had divers shires under his government, and had lieutenants under him in every shire, such as are now sheriffs; as appears by divers of our old statutes. Quint. But about the reign of King John and ever since, our Kings have made Earls of counties, &c. by charter, giving them no authority over the county, nor any part of the profits arising out of it; only sometimes they have had an annual fee out of the Exchequer, &c. An Earl Comes, was heretofore correlative with comitatus; and anciently there was no Earl, but had a shire or county for his earldom; but of late times the number of Earls very much intreating, several of them have chosen for their titles some eminent part of a county, considerable town, village, or their own seats, &c. Then, besides those local Earls; there are some personal and honorary; as Earl Marshal of England, and others nominal, who derive their titles from the names of their families. Lex Constitutionis, p. 78. Their place is next to a Marquis, and before a Viscount: And as in very ancient times, those who were created Count or Earl, were of the blood royal; our British monarchs to this day call them in all publick writings, Our most dear Cousin: They also originally did, and still may use the style of Nor. Sec. Countess; and the references after the word Ealdorman.

Earnest. Money paid in part of a larger sum, or part of the goods delivered, on any contract, &c. which being done, by way of earnest, the property of the goods is absolutely bound by it: And the lender may recover the goods by action, as well as the vendor may the price of them. And by 29 Car. 2. c. 3. No contract for sale of goods, to the value of 10 l. or more, to be valid, unless such earnest is made or given. Black. Com. 2 V. 447. 448.

Easement. Affamentum, from the Fr. Aije, (i. e. Commoditas) Is denoted to be a service or convenience, which one neighbour hath of another, by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his land, a sink, or such like. Quint. 105. A person may prescribe to an easement in the freehold of another, as belonging to some ancient house, or to land, &c. And a way over the land of another; a gate-way, water-course, or washing place in another's ground, may be claimed by prescription as easements. But a multitude of persons cannot prescribe; though for an easement they may plead custom. Cre. Jar. 170. 3 Leon. 254. 3 Mod. 294. To allege an easement by custom only, is the best way: And things of necessity shall not be extinguished by unity of possession; but a way of easement may be thus extinguished. Litt. Abr. 496. See Prescription.

Easter. Was the name of a goddess which the Saxons worshipped in the month of April, and so called, because she was the goddess of the East. Blount. But in our church it is the feast of the Easter, in commemoration of the sufferings of our Saviour Christ.

Callintus. (Sax. Eap-Tyde) Is an eastern coast or country; also the east promontory side of a river, &c. —Si sit estintus, & p. p. northintus amendet— Leg. K. Edw. 1.

Call India Company. of Merchants, and their privileges, began in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when they obtained divers charters and charters to carry on their trade, as Blax. 1. c. 2. The company to have the sole trade to the East Indies; and others trading there without licence, shall forfeit their ships and goods, and double value. Continuance of ships and goods trading to India under new foreign commissions prohibited. 25 Car. 2. c. 26.

Many acts of parliament have been made, and many new regulations, &c. too numerous to insert, and too particular for a treatise of this kind: we must therefore refer to the statutes, and to the Merchants Lawyer, How. 1. c. 1.

Calves-droppers. Persons that listen under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thence to frame slanderous and mischievous tales, are a common nuisance, and presentable at the court-leet; or are indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine, and finding sureties for good behaviour. Relich. of Courts, 20. 1 Hawk. P. C. 132. Black. Com. 4 V. 169.

Chorodarius. An chorodarius or officer appointed weekly in cathedral churches, to supervise the regular performance of divine service, and prescribe the particular duties of each person attending in the choir, as to reading, singing, praying, &c. To which purpose the chorodarius at the beginning of his week drew in form a bill or writing of the respective persons and their several offices, called tabula; whereupon the persons there entered were filed intabulati: This is manifested in the Statutes of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, digested by Dr. Ralph Baldock, Dean of St. Paul's, anno 1295, MS. penes Joh. Episc. Norw.

Cherishment. or Cherishment, (Sax.) Bare, or downright murder. Leg. H. 1. c. 12.

Cherishment. (Aperum Mordrum) Was one of those crimes, which by King Henry the First's laws, cap. 13. Emendari non possunt, nec ex seculum genere sunt ulla poenae expiationem, &c. Speim.

Cherish. (Lat.) Is commonly said for that place where God is served, which is commonly called a church: But in law proceedings, according to Fincher's, this word intends a parsonage; for so he expresses it in a question, whether a benefice was ecclesia, an chapel, &c. P. N. E. 32. 2 Inst. 362.

Cherish Sculpture. The image or sculpture of a church in ancient times, which was often cut out or cast in plate or other metal, and preserved as a religious treasure in relique, and to perpetuate the memory of its famous churches. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. p. 100.

Cherish. Denotes something belonging to, or set apart for the church; as distinguished from secular or worldly, with regard to the world.

Cherish Conventions. Are where the members that compose it are spiritual persons. They were erected in the furtherance of religion, and perpetuating the rights of the church. Black. Com. 1 V. 470.

Ecclesiastical Courts. Are various, as the archbishop's, the consistory, the court of archdeacons, the pro-rogative, and the great court of appeal in all ecclesiastical causes, viz. the court of appeals, appointed by the King's commission, under his great seal, &c. See Black. Com. 3 P. 61, St. Barn's Hal. Lond. Wood's Inst. of Com. Law, and Oughles's Ordo Judiciorum. Also see Courts Ecclesiastical. Also Black. Com. 3 P. 87, 4 P. 408, 414, 418.

N. B. Ecclesiastical jurisprudence, in the middle ages, was much more perfect in its plan, more just, and more equitable than the civil courts: It therefore became such an object of adoration and respect, that exemption from civil jurisdiction was counted as a privilege, and conferred as a reward. Robert. Hist. Eng. Char. V. 1 P. 64, &c.

Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction. The doctors of the civil law, although they be laymen, &c. may exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction, by Stat. 17 Ed. 8. c. 17.

Ecclesiastical Laws. See Canon, and Courts Ecclesiastical.

Ecclesiastical Persons or Ecclesiastics, (Ecclesiastici) Are church men, persons whose functions consist in performing the service, and keeping up the discipline of the Church. See Clergy.

Ecclesia, Procu. Actus, used for buildings. quod ego Adam de M. concessit Johanni de B. pro servitibus suis totum servitium cum ecclesia, et omnibus pertinentiis, &c. Regist. Priorat. de Wormley.

Ecclesia, Adm. or Rectory. Thus Du Fresne interprets it, Couvent says it signifies Euse.

Edict, (Edictum) An ordinance or command; a statute. Lat. Low Dict.

Edictates, Are a fry or bread of eels. Stat. 12 H. 8.

Efficialiter, Is used for military force. Efficialiter venit cum equis & armis. Mat. Paris. Anno 1213.

Effraiores, (Lat.) Breakers applied to burglars, that break open houses to steal. Quod sitandi causa domus effraingunt, &c. MS.

Efferts, (Sax.) Ways, walks or hedges. Blount.

Effusio Sanguinis, The murder, fine, or penalty imposed by the old English laws for the shedding of blood; which the King granted to many lords of manors: And this privilege, among others, was granted to the abbot of Cisterciensis. Cartular. Abbat. Glasston. MS. fol. 87.

Egyptians, (Egyptum) Commonly called Cypriotes, are by our laws and statute a counterfeit kind of rogues, who disguising themselves in strange habits, changing their faces and bodies, and flaming to themselves a canting unknown language, wander up and down; and under pretence of telling fortunes, curing diseases, and such like; abuse the ignorant common people, by stealing and pilfering from them every thing that is not too heavy for their carriage, and with which they may go off undisturbed. There are several statutes for suppressing these impostors; as by statute 22 H. 8. c. 10. Egyptians coming into England, are to depart the realm in fifteen days, or be imprisoned. And by 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4. If any person shall import any Egyptians into this kingdom, he shall forfeit 40 l. And if the Egyptians remain in England above a month, they shall be guilty of felony. Also comforting with Egyptians is made felony by 5 Eliz. c. 20. See Black. Com. 4 P. 165.

Eia, (from the Sax. Eige) signifies an island. Mat. Paris. Anno 883, See Eya.

Ejesta, A woman ravished or deflowered; or cast forth from the virgins. Ejesta, a whore-monger. Blount.

Ejectione Reple, (Ejectione de Garde) Is a writ which lieth against him that casteth out the guardian from any land, during the minority of the heir. Reg. Orig. 162. E. N. B. 239. There are two other writs not unlike this; the one termed replevment de garde, and the other de de gard.

Ejectione Firma, or Ejectment. Is a writ or action that lies for the lessee for years, who is ejected before the expiration of his term, either by the lessor, or a stranger: Also ejectment may be brought by the lessor against the lessee, for rent in arrear, or holding over his term.

See Reg. Orig. 227. A copyholder may not bring action of ejectment; but the lessee of a copyholder for one or more years, may bring it, 4 Rep. 26. And the executors of a lessee, shall have this writ. Lit. Rem. 195. In these cases, ejectment is either an actual ejectment, as when the lessee is actually put out of land let unto him; or it is an ejectment by implication of law, viz. where such an act is done by one which doth amount to an ejectment, although he doth not really enter upon the land let, and oust the lessee. 1 Lill. Abr. 496. Anciently writs of entry and assize were the usual means of recovery of the possession of lands, and lay only against freeholders; but anno 14 H. 7. it was resolved that an habere facias possessionem would lie to recover the term in ejectment, and the land itself. Astorn. Compan. 170. The action of ejectment firma was never known to remove a possession till the reign of King Hen. 8. before which time an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, &c. was made use of: Though in action of trespass, damages were only to be recovered; whereas in ejectment firma, the thing or term itself is recovered, as well as damages. 3 Leon. 49.

But ejectment is now become an action in the place of many real actions; as writs of right, formedon, &c. which are very difficult as well as tedious and chargeable: And this is the common action for trying of titles, and recovering of lands, &c. illegally kept from the right owner; though where entry is taken away by descents, fines and recoveries diffinies, &c. Ejectment may not be brought; so that all titles cannot be tried by this action. Wood's Inst. 547, 548. Nor where there is 20 years possession against the claimant. See the statutes of Limitations, Stat. St. Merton, 20 H. 3. c. 8. St. Westminster. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 13. 32 H. 8. c. 2. and 21 Jac. 1. c. 16.

Herein is to be considered,

I. For what things an ejectment will lie.

II. Of the method of proceeding in ejectment.

I. For what things an ejectment will lie.

Ejectment ought to be brought for a thing that is certain; and if it be of a manor, manerium de A. cum pertinentiis; if of a rectory, rectoriam de B. &c. And so many messuages, cottages, acres of arable land, meadow, &c. cum pertin. in paroch. &c. For land must be distinguished, how much of one sort, and how much of another, &c. Cro. Eliz. 339. 3 Leon. 13. Ejectment lies of a church, as de una domo vocat. The parish church of, &c. And a church is a messuage, by which name it may be recovered; and the declaration is to be served on the parson who officiates divine service. 11 Rep. 25. 1 Salk. 256. It lies not of tithes only; but may be of a rectory, chapel, &c. and the tithes thereto belonging. 2 Dav. Abr. 752.

It lies De uno messuagio five burgagio; but not De uno messuagio five tenemento, unless it have a vocat A. & c. to make it good, because of the uncertainty of the word tenement. 1 Sid. 295. It will lie for a moiety, or third part, of a manor or messuage, &c. And for a chamber or room of a house well set forth. 11 Rep. 55, 59. 3 Leon. 210. It lieth de domo, which hath convenient certainty for the sheriff to deliver possession, &c. Cro. Jac. 654. It lies of a cottage or curtilage; of a coal mine, &c. but not of a common, piscary, &c. Cro. Jac. 150. For underwood it lies, though a præcipe doth not. 2 Roll. Rep. 482, 483. But for una clausa, or una pecia terre, &c. without certainty of the acre, and their nature, it doth not lie. 11 Rep. 55. 4 Mod. 1. It lieth of a close, containing three acres of pasture, &c. Also of so many acres of land covered with water; though not de aqua cursum. 2 Cro. 435. 1 Brownl. 242. Ejectment lies for a prebendal stall, after collation to it W. J. Rep. Par. 1. Jo. 14. The King and The Bishop of London.

In this action the law requires, that the thing demanded be so particularly specified, that the sheriff may certainly know what to give the possession of, if the plaintiff should recover; for the judgment is in order to execution, and the judgment would be vain, if execution could not be had had of the thing specifically demanded; but in this action the judges did not confine themselves to those rules which govern the præcipe, but allowed some things to be recovered in this action, which could not be demanded in a præcipe; because since the establishment of that real action, many things have been added and improved by art, and acquired new appellations that are perfectly understood now by the law, which are not found in the ancient law-books; and as men began to contract by new names which were not known in the old law, so it was reasonable to suffer the remedy to follow the nature of such contracts. 2 New Abr. 168.

II. As to the method of proceeding.

The method of proceeding in ejectment, is made more easy than formerly; when a lease was to be sealed and delivered on the premises to the lessee, &c. In ancient times, the ejector in law was any person that came upon any part of the land, &c. mentioned in the lease of ejectment, though he were there without any intent to disturb the lessee of the possession, after the sealing of the ejectment lease; and such ejector was a good ejector against whom an action of ejectione firmæ might be brought to try the title of the land in question: but now the law is altered, for there is no occasion for a lease to be made and sealed upon the premises to the lessee, who hath a mind to try the title, and to leave the lessee in possession, to be ousted and ejected by the tenants in possession, &c.

As the plaintiff could not proceed to recover his lands against the casual ejector, without delivering to the tenant in possession a declaration, and making him a proper defendant, if he thought fit: after this, the Lord Ch. Ju. Rolls invented the rule now in use; which is, that if the defendant comes in the room of such ejector, he should enter into a rule to confess lease, entry and actual ouster, and insist on the title only. See Attorn. Compan. 170, 173.

The usual course at this time is to draw a declaration, and therein feign a lease for three, five, or seven years, to him that would try the title, and also feign a casual ejector or defendant in the declaration, and then serve the same, by delivering a copy thereof to the tenant in possession, or his wife, (for a delivery to a son or servant, &c. is not good) and give notice in writing at the bottom for him to appear and defend his title; which must be read to the tenant, and the person serving it, is to tell him, that if he do not procure some attorney to appear for him and defend his title, in default thereof, that he (the defendant) will suffer a judgment to be had against him, whereby he, (the tenant) will be turned out of possession: the declaration being thus served, the tenant is to appear the beginning of the next term by his attorney, and consent to a rule to be made defendant instead of the casual ejector, and take upon him the defence; wherein he may confess a lease, entry, and ouster, and at the trial stand upon the title only: but if the tenant in possession doth not appear and enter into the aforementioned rule in time, after the declaration served; then on affidavit made of the service of the declaration, with notice to appear as aforesaid, the court will order that judgment be entered against the casual ejector by default; and the tenant in possession will, by an habere facias possessionem upon such judgment, be turned out of possession. 1 Lill. 499.

If at the trial the defendant will not appear and confess lease, entry and ouster, it is usual to call him or his attorney, and then call the plaintiff and nonsuit him: and upon return of the posse, judgment will be given against the casual ejector. 1 Salk. 250. But in this case, though the plaintiff be nonsuit, he shall not pay any costs; for the rule for confessing lease, entry, and ouster is to be carried to the secondary, who taxes costs upon it to be paid by the defendant; and if the same are not paid, the court on affidavit and motion will grant an attachment against the defendant; but this is where the defendant appears, and not where it goes wholly against him by default. 1 Lill. 503, 504.

If the tenant doth appear, having by his attorney filed common bail, and entered into the rule abovementioned, he is made defendant in the declaration, and put into the same in the place of the casual ejector; and then the defendant's attorney must plead Not guilty: and the plaintiff's attorney draws up the issue, a copy whereof and of the declaration is to be delivered to the attorney for the defendant; whereupon notice is given of trial: in order to which the venire, &c. is to be made out and returned, and the record made up by the plaintiff's attorney, beginning with the declaration; which being sealed, the breviate is to be prepared, in which, after a short recital of the declaration and plea, the plaintiff's title is to be set forth. After trial the proceedings are as in other cases. But as to the mode of proceeding, see, for further instructions, the books of practice, now in use, as Richardson, Harrison, &c. Practif. Solic. 328, 329.

The plaintiff is not allowed to amend his declaration in ejectment after delivery: he must stand by it, or deliver a new declaration. As many demises may be laid in a declaration, as shall be thought fit; and if the plaintiff recovers upon one, it is sufficient for the whole. 3 Lec. 117, 334. No arrest is to be made in this action, as now usually prosecuted. But if there is not any tenant in possession; as where a house or land is empty, and the person that was last in possession is run away, so that you cannot find any person to deliver the declaration to, then the process must be in the old way, by sealing a lease upon the ground; and an original is to be sued out against the person who ejected the lessee, &c. And heretofore rules are to be given to pleas, though there cannot be judgment against the casual ejector, without a reason for that purpose, after the rules for pleading are out. 1 Lill. 499. See 1 Salk. 332. But note, by Stat. in Geo. 2. c. 19. § 16. If premises are held at a rack rent, and one year's rent being in arrear, the tenant deserts the premises, and there is not any sufficient distress, two justices of peace may put the landlord in possession.

In C. B. the common rule is, that the defendant shall forthwith appear, and receive a declaration, and therefore this superfides the necessity of an original writ; and no advantage can be taken for want thereof, unless it be in a writ of error; but when error is brought, an original must be filed: and as in the Common Pleas there needs no original, so in the King's Bench there needs not be a latitat; but the party is to file a bill of ejectment, beside the plea-roll, if a writ of error be brought before the errors are assigned; and he must file bail before he can proceed.

In ejectment, where there are divers defendants, and the freeholds are several, no defendant may defend for more than is in his own possession; and the plaintiff may take judgment against his ejector for what remains. 1 Vent. 355. 2 Keb. 524, 531. And if there are several defendants in ejectment, that are severally concerned in interest, to whom the plaintiff delivers declarations; if he moves to join them all in one declaration, the court will not agree to it, for several declarations must be delivered to each of the defendants; because if any are found Not guilty, each of them must have a remedy for his costs. 2 Keb. 524.

In Lord Raymond's Reports, it is held if there are two defendants in ejectment, and one of them appears and confesses lease, entry, and ouster, but the other doth not appear, in that case the plaintiff may enter a non pros, or verdict against him, and go to trial, and have judgment against the other defendant. 1 Lord Raym. 717, 718. Also if an ejectment be brought against two persons, and after issue joined, one dies, and a venire is awarded as to the two defendants, and a verdict against two; here upon suggestion of the death of one of them upon the roll, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff against the other for the whole: for 'tis said this action is grounded upon torts, which are several in their nature, and one may be found guilty and the other acquitted. Ibid.

Where one brings ejectment of land in two parties, and the whole lies in one, he shall recover: if a person brings ejectment of one acre in B. and part of it lies in A. he shall recover for such part as lies in B. And if one having title to a part only of lands, bringeth an ejectment ejectment for the whole, he shall recover his part of the lands. Plowd. 429. 3 Cro. 13.

A plaintiff shall recover only according to the right which he hath at the time of bringing his action: and one who hath title to the land in question, may on motion be made a defendant in the action with the tenant in possession, to defend his title. 1 Nels. Abr. 694. 1 Lill. 497, &c. As the possession of the land is primarily in question, and to be recovered, that concerns the tenant; and the title of the land, which is tried collaterally, that is concerning some other, who may be admitted to be a defendant with the tenant: but none other is to be admitted a defendant, but he that hath been in possession, or receives the rents, &c.

When there is a recovery in ejectment, against the tenant in possession, action of trespass may be brought to recover the mesne profits of the lands, from the time of the defendant's entry laid in the declaration: and this action may be brought either by the plaintiff in ejectment, or by the lessor of the plaintiff. In which case the plaintiff need not prove a title, but it is sufficient to produce the judgment in ejectment and the writ of possession executed, and to prove the value of the profits, and thereupon he shall recover from the time of the demise laid in the declaration. Asplin and Parker, Mic. 32 Geo. 2. per omnes Jussic. on a case reserved. Ville Burrow, part 4. 668. Black. Com. 3 V. 205. Bath. Ni. Pri. 83. If judgment in ejectment was against the tenant in possession, i. e. per verdict, it does not seem necessary to prove the writ of possession executed: contra, if against the casual ejector. Thorp and Fry. Stra. 5. Bath. Ni. Pri. 83.

If the plaintiff can prove his title accrued before the time of the demise, and that defendant hath been longer in possession, he shall recover antecedent profits; but in such case defendant will be at liberty to controvert his title. Decosta and Atkins, per Eyre Ch. J. Hil. 4 Geo. 2. Bath. Ni. Pri. 83.

The plaintiff in ejectment is a mere nominal person, and a trustee for the lessor; and if he release the action, the court may set aside the release, and he shall be committed for a contempt; so likewise if he release an action brought in his name for the mesne profits. 1 Salk. 260. Skinn. 247. It has been held a great abuse, that nominal lessees in ejectment were persons not in being, or not known to the defendant; and attorneys who have made such lessees, have been ordered to pay costs, and put to answer on interrogatories, &c. Med. Ca. 309. If a man is made plaintiff in ejectment without his knowledge, and the defendant appearing, the plaintiff thereupon becomes nonsuit, after which execution is sued out against him; if it appears by his oath that he was made plaintiff without his knowledge or order, he shall be discharged. 34 Car. B. R. 5 An. 1 Lill. 500.

In ejectment, the time of entry of the plaintiff must be shewn, that it may appear, he was not a disseisor, by entering on the lands before the commencement of his term, &c. If it appears that the lessor of the plaintiff had not any title at the time of the demise, upon which the plaintiff declared, this will be fatal: and the court will not give leave to alter the declaration as to the time of the demise, which would make it a new demise. Carth. 179. See Cro. Jac. 311.

As to lands in the lease, and declaration, &c. being different, and not exactly the same, or the term different from that in the declaration, &c. See Yelv. 166. 2 Lutw. 963. The declaration must assign a place where the lease was made. See Moor, ca. 710, 673. 1 And. 283. 9 Rep. 78. If there be a verdict and judgment against the plaintiff, he may bring another action of trespass and ejectment for the land, it being only to recover the possession, &c. wherein judgment is not final; and it is not like a writ of right, &c. where the title alone is tried. Wood's Inst. 547. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. And an ejectment being a mixed action, after a judgment therein has lain some considerable time, execution may not be had upon it without a scire fac. for the tenant may be changed, &c. But formerly it was held otherwise. Sid. 351. Comberb. 250.

An ejectment was brought for non-payment of rent; and the court was moved to stay proceedings, upon payment of the rent and costs, to be adjudged by a secondary, which the court granted; and also ordered a new lease to be made at the defendant's charge. Micb. 8 H. 3. 1 Lill. 501.

And by a late statute, in all cases between landlord and tenant, when half a year's rent shall be in arrear, the landlord, having lawful right to re-enter for non-payment, may serve a declaration in ejectment on the tenant, without a formal demand or re-entry; or he may affix such declaration on the door of the demised messuage, or notorious place of the lands, which shall be deemed a legal service: and upon proof that half a year's rent was due before the declaration was served, and no sufficient distress on the premises, the lessor shall have judgment and execution; which if the lessee suffer, without paying the arrears and costs, and without filing a bill in equity to be relieved within six months, he shall be barred from all relief, other than by writ of error; and the lessor shall hold the premises discharged from the lease: but if the tenant or lessee tender to the lessor, or bring into court the rent in arrear, together with costs, all further proceedings shall cease; and if the lessee be relieved in equity, he shall enjoy the demised premises, according to his lease, without obtaining a new one. See Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. & 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Tenants, to whom declarations in ejectment are generally delivered for any lands, &c. shall give their landlords, or their bailiffs, notice thereof, under the penalty of three years rack rent, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. And the court where such ejectment shall be brought, shall suffer the landlord to make himself defendant, by joining with the tenant, unto whom the declaration is delivered, if he appears; but if not, judgment shall be signed against the casual ejector, for want of such appearance: but if the landlord shall desire to appear by himself, and consent to enter into the like rule, that the tenant, if he had appeared, ought to have done; the court may permit him so to do, and order a stay of execution, till they make a further order therein. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.

If by any intendment a judgment in ejectment after a verdict can be made good, the court will do it. Morris v. Barry, Wilf. Rep. par. 1. fo. 1. Where the landlord is made defendant, the plaintiff must prove the landlord's tenants in possession of the premises in question. Smith on Demise of Taylor v. Mann. Id. 220.

As to the forms of process, &c. in ejectment, they are in the common books of practice.

Election, (electio) Is when a man is left to his own free will to take or do one thing or another, which he pleases. And if it be given of several things, he who is the first agent, and ought to do the first act, shall have the election: as if a person make a lease, rendering rent, or a garment, &c. the lessee shall have the election, as being the first agent, by the payment of the one, or delivery of the other. Co. Litt. 144. And if A. covenant to pay B. a pound of pepper or sugar, before Easter; it is at the election of A. at all times before Easter, which of them he will pay: but if he pays it not before the said feast, then afterwards it is at the election of B. to demand and have which he pleaseth. Dyer 18. 5 Rep. 59. 11 Rep. 51.

Where the election creates the interest, nothing passes till election; and if no election can be made, no interest will arise. Hob. 174. If the election is given to several persons, there the first election made by any of the persons shall stand: as if a man leases two acres to A. for life, and remainder of one acre to B. and of the other acre to C. Now B. or C. may elect which of the acres he will have, and the first election by one binds the other. Co. Litt. 145. 2 Rep. 36. If a man leases two acres for life, the remainder of one in fee to the same person; and after licenses the lessee to cut trees in one acre, this is an election that he shall have the fee in the other acre. 2 Danv. 762. A real election concerning lands is defendible; and election of a tenant in tail may prejudice his issue. He in remainder may make an election, after the death of tenant for life; but if the tenant for life do make election, the remainder-man is concluded. Moor, ca. 247, 832.

A person grants a manor, except one close called N. and there are two closes called by that name, one containing nine acres, and the other but three acres; the grantee shall not in this case choose which of the said closes he will have, but the grantor shall have election which close shall pass. 1 Leon. 268. But if one grants an acre of land out of a waste or common, and doth not say in what part, or how to be bounded, the grantee may make his election where he will. 1 Leon. 30. If a man hath three daughters, and he covenants with another, that he shall have one of them to dispose of in marriage; it is at the covenantor's election which of his daughters the covenantee shall have, and after request she is to be delivered to him. Moor 72. 2 Danv. 762. Where there are three coparceners of lands, upon partition the eldest sister shall have the election: though if she herself make the partition, she loseth it, and shall take last of all. Co. Litt. 166.

In consideration that a person had sold another certain goods, he promised to deliver him the value in such pipes of wine as he should choose, the plaintiff must make his election before he brings his action. Style 49. An election which of two things shall be done, ought not to be made merely by bringing an action; but before, that the defendant may know which he is to do, and it is said he is not bound to tender either before the plaintiff hath made his choice which will be accepted. 1 Mod. 217. 1 Nelf. Abr. 697.

A condition of a bond is, that the obligor shall pay 30*l.* or twenty nine, at the obligee's election, within such a time; the obligee at his peril is to make his election within the time limited. 1 Leon. 69. Though in debt upon bond to pay 10*l.* on such a day, or four cows, at the then election of the obligee, it was adjudged, that it was not enough for the defendant to plead that he was always ready, &c. if the obligee had made his election; for he ought to tender both at the day, by reason the word then relates to the day of payment. Moor 246. 1 Nelf. 694, 695.

If a man hath an election to do one of two things, and he cannot by any default of a stranger, or of himself, or the obligee, or by the act of God, do the one; he must at his peril do the other. 1 Lill. Abr. 506.

Where the law allows a man two actions to recover his right, it is at his election to bring which he pleaseth: and when a man's act may work two ways, both arising out of his interest, he hath election given him to use it either way. Dyer 20. 2 Roll. Abr. 787. Action of trespass upon the case, or action of trespass vi et armis, may be brought against one that rescues a prisoner, at the election of the party damnified by the rescous. And an action of the case, or an assise lies against him that surcharges a common, at the election of him that is injured thereby. 1 Lill. 504, 505. Also for a rent charge out of lands, there may be a writ of annuity or distress, at the election of the grantee: but after the death of the grantor, if the heir be not charged, the election to bring annuity ceaseth. Dyer 344.

A man was indicted of felony for entering an house and taking away money, and found guilty, and burnt in the hand; after which the person who lost the money brought an action of trespass against the other for breaking his house, and taking away his money; and it was held that the action would lie; for though it was at his election at first, either to prefer an indictment or bring an action, yet by the indictment he had made no election, because that was not the prosecution of the party, but of the crown. Style 347.

If a bargain and sale be made of lands, which is enrolled, and at the same time the bargainor levies a fine thereof to the bargainee, he hath his election to take by one or the other. 4 Rep. 72. A wife hath her election which to take, of a jointure made after marriage, or her dower, on the death of the husband, and not before. Dyer 358. When a lessor hath election to charge the lessee, or his assignee, for rent; if he accepts the rent of the assignee, he hath determined his election. 3 Rep. 24.

If a person hath election to pay or perform one of two things at a day, and he do neither of them at that day, his election is gone: and where a grant is made of two acres of land, the one for life, the other in fee, or in tail, and before any election the feoffee makes a feoffment of both; in this case the election will be gone, and the feoffor may enter upon which he will for the forfeiture. 2 Rep. 37. If money on a mortgage be to be paid to a man, his heirs, or executors, the mortgagor hath election to pay it to either: and if in a feoffment it be to pay to the feoffee, his heirs or assigns, and he enfeoff another, the feoffor may pay the money to the first or second feoffee, &c. Co. Litt. 210.

In some cases, where one hath cause of suit, he may sue one person or another at his election; for there is an election of persons, as well as of things. Dyer 204, 207. A man by deed binds himself and his heirs to pay money, and dies; the obligee may chuse to sue the heir, or the executors, although both of them have assets. Poph. 151. One may have election when he hath recovered a debt, to have his execution by elegit, seri facias, or cap. ad satisfaciendum; but where he takes an elegit, and hath no fruit of it, he may resort to another writ, though the election be entered on record. Hob. 57. Dyer 60, 369. There is no election against the King in his grants, &c. 1 Leon. 30. And an act becoming void, will determine an election. Hob. 452. As to election with respect to one action or another, see Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Action.

Election of a Clerk of Statutes-Merchant. Is a writ that lies for the choice of a clerk assigned to take bonds called statutes merchant; and is granted out of the Chancery, upon suggestion that the clerk formerly assigned is gone to dwell at another place, or is under some impediment to attend the duty of his office, or hath not lands sufficient to answer his transgressions, if he should act amiss, &c. F. N. B. 164.

Election of Ecclesiastical Persons. There is to be a free election for the dignities of the church, by 9 Ed. 2. c. 14. And none shall disturb any person from making free free election, on pain of great forfeiture. If any persons that have a voice in elections, take any reward for an election in any church, college, school, &c. the election shall be void: and if any of such societies resign their places to others for reward, they incur a forfeiture of double the sum; and the party giving it, and the party taking it, is incapable of such place. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. Election of Bishops. Vide Bishops.

Election of a Verderor of the Forest, (electione viridarii foreste) Is a writ which lies for the choice of a verderor, where any of the verderors of the forest are dead, or removed from their offices, &c. It is directed to the sheriff; and, as appears by the ancient writs of this kind, the verderor is to be elected by the freeholders of the county, in the same manner as coroners. New Nat. Br. 366.

Election of Members of Parliament. See Parliament.

Eleemosyna, Alms; dare in puram & perpetuam eleemosynam, to give in pure and perpetual alms; or frank-almoigne; as lands were commonly given in ancient times to religious uses. Convel.

Eleemosynary Corporations, Are corporate bodies appointed over hospitals, &c. constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty of the founder of them. Black. Com. 1 V. 471.

Eleemosyna Regis, or eleemosyna aratri, Is a penny which King Aethelred ordered to be paid for every plough in England, towards the support of the poor: it is called Eleemosyna Regis, because it was at first appointed by the King. I.eg. Aethelred. cap. 1.

Eleemosynaria, The place in a religious house, where the common alms were repositied, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor.

Eleemosynarius, The almoner or peculiar officer who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses. There was such a chief officer in all the religious houses: and the greatest of our English bishops had anciently their almoners, as now the King hath. Linwood's Provincial, lib. 1. tit. 12. See Almoner.

Eleemosynae, Hath been used for the possessions belonging to churches. Blount.

Elegit, (from the words in it, elegit sibi litem) Is a writ of execution that lies for him who hath recovered debt or damages, or upon a recognizance in any court, against one not able in his goods to satisfy the same; directed to the sheriff, commanding him to make delivery of a moiety of the party's land, and all his goods, beasts of the plough excepted. And the creditor shall hold the said moiety of the land so delivered unto him, until his whole debt and damages are paid and satisfied; and during that term he is tenant by elegit. Reg. Orig. 299. Co. Litt. 289. Upon an elegit, the sheriff is to deliver one half of all houses, lands, meadows and pastures, rents, reversions, and hereditaments wherein the defendant had any sole estate in fee, or for life, into whose hands soever the same do afterwards come; but not of a right only to land, an annuity, copyhold lands, &c. Dyer 206. 7 Rep. 49. Plowd. 224. This writ is given by the statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 18. And by it, the plaintiff, &c. elects omnia bona & catalla of the defendant, prater boves & asinos de caruca sua; and a moiety of all the lands which the defendant had at the time of the judgment recovered: but it ought to be sued within a year and a day after the judgment. F. N. B. 267.

But tho' by this statute, the lands of the debtor are made liable, as well as his personal estate; yet if the creditor takes out an elegit, and it appears to the sheriff, that there are goods and chattels sufficient of the debtor's, to satisfy the debt, he ought not to extend the lands. 2 Inst. 395. But an elegit executed upon goods only, is not a ferri facias, for a ferri facias is executed by sale by the sheriff; but the elegit by the appraisement of the goods by a jury, and delivery to the party. 1 Sid. 184. 1 Lew. 92. 1 Keb. 105, 261, 465, 556, 692.

Upon this writ, the sheriff is to impanel a jury, who are to make inquiry of all the goods and chattels of the debtor, and to appraise the same, and also to inquire as to his lands and tenements; and upon such inquisition the sheriff is to deliver all the goods and chattels (except the beasts of the plough) and a moiety of the lands to the party, and must return his writ, in order to record such inquisition in that court, out of which the elegit issued: and when the jury have found the tenu and value of the land, the sheriff, and not the jury, is to set out and deliver a moiety thereof to the plaintiff, by metes and bounds. Cro. Car. 319.

All writs of execution may be good, though not returned, except in elegit; but that must be returned, because an inquisition is to be taken upon it, and that the court may judge of the sufficiency thereof. 4 Rep. 65, 74. It has been ruled, that if more than a moiety of the lands is delivered on an elegit by the sheriff, the same is void for the whole. Sid. 91. 2 Salk. 563. And the sheriff cannot sell any thing, but what is found in the inquisition; and therefore if he sell a term for years, &c. mis-recited in the inquisition, as to the commencement thereof, the sale is void. 4 Rep. 74.

In debt upon bond, the defendant before the trial conveyed his lands to another, &c. but he himself took the profits; notwithstanding this conveyance, a moiety of his lands was extended on an elegit. Dyer 294. 3 Rep. 78. If two persons have each of them a judgment against one debtor, and he who hath the first judgment brings an elegit, and hath the moiety of the lands delivered to him in execution; and then the other judgment creditor, sues out another elegit, he shall have only a moiety of that moiety, which was not extended by the first judgment. Cro. Eliz. 483. But this is contrary to the year-book 10 Ed. 2. where 'twas held, that the intire moiety left should be delivered in execution. 1 Nels. Abr. 698.

When lands are once taken in execution on an elegit, and the writ is returned and filed, the plaintiff shall have no other execution. 1 Lew. 92. And if the defendant hath lands in more counties than one, and the plaintiff awards an elegit to one county, and extends the lands upon the elegit, and afterwards files the writ, he cannot after that, sue out an elegit into the other counties: but he may immediately after entry of the judgment upon the judgment-roll, award as many elegits, into as many counties as he thinks fit, and execute all, or any of them, at his pleasure. 1 Lill. Abr. 509. Cro. Jac. 246. And it has been held, that a person may have several elegits into several counties, for the intire sum recovered; or that he may divide his execution, and have it for part in one county, and part in another. Moor 24.

A man had lands in execution, upon an elegit, and afterwards moved for a new elegit, upon proof that the defendant had other lands, not known to the creditor, at the time when the execution was sued out; and it was adjudged, that if he had accepted of the first by the delivery of the sheriff, he could not afterwards have a new elegit; but when the sheriff returns the writ, he may waive it, and then have a new extent. Cro. Eliz. 310. 1 Nels. Abr. 699. Sed qu.

If the defendant dies in prison, so that there is no execution with satisfaction, the plaintiff shall have an elegit afterwards. 5 Rep. 86. And if all the lands extended on an elegit be evicted by a better title, the plaintiff may take out a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. Where one having land by elegit, is wholly evicted out of it, he may have a further execution, either against the defendant's lands or goods, as he might have had at first; save only, he must bring a scire facias against the defendant, or him that comes in under him; but if the eviction be of part of the land, or for a time only, so that the plaintiff may take his full execution by holding it over; there he cannot have any new execution, by the statute 32 H. 8. c. 5. 2 Shep. Abr. 115.

After a void elegit sued out and filed, a new writ may be had: and if one sue an elegit upon a recovery, and the sheriff returns that he hath made inquisition of the lands of the defendant, by twelve jurors; but he cannot deliver the moiety to the party, according to the writ, for that all the land is extended to another on a statute; the plaintiff shall have a cap. ad satisfaciend. Rel. Abr. 905.

Where

Where an elegit is sued upon a judgment, the levying of goods thereon for part only, is no impediment, but the plaintiff may bring another elegit pro residuo, and take the lands. 1 Lev. 92. On a nihil returned upon an elegit, there may be brought a capias ad satisfaciendum, or feri facias. 1 Leon. 176. And an elegit may be sued, after a fiat facias returned nulla bona, or where part is levied by it; and after a capias ad satisfaciendum returned non est inventus. Hob. 57.

If on recovery by writ of debt, a feri facias is sued out, and the sheriff return nulla bona; then the plaintiff shall have a capias or elegit, &c. Terms de Ley. There is another sort of elegit upon adjudging execution against tenants, whereon only a moiety of the lands, against which execution is awarded, is extended by the sheriff; and nothing is mentioned therein of any goods and chattels. Ibid. A person in execution is suffered to effect, and then he did; the land which he had at the time of the judgment may be extended, by elegit, upon a fiat facias brought against his heir, as tenant. Dyer 271.

A man may have an assize of the land which he hath in execution by elegit, if he be deforced thereof. Westm. 2. c. 18. And if tenant by elegit alien the land in fee, &c. he who hath right shall have against him and the alienee, an assize of novel disseisin. Ibid. At a trial at bar in C. B. the court delivered for law, that where lands are actually extended, and delivered upon an elegit, a fine levied on those lands, and nonclaim, will bar the interest of the tenant by elegit; and upon the inquisition found, the party is in possession before actual entry, for in such case he may bring an ejectment, or trespass, &c. 1 Mod. 217.

If tenant by elegit, be put out of possession before he hath received satisfaction for his debt, by the heir at law, &c. he may bring action of trespass, or re-enter and hold over till satisfied: but after satisfaction received, the defendant may enter on the tenant by elegit. 4 Rep. 28, 67. Tenants by elegit, statutes-merchant, &c. are not punishable for waste by action of waste; but the party, against whom execution is sued, is to have a writ of venire facias ad computandum, &c. and there the waste shall be recovered in the debt: though 'tis said there is an old writ of waste in the Register, for him in reversion against tenant by elegit, committing waste on lands which he hath in execution. 6 Rep. 37. New Nat. Er. 130. On tenant by elegit's accounting, if the money recovered by the plaintiff is levied out of the lands, the defendant shall recover his land; and if more be received by waste, &c. he shall have damages. Terms de Ley. See Extent, Execution. See Black. Com. 2 V. 161. 3 V. 418. 4 V. 419.

Elf-Stricks, Were flint-stones sharpened on each side in shape of arrow heads, made use of in war by the ancient Britains; of which several have been found in England, and greater plenty in Scotland, where 'tis said the common people imagine they drop from the clouds.

Elisors, To impanel juries, &c. See Elisors.

Elke, A kind of yew to make bows of. Stat. 32 H. S. cap. 9. Also the name of the wild beast somewhat like a deer.

Eloine, (from the Fr. espoigner) Signifies to remove or send a great way off: in this sense it is used by statute; if such as are within age be eloined, so that they cannot come to sue personally, their next friends shall be admitted to sue for them. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 15.

Elongata, Is a return of the sheriff that cattle are not to be found, or removed, so that he cannot make deliverance, &c. in replevin. 2 Lill. Abr. 454, 458.

Elopement, (derived from the Belg. E, viz. matrimonium & loopen, currere) Is where a married woman of her own accord, goes away and departs from her husband, and lives with an adulterer. A woman thus leaving her husband, is said to elope; and in this case, her husband is not obliged to allow her any alimony out of his estate; nor shall he be chargeable for necessaries for her, as wearing apparel, diet, lodging, &c. And where the same is notorious, whoever gives her credit, doth it at his peril: but on elopement, the putting a wife in the Gazette, or other news-paper, is no legal notice to persons in general not to trust her; though personal notice to particular persons given by the husband, will be good not to be chargeable to them. 1 Rel. 350. 1 Vent. 42. By Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 34. If the wife goes away from the husband, and tarrieth with the adulterer, without returning and being reconciled to her husband, this continual elopement forfeits her dower; according to these old verses:

Sponte virum mulier fugiens, & adultera facta, Dote sua carcat, et per seipso spente retracta.

Action lies against the adulterer for carrying away another person's wife, and detaining her; and large damages are usually given in these cases to the injured husband.

Emp, A royal franchise or county palatine. See County, and Black. Com. 1 V. 118. 3 V. 78.

Embarge, A prohibition upon shipping, not to go out of any port, on a war breaking out, &c.

Emblements, from the Fr. emblemence de bled, viz. corn sown on a plot upon a lease for years. Signify properly the profits of sown land: but the word is sometimes used for any profit that naturally grows on a plot of ground, as grass, fruit, &c. In some cases he who sows the corn shall have the emblements; and in others not: a lessee at will sows the land, he shall have the emblements; though if the lessee determines the will himself, he shall not have them, but the lessor. 5 Rep. 116. If lessee at will sows the land with grain, or other thing yielding annual profit, and the lessor enters before severance; yet the lessee shall have it: but where the lessee plants young fruit-trees, or other trees, or sows the land with acorns, he shall not have these: and if such tenant by good husbandry make the grass to grow in greater abundance; or sow the land with hay-seed, by which means it is increased, if the lessor enters on the lessee, the lessee shall not have it, because grois is the natural profit of the soil. Co. Litt. 55, 56.

Where tenant for life sows the land, and dies, his executors shall have the emblements, and not the lessor or him in reversion; by reason of the uncertainty of the estate. Cro. Eliz. 463. And if a tenant for life plants hops, and dies before severance, he in reversion shall not have them, but the executors of tenant for life. Cro. Car. 515. If tenant for years, (if he so long live) sow the ground, and die before severance; the executor of the lessee shall have the corn: and where lessee for life leases for years, if the lessee for years sow the land, and after lessee for life dies before severance, the executor of lessee for years shall have the emblements. 2 Dunv. Abr. 765.

But if tenant for life sows his land with corn, and afterwards grant over all his estate and right to another; if the grantee dies before severance, it is said his executors shall not have the corn, but he in reversion. Cro. Eliz. 464. If tenant for years sows ground, and before his corn is severed, the term which is certain expires; the lessor or he in reversion shall have the emblements; but he must first enter on the lands. 1 Lill. Abr. 511. A lessee for life or years sows the land, and after surrenders, &c. before severance, the lessor shall have the corn. 2 Dunv. 764. If there be lessee for years upon condition that if he commit waste, &c. his estate shall cease; if he sows the ground with corn, and after doth waste, the lessor shall have the corn. Co. Litt. 55. And where a lord enters on his tenant for a forfeiture, he shall have the corn on the ground. 4 Rep. 21.

A feme copyholder for her widowhood sows the land, and before severance takes husband, so that her estate is determined, the lord shall have the emblements. 1 Lill. 511. Though if such a feme copyholder durante widowhood, leases for one year according to custom, and the lessee sows the land, and afterwards the copyholder takes husband, the lessee shall have the corn. 2 Dunv. 764. If a husband hold lands for life, in right of his wife, and sow the land, and after she dies before severance, he shall have the emblements. Dyer 316. 1 Nelf. Abr. 701. And where the wife hath an estate for years, life, or in fee, and the husband sows the land, and dieth, his executors shall have the corn. 1 Nelf. 702. But if the husband and wife are jointenants, though the husband sow the the land with corn, and dies before ripe, the wife and not his executor shall have the corn, she being the surviving jointenant. Co. Litt. 199.

When a widow is enowled of lands sown, she shall have the emblements, and not the heir. 2 Inst. 81. And a tenant in dower may dispose of corn sown on the ground; or it may go to her executors, if she die before severance. 2 Inst. 80, 81. And if a parson sows his glebe, and dies, his executors shall have the corn: likewise such parson may by will dispose thereof. 1 Rel. Abr. 655. Stat. 28 H. 8. cap. 11.

If tenant by statute-merchant sows the land, and before severance a casual profit happens, by which he is satisfied, yet he shall have the corn. Co. Litt. 55. Lands sown are delivered in execution upon an extent, the person to whom delivered shall have the corn on the ground. 2 Leon. 54. And judgment was given against a person, and then he sowed the land, and brought a writ of error to reverse the judgment; but it was affirmed; and adjudged that the recoveror shall have the corn. 2 Bulfl. 213.

If a disseisor sows the land, and afterwards cuts the corn, but before 'tis carried away, the disseisee enters; the disseisee shall have the corn. Dyer 31. 11 Rep. 52. A person seised in fee of land dies, having a daughter, and his wife provenient coesent with a son; the daughter enters and sows the land, and before severance of the corn, the son is born; in this case the daughter shall have the corn, her estate being lawful, and defeated by the act of God; and it is for the publick good that the land should be sown. Co. Litt. 55.

A man seised in fee-simple sows land, and then devises the land by will, and dies before severance; the devisee shall have the corn; and not the devisor's executors. Winch 52. Cro. Eliz. 61. If a person devises his lands sown, and says nothing of the corn, the corn shall go with the land to the devisee: and when a man seised of land, sows it, and dies without will, it goes to the executor, and not the heir. 1 Lill. 512. A devisee for life dies, he in remainder shall have the emblements with the land. Hob. 132.

Tenant in fee sows the land, and devises it to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, and dies; A. dies before severance, B. in remainder shall have the corn, and not the executor of the first tenant for life. Cro. Eliz. 61, 464. Where there is a right to emblements, ingress, egress and regress are allowed by law, to enter, cut and carry them away, when the estate is determined, &c. 1 Inst. 56.

Emblers de Gentz, (Fr.) A stealing from the people: The word occurs in our old rolls of parliament.——Whereas divers murders, emblers de gentz, and robberies are committed, &c. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 3. n. 62.

Embrazor, (Fr. embrajour) Is he that when a matter is in trial between party and party comes to the bar with one of the parties, having received some reward so to do, and speaks in the case; or privately labours the jury, or stands in the court to survey and overlook them, whereby they are awed or influenced, or put in fear or doubt of the matter. Stat. 19 H. 7. cap. 13. And the penalty of this offence is 20*l.* and imprisonment, at the discretion of the justices, by the said statute: also a person may be punished by fine, &c. on indictment at Common law, as well as by action on the statute. Com. Law Com. Plac'd. 186. But lawyers, attornies, &c. may speak in the case for their clients, and not be embracers: also the plaintiff may labour the jurors to appear in his own cause; but a stranger must not do it: for the bare writing a letter to a person, or parol request for a juror to appear, not by the party himself, hath been held within the statutes against embrazery and maintenance. 1 Inst. 369. Hob. 294. 1 Saund. 391. If the party himself instruct a juror, or promise any reward for his appearance, then the party is likewise an embracer. And a juror may be guilty of embrazery, where he by indirect practices gets himself sworn on the tales, to serve on one side. 1 Lill. 513. There are divers statutes relating to this offence and maintenance, as 5 Ed. 3. c. 10. 34 Ed. 3. c. 8. 32 H. 8. c. 9, &c.

Embrazery, Is the act or offence of embracers: and to attempt to influence a jury, or any way incline them to be more favourable to the one side than the other, by promises, threatenings, money, treats, &c. whether the jurors upon whom any such attempt is made, give any verdict or no, or whether the verdict pass on his side or on this is embrazery. 1 Inst. 369. Nov. Reg. 10.

Embrizing Days, (from embury, emury) So called either because our ancestors, when they fasted, sat in ashes, or strewed them on their heads, are those which the ancient fathers called Quatuor Tempora jejuniis, and of great antiquity in the church: they are observed on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, (or the first Sunday in Lent) after Whitunday, Michaelmas day in September, and St. Lucy's day about the middle of December. These days are mentioned by Britton, cap. 53. and other writers; and particularly in the Stat. 2 c. 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. and are kept with great zeal by the Roman Catholics; our almanacks call them the Ember Weeks.

Embroidery. By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 36. No foreign embroidery, or gold or silver brocade, shall be imported, upon pain of being forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l.* for each piece. No person shall sell or expose to sale any foreign embroidery, gold or silver thread, lace, fringe, brocade, or make up the same into any garment, upon pain of having it forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l.* All such embroidery, &c. found, may be seized and burnt, and the mercer, &c. in whose custody it was found, shall forfeit 100*l.*

Emendals, (emenda) Is an old word still made use of in the accounts of the society of the Inner Temple; where so much in emendals at the foot of an account, on the balance thereof, signifies so much money in the bank or stock of the houses, for reparation of losses, or other emergent occasions: quod in restitutionem damni tributur. Spelm.

Emendare, Emendam solvere, To make amends for any crime or trespass committed. Leg. Edv. Consuet. c. 35. Hence a capital crime not to be atoned by fine, was said to be inmendabile. Leg. Canut. p. 2.

Emendatio, Hath been used for the power of amending and correcting abuses, according to stated rules and measures; as emendatio panni, the power of looking to the assize of cloth, that it be of just measure; emendatio tantis & cervisie, the assizing of bread and beer, &c. a privilege granted to lords of manors, and executed by their officers appointed in the court-leet, &c. Ad nos spectat emendatio panni & panis & cervisie, & quicquid regis est, excepto murthero & latrocinio, &c.—Paroch. Antiqu. 196.

Emeralds. Exempt from duties, by 6 Geo. 2. c. 7.

Empanel a jury, Ponere in officio & juratis, &c. See Impanel.

Emperor, (imperator) The highest ruler of large kingdoms and territories, a title anciently given to renowned and victorious generals of armies, who acquired great power and dominion. And this title is not only given to the Emperor of Germany, as Emperor of the Romans; but was formerly belonging to the Kings of England, as appears by a charter of King Edgar, viz. Ego Edgarus Anglorum Basileus, omniumque Regum Insularum Oceani quæ Britanniam circumjacent, &c. Imperator & Dominus.

Enbiber, (Fr.) To write down in short. Britton. 56.

Enchelson, A French word used in our law books and statutes, signifying as much as occasion, or the cause or reason wherefore any thing is done. Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 3.

Endebavour. Where one who has the use of his reason endebavours to commit felony, &c. he shall be punished by our laws, but not to that degree as if he had actually committed it: as if a man assault another on the highway, in order to a robbery, but takes nothing from him, this is not punished as felony, because the felony was not accomplished; though as a misdemeanour, it is liable to fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 68, 69, 161. 11 Rep. 98. And in this case, the offender shall be transported, by a late statute, 7 Geo. 2. cap. 21. Vide Intendment.

Endowment, Signifies the bestowing or alluring of dower on a woman; but it is sometimes used metaphorically for the settling a provision upon a parson, or building of a church or chapel; and the severing a sufficient portion of tithes, &c. for a vicar, towards his perpetual maintenance, maintenance, when the benefice is appropriated. Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 6. 4 H. 4. cap. 12.

Enemy, (inimicus) Is properly an alien or foreigner, who in a publick capacity, and in an hostile manner, invades any kingdom or country; and whether such persons come hither by themselves, or in company with English traitors, they cannot be punished as traitors, but shall be dealt with by martial law. H. P. C. 10, 15. 1 Hawk. 35. But the subjects of a foreign prince coming into England, and living under the protection of the King, if they take up arms, &c. against the government, they may be punished as traitors, not as alien enemies. 1 Hawk. ibid. If a prisoner be rescued by enemies, the gaoler is not guilty of an escape; as he would have been if subjects had made the rescue, when he might have a legal remedy against them. 2 Hawk. 130. Adhering to and succouring the King's enemies. See Treason.

Enfranchise, (Fr. enfranchir) To make free, or incorporate a man in any society, &c. It is also used where one is made a free denizen, which is a kind of incorporation in the commonwealth.

Enfranchisement, (Fr. from franchise, i. e. libertas) Is when a person is incorporated into any society or body politick, and signifies the act of incorporating. He that by charter is made a denizen, or freeman of England, is said to be enfranchised, and let into the general liberties of the subjects of the kingdom: and he who is made a citizen of London, or other city, or free burghers of any town corporate, as he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation, is in the common sense of the word a person enfranchised. So Villein was enfranchised, when he was made free by his lord, and rendered capable of the benefits belonging to freemen. And when a man is enfranchised into the freedom of any city or borough, he hath a freehold in his freedom during life; and may not, for endeavouring any thing only against the corporation, lose and forfeit the same. 11 Rep. 91.

Englecery, or Engleschire, (Engleeria) Is an old word signifying the being an Englishman. When Canutus the Dane came to be King of England, he at the request of the nobility sent back his army into Denmark, but kept some Danes behind to be a guard to his person; and he made a law for the preservation of his Danes (who were often privately made away by the English) that if an Englishman killed a Dane, he should be tried for the murder; or if he escaped, the town or hundred where the fact was done, was to be amerced sixty-six marks to the King: so that after this law, whenever a murder was committed, it was necessary to prove the party slain to be an Englishman, that the town might be exempted from the amercement; which proof was called Englecery, or Engleschire. And whereas if a person were privately slain, he was in ancient time accounted Francigena, which word comprehended every alien, especially the Danes: it was therefore, that where any person was murdered, he should be adjudged Francigena, unless Englecery were proved, and that it was made manifest he was an Englishman. The manner of proving the person killed to be an Englishman, was by two witnesses who knew the father and mother, before the coroner, &c. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 15. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 30. 7 Rep. 16. This Englecery, by reason of the great abuses and trouble that afterwards were perceived to grow by it, was utterly taken away by Stat. 14 Ed. 3. ff. 1. c. 4.

Englith. Pleas, records, bonds, and proceedings in courts of justice, to be in Englith. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. And see 5 Geo. 2. c. 27. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Englishmen, The names of, to be certified into the Chancery who are abroad in Holland and Flanders, &c. and shall pay such impositions as aliens do. Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 4.

Engravers, That shall invent, design and engrave prints, to have the sole right of printing them for fourteen years, which shall be engraved with the names of the proprietors; and others copying, and selling such prints, though by varying, &c. without their consent, shall forfeit 5 l. for every print, and also the plates and sheet, &c. Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 13.

Enhance, To raise the price of goods or merchandize. See Forestaller.

Enpleet, Was anciently used for implead.—They may impleet and be enpleeted in all courts. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. fo. 412.

Enscent, or Enscent, Is the being with child. Law Fr. Dist.

Ententure, Of any woman condemned for a crime, is no ground to stay judgment; but it may be afterwards alledged against execution. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 413.

Entail, (Fr. entaille, i. e. incisus) Is fee entailed, viz. abridged, limited, and tied to certain conditions, at the will of the donor; where lands are given to, or settled on others. See Fee and Tail.

Enterpleader, (Fr. enterplaidier, Lat. interplacitare) Signifies to discuss or try a point incidentally happening as it were between, before the principal cause can be determined. And enterpleader is allowed, that the defendant may not be charged to two severally, where no default is in him: as if one brings detinue against the defendant upon a bailment of goods, and another against him upon a trover, there shall be enterpleader, to ascertain who hath right to his action. 2 Danv. Abr. 779. If two bring several detinues against A. B. for the same thing, and the defendant acknowledges the action of one of them, without a prayer of enterpleader, they shall not interplead on the request of the other; for the interpleader is given for the security of the defendant, that he may not be twice charged, and he hath waived that benefit. 18 Ed. 3. 22.

If one brings detinue against B. and counts upon a delivery of goods, &c. to re-deliver to him, and another brings detinue against him also, and counts so likewise; if there be not any privy of bailment between them, yet they shall interplead, to avoid the double charge of the defendant; and also because the court cannot know to whom to deliver the thing detained, if both should recover. Br. Enterplead. 3. And upon such several detinues, if the defendant says that he found it, and traverses the bailment, they shall enterplead; for then he is chargeable as well to the one as the other: so if he says that they delivered jointly, absque hoc, that they delivered it as they have counted: but it is otherwise if the defendant doth not traverse the bailment, because if there was a bailment, he is chargeable only to the bailor, and may plead in bar against the others. 2 Danv. 782.

Where two bring several detinues for one thing, and the defendant prays that he may enterplead, and delivers the thing to the court, and before the award of the enterpleader, one discontinues the suit, the other shall not have judgment; but if he discontinues his suit after the enterpleader, the other may have judgment. 11 H. 6. 19.

If a recovery be had upon an enterpleader, judgment shall be given to recover the thing demanded against the defendant; and not against the garnishee, in case of garnishment, &c. 2 Danv. 783. When two have enterpleaded in detinue, he that recovers shall recover damage against the other. Br. Damage 68. There was formerly enterpleader relating to delivery of lands by the King to the right heir, where two persons out of wardship were found heirs, &c. 7 Rep. 45. Staund. Prer. cap. 17. Bro. tit. Enterplead. And anciently the head enterpleader made a great title in the law. There is also a bill of interpleader in Chancery.

Entierite, (from the French entierete, entirenes) Is a contradistinction in our books to moiety, denoting the whole: and a bond, damages, &c. are said to be entire, when they cannot be divided or apportioned.

Entire Tenancy, Contrary to several tenancy, and signifying a sole possession in one man; whereas the other is a joint or common possession in more. Brook.

Entry, (ingressus, Fr. entree, i. e. introitus) Signifies the taking possession of lands or tenements, where a man hath title of entry: and it is also used for a writ of possession. This entry into lands, is where any man enters into or takes possession of any lands, &c. in his proper person; and is an actual entry when made by a man's self, or by attorney by warrant from him that hath the right; or it is an entry in law, for a continual claim is an entry implied by law, and has the same force with it. Litt. ff. 419. There is a right of entry, when the party claiming may for his remedy either enter into the land, or have an action action to recover it: and a title of entry, where one hath lawful entry given him in the lands, which another hath, but has no action to recover till he hath entered. Plowd. 558. 10 Rep. 48. Finch's Law 105.

The writs of entry concern the right of property, and are of divers kinds, distinguished into four degrees, according to which the writs are varied. The first degree is a writ of entry sur disseisin, that lieth for the disseisee against a disseisor; upon a disseisin done by himself; and this is called a writ of entry in the nature of an assise. Second, a writ of entry sur disseisin in le per, for the heir by descent, who is said to be in the per, as he comes in by his ancestor; and so it is if a disseisor make a feoffment in fee, gift in tail, &c. the feoffee and donee are in the per by the disseisor. Third, A writ of entry sur disseisin in le per & cui, where the feoffee of a disseisor maketh a feoffment over to another, when the disseisee shall have this writ of entry sur disseisin, &c. of the lands in which such other had no right of entry, but by the feoffee of the disseisor, to whom the disseisor demised the same, who unjustly and without judgment disseised the demandant. Fourth, A writ of entry sur disseisin in le post, which lieth when after a disseisin the land is removed from hand to hand beyond the degrees, in case of a more remote feisin, whereunto the other three degrees do not extend. 1 Inst. 238.

In these four degrees, are comprehended generally all manner of writs of entry. And the writ of entry in le post is so called, because the words of the writ are, Post disseisinam quam B. injuste & sine judicio fecit, &c. Britton observes, that the words, In le per, In le per & cui, and In le post, signify nothing but divers forms of this writ, applied to the case whereupon it is brought; and each form taking its name from the words contained in the writ. F. N. B. 193. But if any writ of entry be conceived out of the right cause, so that one form is brought for another, it is abatable. A writ of entry in the per and cui, shall be maintained against none, but where the tenant is in by purchase or descent; for if the alienation or descent be put out of the degree upon which no writ may be made in the per and cui, then it shall be made in the post. Terms de Ley.

There are five things which put the writ of entry out of the degrees, viz. intrusion; disseisin upon disseisin; succession where the disseisor was a person of religion, and his successor enters; judgment, when a person hath had judgment to recover against the disseisor; and escheat, on the disseisor's dying without heir, or committing felony, &c. on which the lord enters, &c. In all these cases, the disseisee or his heir, shall not have a writ of entry within the degrees of the per, but in the post; because they are not in by descent, or purchase. Ibid.

Having explained the nature of an entry, it remains to consider in what cases an entry is lawful, and by what means it is taken away.

Degrees as to entries are of two sorts, either by act in law, as in case of a descent; or by act of the party by lawful conveyance; and by the Common law, if the lands were conveyed out of the degrees, the demandant was driven to his writ of right, in respect of such long possession, and so many alterations in different hands; wherefore by the statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3. cap. 29. the writ of entry in le post is given. But no estate gained by wrong doth make a degree; so that abatement, intrusion, &c. work not a degree; nor doth every change by lawful title, or an estate of tenant by the curtesy, by judgment, &c. or of any others that come in the post; though a tenancy in dower by assignment of the heir doth work a degree, because she is in by her husband: and so doth not assignment of dower by a disseisor, by reason she is in the post. 1 Inst. 239.

Entry on lands is taken away by descent on disseisins, or discontinuance, &c. But a descent shall not take away the entry of lessee for seven years, nor of tenant by elegit, &c. who have but a chattel, and no freehold; otherwise it is of any estate for life, or any higher estate. 1 Inst. 249. Where a disseisor dieth seised, and the law casteth the lands upon his heir; this is a descent which tolls an entry at Common law: by statute, it is only where the disseisor had peaceable possession five years; for if he had not possession peaceably during that time, the descent to his heir shall not take away an entry. 32 H. 8. c. 33.

If a disseisor leases for years, and dies seised of the reversion, the entry of the disseisee is taken away, because he died seised of the fee and freehold: but if he had leased for life, &c. the entry of the disseisee would not be taken away. 1 Inst. 239. Where the disseisor of an infant dies seised, and after the infant comes of age, and the heir of the disseisor dies before entry; though he died not seised of an actual feisin, but a feisin in law; yet his dying seised takes away the entry of the disseisee. Ibid. If a disseisor makes a feoffment upon condition, and the feoffee dies seised, and the feoffor enters upon the heir for the breach of the condition, the disseisee may enter upon him; for by the entry of the disseisor, the descent is utterly defeated. Litt. sect. 409.

The title of entry in a feoffor, &c. that hath but a condition, cannot be taken away by any descent, because he has no remedy by action to recover the land; so that if a descent should take away his entry, it would bar him of his right for ever: and the condition remains, and cannot be devested and put out of possession, as the lands, &c. 1 Inst. 240. If a man recovers lands, and after a stranger to the recovery dies seised, this shall not take away the entry of the recoveror; as it was but a title. 2 Danv. Abr. 561. But where a person recovers against another, and enters and sues execution, and after the recoveree disseises him, and dies seised; this descent shall take away the entry of the recoveror, for the recovery was executed. Ibid.

If after recovery against tenant for life, he dies, and he in remainder enters before execution, and dies seised, the entry of the recoveror is not taken away. 1 Inst. 238. The entry of the tenant for life, shall be good for him in remainder: and if tenant for life make a feoffment in fee, and a stranger enters for the forfeiture in the name of the reversioner, this will be good to veil the reversion in him. Litt. 128. 9 Rep. 106. If an infant under age, makes a deed of feoffment, and after his full age the feoffee dies seised; or a lessee for life aliens the land, and the alienee dies seised thereof; or a devisee be of lands upon condition, and the heir of the disseisor enters and dies seised: in these cases the entry is gone, and the parties shall be put to their action. Litt. 96. 9 H. 6. 25.

If there be tenant for life, remainder to the right heir of J. S. and the tenant for life is disseised; a descent is cast, and after J. S. dies, and tenant for life also dies: by this the entry of the heir of J. S. is not taken away, for his remainder was in cust. dia legis. 1 Rep. 134. Where an infant has cause of entry, and the descent happens while he is within age, it will not bar him of his entry: he that hath the right of entry, must be of age, within the four seas, of sound memory; and if it be a woman, she must be sole; and if the party be under age, beyond the seas, non compos mentis, in prison, or a feme covert, at the time of the descent, it shall not bar. Litt. 147, 402. 21 H. 6. 17.

The whole time from a disseisin is considerable; as where feme covert is disseised, and her husband dieth, and she takes another husband, and then a descent is cast; or if one ultra mare be disseised, and he return into England, and then go beyond sea again, and there is a descent; here the descent will bar the entry, because of the interim. 9 H. 7. 24. Dyer 143. 32 H. 8. c. 33.

A woman tenant in tail took husband, who made a feoffment in fee, and died, and the wife without entry made a lease for years; and it was held, that the freehold was not reduced by the lease, without an entry made. 1 Leon. ca. 165. The entry of a disseisee, when he duly makes it, shall avoid all the mesne charges by the disseisor upon the land: but right of entry may be lost divers ways; as by acceptance of rent, by him who hath it, and the like. 1 Anderson 133. Noy Rep. 7. If a man is disseised of land whereunto a common is appendant, the disseisee cannot use the common till he enters on the land to which the common is appendant; for if the disseisee might use it, so might the disseisor, which would be a double charge on the common: yet if a person be disseised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, he may present to the advowson before entry on the manor. 1 Inst. 122.

A disseisee enters into the land, and continues therein with the disseisor, and manures it with him, claiming nothing of his first estate; or if the disseisee enters, and takes the profit, as lessee, &c. of the disseisor, 'tis said there will be an entry that will reduce the first estate. 2 Daw. 790. If the disseisee commands a stranger to put in the cattle of such stranger in the land to feed there; this is an entry in law on the land. 1 Inst. 245. And if a person enters by command of him who hath title, he by virtue thereof may gain a title to himself. 1 Nels. Abr. 705.

Where entry may be made into land, or any thing, it shall not be in the party before entry: if entry cannot be made, but only claim, then it shall be in him by claim; and when neither entry nor claim can be made, it shall be in him by act of law. 1 Plowd. 133. In case the possession of land is in no man, but the freehold in law is in the heir that enters, his general entry into one part reduces all into his actual possession: but if an entry is to devise an estate, a general entry into parcel, is good only for that part. 1 Id. 15. Where an entry is in any parts, it must be in the name of all: if I enfeoff a person of an acre of ground upon condition, and of another acre on condition, and both conditions are broken; here entry into one in name of both acres is not good to reduce both: but if a man make a feoffment of divers parcels upon condition that is broken, there entry into part in the name of all the rest is sufficient. Co. Lit. 252. 9 H. 7. 25.

A man hath right to enter into lands in divers villages in one county, if he enter upon part of it in one village in the name of all in that county; by this he shall have possession of the whole. 1 Inst. 252. Dyer 227, 337. If a man disseise me of one acre at one time, and another acre at another time in the same county; my entry into one of them in the name of both is good: though it will not be good, if the disseisin be by two several persons, or if the acres lie in several counties, when there ought to be several entries and actions. 1 Inst. 252.

If he who hath right of entry into a freehold, enters into part of it, it shall be adjudged an entry into all possessed by one tenant; but if there be several tenants possessed of the freehold, there must be several entries on the several tenants. 1 Lill. Abr. 515, 516. Special entry into a house with which lands are occupied, claiming the whole, as a good entry as to the whole house and lands. Ibid. If a husband enters to the use of his wife; or a man enters to the use of an infant, or any other, where the entry is lawful; this settles the possession before agreement of the parties: though it is otherwise where a person enters to the use of one whose entry is not lawful; for this vests nothing in him till agreement, and then he shall be a disseisor. 2 Daw. 787. If two jointenants are disseised, and the disseisor aliens, and one jointenant enters upon the alienance to the use of both; this settles the freehold in both of them. Ibid. 788. But if one coparcener, &c. enters especially claiming the whole land, she gains the part of her companion by abatement; and it shall not settle any possession in the other. 1 Inst. 243.

The heir is to enter into lands descended to him, to entitle him to the profits. 1 Inst. 214. If a younger son enters on lands in fee, where the eldest son dies leaving issue; though many discentments are cast in his line, yet the heirs of the eldest son may make an entry on the lands; but if the youngest son convey away the lands in fee, and the feoffee dies seised, they may not enter; nor may they enter where the younger son disseises the eldest, and dies seised. 1 Inst. 237, 241. Lit. Seis. 597.

A tenant in tail hath issue two sons, and the eldest dies, leaving his wife præmunt essent of a son, and the younger brother enters, and then the wife of the eldest is delivered of a son, he may enter upon the younger brother. 2 Daw. 557. An estate of freehold will not cease, without entry or claim: also a remainder of an estate of freehold cannot cease without entry, &c. no more than estate of freehold in possession. Cro. Eliz. 360. A right of entry preserves a contingent remainder. 2 Lev. 35. And a grantee of a reversion, may enter for a condition broken. Plowd. 176. If a person will take advantage of a condition, he must either enter, or make a claim: and for a condition broken there must be actual entry, to bring ejectment for recovery of the estate; but where a man is intitled to enter by descent, or for non-payment of money due on a mortgage, &c. Entry and ouster confessed in the rule in ejectment, without actual entry, is sufficient to make the lease to entitle the action. 1 Lill. Abr. 516.

A lessee must enter into lands demised to him; and tho' the lessor dies before the lessee enters, yet he may enter: and if the lessee dies before entry, his executors or administrators may enter. The lessee may assign over his term before entry, having interesse termini; but he may not take a release to enlarge his estate; or bring trespass, &c. till actual entry. Though if there be words bargain and sell in a lease, &c. for consideration of money, the lessee or bargainee is in possession on executing the deed, to make a release, &c. Lit. 59, 454. 1 Inst. 46, 57, 270.

Where a lessor enters on his lessee for years, the rent is suspended. 1 Leon. 110. But without entry and expulsion, the lessee is not discharged of his rent to the lessor; unless it be where the lessor is attainted of treason, &c. that the rent is to be paid to the King, who is in possession without entry. Sid. 399. 1 Nels. Abr. 706.

There is no need of entry to avoid an estate in case of a limitation, because thereby the estate is determined without entry or claim; and the law casts it upon the party to whom it is limited. If A. devises lands to B. and his heirs, and dies, it is in the devisee immediately; but till entry he cannot bring a possessory action: and where a possession vests without entry, a reversion will vest without claim. 2 Mod. Rep. 7, 8. A bare entry on another, without an expulsion, makes only a seisin; so that the law will adjudge him in possession who hath the right. 3 Salk. 135.

If a person who hath title of entry, finds an house open with nobody in it, and enters into it, and keeps in possession; this is no forcible entry; contra if any body is in it. Common Law Com. Plac'd 186. Where a person is in a house with goods, &c. the house may be entered when the doors are open, to make execution. Cro. Eliz. 759. But it must be averred that the goods were in the house. Lutw. 1428, 1434. And a man cannot enter into a house, the doors being open, to demand a debt, unless he aver that the debtor is within the house at the same time. Cro. El. 8. 6. Entry may be made on a tenant where rent is in arrear, to take a distress, &c. in order to regain possession of lands by entry, &c. The manner of entry is thus: If it be a house, and the door is open, you go into it, and say these words.—I do here enter, and take possession of this house. But if the door be shut, then set your foot on the groundsel, or against the door, and say the before words: and if it be land, then go upon the land, and say. I here enter, and take possession of this land, &c. If another do it for you, he must say, I do here enter, &c. to the use of A. B. And it is necessary to make it before witnesses, and that a memorandum be made of it. Lit. 385. 1 Inst. 237, 238. In actions for recovery of lands, &c. entry is to be made within twenty years after the title accrued. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16. But where a fine of lands is passed, the entry is to be in five years. 1 R. 3. c. 7. 4 H. 7. c. 24. Also an action is to be commenced in one year after the entry. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. Demand how made of rent, &c. to entitle entry, see Demand. By 32 H. 8. c. 33. No descent to the heir of the disseisor shall take away the entry of him that hath title to the land, unless the disseisor had peaceable possession five years next after the disseisin. See Black. Com. 2 V. 312. 3 V. 176, 177. See also Claim and Forcible Entry, and Detainer.

Entry ad Communem Legem, Is the writ of entry which lies where tenant for term of life, or for term of another's life, or by the curtesy, &c. aliens and dies, when he in the reversion shall have this writ against whomsoever is in possession of the land. New Nat. Br. 461.

Entry ad terminum qui præterit, A writ of entry brought against a tenant for years, who holdeth over his term, and thereby keeps out the lessor; and if the husband and wife lease the wife's land for years, and the husband husband dieth, and the termor holds over his term, the wife may have a writ of entry ad terminum qui praterit, &c. but she must count that she and her husband leased the land, &c. Also the grantee in reversion may have this writ against the lessee, or his assignee, &c. New Nat. Br. 447, 448. An ejectment is now the common mode of proceeding; and by 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. Tenants for term of years, &c. holding over after demand made, are subject to double rent.

Entry in casu confusum, Is a writ that lies where tenant for life, or tenant by the curtesy, aliens in fee, &c. he in reversion may have this writ by Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 24. See Casu Confusum.

Entry in casu Doweris, Lies where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for term of life, or of another's life; then he in the reversion shall have this writ, provided by the Stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 7. By which statute, it is enacted, "that if a woman alien her dower in fee, or for life, the next heir, &c. shall recover by writ of entry." And the writ may be brought against the tenant of the freehold of the land, on such alienation, during the life of the tenant in dower, &c. New Nat. Br. 456. These writs of entry may be all brought either in the per, or in the cui or post.

Entry sine assensu Capituli, Is a writ of entry that lies where a bishop, abbot, &c. aliens lands or tenements of the church, without the assent of the chapter or convent. F. N. B. 195.

Enure, Signifies in the law to take place or be available; and is as much as effectum: as for example; a release made to tenant for life, shall enure, and be of force and effect to him in the reversion. List.

Eoroburce, (from the Sax. eorod, a hedge, and burce, ruptura), Hath been used for hedge-breaking: in which sense it is mentioned in the laws of King Alfred, cap. 45.

Epiphany, The day when the star appeared to the Wise-men at Christ's nativity, generally called Twelfth-Day.

Episcopalia, Synodals, or other customary payments from the clergy to their bishop or diocesan; which were formerly collected by the rural deans, and by them transmitted to the bishop. — Episcopalia reddat, vel reddere faciat de ecclesiis decanatus sui, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 61. These customary payments have been otherwise called onus episcopale; and were remitted by special privilege to free churches and chapels of the King's foundation, which were exempt from episcopal jurisdiction. Skennet's Gloss.

Episcopus Pistorum. It was a custom in former times, that some lay person about a certain feast should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called episcopus of the boys; and this custom obtained here long after several constitutions were made to abolish it. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 169.

Equality, The law delights in equality; so that when a charge is made upon one, and divers ought to bear it, he shall have relief against the rest. 2 Rep. 25. And where a man leaves a power to his wife, to give an estate among three daughters, in such proportions, as she shall think fit: it has been held she must divide it equally; unless good reason be given for doing otherwise. Pratt. Com. 256. See Contributio. In equity it is said, that "EQUA-LITY IS EQUITY." See Francis's Maxims, fol. 9, 10.

Equus, (Lat.) is taken for a knight; because anciently some knights were allowed to bear arms and gild their mantles with gold; but this word is rather used by the lawyers than lawyers; for equus armatus is not a word in our law for knight, but miles, and formerly Chevalier. 1 Inst. 5.

Equity, (equitas, quasi equalitas) is defined to be a correction, or modification, of the law generally made in that part wherein it failerh, or is too severe. And likewise signifies the extension of the words of the law to cases unexpressed, yet having the same reason; so that where one thing is enacted by statute, all other things are enacted that are of the like degree: for example; the statute of Glouc. gives action of waste against him that holds lands for life or years; and by the equity thereof, a man shall have action of waste against a tenant that holds but for one year, or half-year, which is without the words of the act, but within the meaning of it; and the words that enact the one, by equity enact the other. Terms de Ley. So that equity is of two kinds; the one doth abridge and take from the letter of the law; and the other enlarge and add thereto. Equitas est perfecta quedam ratio, que jus scriptum interpretatur & emendat. 1 Inst. 24. And statutes may be construed according to equity; especially where they give remedy for wrong, or are for expedition of justice, &c. 1 Inst. 24, 54, 76. 2 Inst. 106, 107, &c. Equity seems to be the interposing law of reason, exercised by the Lord Chancellor in extraordinary matters, to do equal justice, and by supplying the defects of the law, gives remedy in all cases. See Chancery. See Black. Com. 1 P. 61, 91. 3 P. 49, 429, 436. 4 P. 435. the subject well treated.

Equity of Redemption, on mortgages. If where money is due on a mortgage, the mortgagee is desirous to bar the equity of redemption, he may oblige the mortgagor either to pay the money, or be foreclosed of his equity; which is done by proceedings in the court of Chancery. But the Chancery cannot shorten the time of payment of the mortgage money, where it is limited by express covenant; though it may lengthen it: and then upon nonpayment, the practice is to foreclose the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. 2 Vent. 364.

To foreclose the equity, a bill in Chancery is exhibited; to which an answer is put in, and a decree being obtained, a Master in Chancery is to certify what is due for principal, interest and costs, which is to be paid at a time prefixed by the decree, whereupon the premises are to be reconveyed to the mortgagor; or in default of payment, the mortgagor is ordered to be foreclosed from all equity of redemption, and to convey the premises absolutely to the mortgagee. Law of Securities, p. 129, 133.

A fine or nonclaim will bar equity of redemption: but in a common mortgage, a covenant to restrain it shall not be regarded in Chancery. 2 Vent. 365. If the condition of a mortgage is, that the mortgagor only should redeem during life, or that he and the heirs of his body shall do it; yet the general heir shall have the equity of redemption, for if the principal and interest be offered, the land is free. Vern. 33, 190. And it is held, though a bond be conditioned, that if the money be not paid at such a time, then for a further sum the mortgagee shall have the land absolutely, as a purchaser, &c. in such case a man may also redeem. Ibid. 488.

A person who has mortgaged lands to one man, in case he mortgages the same land with some others to another, and this appears to be a contrivance to evade the statute, the mortgagee shall not take advantage thereof. 2 Vern. Rep. 589. See Barnardist. 101. Where persons having once mortgaged lands, mortgage the same a second time, without discovering the first mortgage, they forfeit their equity of redemption, and the second mortgagee may redeem, &c. And it is the same where any persons borrowing money, enter a judgment, &c. for security, and afterwards borrow more money, and mortgage lands to the second lender, without giving notice of the judgment, or paying the same off in six months, &c. by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 16.

Equivalent, Commissioners are appointed by statute to examine and rate the debts due to Scotland on the Union by way of equivalent, and provision is made for payment of the same by a yearly annuity, &c. 1 Geo. 1. c. 25. 5 Geo. 1. c. 25. See Scotland.

Ernen, The loose scattered ears of corn, that are left on the ground, after the binding or cocking of it: It is derived from the old Teuton. Ernde, Harvest; Ernden, to cut or mow corn; hence to ern is in some places to glean. Kennet's Gloss.

Erraticum, A waif, or stray; erring or wandering beast. Confit. Norman. A. D. 1080.

Error, (Fr. Erreur) Signifies something wrong in pleading, or process, &c. whereupon a writ is brought for remedy thereof, called a Writ of Error, in Lat. De errore corrigendo. And a writ of error is a writ which issues out of Chancery, and lies where any one is grieved by the proceedings and judgment in any court of record, having power to hold plea of debt, or trespass above 40 s. It is returnable in the King's Bench; and if upon the transcript of the record into B. R. it appears to the court that there is error in the record or process, or in giving of judgment, then the judgment is reversed: But if there appear to be none, then is the judgment affirmed with double costs. 1 Lill. Abr. 518.

A writ of error is a commission to judges of a superior court, by which they are authorized to examine the record, upon which a judgment was given in an inferior court, and on such examination to affirm or reverse the same, according to law. Jenk. Rep. 25. 2 Inst. 40. Yelv. 209. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annot. 346. But yet if by the writ of error the plaintiff therein may recover, or be restored to any thing, it may be released by the name of an action. Co. Lit. 288. b. See Post, Divisions II. and V. Also there is a writ of error to reverse a fine, &c.

Herein is to be considered,

- I. By whom, against whom, and at what time, this writ may be brought.
- II. In what cases it will lie, and how it is to be brought.
- III. In what court it is to be brought.
- IV. How errors are to be assigned.
- V. What defence may be made by a defendant in error.
- VI. Of the judgment to be given on a writ of error.

- I. By whom, against whom, and at what time, this writ may be brought.

Any person damaged by error in a record, or that may be supposed to be injured by it, may bring a writ of error to reverse it, whether he be party or no; but principal and bail cannot join in a writ of error. And where there are several defendants, if one of them release the errors, he may be summoned and severed, and the others may reverse the judgment. 6 Rep. 26. Hob. 72.

No person can reverse a thing for error, unless the error be to his prejudice. 5 Rep. 38. One in remainder may have writ of error upon judgment given against tenant in tail: But he in reversion or remainder shall not have writ of error, in the life-time of tenant for life, on judgment given against such tenant, because they cannot be parties grieved in his time. 2 Nels. Abr. 712.

No person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment, who was not party or privy to the record, or who was not injured by the judgment, and therefore to receive advantage by the reversal thereof. 1 Rel. Abr. 747. Dyer 90.

So a writ of error does not lie against any but him, who is party or privy to the first judgment, his heirs, executors, or administrators. 1 Rel. Abr. 747. Dyer 90.

And therefore, on a judgment for recovery of land, the writ must be brought against him who was party to the judgment, although he hath nothing in the land, and not against the tenant, and on such writ the judgment may be reversed; but there must go a fiere facias against all the tenants. 1 Rel. Abr. 749. 1 Rel. Rep. 302.

Upon this rule, that none shall have a writ of error to reverse a judgment, but he who is privy to, or hath some prejudice thereby; it hath been resolved, that if one hath lands on the part of his mother, and loseth them by erroneous judgment, and dies, the heir of the part of the mother shall have the writ of error. 1 Leon. 261. 2 Sid. 56. See Owen 68. Godd. 377.

So the younger son, when intitled to the land by the custom of Horough-English, shall bring the writ of error, and not the heir at Common law; for this remedy descends with the land. Owen 68. 1 Leon. 261. 4 Leon. 5.

So if there be an erroneous judgment, tenant in tail female, the issue female, and not the son, shall bring a writ of error. Dyer 90. 1 Leon. 261. 1 Rel. Abr. 747.

So if a man settles land to the use of himself and the heirs of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs, and dies, leaving issue only a daughter, who levies a fine, and dies without issue, and J. S. brings a writ of error as cousin and collateral heir of the daughter, yet he shall never reverse the fine; for there could no right descend to him from the daughter, because she had but an estate tail, which determined by her death without issue; and it does not appear, that the remainder in fee was in the daughter as right heir, wherefore J. S. shall not reverse the fine, quia de non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio, especially in a court of judicature, where the judges can take notice of nothing that does not come judicially before them, and appear in the pleadings. Dyer 89. Cro. Eliz. 469. 3 Lev. 36.

If there be several parties to an erroneous fine, they shall all join with the party that is to enjoy the land, though they themselves can have nothing; and this is said to be necessary only by way of conformity. 1 Rel. Abr. 747. Dyer 89. Sed qu. If any refuse to join, whether they may not be summoned and severed? See 6 Rep. 26. Hob. 72. et infra.

But if tenant for life, and he in remainder in fee, (being an infant) join in a fine, the infant alone may bring error for the error in respect of the person of the infant, which is the cause of the action for him, and for no other. 1 Leon. 317. Cro. Eliz. 115.

A writ of error may be brought by him that is made party by the law, though he was not originally party to the suit, as he who comes in as a vouchee. 1 Rel. Abr. 748, 755.

Judgment against two, one brought a writ of error, and held it should be quashed with costs; that it could not be amended, and that if the other party would not join, the defendants who chose to bring a writ of error, must proceed by summons and severance. Ratcliff and Burton, Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annot. 135, 136.

If a man is indicted for felony, and thereupon a captias and exigent are awarded, but he dies before attainder, his administrators may have error upon this award of the exigent, because by the award of the exigent, his goods were forfeited; and this is ad gravi damnum, &c. tho' the principal judgment can never be given. 11 Co. 41. b. Writ of error lies in B. R. to reverse a fine levied in the Common Pleas, and to cancel the same if it be erroneous: And if there be not an original; or not proper writs of covenant, or if there be any fraud, &c. writ of error may be brought to make the fine void. 1 Inst. 9.

With respect to the time of bringing this writ.

It was formerly holden, that a writ of error could not be brought before the judgment given; and if it bore teste before, it was no superfedeas, for the words of the writ are, Et judicium redditum sit, &c. 1 Rel. Abr. 749. But it seems now agreed, that a writ of error that bears teste before the judgment is good; and this is the usual course for preventing and superseding execution; but the judgment must be given before the return of it. March 140. 1 Ventr. 255. Moor 461. 3 Keb. 308. 1 Ventr. 96. Latch 133.

But a writ of error, that bears teste before any plaint entered, is not good. March 140.

So where the defendant, upon an indictment of barretry, brought a writ of error, bearing teste before the assise: it was disallowed, because if such practice should obtain, it would disappoint all proceedings there. 1 Vent. 255. 3 Keb. 308.

By the 10 Edw. 3. cap. 14. It is enacted, "That no fine or common recovery, nor any judgment in any real or personal action shall be reversed or avoided for any error or defect therein, unless the writ of error, or suit for the reversing such fine, recovery or judgment be commenced or brought, and prosecuted with effect, within twenty years after such fine levied, or such recovery suffered, or judgment signed or entered of record." Note, in this statute, are the usual savings as to infants, feme covert, persons non compos, in prison, or beyond sea.

A writ of error may not be brought to reverse a judgment by default, before a writ of enquiry of damages issues and is executed, that the verdict of the jury and interlocutory judgment may be made a perfect final judgment, upon which alone a writ of error must be brought. 1 Lill. 522. The plaintiff in error may cause the attorney of the defendant in error, to be summoned before a judge, or may move the court for a rule to shew cause, why final judgment should not be signed before return of the writ of error. On judgment in default in ejectment, it lies before a writ of inquiry of damages, and judgment thereupon; because in this case the judgment already is perfect to recover the term. Latch 212.

A writ of error cannot be brought after 20 years. Street v. Hopkinson, Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Anselm. 345. The statute of limitation must be pleaded to a writ of error, as well as to an original action. Id. 346.

II. In what cases a writ of error will lie, and how it is to be brought.

Writ of error will not lie in the Exchequer chamber upon a judgment in B. R. but in actions of debt, detinue, trespass on the case, covenant and ejectment; which are the actions mentioned in the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8. A writ of error lies not in the Exchequer chamber on judgment in replevin in B. R. nor on judgment in action of scandalum magnatum. 2 Nelf. 702, 709. But on judgment in replevin in C. B. there may be writ of error brought in B. R. The stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8. is only to relieve on the merits of the cause, as it stood on the first judgment.

Error de recorde quod coram vobis residet lies in the court of B. R. for errors in fact in the judgment of the same court, as nonage of the parties, want of an original, &c. which doth not proceed from the error of the judges; and this writ is allowed without bail: But a writ of this kind doth not lie for error in matter of law, when it would be reversing their own judgments. Cro. Jac. 254. And errors in fact may be corrected in C. B. the same term, without this writ, which lies not in the Exchequer chamber. Ibid. 620. If judgment is given in B. R. in civil actions, a writ of error will not lie in the same court, only for errors in fact triable by a jury; but upon a judgment in criminal cases, error will lie in B. R. whether the error be in fact or in law; though it lies also in parliament. 3 Salk. 147. Where a judgment in C. B. is affirmed upon a writ of error in B. R. and afterwards a scire facias is brought on that judgment, and the plaintiff hath judgment thereon; no writ of error lieth in the Exchequer chamber, because the record was not in B. R. by bill, but by writ of error. 1 Roll. Rep. 262. 3 Salk. 142. See 1 Salk. 263. On judgment given in the court of King's Bench in England, even after error brought and determined there, writ of error may be sued in the King's Bench in England. 2 Nelf. 730. Writ of error cannot be brought on any record which is not a judgment. 1 Salk. 145. And error lies not on an interlocutory judgment; it must be a final judgment after verdict, &c. The want of a bill in B. R. is error upon a judgment by confession, or default, (but not after a verdict) because the bill is the original process there. Ibid. Sed qu. If a bill may not be filed, &c. before assignment of error? Error lies for variance between the original writ and declaration; or want of an original: And where proceedings are de erroneis, as not to be amended; for faults in verdicts, executions, &c. And when any thing material is omitted in a judgment, writ of error lies, and the judgment shall be reversed: So where the files of inferior courts are wrong or insufficiently named, &c. their judgments may be reversed. But where faults are small, they sometimes pass as vitium clerici. 2 Nelf. Abr. 714, 715, 721, &c. 728.

By the practice of the court of Common Pleas, a defendant coming in by capias ulagatum the same term in which an exigent is returnable, may avoid the outlawry without a writ of error, by shewing that he purchased a superfedeas out of the same court, and delivered it to the sheriff before the quinto exactus, &c. or by shewing any other matter apparent on record, which makes the outlawry erroneous, as the want of an original, or the omission of process, or want of form in a writ of proclamation, &c. or a return by a person appearing not to be sheriff, or a variance between the original and exigent, or other process, or the want of such addition as is required by the 1 H. 5. c. 5. 2 Hawk. P. C. 458—9. 1 Rol. Abr. 742—3. And see 5 Eliz. c. 23. sec. 13 & 14.

If one be attainted upon an erroneous indictment, he cannot be relieved but by writ of error, for the judgment being quod suspendatur, &c. which is the judgment of law due for the offence, it must be presumed to have been given, for that he was guilty of the offence; but if judgment of acquittal is given upon such indictment, the King need bring no writ of error; but the offender may be newly indicted, for the judgment being quod cat sine die, &c. may be given as well for the insufficiency of the indictment, as for the party's innocence. 3 Inst. 214.

Also any judgment whatsoever, given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, may be falsified, by shewing the special matter, without writ of error, because it is void; as where a commission authorizes to proceed on an indictment taken before A. B. C. and twelve others, and by colour thereof the commissioners proceed on an indictment taken before eight persons only. 3 Inst. 231. Hawk. P. C. 459.

If one is attainted of felony, and after by relation of a general pardon, the felony is pardoned, he shall be discharged, for he hath no remedy by writ of error, to reverse the attainder. 6 Co. 5. a.

No writ of error will lie of any judgment that is not given in a court of record; nor of a judgment given in an inferior court, as the county-court, &c. Co. Lit. 288. b. Nor of a decree or sentence in Chancery proceeding according to equity. 37 Hen. 6. Bro. Error 95. 1 Rol. Abr. 744. But of a judgment given in the limited court of Chancery, called the Petty-bag, which proceeds according to the Common law, and holds plea of scire facias for repeal of the King's letters patent, &c. a writ of error lies in B. R. 1 Rol. Abr. 744. Dyer 315. 4 Inst. 80. Plow. 393.

Wherever a new jurisdiction is erected by act of parliament, and the court or judge, that exercises this jurisdiction, acts as a court or judge of record, according to the course of the Common law, a writ of error lies on their judgments; but where they act in a summary method, or in a new course different from the Common law, there a writ of error lies not, but a certiorari. 1 Salk. 263.

As to the manner of bringing it.

Error in the King's Bench is thus prosecuted: The clerk of the county makes out the writ of error, from a præcipe or copy of the declaration left with him; which is to be allowed with the clerk of the errors, who has a fee of 5 s. 6 d. and a certificate of the allowance of the writ must be sent on the defendant's attorney in error; also the plaintiff's attorney in the action, is to procure an original warrant his judgment; and warrants of attorney must be filed, and bail put in, where required, &c. And then the proceedings are by scire facias ad audiendum errorem against the plaintiff in the action, whercon whereon judgment was obtained; and the writ of error being received by the sheriff to whom directed, he is to give notice to the plaintiff in error to shew cause why execution should not be on the judgment, and make a return to that purpose; then a rule is to be given with the clerk of the rules for the plaintiff in error to assign his errors by such a day, which if he shall not do before the rule is out, the plaintiff in the original action may take out execution against him.

If the plaintiff in error assign errors in the record, then the defendant must plead In nullo est erratum, and thereupon enter the cause with the clerk of the papers, for the errors to be argued; and paper books for the counsel and judges, are to be made out, &c. If some part of the record be not returned, a certiorari must be prayed to bring it into court; and if matters of fact are alledged in error, as nonage, death of the plaintiff, &c. a proper plea must be made thereto, and issue thereupon taken and tried as in any other issue: But if only matters of law are assigned, the errors are argued by counsel on both sides, and the judgment is either reversed or affirmed: And when judgment is affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed against the defendant in the action, by taking out execution on the affirmetur, or bringing action of debt on the judgment; or he may prosecute the bail by scire facias upon their recognisance. 2 Vol. Mod. Ent. Eng. 373. 378. But 'tis said by some, that an assignment of errors in fact and in law, is bad on demurrer; by others, that the assignment of error in law may stand, and the fact be considered as nothing. Sed qu. Where there is an error in fact, if the writ of error ought not to be coram vobis residens, i. e. in the court where the judgment was given. In this case, however, we must except the writs of warrants of attorney, &c. which are facts; and 'tis every day's practice to assign such, with errors in law, and the usual course is, if defendant in error does not pray a certiorari, for the plaintiff to pray it.

When a judgment is reversed or affirmed in the Exchequer chamber, the transcript of the record thereof will be remitted back to this court, to be entered up at the end of the judgment here: and if such judgment shall be affirmed in the Exchequer chamber, yet a writ of error may be brought thereupon returnable in parliament. Præf. Solic. 252, 253.

If you would bring a writ of error in parliament to reverse a judgment in B. R. there must be a petition to the King for his warrant, which petition has the allowance of the Attorney General, and then the King writes on the top of it Fiat Justitia; whereupon a writ of error is made out by the clerk of the errors, (who hath 4 l. fee, and the King's warrant costs 5 l.) And then the Lord Chief Justice of this court carries the record, and a transcript thereof, up to the House of Lords in full Parliament, and after they are examined there, leaves the transcript with the Lords, but brings back the record: And this being done, the attorney for the defendant in errors, gets some Lord to move that the plaintiff in errors may assign his errors; but if for the plaintiff, motion is to be made that upon his assigning errors, the defendant may appear and make his defence, and counsel be heard on both sides: then, after the judgment is either affirmed or reversed, the clerk of the parliament remands the transcript of the record into B. R. with the affirmation or reversal thereof, to be entered upon the record of the said court, which court, if affirmed, awards execution, &c. Dyer 385. Præf. Aitorn. Edit. 1. p. 117.

A writ of error in parliament is made returnable immediately; or on a prorogation ad proximum parliamentum: and it doth not determine by a prorogation. But if a parliament is dissolved before the errors are heard, it is otherwise. And on motion, execution hath been granted in B. R. on a judgment in such a case, the record being never out of the court. Razm. 2 N. 731.

To bring a writ of error in the King's Bench here in England to reverse a judgment given in the King's Bench in Ireland, a writ must be procured from the curitor, directed to the Chief Justice of the court of B. R. in Ireland, requiring him to summon the plaintiff in the action there, to appear here in this court, to answer the errors; whereupon a transcript of the record is sent over, (not the record itself of the judgment, which remains in Ireland) and when the errors are argued, if the judgment is reversed, there must go a writ to the Chief Justice of Ireland to reverse it; so that the judgment is not actually reversed here, but there. And where the judgment in Ireland is affirmed here, there can be no writ of execution granted here; but on affirmance of the judgment a writ goes, reciting all the proceedings, directed to the judges of B. R. in Ireland, commanding them to issue process of execution. Cro. Car. 368. 1 Salk. 321.

The party bringing the writ of error is to cause the roll where the judgment is entered, to be marked with the word error in the margin, that the other party may have notice on the record that the writ of error is brought, and this marking of the roll, on giving notice thereof, is as it were a superfedeas in itself to hinder execution: Though a superfedeas is to be made out, allowed and left with the sheriff of the county: And the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to search the record, whether writ of error is brought or not; but may make out execution upon the judgment, if no superfedeas be taken forth, or he hath no notice of the writ of error. Trin. 24 Car. B. R.

On a writ of error of a judgment in the Common Pleas, or other inferior court, in every adversary suit, the record itself shall be removed, that it may remain as a precedent and evidence of the law in the like cases. 1 Rel. Abr. 753. 5 Co. 39.

But in the case of a fine the transcript only is removed, for fines are only a more solemn acknowledgment or contract of the parties, and therefore are no memorials of the law, and need only be affirmed or vacated; if the former, the contract stands as it was: If the latter, the justices of B. R. may send for the fine itself, and reverse it, or they may send a writ to the treasurer and chamberlain to take it off the file; besides, should the record itself be removed and affirmed, it could not be ingrossed for want of a chirographer in B. R. 1 Rel. Abr. 752. 1 Benl. 51. Dyer 89. Gudb. 248. 2 Rel. Rep. 233. F. N. B. 20.

If the judges of the Common Pleas, or other judges, upon a writ of error, will not certify all the record, the party that sues the writ of error may alledge diminution of the record, and pray a writ to the justices that certified the record before, to certify the whole record. F. N. B. 25.

But diminution cannot be alledged upon a writ of error brought upon a judgment in any inferior court. 1 Sid. 40. But see infra.

By statute, he that brings writ of error, to reverse a judgment in a superior court, in all cases after a verdict, or in any action of debt, upon bond for payment of money only, or on a contract, must put in good sureties to prosecute his writ of error with effect, and pay the debt and damages if judgment be affirmed: But inferior courts, as well upon verdicts as other judgments, by default, &c. have their writs of error allowed without putting in bail, they being only in the statute. 3 Jac.

8. If bail be not put in, on the writ of error brought upon a judgment in the courts at Westminster, in cases where bail is required, the writ of error is no superfedeas to the execution, though such writ is in being, until a habeas corpus is entered, or judgment affirmed, &c. And it is the same where insufficient bail is given, on rule to put in better bail, or justify those put in, which if the plaintiff doth not do, execution is ordered upon the judgment, with a non obstante to the writ of error, &c. Mils. g. v. 1. B. R.

A plaintiff in error is, in the time appointed by the rule for that purpose, to certify the record into B. R. or the court will grant a habeas corpus on the writ of error. Mils. 22 Car. B. R. A writ of error is a commission, it is not an action. But see ante, previous to the Division. And see Division V.

Error in process by the fault of clerks in B. R. is not reversible, though in the same term, without writ of error: It is otherwise in C. B. But writs of error remove only the record and process, not the original, which remains filed with the custos brevium. Jenk. Cent. 116.

25. In error it was said that B. R. could not reverse a judgment given in another court; unless they could give the same judgment that court should have given; which in this case they might not; by reason the plaintiff in the original action was dead: but by Holt C. J. If this court cannot give like judgment, as that below should have done, it is because the suit by the death of the plaintiff there is abated; but the judgment may nevertheless be reversed here, and by reversal the executor is restored to his action. Trin. 5 Ann.

The court will not let the plaintiff in error quash his own writ of error; though they may grant leave to discontinue it. 5 Mod. 67. If a verdict is for a defendant in error, and judgment is affirmed, costs are allowed by Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. occasione dilationis executionis. And by 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. Upon quashing writs of error, for defect or variance from the record, &c. the defendant is to have costs as if judgment were affirmed. When a writ of error is not in dilationis executionis, as where it is brought after the execution is executed, the plaintiff shall not have damages and costs. Cro. Jac. 636.

When a writ of error is brought to reverse a judgment in an inferior court, though the record is not certified as it ought, yet execution cannot be sued; but on certificate of the neglect, &c. a writ of executionis judicii may be issued. 1 Lill. Abr. 526. Upon a writ of error, if the clerk below will certify the record wrong, action of the case lies against him; and if he make no return, the plaintiff may have the writ executionis judicii out of Chancery. Mod. Caf. 245.

If erroneous judgment be for the defendant in an inferior court, and it is reversed in B. R. and the merits appear for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment, but if the merits be against the plaintiff, the defendant shall have new judgment, in like manner as in the Exchequer chamber; for the judges are to reform, as well as to affirm or reverse. Farell. Rep. 2, 3. If a writ of error to reverse a judgment be discontinued for want of prosecution; execution cannot be had upon the judgment, until the discontinuance is certified from the court where discontinued. 1 Lill. 518. If a writ of error is brought to remove a record of a judgment given in C. B. and the plaintiff in error leaves the record there, without removing it before the return of the writ; or in case there be a longer return-day than is convenient in the writ of error, as if it is purchased the beginning of Michaelmas term, and made returnable in Hilary term; the court may award execution, although the writ of error be delivered. Jenk. Cent. 180, Dyer 245.

III. In what court error is to be brought.

Erroneous judgments given in the court of B. R. were only reformed by the parliament till stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 8. By that statute, a writ of error lies out of the Chancery upon all judgments given in the King's Bench, when the suit is by bill, (except the King is a party to the suit) returnable in the Exchequer chamber, before the judges of the Common Pleas, and Barons of the Exchequer, &c. who may examine the errors, and reverse or affirm the judgment; other than for errors, concerning the jurisdiction of the court, or want of form in writs, pleadings, &c. and after the errors are examined, and judgment affirmed or reversed, the record is sent back to the King's Bench, to proceed and award execution; but if the suit is by original writ, or on qui tam, &c. where the King is party, writ of error lies only in parliament. Stat. Ibid.

Not only on reversing or affirming a judgment, the Exchequer chamber is to send back the record into B. R. but also if the plaintiff in the writ of error is nonsuit, or if the suit is discontinued in the court of Exchequer chamber, the record shall be sent back: And the court of Exchequer shall give costs and damages to the plaintiff in the original action for his delay, &c. though if the plaintiff in error was plaintiff in the original action, there no costs can be given. 2 And. 122. 2 Nels. Abr. 707. Where a writ of error determines in the Exchequer chamber, by abatement or discontinuance, the judgment is not again in B. R. till a remittitur is entered. 1 Salk. 261. The Exchequer chamber doth not award a sci.

fac. ad audiend. errores; but notice is given to the parties concerned. 1 Vent. 34.

The court of parliament is the supreme court, where anciently causes of great consequence, as between the Magnates Regni, were heard and determined; hence the lords is the dernier resort; to which a writ of error lies; and therefore, if a writ of error be brought of a judgment in the King's Bench into the Exchequer chamber, and there the judgment is reversed; yet a writ of error lies of such judgment into parliament, and the lords may reverse such second judgment. Shew. Parl. Ca. 24, 110. 1 Vent. 334. Raym. 330. 2 Jon. 99. 2 Lev. 232.

So a writ of error lies into parliament upon a judgment in B. R. either in a cause brought there by writ of error, or originally commenced there. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.

And tho' upon a judgment in the King's Bench, since the 27 Eliz. cap. 8. the party may elect either to bring a writ of error in the Exchequer chamber, or in parliament; yet if the cause commenced in the King's Bench by original writ there lies no writ of error but into parliament; also if he elects to bring error in the Exchequer chamber, regularly he cannot after bring error in parliament upon the first judgment. 1 Saund. 346. Carth. 180. S. P.

And therefore it seems, that if a writ of error be brought upon a judgment in the Exchequer chamber, where the judgment is affirmed, and after error is brought upon the same judgment in the parliament; this writ of error is no superfedeas; but if the writ of error be brought upon the judgment in the Exchequer chamber, it is a superfedeas. See 2 Rol. Abr. 492. 2 Lev. 232.

To reverse a judgment given in the court of Common Pleas, the writ of error is made returnable in the King's Bench, and error is not to be brought in parliament; Though where a writ of error is brought in B. R. upon a judgment given in C. B. and the judgment is reversed or affirmed in B. R. the party grieved may have writ of error returnable in parliament. 31 Eliz. c. 1. 1 Lill. Abr. 519, 521. Erroneous judgment in the court of Exchequer, is to be examined by the Lord Chancellor, &c. with some of the justices, and such other sage persons as they think fit; and if any error be found, they shall correct the rolls, and send them into the Exchequer, in order to make execution, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 12.

If an erroneous judgment be given in London, or other place, which is a court of record, the party grieved shall have a writ of error, and this writ may be returned into the Common Pleas, or into the King's Bench, at the pleasure of him who sueth the same. F. N. B. 44.

No writ of error lies in Banco or Banco Regis, upon a judgment given within the five ports; but by custom such judgment is examinable by bill in nature of a writ of error coram domino custode seu gardiano quinque portuum apud curiam suam de Shepway. 4 Inst. 224.

If a judgment be given in the court of stannaries of the duchy of Cornwall, no writ of error lies upon this in Banco or Banco Regis, because it hath not been used; but of this there may be an appeal to the guardian of the stannaries, and from him to the Prince; and when there is no Prince, to the King's counsel. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.

A writ of error lies in the Common Pleas upon a judgment given before the judges of assize. 1 Rol. Abr. 745. But see 1 Leon. 55. 3 Leon. 55, 159. Dyer 250. Moor 78. 1 And. 12. Cro. Eliz. 26. Carter 222.

Upon a judgment given in the Hustings in London, a writ of error lies at St. Martin's before certain justices. 1 Rol. Abr. 745. 1 Lev. 309. 2 Saund. 253. S. P. and that upon a judgment of the said justices, a writ of error lies in parliament. See 2 Leon. 107.

In Wales, at the Great Sessions there, a writ of error lies on personal actions to the council of the Marches of Wales; and if they give an erroneous judgment, it is final, for the statute 34 H. 8. c. 26. ordains this writ to the council there; and since that act, no writ of error has been granted of such erroneous judgment; Upon er- ters in real or mixed actions in Wales, writ of error lieth into the King's Bench. Jenk. Cent. 71. And so in personal actions now by 1 W. & M. c. 27.

In some cases a writ of error lies in the same court wherein the record is.

If upon a judgment in B. R. there be error in the process, or through the default of the clerks, it shall be reversed in the same court by writ of error sued there before the same justices. F. N. B. 21. Poph. 181. 1 Rel. Abr. 746.

So if one is indicted of treason or felony in B. R. or being indicted elsewhere, the indictment is removed in B. R. and by process of that court he is erroneously outlawed, and so returned; a writ of error may be brought in B. R. for the reversal thereof. 3 Inst. 214.

Also if an erroneous judgment in point of law be given in B. R. upon an indictment in London, a writ of error may be brought in the same court; for though in civil cases error does not lie in the same court, unless for a matter of fact; yet in criminal cases it lies as well for an error in law as fact. 1 Sid. 208.

But if an erroneous judgment be given, and the error lies in the judgment itself, and not in the process, a writ of error does not lie in B. R. of such judgment. 1 Rel. Abr. 746.

If a record is removed by writ of error out of the Common Pleas into the King's Bench, and the writ of error for insufficiency is quashed in the King's Bench, the plaintiff in error may have a writ coram vobis rescind. But such new writ is not a superfedeas in itself as the first writ was, and therefore he must move the court for a superfedeas, and put in bail thereon. Carth. 368—9.

So if such second writ be quashed for insufficiency, yet the court will grant a new or second writ of error coram vobis rescind. As also a superfedeas on putting in bail; for such second writ being void, is as if there had been none before. Carth. 369, 370.

IV. How errors are to be assigned.

In writ of error, when the record comes into court, if the plaintiff all that term doth not assign his errors; or if he do it, and omit to sue a scire facias ad audiendum errores, against the defendant in errors, returnable the same term, or the next, all the matter is discontinued; and the next term a new writ of error is to be sued out upon the record directed to the same justices, &c. F. N. B. 20. If he that brings writ of error, discontinues before the defendant in the writ of error pleads to it, he may have a new writ of error; but if he discontinue after the defendant hath pleaded In nullo est erratum, he may not have a new writ. 1 Lill. 522. The parties, upon the removal of the record by the writ of error, have no day in court given to either of them; so that if the plaintiff in error delay to sue forth his sci fac. ad audiend. errores, the defendant hath no way to compel him, but by suing out a scire facias quare executionem non, &c. And if thereupon the plaintiff in error doth not plead that his errors are assigned, but suffer judgment to pass upon two nibils, no errors afterwards assigned shall prevent execution. Cartwright's Rep. 41. As before observed, the sci fac. ad audiend. errores is only used in B. R. In the Exchequer chamber notice is given. It is said the usual practice is, that the defendant in the writ of error, by consent doth voluntarily take notice of the assignment of errors, and this consent is testified by his pleading In nullo est errat. and then there is no occasion for a scire facias ad audiend. error. Ibid.

Errors are to be assigned in the term, or the writ of error will be quashed. 1 Lill. Abr. 524. When the record is in court by writ of error, the plaintiff in error is to assign his errors; and may have a scire facias before the record is entered: And the manner of assigning errors, according to the ancient practice, is to put a bill into court, and say in the bill, in hoc erratum est, &c. shewing in certain in what things. F. N. B. 20. The assignment of error, in omnibus erratum is not good; for the judgment is founded upon the original writ, count, pleading, issue, process, trial, and so is manifold. Jenk. Cent. 84. Errors not assigned in the record, may be assigned after a scire facias ad audiend. errores; as the record is in court; but it is not so of a warrant of attorney, which is an error in fact, and not upon record. Ibid. 140. 5 Rep. 37.

If one in execution brings error, he ought to assign the errors in his proper person: And in cases of outlawry for felony, errors sufficient must be certainly alledged in writing, before the writ of error is allowed. Jenk. Cent. 165, 179. Where a recovery is had, and error brought, if the original writ doth not abate by death; but is abatable only, as by entry into the land pending the writ, or coverture, acquisition of a dignity, a partial array returned, aid denied, &c. that should have been pleaded, and were not: These shall not be assigned for error; for they are waved, because no exception was taken to the writ. 9 Rep. 47. 21 H. 6. 29.

The assigning general errors is to say that the declaration, &c. is not sufficient in law; and that judgment was given for the plaintiff, where it ought to have been for the defendant: And the errors of a judgment are now to be assigned on the record, to appear with it to the court. It must appear in the record, that judgment was given for a matter out of the jurisdiction of the court, for the plaintiff in error to assign that for error. And that shall never be assigned for error which might have been pleaded to the action. Roll. Rep. 50, 88. 1 Lill. 523.

The plaintiff in error cannot assign error in fact, and error in law together, for these are distinct things, and require different trials. 9 Rel. Abr. 761. 1 Sid. 147. 1 Leon. 105. But vide ante.

If the plaintiff in errors assigns errors in fact, and errors in law, which are not assignable together, and the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum; this is a confession of the error in fact, and the judgment must be reversed, for he should have demurred for the duplicity. Style 69. 1 Lev. 76. Salk. 268. 6 Mod. 113, 206.

Also if an error in fact be well assigned, in nullo est erratum is a confession of it, for the defendant ought to have joined issue upon it, so as to have it tried by the country. 1 Sid. 93. Raym. 59.

But if an error in fact be ill assigned, in nullo est erratum is no confession of it; as if it be assigned, that such a one at the time of the return of the venire was not sheriff, and the record be removed into B. R. by certiorari, there in nullo est erratum is no confession of that error, because the record is not in court, that being no part of the record, for the plea is in nullo est erratum in recordo. Cro. Jac. 12, 29, 521. Raym. 231. Cro. Car. 421. 1 Rel. Abr. 758.

So if the plaintiff in error assigns an error in fact, viz. that the defendant, who was an infant, did not appear by guardian, but by attorney, and concludes with hoc paratus est verificare, instead of concluding to the country, as he ought to do, though the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum; yet it shall not amount to a confession, but shall be taken only for a demurrer. Yelv. 58.

Also if an error in fact, that is not assignable, be assigned, and in nullo est erratum be pleaded, it is no confession; as if it be assigned, that such a day there was no court of Common Pleas sitting, because that is against the record, and in such case in nullo est erratum is only a demurrer; so if a man says he did not appear, and the record says he did, in nullo est erratum is no confession, but a demurrer, because it is against the record. Cro. Car. 12, 29, 52. Yelv. 58. Raym. 231. 1 Vent. 252. 3 Keb. 259. 1 Lev. 76.

It has been held, that an error in fact cannot be assigned in the Exchequer chamber: Though by some authorities, errors in fact may be assigned as errors in law. 2 Mod. 194. 2 Nels. Abr. 708.

By 30 Car. 2. c. 6. In actions real, personal, and mixed, the death of either party between verdict and judgment, shall not be alledged for error.

It seems a general rule, that nothing can be assigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of justice being things of the greatest credit, cannot be questioned but by matters of equal notoriety with themselves; wherefore, though the matter assigned for for error should be proved by witnesses of the best credit, yet the judges would not admit of it. 1 Rol. Abr. 757.

Hence it is, that in a writ of error to reverse a fine, the plaintiff cannot assign, that the conusor died before the teste of the dedimus, because that contradicts the record of the conusance taken by the commissioners, which evidently shews that the conusor was then alive, because they took his conusance after they were armed with the commission, and the dedimus issued. Dyer 89. 1 Rol. Abr. 757.

V. What defence may be made by a defendant in error.

The defendant in error may plead a release of all errors, or a release of all suits, and these pleas, if found for him, will for ever bar the plaintiff in error. 1 Rol. Abr. 758.

So where by a writ of error the plaintiff shall recover, or be restored to any personal thing, as debt, damage, or the like, a release of all actions personal is a good plea; and when land is to be recovered or restored in a writ of error, a release of actions real is a good bar; but where by a writ of error the plaintiff shall not be restored to any personal or real thing, a release of all actions real or personal is no bar. Co. Lit. 288. b. 8 Co. 152. 1 Rol. Abr. 788. 2 Rol. Abr. 405.

Also if a man loses in a real action, and he releases all his right to the land, this shall bar him of his writ of error, for no person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment that is not intitled to the land, &c. for the courts of law will not turn out the present tenant, unless the demandant can make out a clear title; possession always carrying with it the presumption of a good title, till the right owner appears. 1 Rol. Abr. 747, 788. Dyer 90. a. 3 Leo. 36.

Hence it is, that if a man releases all his right of the land of which a fine was levied, he has thereby barred himself of his writ of error; for his release having for ever excluded him from the land, he can have no writ of error, because nobody is intitled who cannot have the land, of which the fine was erroneously levied. Cro. Eliz. 469. 1 Rol. Abr. 789.

If the tenant, pending a præcipe against him, aliens in fee, and after judgment is given against him, and he brings a writ of error; this feoffment is not any bar to the writ, because he was privy to the judgment after. 1 Rol. Abr. 788. Bridg. 77. 1 Rol. Rep. 306.

In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, it is no good plea, that the plaintiff pending the writ of error hath entered into part, for before the possession was taken from him, he might have error to reverse the judgment, thought not to have restitution. 1 Lev. 72.

In a scire facias against a tertenant, he may plead a release of error, though he be not privy to the judgment. 9 Hen. 6. 48. Bro. 9. S. C.

But the tertenants cannot plead in abatement of the writ of error, but only in bar as a release, &c. in maintenance of their title. 1 Lev. 72.

After in nullo est erratum pleaded, the party affirms the record to be perfect, and he is foreclosed to say there is error in it: Though the court is not restrained from examining into it. 1 Salk. 270. The judges are not bound to search for errors in the record, which were not assigned; but may if they will; and if they find error they ought to reverse the judgment. Jenk. Cent. 159.

VI. Of the judgment to be given on a writ of error.

A judgment cannot be reversed in part, and stand good as to other part; or be reversed as to one party, and remain good against the rest: Though if there be error in awarding execution, the execution only shall be reversed, and not the judgment. Hob. 90. The judgment is an intire thing, and therefore it cannot be reversed in part, and affirmed in part; but if it is erroneous as to any part, the intire judgment must be reversed. Carib. Rep. 235. If judgment is entered against joint defendants, when one of them is dead, the judgment shall be reversed for error as to all of them; for in such case the plaintiff ought to make a special entry of the death of the party with Nil ulterius versus cum fiat, and then take judgment only against the others. Ibid. 149.

The court of Exchequer chamber have not any authority, but to reverse or affirm the judgment, &c. for they cannot make execution. Cro. Eliz. 108. But where judgment is given for the defendant, and the plaintiff brings a writ of error; if the judgment is reversed, the court which reverses the judgment shall give judgment for the plaintiff, as the other court ought to have done. Telov. 117, 118. In the Exchequer chamber, after reversal of a judgment, &c. in B. R. the court gave judgment, quod quer. recuperet, &c. but because they wanted power to award a writ of inquiry which was necessary, being on a demurrer, therefore it was sent back into B. R. for the execution of that writ, and thereupon to give final judgment: But if the judgment is against the plaintiff in B. R. upon a special verdict, and that judgment is reversed in the Exchequer chamber, there being no writ of inquiry requisite, the court of Exchequer chamber doth not only give judgment of reversal, but a complete judgment for the plaintiff in the action. Carib. 181. If erroneous judgment be had by consent of parties, it may be reversed in the Exchequer chamber; for consent of parties may not change the law; but if the consent is entered upon and made part of the record, it may be good. Hob. 5. Cro. Eliz. 664. The reversal in the Exchequer chamber, is res judicata: No writ of error lies upon such judgment, except in parliament; and it is by six judges at least, by the statute 27 Eliz. c. 8. and 31 Eliz. c. 1.

When judgment is given in B. R. for the plaintiff in errors, there shall be only a judicium revocetur, &c. entered with costs: If for the defendant in errors, that the plaintiff nil capiat per breve suum de errore. The Chief Justice of B. R. &c. or the eldest judge ought to allow a writ of error which is in judgment of law a superseas until the errors are examined, and the judgment affirmed or reversed. Cro. Jac. 534. As a plaintiff having erroneous judgment may reverse it; and new judgment may be given for him: So if a judgment is reversed, the plaintiff may bring a new action for the same cause. 1 Lev. 310. Where a judgment is pleaded in bar of another action, &c. and judgment given on that plea; writ of error may be had to reverse the second judgment. Cro. Eliz. 503. Jenk. Cent. 259. And debt lies upon a judgment in B. R. after a writ of error brought; which is only a superseas to the execution. 1 Lev. 153.

In a writ of error upon a judgment in trespass against several, if the judgment be erroneous, because one of the defendants was within age, and appeared by attorney, the judgment shall be reversed in toto against all. 1 Rol. Abr. 776. Cro. Jac. 289. S. C. and 303. S. P. adjudged. Allen 74, 75. S. C. and S. P. adjudged. Style 121, 125, 406. S. P. adjudged.

By stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. it is enacted, That all writs of error, wherein there shall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended by the court, and made agreeable to the record: And where any verdict hath been given, in any action, suit, &c. in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, or other court of record, the judgment thereon shall not be stayed or reversed for any defect or fault in form or substance, in any bill, writ, &c. or for variance in any such writs from the declaration and other proceedings: but this is not to extend to any appeal of felony, or process on indictment, informations, and appeals. See Judgment.

Etymologum, An ancient word for a meeting of the neighbourhood to compromise differences among themselves; which was customary in former days; it is mentioned in Leg. H. 1. c. 57.

Esbranchatura, (from the Fr. esbrancher) Cutting off branches or boughs in forests, &c. Hoved. 784.

Escaldare, To scald: Escaldare porcos, was one of our ancient tenures in serjeanty; as appears by the inquisition of the serjeancies and knights fees in the 12th and 13th years of King John, within the counties of Essex and Hertford. Lib. Rub. Scaccar' MS. 137.

Escambio, (derived from the Span. cambiar to change) Was a licence granted to make over a bill of exchange to another Escape, (escapium, from the Fr. eschapper, i. e. effugere to fly from) Signifies a violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint; as where a person is arrested or imprisoned, and gets away before delivered by due course of law. Staundf. P. C. cap. 26, 27.

Escapes are either in civil or in criminal cases. As to escapes in civil cases it is to be considered,

- I. Where the party shall be said to be legally committed, so that the suffering him to go at large will be adjudged an escape; and what degree of liberty, or going at large, shall be deemed an escape, as also what persons are answerable for an escape.
- II. Of the difference between voluntary and negligent escapes, as also between escapes on mesne process and execution.
- III. Of the nature of the action to be brought for an escape, and of the manner of laying it.
- IV. Of the party's defence sued for the escape, and therein of pleading fresh suit.

I. Of legal commitment, what shall be deemed an escape, and who answerable.

It seems agreed as a general rule, that where-ever a sheriff or other officer hath a person in custody, by virtue of an authority from a court which hath jurisdiction over the matter, that the suffering such a person to go at large is an escape, for he cannot judge of the validity of the process or other proceedings of such court, and therefore cannot take advantage of any errors in them; hence the law allows him, in an action of false imprisonment, to plead such authority, which will excuse him, tho' it be erroneous; but if the court has no jurisdiction of the matter, then all is void, and consequently the officer not punishable for suffering a person taken upon such void authority to escape. Moor 274. Dyer 175. Popb. 203. 1 Leon. 30. 8 Co. 141. b. 5 Co. 64. Cro. Jac. 280, 289. 2 Bulst. 64, 256. Therefore, if a ca. sa. issue after a year and a day, without suing out a scire facias, this error will not excuse the sheriff in an escape. 2 Cro. 288. Salk. 273. But though a sheriff may not take advantage of an erroneous process; yet he shall of a void process, on which it is no escape to let a prisoner go.

If at the petition of A. and the rest of the creditors of B. a commission upon the statute against bankrupts is issued out against B. and thereupon the commissioners sit and offer interrogatories to C. and he refuses to be examined, and by them is thereupon committed to prison, and the gaoler suffers him to escape, as the commissioners had sufficient authority to commit, and A. was prejudiced by the escape, he may maintain an action against the gaoler. 1 Rol. Rep. 47. Moor 834. pl. 1123. S. C.

The sheriff cannot be charged with an escape before he had the party in actual custody by a legal authority; and therefore if an officer, having a warrant to arrest a man, see him shut up in a house, and challenge him as his prisoner, but never actually have him in his custody, and the party get free, the officer cannot be charged with an escape. Bro. Escape, 22.

But if A. is arrested, and in the actual custody of the sheriff, and afterwards another writ is delivered to him at the suit of J. S. upon the delivery of the writ, A. by construction of law is immediately in the sheriff's custody, without an actual arrest; and if he escapes, the plaintiff may declare, that he was arrested by virtue of the second writ, which is the operation it has by law, and not according to the fact. 5 Co. 89.

If a person out upon bail renders himself in discharge of his bail, and a redditis is entered in the judge's book, and a committitur filed in the office, and the prisoner afterwards escapes; yet if no notice was given to the marshal of such render, nor no entry made of the commitment in his book, the prisoner shall not be deemed in custody so as to charge the marshal with an escape; but it seems this matter cannot be insisted upon after trial. 1 Salk. 272—3.

It hath been held, that entering a committitur upon the roll was not sufficient to charge the marshal with any escape, without proving an actual imprisonment; but that proving the party to be actually in prison, though there be no entry made in the marshal's book (without which he pretends he knows not how to take charge of them) is sufficient. 1 Sid. 220. 1 Keb. 775.

And now for the greater security of creditors, and the better to enable them to prove the actual custody of the prisoner, by Stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. cap. 27. sect. 9. it is enacted, "That if any one, desiring to charge any person with any action or execution, shall desire to be informed by the marshal or warden, or their respective deputies, or by any other keeper of any other prison, whether such person be a prisoner in his custody, or not, the said marshal or warden, or such other keeper, shall give a true note in writing thereof, to the person so requesting the same, or to his lawful attorney, upon demand, at his office for that purpose, or in default thereof, shall forfeit the sum of 50*l.* and if such marshal or warden, or their respective deputy, &c. exercising the said office, or other keeper, &c. of any other prison, shall give a note in writing, that such person is an actual prisoner in his or their custody, every such note shall be taken as a sufficient evidence, that such person was at that time a prisoner in actual custody."

A committitur upon the roll is good evidence in escape, without an entry in the marshal's book. Ld. Raym. 705.

As to the degree of liberty which may be deemed an escape.

Every person in prison by process of law is to be kept in salva & arcta custodia, in order to compel them the more speedily to pay their debts, and make satisfaction to their creditors. Plow. 36. 3 Co. 44. 2 Inst. 381. 1 Rel. Abr. 806.

Persons in the King's Bench and Fleet prisons, are to be actually detained within the said prisons; and if they escape, action of debt lies against the warden, &c. 1 R. 2. c. 12. But now the marshal or warden grant the liberty of the rules to such as they think proper, (not criminally charged) on proper security. Keepers of those prisons suffering prisoners either upon contempt or mesne process, or in execution, to be out of the rules (except on rule of courts, &c.) is an escape; and persons conniving at an escape shall forfeit 50*l.* &c. by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. And by this statute where any prisoner in execution escapes, the creditor may have any other new execution against him. By Stat. 5 Ann. c. 9. If any person in custody, for not performing any decree in Chancery, &c. escape, the party for whom the money is decreed may have the same remedy against the sheriff, as if the prisoner had been in custody on execution. A prisoner in execution should not be allowed to go out of the gaol; for if he goes out, tho' he returns again, it is an escape. 3 Rep. 43, 44. 2 Inst. 260, 381. If a sheriff or gaoler suffer his prisoner in execution to go abroad, unless it be by licence of the Lord Chief Justice, and of the plaintiff; this will be an escape in law, although he come to prison again. Plowd. 37. And yet in London, by special custom there, in some cases the prisoner may go abroad with his keeper, and it will be no escape. Ibid. See Hob. 202. Where the justice of the court, and plaintiff in the suit, agree that the prisoner shall be at liberty, and he go out and return at his time; it is no escape: but this may not be without the sheriff's consent. Dyer 275.

If a plaintiff by word license the sheriff to deliver the prisoner, no action will lie for this as an escape. 27 H. 8. 24. If the King, or any great man shall require a sheriff, &c. to set his prisoner at liberty, or threaten him if he do not so; if he do it accordingly, it will be an escape in him. Dyer 278, 297. But where there is no good imprisonment at the time of the escape; as if a man be imprisoned by a court that hath not power to imprison him, &c. there can be no escape. 14 H. 7. 1. Dyer 66, 306. 2 Bulst. 237. A plaintiff having judgment, it was ruled that the defendant should pay so much money before such a day, and if he failed, then the plaintiff to take him in execution; on failure of payment, he was taken, taken, and then sent an audita querela in the Chancery, where on a suggestion he had an injunction and superfidei, and was bailed and set at large, the plaintiff not being paid his debt: as this was done after judgment and execution, it was said to be an escape in law. Midd. 1. Jac. 1. 2 Bull. 120. 2 Step. Abr. 318.

If there be an escape by the plaintiff's consent, when he did not intend it, the law is hard that the debt should be thereby discharged; as where one was in execution in B. R. and some proposals being made to the plaintiff in behalf of the prisoner, seeing there was some likelihood of an accommodation, the plaintiff consented to a meeting in a certain place in London; and desired the prisoner might be there, who came accordingly: this was held to be an escape, with the plaintiff's consent, and he could never after be in execution at his suit for the same matter. 2 Mod. 136. It hath been adjudged no escape to let a prisoner go where the sheriff hath the prisoner in custody, if it be before the return of the writ: his sufficient if the officer hath the party at the return of the writ. Ex. Moor. 299. 1 Salk. 201. 2 Mod. 139. 720. Yet it hath been held, that where a sheriff or bailliff is granted to bring a person in a county, if he sends him on the way, he him go at large in the county, or cause him to be about a great way, Ex. it will be an escape. 2 Mod. 136. And an escape in this place is an escape in all places: for a prisoner being once escaped, Ex. it is large. It hath been intended he is confined to no place, so that for escape action may be brought against the prisoner in any county. 1 Lill. Abr. 537. Committing the custody of the prisoner to prison, where an escape in law of all the prisoners there. See Style 375.

If a woman warden of the Fleet prison, having a prisoner, or if a sheriff, Ex. makes a woman in execution with him, in either case he will be deemed an escape in law. Plowd. 17.

If a man hath judgment against two persons, and both are taken in execution, if the sheriff suffer one of them to escape, he shall be answerable for the whole debt, though he hath one of them in custody. 1 Rol. Abr. 816.

By the Stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. cap. 27. Sec. 2. It is enacted, "That if the sheriff or warden for the time being, or their respective deputy or deputies, or other keeper or keepers of any other prison or prisons, shall, after one day's notice in writing given for that purpose, refuse to show any prisoner committed in execution to the creditor at whose suit such prisoner was committed or charged, or to his attorney, every such refusal shall be adjudged to be an escape in law."

It is said that the person answerable for an escape. In civil actions the sheriff is to answer for the escape of his bailiffs, or the sheriff is for the sheriff, and action on the case lies against the sheriff for an escape upon meine process; Ex. the plaintiff is privileged in his suit by it. Ex. Elia. 611. 615. Down. Abr. 281. But if he is arrested, and Ex. before brought to bail, the sheriff is not chargeable, though if a detendant in execution is rescued, the sheriff is liable for the whole debt; and is to have his remedy against the rescuer. 2 Co. 419. Dyer 241. See 2 Roll. No. 10. 10. 60. Where a person is in custody on meine process, and being outlawed after judgment at the suit of another, the plaintiff may create a writ of habeas corpus, and deliver it to the sheriff's officer, who hath him in custody; if the officer afterwards permits the person to escape, though he refuse to execute the writ, the sheriff is chargeable in action on the case. 1 Roll. 10.

Where one has the custody of a part of a reversion or inheritance, and conveys it to another person, who is insufficient, the donor is answerable for all escapes committed by his officers, and the inferior is bound to answer the donor must be answerable for them, and not the superior. See 9 Co. 94. 1 Jac. 60. 1 Lill. 121. 1 Pler. 312. 2 Mod. 136.

Also by the Stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. cap. 27. Sec. 1. It is enacted, "That the officer or officers of the King's Bench prison and warden of the Fleet, shall be assigned by the several persons to whom the inheritance of the prisons, prison-houses, Ex. of the said prisons, or either of them, shall then belong respectively, in his or their respective proper person, Ex. or by their sufficient deputies, for which deputies, and for all forfeitures, escapes, and other misdemeanors in their offices by such deputies permitted, Ex. the said person in whom the aforesaid inheritances respectively are, shall be answerable; and the profits and inheritances of the said offices shall be sequestered, Ex. to make satisfaction for such forfeitures; escapes, Ex. respectively, as if permitted, Ex. by the persons themselves, in whom the respective inheritances of the said prisons shall then be."

If a person that hath the fee of a prison makes a lease of it for life or years to another, who suffers an escape; the party grieved thereby must prosecute the lessee for it, and if he be not sufficient to answer, he may sue the lessor. 4 Rep. 98. A prisoner escapes out of the King's Bench, or Marshalsea, or the Fleet; the keeper of the prison out of which he escaped is to be charged with it; but if the escape be from either of the Counties, the action must be brought against the sheriff of London. Dyer 278. 3 Rep. 120.

Action of escape against the warden of the Fleet for an escape upon meine process; the prisoner returns to the sheriff the same day, and the plaintiff afterwards proceeds to an action against him; yet the action lies against the warden. Ravencroft v. Ryles, Esq. Wilf. Rep. par. 1. 1. 1. 1. In an escape upon meine process out of the County, brought in B. R. against the bailiff thereof, the defendant shall not take advantage in B. R. of any error in the process below. Id. Bull. v. Steward, par. 1. 1. 1. 1.

Action of escape will not lie against the executor or administrator of a sheriff, Ex. for an escape, because it was personal, and Ex. per person; but it may be otherwise if there be a judgment recovered against the sheriff before he died. Dyer 322.

If there are two sheriffs of the same place, and an action of escape is brought against them both, if one of them dies, yet the writ shall not abate; for it being in nature of a trespass, and merely personal, the party can only have remedy against the survivor. Ex. Elia. 625.

An old sheriff commits turning over a prisoner in execution to the new sheriff, Ex. to be an escape; so where there are two executions against a man, and in the indenture of turning over mention is made but of one, Ex. 1 Rep. 71.

*Of the difference between negligent and voluntary escapes, and also between escapes in meine process and execution.*

There are two kinds of escapes; voluntary and negligent. Voluntary is when one arrests another for felony, or other crime, and lets him go by consent; in which case the party that permits the escape is esteemed guilty of the crime committed, and must answer for it: Negligent is when one is arrested, and afterwards escapes against the will of him that arrested him, or had him in custody; and is not pursued by fresh suit, and taken again before the party pursuing hath lost sight of him. Ex. 1 Rep. 10. And for these negligent escapes, the statute, Ex. is to be fined. One negligent escape will not amount to a forfeiture of a sheriff's office, as one voluntary one will; but every negligent escape will do so; and the fine for suffering a negligent escape of a person attached, was by the Common law of course 100*l.* and in other cases at the discretion of the court. 3 Lev. 288. 1 Lev. 22.

It was formerly said, that where the sheriff suffered a prisoner in execution to make a voluntary escape, the prisoner was in law still attached, discharged from the creditor, and that the right of action was entirely transferred against the sheriff, who by means of such escape became debtor in law. 1 Lev. 23. Hob. 203. S. P. But now, if the prisoner escapes who was in execution, his creditor may sue him by captia facias, or bring action against him on the statute, or a scire fac against him, Ex. 1 Pler. 312. 1 Salk. 160. And see 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. A prisoner taken in execution makes a tortious escape, the party at whose suit he was taken in execution execution shall have an alias ca. sa. to take him in execution again; or action on the case against the sheriff: but if the sheriff voluntarily permit the escape, action of debt is to be brought against the sheriff; and on such a voluntary escape, the plaintiff may have a new execution. 1 Lill. Abr. 536. 3 Lev. 211. If a man escapes, with the consent of the gaoler in a civil case, he cannot retake him. 3 Rep. 32. For 'tis said the execution is discharged, so as the party may not be taken again, or judg'd in execution by law. Hob. 202. And if he be allowed to go with a keeper into another county, it is such an escape and discharge, that if he be there detained, out of the power of the sheriff, it will be false imprisonment. Flou. 36. Dyer 166. Though if a person be permitted to escape by the sheriff, he may be taken by the party: for it may be the sheriff is insufficient to answer. 1 Paut. 4. If the plaintiff permit the prisoner to escape, he cannot afterwards retake him; and if the body and goods, &c. of a consignor are taken in execution upon a statute-merchant, if the consignor agree that he shall go at large, it is a discharge of the whole execution, and the consignor shall have his lands again: 'tis otherwise if the sheriff had permitted him to escape; the execution on the lands would not be discharged. 2 Nelf. Abr. 737. A difference is to be observed between permissive and negligent escapes; for if a sheriff suffers a prisoner voluntarily to go at large, the sheriff cannot retake him even upon fresh writs; and if he does, the prisoner may have an action of trespass against him. Lev. 212.

If the marshal of the King's Bench, or warden of the Fleet, or any other who hath the keeping of prisoners in fee, suffer a voluntary escape, it is a forfeiture of the office. 3 Med. 146. Cart. 212. And there is likewise a farther penalty of 500*l.* added by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. abovementioned.

If the sheriff suffer a person arrested on mesne process to escape, an action lies against him at Common law, from the delay and prejudice which the party suffers thereby. 1 Roll. Abr. 99. 807. Moor 252. Cre. Blin. 623, 652, 868. Cre. Jac. 280.

But there is this difference between an escape on mesne process and execution, if the sheriff arrests a person on mesne process, and he is released by J. S. he may return the rescue, and such return is good, and no action of escape lies against him after such return; but the court will issue process against such rescuer, or fine him; for in this case, tho' the sheriff may, yet he is not obliged to raise the posse comitatus. 1 Roll. Abr. 807. 1 Jon. 207. 1 Roll. Rep. 388. 3 Lev. 26.

But after judgment, on a capias ad satisfaciendum, the sheriff cannot return a rescue, for in such case the sheriff is obliged to raise the posse comitatus, if needful, and therefore, if he return a rescue, an action of escape lies, or a new capias, for the return of an ineffectual execution is as none. 1 Roll. Abr. 809. Cre. Car. 240, 255. 3 Car. 42. See Burb. N. Pri. 59. 60.

It will not be a good plea, for the sheriff in action upon an escape, that the prisoner rescued himself, &c. for the sheriff may command the posse comitatus to help him; but this has been held to be only in case of executions. 6 Rep. 51. 1 Cre. 868.

III. Of the nature of the action to be brought for an escape, and the manner of laying it.

At Common law the plaintiff had no remedy against the sheriff for an escape, whether upon mesne process, or in execution, but by special action upon the case. 2 Inst. 382. 1 Shew. 176. 3 Saund. 12. Moor 30.

But now, by an equitable construction of Stat. 2. cap. 11. Action of debt is given against the sheriff, and by the 1 Rich. 2. cap. 12. against the warden of the Fleet (which extends to all gaolers and keepers of prisons, though infants or feme covert. 2 Inst. 382.) for escapes in execution.

Also the plaintiff, at his election, may maintain either an action upon the case, or debt, for an escape in execution. Cre. Jac. 361, 533, 619. Cre. Blin. 873. Dyer 278. b. See 1 Jon. 144. 1 Sid. 364. S. C.

If a prisoner in custody upon a capias ulagatum is suffered to escape, the plaintiff may either maintain an action qui tam against the sheriff, or bring an action of debt against him in his own right. Cre. Jac. 361, 533, 619. Cre. Blin. 877.

An action of escape is not a local action, and therefore if one escapes out of the Marshalsea, which is in Surry, the action against the marshal may be laid in Middlesex. Dyer 278. b. See 1 Jon. 144. 1 Sid. 364. S. C.

Where two persons are in execution for debt, if one of them escape, debt will lie. 14 H. 6.

If a man is in execution upon a judgment in C. B. and there is a judgment before against him in B. R. in this case, he shall be in execution for both in the King's Bench; and if the marshal then suffer him to escape, he is chargeable with both debts. Dyer 151, 153.

'Tis usual now, when a man escapes on mesne process, to declare against the sheriff, &c. in such an execution, in debt.

As to the manner of laying the action.

In this action it is not necessary to set forth all the formalities required by law in other cases. Cre. Blin. 877. See a Form. 222.

Where there is upon a judgment obtained by the plaintiff, the return brings a return facias, and has judgment, execution a capias ad satisfaciendum, and B. is arrested, and returned to court, the plaintiff, in an action against the sheriff for this escape, may declare briefly upon the judgment in the first writ, without shewing the gradual proceedings at length, as is usually done in an action of debt upon a judgment. Cart. 246, 149. 3 Med. 146. b. c. Cre. Blin. 877.

Should a defendant be arrested on a special capias, founded on an original returnable in B. R. in action for his escape, it is not necessary to set forth the original.

If the plaintiff declares that he sued out a writ of execution against J. S. without setting forth any judgment, and that the defendant suffered him to escape; this is an incurable fault; for by this means he lost the benefit of pleading nil in record, which he might do if the plaintiff had set forth the judgment. 1 Saund. 37—38. 1 Lev. 191. and 1 Sid. 366. S. C.

If A. recovers against B. an execution, and has him in execution, and the sheriff suffers him to escape, the action must be brought as executor in the assize only, and not in the debt and damns. 1 Intw. 293. Comb. 112. S. C.

If the plaintiff declares, that the prisoner was committed, and escaped, but does not say, Præsumitur per recordum; yet upon a general demurrer this shall be good; for the gist of the action was the escape, and the commitment only inducement. 2 Salk. 365. 3 Med. 8. S. C. See 1 Lev. 193.

If in escape the plaintiff declares, that he had J. S. and him with in execution, and that the defendant suffered him to escape, and the jury find specially, that the prisoner only was taken in execution (for being for a debt due from the wife before coverture) and that he escaped; this is sufficient, and the plaintiff shall have judgment; for the substance of the declaration is found, though not pertinent to the declaration. 1 Sid. 3.

So in question on the case for the escape of A. where the jury found that A. was taken by J. S. the former sheriff, and not by the defendant, the present sheriff; but finding that he was legally in his custody, and that he suffered him to escape, the plaintiff had judgment. Cre. Jac. 180.

By the Stat. 2. cap. 11. sec. 2. sub. 2. sec. 12. it is enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person, having cause of action against the warden of the Fleet prison, or any jail, stock, or the warden and Comptroller of Execution, against the warden, and a rule being given to the warden to be on his oath, or at most other thing to be said, to have judgment against the warden, unless he pleads to the said writs three days after such rule is out.

IV. As to the manner of the defence of the party.

If the prison was fire, by means whereof the prisoner escape, this shall excuse the sheriff, and he may plead it. 1 Sid. 368.

So if the prison is broke by the King's enemies, this shall excuse the sheriff, for he can have no remedy over against them. 4 Co. 84. 1 Rel. Abr. 808.

But if the prison was broke by rebels and traitors, the King's subjects, this shall not excuse him, for he may have his remedy over against those. Ibid.

If a prisoner in execution escapes without the assent of the sheriff, &c. and he make fresh pursuit, and retake him before any action brought against him, this shall excuse the sheriff. Cror. Jar. 657. 1 Jan. 144. 1 Rel. Abr. 808.

When a prisoner tortiously escapes from the custody of the gaoler, he may be retaken; and the sheriff, &c. may pursue a person escaping into that or any other country; and if he retakes the prisoner in fresh pursuit before action brought, it shall excuse the sheriff, for there the prisoner shall be said to be in execution still. 3 Rep. 14. And where the sheriff is to answer the debt and damages for such escape, he shall have his common remedy against the party escaping; and may take him at any time and place, and imprison him, until he hath satisfied the sheriff as much as he hath paid to the plaintiff, or he may bring an action upon the case against the prisoner, and so return himself. 5 Rep. 525. Cro. Jac. 304.

It was formerly held, that the sheriff, &c. might give fresh pursuit in evidence, and need not have proved it. See 1 Med. 26. 1 Sid. 13.

But now by the 5 & 6 W. 3. cap. 27. §. 1. it is enacted, "That no retaking on fresh pursuit shall be given in evidence, unless the same be specially pleaded; nor shall any special plea be allowed, unless writ be first made in writing by the defendant, and filed in the proper office of the respective courts, that the prisoner, &c. hath escape such action is brought, and without the express privity or knowledge, make such escape; and if such affidavit shall at any time afterwards appear to be false, and the defendant shall be convicted thereof by due course of law, he shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*" See Star.

We are next to consider escapes in criminal cases; and herein is to be enquired,

- I. What shall be deemed an escape, and where it shall be adjudged voluntary, and where negligent.
- II. When the prisoner may be retaken after an escape, and where the escape is excused by such a retaking, or by killing the prisoner, if he cannot be retaken.
- III. How the officer suffering an escape is to be punished, and the escape is forgiven and absolved.
- IV. Of the punishment of voluntary and negligent escapes, and of persons aiding and assisting prisoners to attempt their escape.

- I. What shall be deemed an escape, and where it shall be adjudged voluntary, and where negligent.

A man must be committed to prison by lawful authority, or breach of prison and escaping is no felony. If a party is committed for ransom, or to break prison and escape is but felony; but if a prisoner by any means or without reason, 5 P. C. reg. 2. §. 1. 100. Where a man is imprisoned for great felony, by killing a man, &c. to break prison and escape is but felony; and if a prison be taken free, not by the taking of the prisoner, he may break prison for the taking of his life. 2 Inst. 200. A gaoler refusing to receive a person arrested by the constable for felony, whereby he is guilty of an escape, but there must be an actual act, which avert makes it feasible, to make an escape; for if it be for a supposed crime, where no crime was committed, such a party is neither indicted nor punished. U. C. It is an escape to suffer a person to go at large. Fitz. Cress. 204. Bon. 1. 2. 27. 28. If a person be taken another for suspicion of felony, he is to deliver him to a person of good name, who ought to keep the custody of him; for if he let him go, it will be an escape. 2 Hawk. 136. And if one will receive him, he is to deliver him to the lordship where needed, to get him bailed.

A more private man, known to have committed felony, and thereupon arrest him, he is bound in custody of A. till he be discharged, by delivering him to a constable or common gaol; and therefore if he voluntarily suffers such person to escape, though he were no officer, nor B. indicted, it is felony in A. But 'tis otherwise if he never takes him nor attempts it, and lets him go. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 594. Justices of peace in their sessions are empowered to inquire of escapes of persons arrested, and imprisoned for felony. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 3.

As to the second point, viz. Where such escape is to be deemed voluntary, and where negligent.

There can be no doubt, but that where ever an officer, who hath the custody of a prisoner, charged with and guilty of a capital offence, doth knowingly give him his liberty, with an intent to save him, either from his trial or execution, he is guilty of a voluntary escape, and thereby involved in the guilt of the same crime of which the prisoner was guilty, and stood charged with. And it seems to be the opinion of Sir Matthew Hale, that in some cases an officer may be adjudged guilty of such escape, who hath not such intent, but only means to give his prisoner that liberty which by the law he hath no colour of right to give him.

It is to be held a person not bailable by law is a negligent escape. 2 Hawk. 476. And it is said that the crime is made by a justice of peace, for taking a felon out of prison, without bail; or suffering him to go at large without commitment, &c. where the offender confesseth the felony, as it is in the case of a gaoler's permitting an escape. Dalt. 322.

As to the point to closely pursue the prisoner, who flies from him, that he retake him without losing sight of him, the law looks on the prisoner so far in his power, all the time, or not to lose sight from a flight to amount at all to an escape; but if the gaoler once lose sight of the prisoner, and afterwards retake him, he seems in strictness to be guilty of an escape; and a felony therefore, if he kill him in the pursuit, he is in like manner guilty, tho' he never lost sight of him, and could not otherwise take him, not only because the King loses the benefit he might have had from the attachment of the prisoner, by the forfeiture of his goods, &c. but also because the public justice is not so well satisfied by the killing him in such an extrajudicial manner. 2 Hawk. 130. See post. Chap. 2.

- II. When the prisoner may be retaken after an escape, and where the escape is excused by such a retaking, or by killing the prisoner if he cannot be retaken.

It seems to be clearly agreed by all the books, that an officer making a fresh pursuit after a prisoner, who hath escaped through his negligence, may retake him at any time after, whether he find him in the same or in a different country. And it is said generally in some books, that an officer who hath negligently suffered a prisoner to escape, may retake him where ever he finds him, without mentioning any fresh pursuit; and indeed, since the liberty gained by the prisoner is wholly owing to his own wrong, there seems to be no reason he should take any manner of advantage from it. But where a gaoler hath voluntarily suffered a prisoner to escape, it is said by some, that he can no more justify the retaking him, than if he had never had him in custody before, because by his own free consent he hath admitted that he hath nothing to do with him.

Where ever a prisoner, by the negligence of his keeper, gets so far out of his power, that the keeper loses sight of him, the keeper is liable at the discretion of the court, notwithstanding, to retake him immediately after; for it seems agreed, that this is to be adjudged a negligent escape, which is a felony, and consequently that it may be punished. It is also said, that in an action against a gaoler, for suffering one arrested in a civil action to escape, the gaoler may excuse the gaoler, that before the action brought, he retake the prisoner upon fresh suit; which is to be understood by showing that he pursued him immediately after notice of the escape, though it were some hours after, and retake him; but it does not from hence follow, that the like excuse will serve for the negligent escape of a criminal, because this is an offence against against the publick, but the other is only a private damage to the party: neither will it be an hardship to the officer, to be exposed to such punishment as the court, in discretion, shall think fit to impose upon him for the negligent escape of a criminal, as it would be to be liable to an action of escape, for suffering a person in his custody, in a civil action, to escape; for that in the former case the court would moderate his fine according to the circumstances of the whole matter, and would certainly mitigate, if not wholly excuse it, if he should appear to have taken all reasonable care: but in the other case, if he should be liable to an action, his judgment would not lie in the discretion of the court, but he would be bound to pay the whole debt, for which the party was in custody, if the escape should be adjudged against him. However it is certain, that it will be no advantage to a gaoler to retake his prisoner, after he has been fined for the escape, as hath been shewn in the precedent section; also it is clear, that he cannot excuse himself by killing a prisoner in the pursuit, though he could not possibly retake him; but must, in such case, be contented to submit to such fine as his negligence shall appear to deserve. 2 Hawk. P. C. 132.

III. With regard to the indictment for an escape, whether such escape be negligent or voluntary.

The indictment must expressly shew, that the party was actually in the defendant's custody for a crime, action, or commitment for it; and that it is not sufficient to say, that he was in the defendant's custody, and charged with such a crime; for that a person in custody may be so charged, and yet not be in custody by reason of such charge: and it seems also, that every such indictment must expressly shew that the prisoner went at large. Also it seems necessary, to shew the time when the offence was committed, for which the party was in custody, not only that it may appear, that it was prior to the escape, but also that it was subsequent to the last general pardon. Also it seems clear, that every indictment for a voluntary escape must allege that the defendant felonically & voluntarily A. B. ad largum ire permisit; and must also shew the species of the crime for which the party was imprisoned; for it is not sufficient to say in general, that he was in custody for felony, &c.

The crime of the prisoner escaping, for which the gaoler is answerable, must be such as it was at the time of the escape; as where a person is committed for dangerously wounding another, it is trespass only, and not felony, till the party wounded is dead: and he who suffers another to escape who was in custody for felony, cannot be arraigned for such escape as for felony, until the principal is attainted, but he may be indicted and tried for misprision before the attainder of the principal. And in high treason 'tis said the escape is immediately punishable, whether the party escaping be ever convicted, or not. 2 Hawk. 135.

In respect to the manner of trying escapes.

Where persons, being present in a court of record, are committed to prison by such court, the keeper of the gaol is bound to have them always ready, whenever the court shall demand them of him; and if he shall fail to produce them at such demand, the court will adjudge him guilty of an escape, without any farther inquiry, unless he have some reasonable matter to alledge in his excuse, as that the prison was set on fire, or broke open by violence, &c. for he shall be concluded, by the record of the commitment, to deny that the prisoners were in his custody. 2 Hawk. P. C. 133.

As to other prisoners who are not so committed, but are in the custody of a gaoler, sheriff, constable, or other person, by any other means whatsoever, it seems agreed, that the person who has them in custody is in an escape punishable for their escape, except in some special cases, until it be presented for by Stat. West. 1. c. 3. It is enacted, that "Nothing be demanded nor taken, nor levied by the sheriff, nor by any other, for the escape of a thief, or felon, until it be judged for an escape by the justices in eyre; and that he who does otherwise, shall restore to him or them that have paid it, as much as he or they have taken or received; and as much also unto the King."

It hath been adjudged, that this statute restrains not the court of King's Bench from receiving such presentments, for that its jurisdiction includes in it that of justices in eyre, and this court is itself the highest court of eyre. 2 Hawk. P. C. 134.

It is farther enacted by Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 14. "That the escape of thieves and felons, and the chattels of felons, and of fugitives, and also escapes of clerks convicted, and of their ordinary's prison, from thenceforth to be judged before any of the King's justices, shall be levied from time to time, as they shall fall, as well of the time past as time to come." By which it seems to be implied, that other justices, as well as those in eyre, may take cognizance of escapes; and it is certain, that justices of gaol-delivery may punish justices of peace for a negligent escape, in admitting persons to bail, who are not bailable. 2 Hawk. P. C. 134.

And it is farther enacted, by Stat. 1 Rich. 3. cap. 3. "That justices of peace shall have authority to inquire, in their sessions, of all manner of escapes of every person arrested and imprisoned for felony."

Wherever an escape is possible, the presentment of it is traversable; but where the offence is amerciable only, there the presentment is of itself conclusive; such amercements being reckoned among those minima de quibus non curat lex; and this distinction seems to be well warranted by the old books. 2 Hawk. P. C. 134.

IV. Of the punishment of voluntary and negligent escapes, and of persons aiding and assisting in such escapes; and first, as to the punishment of voluntary escapes.

Such escape amounts to the same kind of crime, and is punishable in the same degree, as the offence of which the party was guilty, and for which he was in custody, whether it be treason, felony, or trespass; and whether the person escaping were actually committed to some gaol, or under an arrest only, and not committed; and whether he were attainted, or only accused of such crime, and neither indicted nor appealed: and it is said to be no excuse of such escape, that the prisoner had been acquitted on an indictment of death, and only committed till the year and day be passed, to give the widow, or heir of the deceased, an opportunity of bringing their appeal. 2 Hawk. 134.

Also such an escape, suffered by one who wrongfully takes upon him the keeping of a gaol, seems to be punishable in the same manner as if he were never so rightfully intitled to such custody, for that the crime is in both cases of the very same ill consequences to the publick; and there seems to be no reason that a wrongful officer should have greater favour than a rightful, and that for no other reason, but because he is a wrongful one. 2 Hawk. P. C. 134.

Also if the warrant of a commitment do plainly and expressly charge the party with treason or felony, but in some other respect be not strictly formal, yet it seems, that it may be properly argued, that the gaoler suffering an escape, is as much punishable as if the warrant were perfectly right. 2 Hawk. P. C. 134, 135.

None shall suffer capitally for the crime of another, so that a principal gaoler is only answerable for a voluntary escape suffered by his deputy. 2 Hawk. P. C. 135.

As to negligent escapes.

Whoever de facto occupies the office of gaoler is liable to answer for such an escape; and that it is no way material whether his title to the office be legal or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. 135. A sheriff is as much liable to answer for an escape suffered by his bailiff, as if he had actually intitled it himself, and the court may charge either the sheriff or bailiff for such an escape; and if a deputy gaoler be not sufficient to answer a negligent escape, his principal shall answer for him; but if the gaoler who suffers an escape have an estate for life, or years in the office, it is not agreed how far he is severally liable to be punished. 2 Hawk. P. C. 135, 136.

One negligent escape will not amount to a forfeiture of the gaoler's office, as one voluntary one will; yet if a gaoler suffer many negligent escapes, it is said, that he puts it in the power of the court to oust him of his office by its discretion. 2 Hawk. P. C. 136.

Where-ever a person is found guilty, upon an indictment, or presentment, of a negligent escape of a criminal actually in his custody, he ought to be condemned in a certain sum to be paid to the King, which seems most properly to be called a fine.

It hath been holden, that a negligent escape may be pardoned by the King before it happens, but that a voluntary one cannot so be pardoned. 2 Hawk. P. C. 136.

And it seems by the Common law, the penalty for suffering the negligent escape of a person attainted, was of course 100*l.* and for suffering such escape of a person indicted, and not attainted, was 5*l.* but if the person escaping were neither attainted nor indicted, it seems that it was left to the discretion of the court to assess such a reasonable forfeiture as should seem proper; and if the party had twice escaped, it seems, that the penalties above mentioned were of course to be doubled; yet it seems, that the forfeiture was to be no greater for suffering a prisoner, committed on two several accusations, to escape, than if he had been committed but on one. 2 Hawk. P. C. 136.

As to the manner offences of this kind are punishable by statute, it is recited by 5 Ed. 3. ch. 8. "That persons indicted of felonies in times past, had removed the indictments before the King, and there yielded themselves, and by the marshals of the King's Bench had been incontinently let to bail, and after had done many evil deeds, &c." And thereupon it is enacted, "That if any such prisoner be found wandering out of prison, by bail, or without bail, and that he be found at the King's suit, or at the suit of the party, the marshal which shall be found thereof guilty, shall have half a year's imprisonment, and be ransomed at the King's will; and the justices shall thereof make inquiry when they see time; and as to the marshals, it shall be done within the verge that which reason will. And in case that the marshals suffer by their assent such prisoners to escape, they shall be at law, as before the time of the statute they had been. And the King intendeth not by this statute to lose the escape, where he ought to have the same."

Also it is enacted by 19 H. 7. c. 10. "That every sheriff have the custody of the King's common gaols, during the time of his office, except all gaols whereof any person or persons have the keeping of estate of inheritance. And that for every negligent escape from any sheriff, having the keeping of any gaol, or from any constable of castle, or other, being keeper of any gaols where such prisoners accusomably have been, or shall be kept, of persons indicted of high treason being in their keeping, that no less fine be set or made for every such escape, than 100 marks, and more, by the discretion of the justices that shall assess such fines: and for every escape of persons escaping, being in their keeping for suspicion of high treason, no less fine to be set ne made than 40*l.* and for every escape of persons indicted of murder, or petit treason, 20*l.* at least, and more, by the discretion of the justices that shall assess such fines: and for every person escaping, being in their keeping, indicted of felony, other than murder or treason, 10*l.* and for every person suspected of felony, other than murder or treason, 100 shillings, or more, by the discretion of the justices, after the manner and quantity of their demerits; saving to every person such right and title to any such escapes, and fines for the same, as to be quit of such escapes, or of any other escapes, as they had, or ought to have had at the time of making of the said act."

Concerning the punishment of persons aiding and assisting prisoners to attempt their escape.

It is enacted, That persons who any ways assist a prisoner, committed for treason, or felony, to attempt his escape from any gaol, shall be adjudg'd guilty of felony and be transported; and if the prisoner be committed for any other crime; or upon process for 100*l.* debt, &c. the offenders are liable to fine and imprisonment. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31. And where any person conveys any arms, instrument or disguise, to a prisoner in gaol for felony, &c. or for his use, in order to an escape, 'tis likewise felony and transportation. Also if one assist any prisoner to escape from any constable, or other officer or person in whose custody he is, by virtue of a warrant of commitment for felony, it is declared to be the like offence. Ibid.

Escape-warrant. If any person committed or charged in custody in the King's Bench or Fleet prison, in execution, or on mesne process, &c. go at large; on oath thereof before a judge of the court where the action was brought, an escape-warrant shall be granted, directed to all sheriffs, &c. throughout England, to retake the prisoner, and commit him to gaol where taken, there to remain till the debt is satisfied; and a person may be taken on a Sunday upon an escape-warrant. Stat. 1 Ann. c. 6. And the judges of the respective courts may grant warrants, upon oath to be made before persons commissioned by them to take affidavits in the county, (such oath being first filed) as they might do upon oath made before themselves. 5 Ann. c. 9. A sheriff ought not to receive a person taken on escape-warrant, &c. from any but an officer; not from the rabble, &c. which is illegal. Pasch. 3 Ann. 3 Salk. 149. A person being arrested and carried to Newgate by virtue of an escape-warrant, moved to be discharged, because he said he was abroad by a day-rule when taken; but it appearing by affidavit, that he was taken upon the escape-warrant before the court of B. R. sat that morning, they refused to set him at liberty. 2 Ld. Raym. 927.

Escheat, (escheta, from the Fr. eschecoir, i. e. accidere.) Signifies any lands or tenements that casually fall to a lord within his manor, by way of forfeiture, or by the death of his tenant, leaving no heir general or special. Mag. Chart. cap. 31. Escheat is also used sometimes for the places or circuit, in which the King, or other Lord, hath escheats of his tenants. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 2. And it is likewise applied to a writ, which lies where the tenant having an estate in fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superior lord, dies without heir; in which case the lord brings this writ against him that is in possession of the lands after the death of his tenant, and shall thereby recover the same in lieu of his services. F. A. B. 144.

In our law escheats were of two sorts: 1. Regal, Those forfeitures which belong to our kings by the ancient rights and prerogative of the crown. 2. Feudal, which accrue to every Lord of the fee as well as the King, by reason of his feignior. Where a person commits treason, his estate shall escheat and be forfeited to the King; and when a tenant in fee-simple committeth felony, and is attainted, the King shall have year, day, and waite in his lands, (or rather year and day in lieu of waite) and afterwards it comes to the lord by escheat. And the lord may compound with the King, and have the estate presently. 3 Inst. 111. It has been holden, that a saving against the corruption of blood in a statute concerning felony, doth by consequence save the land to the heir, so as not to escheat; because the escheat to the lord for felony is only pro defectu tenentis, occasioned by the corruption of blood: but it hath been adjudged, that a saving against the corruption of blood, in a statute concerning treason, doth not save the land to the heir: for in treason the land goes to the King by way of immediate forfeiture. 3 Inst. 47. 1 Salk. 85.

Inheritances of things not lying in tenure, as of rents, commons, &c. cannot escheat to the lord, because there is no tenure: nor descend, by reason the blood is corrupted: though they are forfeited to the King by an attainder of treason, and the profits of them shall be also forfeited to the King on attainder of felony, during the life of the offender; and after his death it is said the inheritance shall be extinguished. 2 Havok. P. C. 449.

A person is seised of lands in fee holden of a lord, his son is attainted of treason, and the father dieth, the land shall escheat to the lord, and not to the King; who cannot have the land, because the son who was attainted never had any thing to forfeit: but the King shall have the escheat of all the lands whereof the person attainted of high treason was seised, of whomsoever they were holden. 1 Inst. 13. Husband and wife, tenants in special tail; the husband is attainted of treason and executed, leaving issue; on the death of the wife the lands shall escheat, because the issue in tail ought to make his conveyance by father and mother, and from the father he cannot by reason of the attainder. Dyer 322. If tenant in fee-simple is attainted of treason, and executed, upon his death the fee is vested in the King, without office found; yet he must bring a scire facias against the tenants; lands shall never escheat to a lord of whom they are holden, until office found. 3 Rep. 10.

Escheat seldom happens to the lord for want of an heir to an estate; but when it doth, before the lord enters, the homage jury of the lord's court ought to present it. 2 Inst. 36. Land shall escheat to the lord, where heirs are born after attainder of felony. 3 Rep. 40. Though if the King pardons a felon before conviction, the lord shall not have his lands by escheat; for the lord hath no title before attainder. Over 87. 2 Nels. Abr. 744. If on appeal of death or other felony, process is awarded against the party, and hanging the process he conveyeth away the land, and after is outlawed, the conveyance is good to defeat the lord of his escheat: but if where a person is indicted of felony, hanging the process against him, he conveys away his land, and afterwards is outlawed, the conveyance shall not prevent the lord of his escheat. 1 Inst. 13. See Corruption of Blood.

Escheator, (eschætor) Was an officer appointed by the Lord Treasurer, &c. in every county, to make inquests of titles by escheat; which inquests were to be taken by good and lawful men of the county, impanelled by the sheriff. Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 8. 34 Ed. 3. c. 13. 8 H. 6. c. 16. These eschætors found offices after the death of the King's tenants, who held by knight-service, or otherwise of the King; and certified their inquisitions into the Exchequer, and Fitzherbert called them officers of record. F. N. B. 100. No eschætor could continue in his office above one year: and whereas before the statute of Westm. 1. cap. 24. Escheators, sheriffs, &c. would seize into the King's hands the freehold of the subjects, and thereby disseise them; by this act it is provided that no seizure can be made of lands or tenements into the King's hands, before office found. 2 Inst. 206. And no lands can be granted before the King's title is found by inquisition. 18 H. 6. c. 6. The office of eschætor is an ancient office, and was formerly of great use to the crown; but having its chief dependance on the court of wards, which is taken away by act of parliament, it is now in a manner out of date. 4 Inst. 225. Parl.* 30 Ed. 1.

Eſpouſals, (ſponſalia) Are a contract or mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other; and where marriages may be consummated, espouſals go before them. Marriage or matrimony is said to be an espouſal de præſenti, and a conjunction of man and woman in a constant society. Wood's Inst. 57. See Matrimony.

Eſquire, (from the Fr. Eſcu, and the Lat. Scutum, in Greek οὐτος) which signifies an hide of which Shields were anciently made and afterwards covered: For here in the time of the Saxons, the shields had a covering of leather; so that an esquire was originally he who attending a knight in the time of war, did carry his shield, whence he was called Eſcuier in French, and ſcutifer or Armiger, (i. e. armour-bearer) in Latin. Hotoman saith, that those which the French call Eſquires, where a military kind of vassals, having jus ſcuti, viz. Liberty to bear a shield, and in it the ensigns of their family, in token of their gentility or dignity: But this addition hath not of long time had any relation to the office or employment of the person to whom it hath been attributed, as to carrying of arms, &c. but been merely a title of dignity, and next in degree to a knight. Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and the eldest sons of such younger sons; the eldest sons of knights, and their eldest sons; the officers of the King's courts and of the King's household; counsellors at law; justices of peace, &c. But these latter, are esquires in reputation; and he who is a justice of peace, has this title only during the time he is in commission, and no longer, if he be not otherwise qualified to bear it. A sheriff of a county being a superior officer, retains the title of Esquire during his life; in respect of the great trust he has in the commonwealth. The chief of some ancient families are esquires by prescription; and in late acts of parliament for poll money, many wealthy persons (commonly reputed to be such) were ranked among the esquires of this kingdom. Blount.

Esquires of the King. Are such who have the title by creation: These, when they are created, have put about their necks a collar of S S, and a pair of silver spurs is bestowed on them: And they were wont to bear before the Prince in war, a shield or lance. There are four esquires of the King's body, to attend on his Majesty's person. Camb. 111.

Exendi quietum de Tolonio. A writ to be quit of toll; and lies for citizens and burghesses of any city or town that by charter or prescription ought to be exempted from toll, where the same is exacted of them. Reg. Orig. 258.

Exorsors, or Exorsors. Are persons appointed by a court of law, to whom a writ of venire facias is directed to impanel a jury, on challenge to the sheriff and coroners; who return the writ in their own names, with a panel of the jurors names. 15 Ed. 4. 24. pl. 4. Black. Com. 3 V. 355.

Effoin, (Effonium, Fr. Effoine) Signifies an excuse for him that is summoned to appear and answer to an action, or to perform suit to a court baron, &c. by reason of sickness and infirmity, or other just cause of absence. It is a kind of imparlance, or craving of a longer time, that lies in real, personal and mixed actions: And the plaintiff as well as the defendant shall be effoined, to save his default. 1 Inst. 131. The causes that serve to effoin, and the effoins are divers under these heads. 1. Effoin de ultra mare, whereby the defendant shall have forty days. 2. De terra sancta, where the defendant shall have a year and a day. 3. De malo veniendi, which is likewise called the common effoin. 4. De malo lecti, wherein the defendant may by writ be viewed by four knights. 5. De servitio Regis. Bratt. lib. 5. Britton, cap. 122. Fleta, lib. 6. And besides the common effoin, de malo veniendi, i. e. by falling sick in coming to the court, and other effoins abovementioned; there were several other excuses, to save a default in real actions; as constraint of enemies, the falling among thieves, floods of water, and breaking down of bridges, &c. 2 Co. Inst. 125. After issue joined in dower, quare impedit, &c. one effoin only shall be allowed. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 13. And in writs of assise, attainments, &c. after the tenant hath appeared, he shall not be effoined; but the inquest shall be taken by default. 3 Ed. 1. c. 42. Effoin ultra mare will not be allowed, if the tenant be within the four seas; but it shall be turned to a default, c. 44. There is no effoin permitted for an appellant. 13 Ed. 1. c. 28. Nor doth effoin lie where any judgment is given; or the party is distrained by his lands; the sheriff is commanded to make him appear; after the party is seen in court, &c. 12 Ed. 2. st. 2. And effoin de servitio Regis lies not when the party is a woman; in a writ of dower; where the party hath an attorney in his suit, &c. Ibid. The effoin day in court is regularly the first day of the term; but the fourth day after is allowed of favour. 1 Lill. 540.

An effoin is entered thus: A. B. offers himself on the fourth day against C. D. in a plea or action of, &c. and he did not appear, and was summoned, &c. Therefore let him be attached, that he be here on the day, &c. And be it known, that the said A. hath the same day to appear by his effoin, &c. Rast. 520.

Effoin Day of the Term. The first return in every term; is, properly speaking, the first day in that term: And thereon the court sits to take effoins, or excuses for such as do not appear according to the summons of the writ: wherefore this is usually called the effoin day of the term. But the person summoned hath three days grace, beyond the return of the writ in which to make his appearance, and if he appears on the fourth day inclusive, the quarto die post, it is sufficient. Black. Com. 3 V. 278.

Effoin de Malo Villæ. Is when the defendant is in court the first day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, &c. cannot attend, but sends two effoiners, who openly protest in court that he is detained by sickness in such a village, that he cannot come, pro lucrari & pro perdere; and this will be admitted, for it lies on the plaintiff to prove whether the effoin is true or not.

Coins and Proffers. Words used in the statute 38 H. 8. c. 21. See Profer.

Establishment of Dower. Is the assurance or settlement of dower, made to the wife by the husband, on marriage: And assignment of dower, signifies the setting it out by the heir afterwards, according to the establishment. Brit. cap. 102, 103.

Estache. (From the Fr. Estacher, to fasten) Is used for a bridge, or stank of stone and timber. Cowel.

Estandard, or standard. An ensign for horsemen in war. See Standard.

Estate. (Fr. Estat. Lat. Jus) Signifies that title or interest which a man hath in lands or tenements, &c. And estates are acquired divers ways, viz. by descent from a father to the son, &c. Conveyance, or grant from one man to another; by gift or purchase; dead or will: And a fee-simple is the largest estate that can be in law. 1 Lill. 541. Estates are real, of lands, &c. or personal, of goods or chattels; otherwise distinguished into freeholds, that descend to the heir, and chattels which go to the executors: Some estates are made by the words of deeds, and others made by law; as an estate in frank marriage given to a cousin, makes a gift in tail. Also there is an estate that is implied, where tenant in tail bargains and sells his land to a man and his heirs; by this he hath an estate descendible, and determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. Co. Lit. 10 Rep. 97. If I give lands in Dale to a certain person for life, and after to his heirs or right heirs, he hath the fee-simple; and if it be to heirs males, he will have an estate-tail. 1 Rep. 66. A man grants to one and his heirs and assigns for his life, and a year over; this is an estate for life only. 39 E. 3. 25. Litt. 46. If a lease be made, and not expressed for what number of years, it is an estate at will. 2 Shep. Abr. 81.

The word estate generally in deeds, grants, and conveyances, comprehends the whole in which the party hath an interest or property, and will pass the same. 3 Mod. 46. A person in possession of an estate mortgaged in fee, by will gave it to his two daughters, and their heirs; one of them married, and then died: And it being a question, whether her share should be held real or personal estate, and go to the heir, or her husband administrator? It was adjudged for the heir; for here the mortgaged lands shall descend as other lands of inheritance, and be subject to the same rules. Preced. Canc. 266. In such case, if the mortgage in fee be paid off, the money shall be considered as land, and belong to heirs, as the estate in the land would have done. Ibid. Personal estate was devised by a man to his wife for life, and what she left at her death to be divided between his kindred: He died, and the widow married again; this devise over was held good in equity, on a bill brought to have an inventory taken of the estate, and security given not to imbezil it. But if the same were of small value, that the widow could not live thereupon, without spending the stock, it would be otherwise. Ibid. 71, 72. One by will gives to his wife, all his goods and furniture at such a place; the goods that are there, at the time of his death shall pass, tho' they were not there on making of the will; for the personal estate is fluctuating until the testator's death. 2 Vern. 688. Some hold, that where goods of a house or chamber are devised, there ought to be a particular inventory of them, to make those pass that were there when the will was made. See titles Fee-Estate and Tail.

Estoppel. (From the Fr. Estouper, i. e. Oppilare, obstipare) Is an impediment or bar of an action arising from a man's own fact: Or where he is forbidden by law, to speak

ſpeak againſt his own deed; for by his aſt or acceptance, he may be eſtopped to alledge or ſpeak the truth. F. N. B. 142. Co. Lit. 352. If a perſon is bound in an obligation by the name of A. B. and is afterwards ſued by that name on the obligation; now he ſhall not be received to ſay in abatement, that he is miſnamed, but ſhall answer according to the obligation, though it be wrong; and forasmuch as he is the ſame perſon that was bound, he is eſtopped and forbidden in law to ſay contrary to his own deed; otherwiſe he might take advantage of his own wrong, which the law will not ſuffer. Terms de Ley. If a man enters into a bond, with condition to give to another all the goods which are deviſed to him by the father; in this caſe the obligor is eſtopped to plead that the father made no will, but he may plead that he had not any goods deviſed to him by his father. 1 Nelf. Abr. 751.

In a deed, all the parties are eſtopped to ſay any thing againſt what is contained in it: It eſtops a leſſee to ſay that the leſſor had nothing in the land, &c. And parties and privies are bound by eſtoppel. Lit. 58. 1 Inſt. 357. 4 Rep. 53. None but privies and parties ſhall regularly have advantage by eſtoppels: But if a man makes a leaſe of part of a term whereby he is eſtopped; and after aſſign away the term, the aſſignee will be eſtopped alſo. 30 H. 6. 2. 4 Rep. 56. In eſtoppels, both parties muſt be eſtopped; and therefore where an infant or ſome covert makes a leaſe, they are not eſtopped to ſay that it is not their deed, becauſe they are not bound by it; and as to them it is void. Cro. Eliz. 35. And tho' eſtoppels conclude parties to deeds to ſay the truth; yet jurors are not concluded, who are ſworn ad veritatem de & ſuper præmiſſis dicendam: For they may ſay any thing that is out of the record; and are not eſtopped to find truth in a ſpecial verdict. 4 Rep. 53. Lut. 570.

An eſtoppel ſhall bind only the heir, who claims the right of him to whom the eſtoppel was. 8 Rep. 53. Acceptance of rent from a diſſeiſor by the diſſeiſee, may be an eſtoppel: And a widow accepting leſs than her thirds for dower, is an eſtoppel, &c. 2 Davd. Abr. 130, 671.

Our books mention three kinds of eſtoppel, viz. By matter of record, by matter in writing, and by matter in pais. Co. Lit. 352. If a feoffment be made to two, and their heirs, and the feoffor afterwards levies a fine to them, and the heirs of one of them; this will be an eſtoppel to the other to demand fee ſimple according to the deed; for the fine ſhall enure as a releaſe. 6 Rep. 7, 44. Tenant in tail ſuffers a recovery, that his iſſue may avoid; he himſelf ſhall be eſtopped and concluded by it, and may not demand the land againſt his own recovery. 3 Rep. 3. The taking of a leaſe by indenture of a man's own land, whereof he is ſeiſed in fee, is an eſtoppel to claim the fee during the term. Moor, ca. 323. And. 121. A leaſe is made to one man for eighty years, and then to another by deed indented for the ſame term, this ſecond leaſe may be good by way of eſtoppel: And if the firſt determine by ſurrender, forfeiture, &c. the ſecond leſſee ſhall have the land. But if the ſecond leaſe be by deed poll, it will be void. Co. Rep. 155. If a leſſor at the time of making the leaſe hath nothing in the land, but after he gets it by purchaſe or diſcent, it is a good leaſe by eſtoppel. Dyer 256. Pleud. 344. 1 Inſt. 47. A recital in a deed ſhall not eſtop a perſon, unleſs it be of a particular fact, or where it is material, when it may be an eſtoppel. Cro. Eliz. 362.

The lord by deed indented, reciting that his tenant holds of him by ſuch ſervices, whereas he doth not, confirms to the tenant, ſaving his ſervices; tis no eſtoppel to the tenant. 35 H. 6. 25. Pleud. 150. If one make a deed by curtesy, of impropriety, and when he is at large makes a diſſeigniſment to it; he is eſtopped to ſay it was per curiam. 1 Bro. Abr. 17. Where the condition of a bond is in the particularity, as to enſeoff J. S. of the manor of D. or to pay ſuch a ſum of money as he ſtands bound to pay to H. S. or to ſtand to the ſentence of J. S. in a matter of tithes in queſtion between them; here the party is eſtopped to deny any of theſe things, which in the condition he did grant: But if a condition be in the generality, to enſeoff one of all his lands in D. or to be nonſuit in all actions, &c. it is no eſtoppel. Dyer 196. 18 Ed. 4. 54.

If a man in pleading confeſs the thing he is charged with, he cannot afterwards deny it: Though a plaintiff ſhall not be eſtopped to alledge any thing againſt that which before he hath ſaid in his writ, or declaration; and one may not be eſtopped by the record upon which he was conſulted. 21 H. 7. 24. 2 Leon. 3. 17. An eſtoppel ought to be certain and affirmative, and a matter alledged that is not traverſible, ſhall not eſtop; one may not be eſtopped by acceptance, before his title accrued; an eſtoppel muſt be inſiſted and relied on; and where there is eſtoppel againſt eſtoppel, it puts the matter at large. 1 Inſt. 352. Hob. 207. Eſtoppels are to be pleaded relying on the eſtoppel; without demanding judgment ſi actio, &c. 4 Rep. 53. See Black. Com. 2 V. 295, 308.

Eſtovers, (Fr. Eſtower, from the verb Eſtoffer) Signifies to ſupply with neceſſaries; and is generally uſed in the law for allowances of wood made to tenants, comprehending houſe-bote, bedge-bote, and plough-bote, for repairs, &c. And in ſome manors, the tenants pay a certain ſmall annual rent, for eſtowers out of the lord's woods. Westm. 2. c. 25. 20 Car. 2. c. 3. This word hath been taken for ſuſtenance; as Bracton uſes it, for that ſuſtenance or allowance, which a man committed for felony is to have out of his lands or goods for himſelf and his family during his imprisonment. Bract. lib. 3. traſt. 2. cap. 18. And the Stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 3. applies it to an allowance in meat, cloths, &c. In which ſenſe it has been uſed for a wife's alimony. See Common of Eſtowers.

Eſtoverius habendis, Writ de. A writ at Common law, for a woman divorced from her huſband, a menſu & thoro, to recover her alimony, ſometimes called her eſtowers. 1 Lev. 6. Black. Com. 1 V. 441.

Eſtray, (Extrayura, from the old Fr. Eſtrayeur) Is any beaſt that is not wild, found within a lordſhip, and not owned by any man; pecus quod eleſum a cuſtode campos pererrat, ignoto domino: In which caſe if it be tried and proclaimed according to law in the two next market-towns on two market-days, and is not claimed by the owner within a year and a day, it belongs to the lord of the liberty. Brit. cap. 17. And ſwans may be eſtray, as well as beaſts, and are to be proclaimed, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 878. If the beaſt ſtray to another lordſhip within the year, after it hath been an eſtray, the firſt lord cannot retake it, for until the year and day be paſt, and proclamation made as aforeſaid, he hath no property; and therefore the poſſeſſion of the ſecond lord is good againſt him. Wood's Inſt. 213. Cro. Eliz. 716. If the cattle were never proclaimed, the owner may take them at any time: And where a beaſt is proclaimed as the law directs, if the owner claims it in a year and a day, he ſhall have it again; but muſt pay the lord for keeping. 1 Rol. Abr. 879. Finch 177.

An owner may ſeize an eſtray, without telling the marks, or proving the property, (which may be done at the trial, if conteſted) and tendering amends generally is good in this caſe, without ſhewing the particular ſum; becauſe the owner of the eſtray is no wrong doer, and knows not how long it has been in the poſſeſſion of the lord, &c. which makes it different from treſpaſs, where a certain ſum muſt be tendered. 2 Salk. 686. In caſe of an eſtray, the lord ought to make a demand of what the amends ſhould be for the keeping; and then if the party thinks the demand unreaſonable, he muſt tender ſufficient amends; but if what he tenders is not enough, the lord ſhall take iſſue, and 'tis to be ſettled by the jury. Now 144. Trin. 5 Ann. A beaſt eſtray is not to be uſed in any manner, except in caſe of neceſſity; as to milk a cow, or the like; but not to ride an horſe. Cro. Jac. 148. 1 Rol. 673. Eſtrays of the Forreſt are mentioned in the ſtatute of 27 H. 8. cap. 7. The King's cattle cannot be eſtrays or forfeited, &c.

Eſtreat, (Extraſtrum) Is uſed for the true copy or note of ſome original writing or record, and eſpecially of fines, amercements, &c. impoſed on the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff or other officer. F. N. B. 57, 76. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 8. Juſtices, commiſſioners, &c. are to deliver their eſtreats into the Exchequer yearly after Michaelmas: And fines to have writs, which ſhall be entered in the eſtreat, in order as they are entered in the Chancery Rolls, &c. 51 H. 3. ft. 5. 16 Ed. 2. These estreats relate to fines for crimes and offences, defaults and negligences of parties in suits and officers, non-appearance of defendants, and jurors, &c. And all forfeited recognizances are to be first estreated into the Exchequer, by sheriffs of counties; on which process issues to levy the same to the use of the King. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 22. Estreats are to be levied on the right persons: And sheriff's estreats must be in two parts, indented and sealed by the sheriff, and two justices of the peace; who are to view them, and one of them is to remain with the sheriff, and the other with the justices. 11 H. 7. c. 15. The estreats of fines, at the quarter-sessions, are to be made by the justices; and to be double, one whereof is to be delivered to the sheriff by indenture. 14 R. 2. cap. 11. Fines, post-fines, forfeitures, &c. must be estreated into the Exchequer twice a year, on pain of 50*l.* And officers are to deliver in their returns of estreats upon oath. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. 'Tis the course of the court of B. R. to send the estreats twice a year into the Exchequer, viz. on the last day of the two issuable terms; but in extraordinary cases there may be a rule to estreat them sooner. 1 Salk. 45. Amercements are not usually discharged on motion, and there ought to be a constat of the estreat; though the court may give leave to the sheriff to compound them. Ibid. 54. 1 Nels. Abr. 207. See 3 Ed. 1. c. 45. 13 Ed. 1. c. 8. 27 Ed. 1. c. 2. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. ft. 12.

Estreclatus, Is a word signifying streightened. — Inquirendum est de viis Domini Regis estreclatis. R. Hoveden, p. 783.

Estrepe, (Fr. Estropier) To make spoil in lands to the damage of another, as of the reversioner, &c.

Estrepiement, (Estrepiementum, from the Fr. Estropier, mutilare, or from the Lat. Extirpare) Is where any spoil is made by tenant for life, upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in reversion; and also signifies to make land barren by continual ploughing. Stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 13. It seems by the derivation, that estrepiement is the unreasonable drawing away the heart of the ground, by plowing and sowing it continually, without manuring or other good husbandry, whereby it is impaired: And yet estropier signifying mutilare, may no less be applied to the cutting down trees, or lopping them further than the law allows. In ancient records, we often find vassum & estrepiamentum facere: And this word is used for a writ, which lies in two cases; the one, when a person having an action depending, as a formedon, writ of right, &c. sues to prohibit the tenant from making waste, during the suit; the other is for the demandant, who is adjudged to recover seisin of the land in question, before execution sued by the writ habere facias possessionem, to prevent waste being made till he gets into possession. Reg. Orig. 76. Reg. Judic. 33. F. N. B. 60, 61.

The writ of estrepiement lies properly where the plaintiff in a real action, shall not recover damages by his action; and it as it were supplies damages; for damages and costs may be recovered for waste, after the writ of estrepiement is brought. See Moor 100. 2 Inst. 328. If tenants commit waste in houses assigned a feme for dower, on her bringing action of dower, writ of estrepiement lies. 5 Rep. 115. See Cro. Eliz. 114. Moor 622. But pending a writ of partition between coparceners, if the tenant commit waste, this writ will not be granted; because there is equal interest between the parties, and the writ will not lie, but where the interest of the tenant is to be disproved. Goldsb. 50. 2 Nels. Abr. 754. Writ of estrepiement is directed to the tenant and his servants, or to the sheriff: and if it be directed to the tenant and his servants, and they are duly served with it, if they afterwards commit waste, they may be committed to prison: But it is said not to be so, when directed to the sheriff, because he may raise the posse comitatus to resist them who make waste. Hob. 85. Though it hath been adjudged, that the sheriff may likewise imprison offenders, if he be put to it; and that he may make a warrant to others to do it. 5 Rep. 115. 2 Inst. 329. In the Chancery, on filing of a bill, and before answer, the court will grant an injunction to stay waste, &c. 1 Lill. 547.

Etheling or Ætheling, (Sax.) Signifies noble, and among the English Saxons, it was the title of the Prince, or the King's eldest son. Camden. See Adeling.

Evafion, (Evafio) Is a subtle endeavouring to set aside truth, or to escape the punishment of the law; which will not be indured. If a person says to another that he will not strike him, but will give him a pot of ale to strike first; and accordingly he strikes, the returning of it is punishable; and if the person first striking be killed, it is murder; for no man shall evade the justice of the law, by such a pretence to cover his malice. 1 H. P. C. 81. No one may plead ignorance of the law to evade it, &c.

Evenings, The delivery at even or night of a certain portion of grass or corn, &c. to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement. Kennet's Gloss.

Evesdroppers, Are such persons as stand under the eves or walls, or windows of a house, by night or day, to hearken after news, and carry it to others, and thereby cause strife and contention in the neighbourhood. Terms de Ley. They are called evil members of the commonwealth; and by the stat. of Westm. 1. c. 33. they may be punished, either in the court-leet by way of presentment, and fine; or in the quarter-sessions by indictment, and binding to good behaviour. Kitch. 11. See Eavesdroppers.

Eviscion, (From Evinco to overcome) Is a recovery of land, &c. by law. If land is evicted, before the time of payment of rent on a lease, no rent shall be paid by the lessee. 10 Rep. 128. Where lands taken on extent are evicted or recovered by better title, the plaintiff shall have a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. If a widow is evicted of her dower or thirds, she shall be endowed in the other lands of the heir. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. And if on an exchange of lands, either party is evicted of the lands given in exchange, he may enter on his own lands. 4 Rep. 121.

Evidence, (Evidentia) Is used in the law for some proof, by testimony of men on oath, or by writings or records. It is called evidence, because thereby the point in issue in a cause to be tried, is to be made evident to the jury; for probationes debent esse evidentes & perspicuae. Co. Lit. 283. The evidence to a jury ought to be upon the oath of witnesses; or upon matters of record, or by deeds proved, or other like authentic matter. 1 Lill. Abr. 547. And evidence containeth testimony of witnesses, and all other proofs to be given and produced to a jury for the finding of any issue joined between parties. 1 Inst. 283. If the substance of an issue be proved it is sufficient. Alcorn executor v. Westbrook. Wils. Rep. par. 1. p. 115.

The system of evidence, as now established in our courts of Common law, is very full, comprehensive and refined. Far different from, and far superior to any thing known in the middle ages;—as far superior in that as in all other improvements and refinements in science, arts, and manners.

The nature of evidence, during the ages of ignorance was extremely imperfect, and the people were incapable of making any rational improvement. See this subject very judiciously treated, in Robert. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 48, 49, &c. 'Twas the imperfection of human reason, that caused the invention and introduction of the ordeal, as an appeal to the Supreme Being. The reader will readily excuse the insertion of the following passage from that author:

As men are unable to comprehend the manner in which the Almighty carries on the government of the universe, by equal, fixed, and general laws, they are apt to imagine that in every case which their passions or interest render important in their own eyes, the Supreme Ruler of all ought visibly to display his power, in vindicating innocence and punishing vice. It requires no inconsiderable degree of science and philosophy to correct this popular error. 1 V. 51.

But to proceed more immediately to our subject.

Under this head it is material to consider the several kinds of evidence which may be divided into

- I. Written evidence: Wherein of matters of record, as also of writings under seal, and other writings.
- II. Unwritten evidence: Wherein—
 1. Who may be witnesses.
 2. Of the number of witnesses, and of compelling them to appear, as also of the manner of their giving evidence.
 3. Of parol, presumptive, and hear-say evidence.
 4. Where depositions in another court may be given in evidence.

- I. Of written evidence: Wherein of matters of record, as also of writings under seal, and other writings.

Evidence by records and writings. Is where acts of parliament, statutes, judgments, fines and recoveries, proceedings of courts, and deeds, &c. are admitted as evidence; and need not be pleaded; and of these the printed statute-book is good evidence: But in the case of a private act, a copy of it is to be examined by the records of parliament, and it is to be pleaded. Trials per pais 177, 232. The statute of limitations, &c. may be given in evidence. 1 Salk. 278. On nil debet pleaded, this statute may be given in evidence; but 'tis said not upon non assumpsit. 3 Salk. 154. Journals and other proceedings in the House of Commons have been held to be no evidence. State Trials, Vol. 3. 470. Though it is otherwise, Vol. 3. 800. A history of England, or printed trial, may not be read as evidence. 1 Lill. 557. Candens Britannia was not allowed as evidence: But it has been held, that an history may be evidence of the general history of the realm, though not of a particular custom, &c. Mich. 7 W. 3. B. R. Skinner's Rep. 623.

An exemplification of the enrolment of letters patent under the Great Seal, may be pleaded in evidence. 3 Inst. 173. Records and enrolments prove themselves; and a copy of a record or enrolments sworn to, may be given in evidence. 1 Inst. 117, 262. A transcript of a record in another court, may be given in evidence to a jury. 1 Lill. Abr. 551. There is a difference between pleading a record, and giving the record in evidence; if it be pleaded, it must be sub pede sigilli, or the judges cannot judge thereof: Though where it is given in evidence, if it be not under the seal, the jury may find the same, if they have other good matter of inducement to prove it. Style's Rep. 22.

A fine or recovery may be given in evidence, without vouching the roll of the recovery; for the part indented is the usual evidence that there is such a fine: But it is said the fine ought to be shown with the proclamations under seal. 10 Rep. 92. 2 Roll. Abr. 574. A record of an inferior court, hath been rejected in evidence, and the party put to prove what was done: And proceedings of county courts, courts barons, &c. may be tried by a jury; for it hath been adjudged that they cannot be proved by the rolls, but by witnesses. Lit. 75. But court-rolls of a court baron, when shown are good evidence; and in some cases, copies of the court-rolls have been allowed as evidence; and in others not. Trials per pais 178, 228. A copy of copyhold lands may be given in evidence, where the rolls are lost. Mich. 15 Car. B. R.

Enrolment of a deed is proved on certifying it by an examined attested copy; though enrolment of a deed which needs no enrolment, or the estate doth not pass by it, is only evidence to some purposes. 3 Lev. 387. An ancient deed proves itself, where possession has gone accordingly: But later deeds must be proved by witnesses. 1 Inst. 6. If all the witnesses to a deed are dead, continual and quiet possession is presumptive evidence of the truth of it; yet it may receive farther credit by comparison of hands and seals. Wood's Inst. 599. When witnesses to deeds are dead, their hand-writing must be proved. 2 Inst. 118. And where there are several witnesses to a deed, and they are all dead but one, a suborn must be taken out against the living man, and strict inquiry made after him, and affidavit is to be made that he cannot be found; before the dead men's hands are to be proved. 1 Lill. 556.

An old deed proved to have been found among deeds and evidences of land, may be given in evidence to a jury; though the executing of it cannot be proved and made out. Trin. 9 W. 3. B. R. 3 Salk. 153. A deed may be good evidence, though the seal is broken off: And where a deed is burnt, &c. the judges may allow it to be proved by witnesses, that there was such a deed, and this be given in evidence. 1 Lev. 25. But the court will not allow the jury on a trial at bar to carry deeds, writings or books with them out of court, as evidence to consider of, but such as have been proved: Though by the assent of parties, or by assent of the court without the parties, they may be delivered to the jurors. Cro. Eliz. 421. All deeds or writings under seal, and given in evidence, they may have; and nothing which was not given in evidence, for the court gives their direction to the jury upon the evidence given in court. 1 Lill. 313.

It is dangerous to suffer any who by law ought to shew forth any deed, to prove in evidence, that there was such a deed, which they had seen or read, &c. For there might be imperfections in the deed, or it may be on condition, with limitation, &c. 10 Rep. 92. A deed though sealed and delivered, if not stamped according to act of parliament, cannot be pleaded or given in evidence in any court. Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 21. A deed cannot be proved by a counterpart of it or copy, if the original is in being, and may be had; though it may be when the original cannot be procured. 1 Inst. 225. 10 Rep. 92. The counterpart of an ancient deed hath been allowed to be given in evidence. Mod. Caf. 225. But it hath been held that the counterpart of a deed, without other circumstances, is not sufficient evidence; unless in a case of fine, when a counterpart is good evidence of itself. 1 Salk. 287.

Where a deed was cancelled by practice, that being proved, it was allowed to be evidence in an action under the deed. Heil. 138. The recital of a deed is no evidence without shewing the deed; or proving that there was such a deed, and it is lost. 1 Inst. 352. Vaugh. 74. Recital of a lease, in a deed of release, is good evidence that there was such a lease against the releasor, and those claiming under him; but not against others, except there be proof that there was such a lease. 1 Salk. 286. A settlement set forth in a bill in Chancery, and admitted in the answer; and where it was proved that the deed was in the possession of such a one, &c. hath been judged a good evidence of the deed of settlement where not to be found. 5 Mod. 384.

The probate of a will, when it concerns personal estate only, may be given in evidence: But where real estate is claimed under a will, the will must be shewn, not the probate: Though if the will be proved in the Chancery, copies of the proceedings there will be evidence. 2 Roll. Abr. 678. Trials per pais 234. A bill in Chancery has been admitted as slight evidence against the complainant: An answer in Chancery is evidence against the defendant himself, though not against others. 1 Vent. 66. Trials per pais 167. But when a party gives an answer in Chancery in evidence at a trial, though he insist to read only such a part of it; yet the other side may require to have the whole read. 5 Mod. 10. As in case of a writing permitted to be read to prove one part of an evidence, which may be read to prove any other part of the evidence given to the jury. Depositions of witnesses in Chancery between the same parties, may be given in evidence at law, especially if the witnesses are dead, and the bill and answer proved. Trial per pais 167, 207, 234.

Regularly depositions in Chancery, of a witness, may not be given in evidence, if he be alive; unless he be in France, or in another kingdom, not subject to the dominion of our King. Ibid. 359. But depositions in Chancery, after answer, between the same parties, may be read as evidence, though the witnesses are not dead, if they cannot be found on search. Shower 3. 1 Salk. 270. Depositions in Chancery in perpetuum rei memoriam, are not to be given in evidence, so long as the parties are living. 1 Salk. 286. And it hath been adjudged that the depositions to perpetuate testimony, in a bill exhibited, shall not be admitted as evidence at a trial at law, unless an answer be put in. Raym. 335. If deposition taken out of the realm, he who makes them is sup

* there still, and they shall be read as evidence; but if it appears he is in England, they cannot be read, but he must come in person. 1 Lill. 555. Things done beyond sea may be given in evidence to a jury; and the testimony of a publick notary of things done in a foreign country, will be good evidence. 6 Rep. 47.

Depositions in the ecclesiastical courts may not be given in evidence to a jury at a trial; but a sentence may in a cause of tithes, &c. And the sentence of the spiritual court is conclusive evidence in causes within their jurisdiction. 1 Salk. 290. 2 Nelsf. 761.

Depositions before a coroner are admitted as evidence, the witnesses being dead. 1 Lev. 180. Likewise they have been admitted where a witness hath gone beyond sea. 2 Nelsf. Abr. 760. The confession of a prisoner before a magistrate, &c. may be given in evidence against him: And the examination of an offender need not to be on oath, but must be subscribed by him, if he confesses the fact; and then be given in evidence upon oath by the justice of the peace who took the same. The examination of others must be on oath, and proved by the justice, or his clerk, &c. as to their evidence, if they are dead, unable to travel, or kept away by the prisoner. H. P. C. 19, 162. Kel. 18, 55. Wood's Inst. 647.

The examination of an informer before a justice, taken on oath, and subscribed, may be given in evidence on a trial, if he be dead, or not able to travel, &c. which is to be made out on oath. 2 H. P. C. 429. A verdict against one, under whom either the plaintiff or defendant claims, may be given in evidence against the party so claiming; but not if neither claim under it. Mich. 1656. B. R. In ejectment where the plaintiff hath title to several lands, and brings action of ejectment against several defendants, if he recovers against one, he shall not give that verdict in evidence against the rest. 3 Mod. 141. In a court of common law, a decree in Chancery is no evidence: Affidavits are not evidence. Letters may be produced as evidence against a man, in treason, &c. Similitude of hands sworn to, has been allowed as evidence: But since the attainder of Algernon Sidney, it hath not been admitted in any criminal case. 2 Hawck. 431. Although a witness swear to the hand and contents of a letter, if he never saw the party write, he shall not be allowed as evidence. Mich. 8 H. 3. Skim. 673.

Since no witnesses are present when goldsmiths notes are given, such notes are allowed as evidence of the receipt of money, or other thing. 1 Salk. 283. A shop-book is evidence; but it may not be given in evidence for goods sold, &c. after one year, before the action brought; unless there be a bill, &c. for the debt; though this extends not to any buying or selling, or trading between tradesmen and tradesmen. Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 12. To make these books evidence, there ought to be the hand of the person to the books that delivered the goods, which must be proved. 1 Salk. 285. A church-book some writers say is not to be admitted as evidence; though others say it may. 1 Cro. 411. It is said copies of publick books of corporations, &c. shall be evidence. 1 Lev. 25. 1 Lill. 551. But as to books of corporations where things are entered not of record, the originals are to be produced as evidence.

A pedigree drawn by a herald at arms, will not be admitted for evidence, without shewing the records or ancient books from whence taken; for the entries in the herald's office are no records, but only circumstantial evidence: But a copy of an inscription on a grave-stone, has been given in evidence in such a case. 2 Rel. Abr. 686, 687. An almanack wherein the father had writ the day of the nativity of his son, was allowed an evidence to prove the nonage of the son. Raym. 84.

Matter in law ought not to be given in evidence at a trial, but only matters of fact, unless it be in case of a special verdict; matter in law is disputable, and reserved to be spoken to in arrest of judgment. Vaugh.

13, 147. In debt the defendant may give in evidence, that he paid money on an obligation before the day, &c. Rel. Abr. 75. And a release may be given in evidence on nil debet. 5 Mod. 18. Though in indebitatus the plaintiff shall not give any specialty in evidence to prove his debt, as a bond, indenture, &c. because he may bring action of debt upon that specialty. Moor 340.

Entry and expulsion may be given in evidence in debt for rent: Coverture may be given in evidence to avoid a deed, &c. Mod. Caf. 230. Usurious contracts, &c. may be given in evidence. 2 Nelsf. 756. Fraud may be given in evidence, on the general issue: And tampering with witnesses may be given in evidence against a party, &c. 5 Rep. 60. But many things are to be pleaded; as justifications without title, in trespasses, &c. and cannot be given in evidence upon Not guilty. Trials per pais 404. If in trespass, Not guilty be pleaded; a licence may not be given in evidence to excuse the trespass; for it must be pleaded. Kel. 59. And if the issue in detinue is non detinet, it shall not be given in evidence that the goods were pledged for money, and the money not paid; this is not good without pleading it: But a gift of the goods by the plaintiff may be given in evidence. 1 Inst. 283.

So in an issue in waste, no waste done, the defendant may give in evidence, that it came by lightning, tempest, or enemies; but that he repaired before action brought, must be specially pleaded, &c. Ibid. 282. If an issue be taken on the cutting of 20 oaks, evidence may be for ten; because either is a breach of covenant not to do waste. 2 Shep. Abr. 142. In ejectione firmæ, the plaintiff declares for 100 acres of land, and gives evidence only for forty, it will be good for so much. 1 Cro. 13. On issue, if J. S. was taken by a capias, and evidence that he was taken by alias capias, this will maintain the issue. Hob. 54, 55. Plowd. 8. But if the point in issue be the sealing and delivery of a lease, and the witness prove sealed and delivered, but did not know the lessor that sealed it: Or where proof is not made of livery and seisin, on issue of a lease for life: Or if on an issue upon a taking by capias ad satisfaciend. Evidence be of taking by capias utlagatum, &c. in these cases the evidence will not be good to maintain the issue. Plowd. 14. Kelw. 55, 59. Hob. 55. Issue was upon a prescription for common appendant to 300 acres in four towns; on the evidence the jury found it appendant to 250 acres in two towns; and a manor was given in evidence in another county, &c. and they were held insufficient. Hob. 188, 209. Where justices of peace, sued for things done in their offices, may give special matter in evidence. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. Vide Justice. See Copy, Depositions, &c. And for farther particulars respecting written evidence, see Vin. Abr. title Evidence, and Table to Wilson's Reports.

II. As to unwritten evidence, we are under this head to consider,

1. Who may be witnesses: Wherein it is to be observed, That the King cannot be a witness under his sign manual, &c. 2 Rel. Abr. 686. Though it has been allowed he may, in relation to a promise made in behalf of another. Hob. 213. A peer produced as an evidence, ought to be sworn. 3 Keb. 631. It is no exception to an evidence, that he is a judge, or a juror, to try the person; for a judge may give evidence going off from the Bench. 2 Hawck. P. C. 432. And a juror may be an evidence as to his particular knowledge; but then it must be on examination in open court, not before his brother juror. 1 Lill. 552. Members of corporations shall be admitted or refused to give evidence in actions brought by corporations, as their interest is small or great; whereby it may be judged whether they will be partial or not. 2 Lev. 231, 241. But they will not generally be admitted; though inhabitants not free of the corporation may be good witnesses for the corporation, as their interest is not concerned; and members may be disfranchised on these occasions. Ibid. 236.

In actions against church-wardens and overseers of the poor for recovery of money mispent on the parish account, the evidence of the parishioners, not receiving alms, shall be allowed. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 11. And in informations or indictments for not repairing highways and bridges, the evidence of the inhabitants of the town, corporation, &c. where such highways lie shall be admitted ted. 1 Ann. cap. 18. A party interested in the suit; or a wife for or against her husband, a husband against the wife, (except in cases of treason) may not be witnesses. 4 Inst. 279. Yet it has been adjudged, that a wife may be admitted as an evidence for the husband on her being seduced to live with an adulterer, against the adulterer; and she may be a witness to prove a cheat upon her and her husband. Sid. 431.

By stat. 21 Jac. 19. f. 6. "The commissioners shall have power to examine the wife of a bankrupt upon oath for the discovery of his estate, goods and chattels, and such wife refusing to appear, or to answer interrogatories, shall incur the same penalties as are provided against other persons in the like cases."

Kinsmen, though never so near, tenants, servants, masters, attorneys for their clients, and all others that are not infamous, and which want not understanding, or are not parties in interest, may give evidence in a cause; though the credit of servants is left to the jury. 2 Kel. Abr. 685. 1 Vent. 243. A counsellor, attorney, or solicitor, is not to be examined as an evidence against their clients, because they are obliged to keep their secrets; but they may be examined, as to any thing of their own knowledge before retained, not as counsel or attorney, &c. 1 Vent. 97. The bail cannot be an evidence for his principal. Stat. Tr. If the plaintiff makes one a defendant in the suit, on purpose to impeach his testimony, under a pretence of his being a party in interest, he may nevertheless be examined de bene esse; and if the plaintiff prove no cause of action against him, his evidence shall be allowed in the cause. 2 Lill. Abr. 701. Also if where a man makes himself a party in interest, after a plaintiff or defendant has an interest in his evidence, he may not by this deprive them of the benefit of his testimony. Skinner's Rep. 586.

One that hath a legacy given him by will, is not a good witness to prove the will; but if he release his legacy, he may be a good evidence. Ibid. 704. It is the same of a deed; he that claims any benefit by it, may not be an evidence to prove that deed, in regard of his interest: And a person any ways concerned in the same title of land in question, will not be admitted as evidence. Ibid. 705. But it has been held, that an heir apparent may be a witness concerning a title of land; and yet a remainder-man, who hath a present interest, cannot. 1 Salk. 385. A legatee cannot be a witness to the will, because the legacy is devised to him; though if such legatee be permitted to be sworn and examined, the counsel cannot afterwards except against his evidence. 1 Ld. Raym. 730. Creditors, &c. are made competent witnesses to wills, by Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 6. and witnesses competent at law, are competent to prove a nuncupative will, by Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. f. 14. See those two statutes. The son of a legatee, is no witness to a will in the spiritual court; nevertheless it is held, he may be a good evidence to prove a nuncupative will, within the intent of the statute of frauds. Ibid. 85.

A grantee who is a bare trustee, it is said, is a good witness to prove the execution of the deed made to himself. 1 P. Will. 290. If an action is brought against many persons for taking of goods, one of them concerned may be admitted as an evidence against the rest. Comberb. 367. See 1 Mod. 282. In criminal cases, as of robbery on the highway, in action against the hundred; in rapes of women, or where a woman is married by force, &c. a man or a woman may be an evidence in their own cause. 1 Vent. 243. And in private notorious cheats, a person may give evidence in his own cause, where no body else can be a witness of the circumstances of the fact, but he that suffers. 1 Salk. 286. Upon an information on the statute against usury, he that borrows the money, after he hath paid it, may be an evidence; but not before. Raym. 191.

An alien infidel, may not be an evidence; but a Jew may, and be sworn on the Old Testament. 1 Inst. 6. A quaker shall not be permitted to give evidence in any criminal cause, (unless he will take an oath): Though on other occasions, his solemn affirmation shall be accepted instead of an oath. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 34. Persons non sane memoriae; those that are attainted of conspiracy, or in a præmunire upon the statute 5 Elix. c. 1. Papists recusants convicted, on the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. are disabled to give evidence. So persons convicted of felony, perjury, &c. And if one by judgment hath stood on the pillory, or been whipped; for this infamy he shall not be admitted to give evidence, whilst the judgment is in force: But the record of conviction must be produced, on objecting against his testimony; and the witness shall not be asked any question to accuse himself, though his credit may be impeached by other evidences, as to his character in general; so as not to make proof of particular crimes, whereof he hath not been convicted. 3 Inst. 108, 219. 3 Lev. 426. If after a man hath stood in the pillory, &c. he be pardoned, he may be an evidence: And notwithstanding judgment of the pillory infers infamy at common law; by the civil and canon law it imports no infamy, unless the cause for which the person was convicted was infamous; and therefore such may be a good witness to a will, if not convicted of any infamous act. 3 Lev. 426, 427. It has been held, that it is not standing in the pillory, disables a person to give evidence; but standing there upon a judgment for an infamous crime, as forgery, &c. If for a libel, a man may be a witness. 5 Mod. 74. 3 Nels. Abr. 557.

A man is convicted of felony, and afterwards pardoned, he may be a good evidence. Raym. 369. So where burnt in the hand, which is quasi a statute pardon; and it is said it is burning in the hand restores the offender to his credit. Ibid. 330. A person who was condemned to be hanged for burglary, but having a pardon for transportation, hath been allowed to be a good evidence. 5 Mod. 18. One outlawed for treason and pardoned, may be an evidence. State Trials, Vol. 3. 515. Persons acquitted, or guilty of the same crime, (while they remain unconvicted) may be evidence against their fellows. Kel. 17. Though no evidence ought to be given of what an accomplice hath said, who is not in the same indictment. State Trials, Vol. 2. 414. An informer may be a witness, though he is to have part of the forfeiture, where no other witnesses can be had. Wood's Inst. 598. Members of either House of Parliament may be witnesses on impeachments. State Trials, Vol. 2. 632.

2. As to the number of witnesses.

The Common law required no certain number of witnesses, though they are required by statute in some cases: The testimony of one single evidence is sufficient for the King in all causes, except for treason; where there must be two witnesses to the same overt-act, &c.

There must be one witness to one, and another witness to another overt-act of the same species of treason, or at least one witness to an overt-act; and another to a material circumstance to prove it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 428. In all other criminal matters, one evidence is enough; and to a jury one witness is sufficient. 3 Inst. 20. Mich. 23 Car. B. R. Stat. 7 W. 3. cap. 3.

Also it is required by the 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. "That all devises of lands shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the testator, by three or four credible witnesses, or else shall be void."

With respect to the compelling witnesses to appear.

If a witness served with process in a civil cause refuse to appear, being tendered reasonable charges, and having no lawful excuse, action on the case lies against him, whereon damages shall be recovered: And a feme covert not appearing, action may be brought against the husband and her. Stat. 5 Elix. cap. 9. 1 Lev. 112. Where any witness accepts of a shilling, and has a promise of the payment of his charges, such acceptance is sufficient to maintain any such action: But without that the party cannot support an action upon the statute, for not giving evidence, but must tender the witness his reasonable charges, at a reasonable time before the trial. W. Jones 433.

If there is a doubt that a witness will not attend, the best way is to serve him with the original subpoena, keeping a copy, and if he is at any distance from the place of trial, tender reasonable charges: If he does not appear at the trial, call him three times on his subpoena, and then, if occasion requires, the party may bring his action.

In a criminal cause, if a witness refuse to appear and give evidence, being served with process, the court will put off the trial, and grant attachment against him; and as refusing to give evidence is a great contempt, the party may be committed and fined. 1 Salk. 278.

Preventing evidence to be given against a criminal, is punishable by fine and imprisonment; and a person was fined one thousand marks in such a case. Hill. 1663. B. R. Persons dissuading a witness from giving evidence, &c. And jurors or others disclosing evidence given, are likewise offences punished by fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. 59.

In regard to the manner of their giving evidence.

Where necessity requires, witnesses may be examined apart in court, till they have given all they have to say in evidence; so that what one has deposed, may not induce another to give his evidence to the same effect. Forster. 54.

A witness shall not be examined where his evidence tends to clear or accuse himself of a crime. State Trials, Vol. 1. 557. And a witness shall not be cross examined till he hath gone through the evidence on the side whereon produced. Ibid. Vol. 2. 772. The court is to examine the witnesses, and not the prisoner or prosecutors. Ibid. Vol. 1. 143. An evidence shall not be permitted to read his evidence, but he may look in his notes to refresh his memory. Ibid. Vol. 4. 45. In evidence may not recite his evidence to the jury, after gone from the bar, and he hath given his evidence in court; if he doth, the verdict may be set aside. Cro. Elms. 159. One that is to be an evidence at a trial, ought not to be examined before the trial, but by the consent of both parties, and a rule of court for that purpose: but if a witness is not able to attend the trial, a judge may excuse his non-appearance, and certify his examination; though an examination ought not to be read, where the evidence himself may be produced. State Trials, Vol. 1. 526.

No evidence ought to be produced against a man in a trial for his life, but what is given in his presence. Ibid. Vol. 4. 227. And evidence shall not be given against the prisoner for any other crime than that for which prosecuted. Ibid. Vol. 3. 947. A prisoner may bring evidence to prove that the witnesses gave a different testimony before a justice of peace, or at another trial: though he may not call witnesses to disprove what his own evidence have sworn. Ibid. Vol. 2. 623, 792. And no objection can be made to the evidence after verdict given. Vol. 4. 35. It is justifiable to maintain or subvert an evidence, but not to give him any reward; for this, if proved, will avoid his testimony. Ibid. Vol. 2. 470.

A witness shall not be examined to any thing that does not relate to the matter in issue. Ibid. Vol. 2. 343. And where an issue is not perfect, no evidence can be applied, nor can the justices proceed to trial. Bregunl. 42, 47, 435. If evidence doth not warrant and maintain the same thing that is in issue, the evidence is defective, and may be demurred upon; but proving the substance is sufficient. Trials per Pais 425. Evidence may be given of facts before and after the time they are laid in the indictment. And where a place is laid only for a venue in an indictment, or an appeal, (and not made part of the description of the fact) proof of the same crime may be made at any other place, in the same county; and after a crime hath been proved in the county where laid, evidence may be given of other instances of the same crime, in another county, to satisfy the jury. 2 Hawk. P. C. 436.

But where a certain place is made part of the description of the fact against the defendant, the least variation as to such place between the evidence, and indictment is fatal. Ibid. 437. It hath been also adjudged, that where an indictment sets forth all the special matter, in respect whereof the law implies malice, variance between the indictment and evidence as to the circumstances of the fact doth vitiate the trial; so that the substance of the matter be found by the evidence. 2 Hawk. 438. An evidence against the King in treason, or felony, for the criminal, was not to be examined on oath by the Common law; but by statute, witnesses for a prisoner are to be sworn, as in case for the King, and process for their appearance is to be taken out. 3 Inst. 79. Stat. 7 W. 3. 1 Ann. 8. 2. c. 9.

The burthen of proving lies on the plaintiff; and the presumption shall stand, until the contrary appear: though that which plainly appeareth, need not be given in evidence. 7 Rep. 40. 1 Inst. 233. The defendant's counsel is to conclude by way of answer to the evidence given to the jury by the plaintiff's: but he who doth begin to maintain the issue to be tried, ought to conclude and sum up the evidence given, which is no more than to put the jury in mind how he hath proved his cause. 1 Lill. 551.

3. Of parol, presumptive, and hear-say evidence.

It seems to have been agreed, as a general rule, (even before the statute of frauds and perjuries) that no parol evidence could be admitted to controul what appeared on the face of a deed or will, not only from the danger of perjury, but from a presumption, that whatever the parties at that time had in contemplation, was reduced into writing. 5 Co. 68. a. b. 8 Co. 155. a. Kelw. 49.

But this rule has received a relaxation, especially in the courts of equity, where a distinction has been taken between evidence, that may be offered to a jury, and to inform the conscience of the court; viz. that in the first case no such evidence should be admitted; because the jury might be inveigled thereby; but that in the second it could do no hurt, because the court were judges of the whole matter, and could distinguish what weight and stress ought to be laid on such evidence. 2 Vern. 98, 337, 625.

Also to ascertain a fact, parol evidence hath been admitted to explain the intent of the testator; as where the testator had two sons both named John, and he devised lands to his son John; here parol evidence was admitted, to shew which of his sons he meant; and it being proved, that one of his sons of that name had been absent several years beyond sea, and that the testator apprehended that he was dead, the devise was held good, and that the other should take; for without such evidence the will must be void. 2 Vern. 98, 337, 625.

Parol evidence to prove that a bond was given, in lieu of dower, refused. Finney v. Finney, in Chanc. Wils. Rep. par. 1. fo. 34. parol proof admitted that the testator intended his wife executrix should have the residue undisposed of. Id. Lake v. Lake in Chanc. fo. 313. Debt upon bond with condition for payment of money to Lydia Dovey, who is a third person, she declares the defendant owes her nothing, and upon proof thereof, a verdict was for the defendant; such declaration was properly given in evidence, for Lydia Dovey is to be considered as the real plaintiff. Id. Hanson v. Parker, fo. 257.

As to presumptive proof.

Sometimes violent presumption will be admitted for evidence without witnesses; as where a person is run thro' the body in a house, and one is seen to come out of the house with a bloody sword, &c. But on this the court ought not to judge hastily. 1 Inst. 6, 673. And tho' presumptive and circumstantial evidence may be sufficient in felony, it is not so in treason. State Trials, Vol. 4. p. 307.

Persons once in being shall be intended still living, if the contrary is not proved. 2 Roll. Rep. 461. But now by Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. it is enacted, "That if any person or persons, for whose life or lives estates have been, or shall be granted, shall remain beyond the seas, or elsewhere absent themselves in this realm, by the space of seven years together, and no sufficient and evident proof made of the life or lives of such person or persons respectively, in any action commenced for the recovery of such tenements by the lessors or reversioners, in every such case the person or persons, upon whose life or lives such estate depended, shall be accounted as naturally dead; dead; and in every action brought for the recovery of the said tenements, by the lessors or reversioners, their heirs or assigns, the judges, before whom such action shall be brought, shall direct the jury to give their verdict, as if the person so remaining beyond the seas, or otherwise absenting himself, were dead." But the statute contains a proviso for those who are evicted, and not actually dead, at the time of the eviction, on due proof, &c. to re-enter, &c.

By the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 27. it is enacted, "That if any woman be delivered of an issue, which being born alive should, by the laws of this realm, be a bastard, and endeavour privately, either by drowning or secret burying, or any other way, either by herself, or the procuring of others so to conceal the death thereof, as that it may not come to light, whether it were born alive or not, but be concealed; in every such case, the mother so offending shall suffer death, as in case of murder, unless she can prove by one witness at least, that such child was born dead."

As to hearsay evidence, it seems agreed, that what another has been heard to say, is no evidence, because the party was not on oath; also, because the party, who is affected thereby, had not an opportunity of cross-examining; but such speeches or discourses may be made use of by way of inducement or illustration of what is properly evidence. 1 Mod. 383. Skin. 402.

Also what a witness hath been heard to say at another time, may be given in evidence, in order either to invalidate or confirm the testimony he gives in court. 2 Hawk. P. C. 431.

So what a person accused of a crime hath been heard to say at another time, may be given in evidence at his trial, for, or against him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 431.

A witness by hearsay of a stranger shall not be allowed, except perhaps to confirm the evidence of a witness that spoke of his knowledge. Wood's Inst. 644.

4. Where depositions in another court may be given in evidence.

If a person who gave evidence in a former trial, be dead; upon proof of his death, any person who heard him give evidence, may be admitted to give the same evidence between the same parties; but a copy of the record of the trial when the evidence was given ought to be produced. 3 Inst. 2. Lill. Abr. 705.

And evidence given at one trial, has been held not to be evidence at another's trial. State Trials, Vol. 2. 308, 337. Though that was over-ruled in the case of Sir John Fenwick, on a bill of attainder. See title Bill of Attainder, and Chandler's Debates in the House of Commons, 3 V. 30, &c. Debates in the House of Lords, 1 V. 463, &c.

Depositions cannot be given in evidence against any person who was not party to the suit; and the reason is, because he had not liberty to cross-examine the witnesses; and it is against natural justice that a man should be concluded in a cause to which he never was a party. Hardr. 22, 472. Bunb. 50. pl. 84.—91. pl. 148.—321. pl. 403. 9 Mod. 229. Carth. 181. Fern. 113. Gilb. Evid. 62. Ch. Proc. 212.

No evidence is necessary in passing a bill of attainder, but private satisfaction to every one's conscience is sufficient. State Tri. Vol. 1. 676. But the same evidence is requisite on an impeachment in parliament, as in private courts. State Trials, Vol. 4. 311, 318.

With respect to depositions in Chancery, see how far they may be given in evidence under the first head touching Written Evidence. See further as to Evidence, New Abr. V. 2. tit. Evidence. Com. Dig. 3 V. same title, and V. 5. tit. Testimony. Gilbert's Law of Evidence, and Theory of Evidence. Also Barb. Ni. Pri. 207, &c.

EWAGE, (ewagium) Is the same with aquage, from the Fr. eau, water; and signifies toll paid for water-passage. — Charta Regis Johannis, &c. hominibus de B. quod sint quieti de thelonio, scutagio, passagio, lastagio, & de wrec & lagan, de ewagio, &c. Hill. 14 Hen. 3. In Thesauro Reg. Scacc. Ebor. Rot. 15.

EWYCE, (Sax. ew, i. e. conjugium, and bryce, fractio) Adultery or marriage breaking: from this Saxon word ew, marriage, we derive our present English word, to ew a dame.

EW, (euwa) A German word signifying law; it is mentioned in Leg. W. 1.

EXACTION, Is defined to be a wrong done by an officer, or one in pretended authority, by taking a reward or fee for that which the law allows not. And the difference between exaction and extortion is this: extortion is where an officer extorts more than his due, when something is due to him; and exaction is, when he wrests a fee or reward, where none is due; for which the offender is to be fined and imprisoned, and render to the party twice as much as the money he so takes. Co. Litt. 368. 10 Rep. 100. V. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. And see Extortion.

EXACTOR Regis, The King's exactor or collector: sometimes taken for the sheriff: but generally, quicumque publicas pecunias, tributa, vectigalia & res fisco debitas exigit, propriis nominatur exactor Regis. Niger liber Scacc. par. 1. cap. ult.

EXAMINATION, (examinatio) A searching after, or cognizance of a magistrate. By Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. & 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10. Justices of peace are to examine felons apprehended, and witnesses, before the felon is committed; and the accusers must be bound over to appear and give evidence at the next assizes, &c. to which the examinations are to be certified. Mod. Justice 176, 177. See Evidence.

With respect to examinations touching church benefices, see title Benefice.

EXAMINERS in the Chancery, (examinatores) Are two officers of that court, who examine upon oath, witnesses produced by either side, in London, or near it, on such interrogatories as the parties to any suit exhibit for that purpose: and sometimes the parties themselves are, by particular order, likewise examined by them. In the country, witnesses are examined by commissioners, (usually attorneys not concerned in the cause) on the parties joining in commission, &c.

EXAMINAL ROLL. In the old way of exhibiting sheriffs accounts, the illeivable fines and desperate debts were transcribed into a roll under this name; which was yearly read, to see what might be gotten. Hale's Sher. Acco. 67.

EXCAMBATORS, A word used anciently for exchangers of land: but Cowel supposes them to be such as we now call brokers, that deal upon the Exchange between merchants.

EXCEPTION, (exceptio) Is a stop or stay to an action; and divided into dilatory and peremptory. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 5. In law proceedings, it is a denial of a matter alleged in bar to the action: and in Chancery it is what is alleged against the sufficiency of an answer, &c. The counsel in a cause are to take all their exceptions to the record at one time; and before the court hath delivered any opinion thereon. 1 Lill. Abr. 559. And on an indictment for treason, &c. exception is to be taken for misnaming, false Latin, &c. before any evidence is given in court; or the indictment shall be good. Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. Where by a general pardon, any particular crime is excepted; if a person be attainted, &c. of that offence, he shall have no benefit of the pardon. 6 Rep. 13. 2 Nels. Abr. 765. And when a pardon is with an exception as to persons, the party who pleads it ought to shew, that he is not any of the parties excepted. 1 Lev. 26. A negative expression may be taken to enure to the same intent as an exception; for an exception in its nature is but a denial of what is taken to be good by the other party, either in point of law or pleading. And exceptio in non exceptis firmit regulam. 1 Lill. 559.

Exception to Evidence, &c. See Bill of Exceptions.

Exception in Deeds and Writings, Keeps the things from passing thereby, being a saving out of the deed, as if the same had not been granted: but it is to be a particular thing out of a general one, as a room out of an house, a ground out of a manor, timber out of land, &c. And it must not be of a thing expressly granted in a deed: it must be of what is severable from, and not inseparably incident to the grant. 1 Inst. 47. 1 Lev. 26. Cro. 244. Where an exception goeth to the whole thing granted or demised, the exception is void. Cro. El. 6. A man makes a lease of a manor, excepting all courts, &c. the exception is void as to the courts; for having leased the manor, it cannot be such without courts. Hob. 108. Moor 870. A lease was made of all a man's lands in L. excepting his manor of H. and he had no lands in L. but the said manor; it was adjudged that the manor passed, and that the exception was void. Hob. 170. 2 Nels. Abr. 764. A lease of an house and shops, except the shops; though this may extend to other shops, it is void as to the shops belonging to the house demised, because it is repugnant to the lease. Dyer 265.

If an exception crosses the grant, or is repugnant to it, the same is void: and if there be a saving or exception out of an exception, it may make a particular thing as if never excepted; as if a lease be made of a rectory, excepting the parsonage-house, saving to the lessee a chamber; this chamber not being excepted out of the lease, shall pass by the lease of the rectory. Hob. 72, 170. Cro. El. 372. Owen 20. By exception of trees, the soil is not excepted, but only sufficient nutriment for the trees: for the lessee shall have the pasture growing under them, though the lessor shall have all the benefit of the trees, masts, fruit, &c. and the trees are parcel of the inheritance. 11 Rep. 48, 50. 5 Rep. 11. But it has been adjudged, that by an exception of woods, underwood and coppices, that the soil of the coppices is excepted. Poph. 146. 2 Cro. 487. If a lessee for years assign over his term, excepting the trees, &c. the exception is not good; because no one can have such a special property in the trees, but the owner of the land. 2 Nels. 764. Tho' where lessee for life makes a lease for years excepting the wood, &c. this may be a good exception, although he hath not any interest in it but as lessee, in regard he is chargeable in waste, &c. and hath not granted his whole term. Cro. Jac. 296. 1 Lill. Abr. 560. These exceptions are commonly in leases for life and years; and must be always of a thing in esse. Co. Lit. 47.

Exchange, (excambium or cambium) Signifies generally as much as permutatio with the Civilians; as the King's exchange, which is the place appointed by the King for exchange of plate or bullion for the King's coin, &c. These places have been divers heretofore; but now there is only one, viz. the Mint in the Tower. Stat. H. 6. c. 4. See 9 Ed. 3. c. 7. 25 Ed. 3. c. 12. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 19.

There is a Royal Exchange of Merchants in London, and exchange among merchants is a commerce of money, or a bartering or exchanging of the money of one city or country for that of another; money in this sense, is either real or imaginary; real any real species current in any country at a certain price, at which it passes by the authority of the state, and of its own intrinsic value: and by imaginary money, is understood all the denominations made use of to express any sum of money, which is not the just value of any real species. Lex Mercatoria, or Merch. Comp. 98.

The methods of exchange for money used in England ought to be par pro pari, according to value for value; and our exchange is grounded on the weight and fineness of our own money, and the weight and fineness of that of other countries, according to their several standards, proportionable in their valuation; which being truly and justly made, reduces the price of the exchange of money of any nation or country to a certainty. But this course of exchange is of late abused, and money is become a merchandise, that rises and falls in its price in regard to the plenty and scarcity of it. Ibid. At London, all exchanges are made upon the pound sterling of 20 s. In the Low Countries, France and Germany, upon the French crown; Spain and Italy, &c. upon the ducat; and at Florence, Venice, and other places in the Straights, by the dollar and florin. See Bill of Exchange, and Cunningham's Law of Bills of Exchange, &c.

Exchanges of Goods and Merchandise, Were the natural and natural way of commerce, precedent to buying and selling; for there was no buying till money was invented; in exchanging, both parties are as buyers and sellers, and both equally warrant. 3 Salk. 157.

Exchange of Lands, Is a mutual grant of equal interest in lands or tenements, the one in exchange for the other: and is used peculiarly in our Common law for that compensation which the warrantor must make to the warrantee, value for value; if the land warranted be recovered from the warrantee. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 16. Accompl. Conv. 1 Vol. 170. Also there is a tacit condition of re-entry in this deed, on the lands given in exchange, in case of eviction; and on the warranty to vouch and recover over in value, &c. For if either of the parties is evicted, the exchange is defeated. 4 Rep. 121. If A. B. gives five acres of land in exchange to C. D. for five other acres, and afterwards C. D. is evicted of one acre, in this case all the exchange is defeated, and C. D. may enter on his own again. 4 Rep. 121. Cro. El. 903.

An exchange may be made of lands in fee-simple, fee-tail for life, &c. The estates granted are to be equal, as fee-simple for fee-simple, &c. tho' the lands need not be of equal value; or of the like nature: for a rent in fee issuing out of land, may be exchanged for land in fee; but annuities which charge the person only, are not to be exchanged for lands. Lit. 63, 64. 1 Inst. 50, 51. If an exchange be made between tenant for life, and tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, the exchange is good; because their estates are equal. 11 Rep. 80. Moor 665. An exchange made between tenant in tail; and another, of unequal interest, may be good during his life; but his issue, when of full age, shall avoid it. And exchanges made by infants; by persons non sane memoriae; a husband of the wife's lands, &c. are not void, but voidable only, by the infant at his full age, the heir of the person non sane memoriae; and the feme after the death of the husband, who may waive the possession and disagree to them. Perk. Sect. 277, 281.

Jointenants and tenants in common, after they have made partition, may exchange their lands; and by this deed, freeholds pass without livery and seisin; but the word exchange is to be used, and there must be execution of the exchange, by entry on the lands in the life of the parties, or the exchange will be void. 1 Inst. 50. 1 Mod. 91. Sometimes lands intended to pass by exchange, not having the qualities and incidents of exchanged lands, may pass by way of gift or grant: as if two persons are seised of two acres of land, and one of them by deed gives his acre to the other, and the other his acre to him, and each of them give livery of seisin upon his acre given in exchange; here the acres will pass from one to the other, but not in a way of exchange, because there was no word of exchange in the deed. Litt. Sect. 62. Perk. 253.

A man grants to another lands in fee-simple, for lands in tail by way of exchange; or land in tail, for lands for life, &c. these deeds will not take effect as exchanges. Fine. Exchange 15, 64. Co. Lit. 64. If tenant in tail give his land in exchange, for other land of the same estate-tail, the issue in tail may make it good if he will, or avoid the exchange. 1 Rep. 96. A scoffment is made to A. and B. and the heirs of A. and they exchange the land for other lands; this will be good, and they shall hold the lands in the same nature that the land given in exchange was held. Perk. Sect. 277.

If a lord release to the tenant his services in tail, in exchange of land given to the lord in exchange in tail also, it is ill: but if lessee for life of one acre, give another acre to his lessor in tail, in exchange for a release from him, of that acre, habendum in tail in like manner, it is a good exchange. Ibid. 219, 276, 283. In case two persons make an exchange of land, and limit no estate; each shall have an estate for life, by implication: but if an express estate be limited to one for life, and none to the other, it will be void. 19 H. 6. 27. And to make a good exchange, both the things must be in esse at the time of the exchange: therefore if I grant the manor of A. to another in exchange for the manor of B. which he is to have by descent after his father's death, this is void, because it is not in him. 1 Inst. 50. 3 Ed. 4. 10.

But an exchange may be made to take effect in futuro, as well as presently; for if it be, that after the feast of Easter

East A. B. shall have such lands in D. in exchange for his lands in S. this is good. Perk. Stat. 265. Exchange of lands in divers countries; and it is said of land in Ireland, for land in England, may be good. Latch 234. By a special kind of agreement, an exchange may be of unequal estates. Moor, c. 209. The condition and warranty in exchanges run to the parties in privity; not to an assignee, &c. And if after two have exchanged lands, one of them releases to the other the warranty in law; it will not destroy the exchange. 4 Rep. 122. 1 Rel. Abr. 815. The parties themselves, and all privies and strangers for the most part, may take advantage of exchanges void by any defect or accident: contra if they are voidable, &c. 1 Rep. 103. Dyer 285. See Exchanges of Lands, Accompl. Conveyancer, Vol. 1. p. 358.

Exchange of Church Livings. Exchanges are now seldom used, except that parsons sometimes exchange their churches, and resign them into the bishop's hands: and this is not a perfect exchange till the parties are inducted; for if either dies before they both are inducted, the exchange is void. Wood's Inst. 284.

By the 31 El. c. 6. s. 8. If any incumbent of any benefice with cure of souls, shall corruptly resign or exchange the same; or corruptly take for or in any respect of the resigning or exchanging the same, directly or indirectly, any pension, sum of money, or other benefit whatsoever; as well the giver as the taker, shall lose double the value of the sum; half to the Queen, and half to him that shall sue for the same.

If two parsons by one instrument agree to exchange their benefices, and in order thereto resign them into the hands of the ordinary, such exchange being executed on both parts, is good; and each may enjoy the other's living: but the patrons must present them again to each living; and if they refuse to do so, the ordinary will not admit them respectively, but the exchange is not executed; and in such case either of them may return to his former living, even though one of them should be admitted, instituted and inducted to the benefice of the other; which is expressed in the exchange itself, and the protestation usually added to it. Rights Clerg. 2 Co. Rep. 74. Rel. Abr. 814.

Exchanges. Are those that return money by bills of exchange. See Excambiators. 5 R. 2. c. 2.

Exchequer, (scaccarium, from the Fr. eschequier, i. e. abacus, tabula lusoria, or from the Germ. schatz, viz. the-treasure) is an antient court of record, wherein all causes touching the revenue and rights of the crown are heard and determined; and here the revenues of the crown are received. Camden in his Britan. p. 113. saith, This court took its name a tabula ad quam affidebant, the cloth which covered it being partly coloured, or chequered: we had it from the Normans, as appears by the Grand Customary, cap. 56. where it is described to be an assembly of high justiciars; to whom it appertained to amend that which the inferior justiciars had mis-done, and unadvisedly judged, and to do right to all as from the Prince's mouth.

Some persons think there was an Exchequer under the Anglo-Saxon Kings; but our best historians are of opinion, that it was erected by King William the First, called The Conqueror, its model being taken from the transmarine Exchequer, established in Normandy long before that time. Madox's Hist. Excheq.

In the reign of Henry the First, there was an Exchequer, which has continued ever since: and the judges of the court were at that time styled Barones Scaccarii, and administered justice to the subjects. In antient times the Barons of the Exchequer dealt in affairs relating to the state, or publick service of the crown and realm: and were greatly concerned in the preservation of the prerogative, as well as the revenue of the crown; for at the Exchequer it was the care of the Treasurer and Barons to see that the rights of the crown were no ways invaded. Lex Constitutionis 198.

For the authority and dignity of the court of Exchequer, antiently it was held in the King's palace; and the acts thereof were not to be examined or controlled in any other of the King's ordinary courts of justice: the Exchequer was the great repository of records, wherein the records of the other courts at Westminster, &c. were brought to be laid up in the Treasury there. And writs of the Chancery were sometimes made forth at the Exchequer; writs of summons to assemble parliaments, &c. Ibid.

The Exchequer has been commonly held at Westminster, the usual place of the King's residence; but it hath been sometimes holden at other places, as the King pleased; as at Winchester, &c. And in the Exchequer there are reckoned seven courts, viz. the court of Pleas; the court of Accounts; the court of Receipts; the court of the Exchequer Chamber (being the assembly of all the judges of England for difficult matters in law); the court of Exchequer Chamber for Errors in the court of Exchequer; for Errors in the King's Bench; and the court of Equity in the Exchequer chamber. 4 Inst. 119.

But according to the usual division for the dispatch of all common business, the Exchequer is divided into two parts; one whereof is conversant especially in the judicial hearing and deciding of causes pertaining to the Prince's coffers, anciently called Scaccarium Computorum; the other is the Receipt of the Exchequer, which is properly employed in the receiving and payment of money. And it has been observed, that about the time of the Conquest there was very little money in specie in the realm; for then the tenants or knights fees answered their lords by military services: and till the reign of King Hen. 1. the rents or farms due to the King were generally rendered in provisions and necessaries for his household; but in this reign the same were charged into money; and afterwards in succeeding times, the crown revenue was changed or paid into the Exchequer chiefly in gold and silver. Lex Constitutionis, p. 208.

By statute, all sheriffs, bailiffs, &c. are to account in the Exchequer before the Treasurer and Barons: and annual rolls are to be made of the profits of counties, &c. Also inquisitors shall be appointed in every county, of debts due to the King. 51 H. 3. Stat. 5. 10 Ed. 1. Stat. Rutl. And all fines of counties for the whole year are to be sent into the Exchequer. Stat. de Vicecom. 14. Ed. 2. Persons impeached in the Exchequer, may plead in their own discharge; and there shall be writs for discharging persons, &c. 5 R. 2. c. 9, 14. Any person to whom money is due from the Exchequer, having an order registred for payment, may assign the same by indorsement. 19 Car. 2. c. 12. And the officers of the Receipt may receive and take for their fees 1 d. in the pound for sums issued out, &c. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 20.

Officers of the Exchequer are without delay to receive money brought thither: and the money in the receipt is to be kept in chests under three different locks and keys; kept by three several officers, viz. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 28. The Tellers of the Exchequer were allowed 15, 144 l. to make good the deficiency in their offices by the reduction of guineas. Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 5. See 2 Geo. 2. c. 16.

In the lower part of the Exchequer, called the Receipt, the debtors of the King, and their debtors, the King's tenants, and the officers and ministers of the court, &c. are privileged to sue and implead one another, or any stranger, and to be sued in the like actions as are prosecuted in the King's Bench and Common Pleas. The judicial part of the Exchequer is a court both of law and equity; the court of common law is held in the office of Pleas, after the course of the Common law, coram Baronibus; and here the plaintiff ought to be a tenant or debtor to the King, or some way accountant to him; but this is now become a meer fiction, and the court is open to all. The leading process is either a writ of subpoena, or quo minus. The court of Equity is holden in the Exchequer chamber coram Thesaurario, Cancellario & Baronibus, but usually before the Barons only; the Lord Chief Baron being the chief Judge to hear and determine all causes in law or equity; the proceedings are by English bill and answer, agreeable to the practice of the High Court of Chancery; but the plaintiff must likewise set forth, and it he is debtor to the King, tho' it is not material, whether he be so or not, it being, as above observed, a matter of form.

In this court the clergy usually exhibit bills for redress of very of their tithes, &c. And here the Attorney General, 244.

brings bills for any matters concerning the King; and any person grieved in any cause prosecuted against him on behalf of the King, may bring his bill against the Attorney General to be relieved in equity, in which case the plaintiff must attend the King's Attorney with a copy of the bill, and procure him to answer the same; and Mr. Attorney may call any that are interested in the cause, or any officer or others, to instruct him in the making of his answer, so as the King be not prejudiced thereby, and his answer is to be put in without oath. 4 Inst. 109, 112, 118.

The practice and proceedings generally in use at the Exchequer Bar, where anciently there was very much business and very various, are chiefly relating to debtors, farmers, receivers, accountants, &c. for debts and duties due to the crown: and all penal punishments, intrusions, forfeitures, upon popular actions, &c. are matters cognisable by this court. Practif. Attorn. edit. 1. p. 292, 293.

The Exchequer is now said to be the last of the four courts at Westminster; governed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord Chief Baron, and three other Barons, who are the sovereign auditors of England, and the judges of the court. There also sits in this court a Puisne Baron, who administers the oath of all high-sheriffs, under-sheriffs, bailiffs, auditors, receivers, collectors, controllers, surveyors, and searchers of all the customs in England. The Chancellor or Under Treasurer hath the custody of the seal of this court. The King's Attorney General is made privy to all manner of pleas that are not ordinary and of course, which rise upon the process of the court; and he puts into court in his own name, informations of concealments of customs, seizures, &c. And also for intrusions, wastes and incroachments upon any of the King's lands; or upon penal statutes, forfeitures, &c.

The Remembrancers keep the records of the court betwixt the King and his subjects, and enter the rules and orders there made: one is called the King's Remembrancer, and the other the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer; the Remembrancer for the King hath all manner of informations upon penal statutes used in his office only; and he calls to account, in open court, all the great Accountants of the Crown, Collectors of Customs, &c. he makes out writs of privilege, enters judgments of pleas; and all matters upon English bill are remaining in his office.

The Remembrancer for the Lord Treasurer makes out all the eitrements; he sets down in his book the debts of all sheriffs, and takes their foreign accounts; and issues out writs and process in many cases, &c. And these Remembrancers have several attorneys to do business under them: who by statute are not to issue out of the Remembrancer's office, any writs upon supposition, but upon just grounds, &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 26.

There are two Chamberlains that keep the keys of the Treasury, where the records lie, with the book of Domestday, &c. They may sit in court if they please, but not intermeddle with any thing; unless it be relating to the Sheriffs, in the pricking whereof they have a vote. And besides the Chamberlains, there is a Clerk of the Pipe, in whose custody are conveyed out of the King's and Treasurer's, Remembrancer, &c. as water through a pipe, all accounts and debts due to the King. The Controller of the Pipe; which is said to be the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Clerk of the Eitrements, who receives the eitrements from the Remembrancer's office, and writeth them out to be served for the King, &c. The Foreign Opposer, who opposes or makes a charge on all sheriffs, &c. of their green wax, i. e. fines, issues, amerciaments, recognisances, &c. certified in eitrements annexed to the writ, under the seal in green wax, and delivereth the same to the Clerk of the Eitrements to be put in process. The Auditors, that take the accounts of the King's Receivers, Collectors, &c. and perfect them. The four Tellers, whose business is to receive and pay all money is well known. The Clerk of the Pells, from his parchment rolls, called Pellis Receptorum. The Clerk of the Nibils, who makes a roll of such sums as the sheriff upon process returns Nihil, &c. The Clerk of the Pleas, in whose office all officers and privileged persons are to sue and be sued; and here are divers Under Clerks employed in suits commenced or depending in this court. Then there is a Clerk of the Summons; Under Chamberlains of the Exchequer; Secondaries in the offices of the Remembrancers; Secondaries of the Pipe; the Usher of the Exchequer, Marshal, &c. For the statutes relating to the Exchequer, see the Table to the 4to edition of the Statutes at Large, title Exchequer.

Exchequer Bills. By Statute 5 Ann. c. 13. The Lord Treasurer may cause Exchequer Bills to be made of any sums not exceeding 1,500,000*l.* for the use of the war; and the duties upon houses were made chargeable with 4*l.* 10*s.* per centum per annum to the Bank for circulating them. The Bank not paying the bills, actions to be brought against the Company, and the money and damages recovered: and if any Exchequer bills be lost, upon affidavit of it before a Baron of the Exchequer, and certificate from such Baron, and security given to pay the same if found, duplicates are to be made out: also when bills are defaced, new ones shall be delivered. Ibid. The King, or his officers in the Exchequer, by former statutes, might borrow money upon the credit of bills, payable on demand, with interest after the rate of 3*d.* per diem for every 100*l.* bill. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 31. And by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20. An interest of 5*d.* a day was allowed for every 100*l.* But 12 W. 3. c. 1. lowered the interest on these bills to 4*d.* a day per cent. And by 12 Ann. cap. 11. it is sunk to 2*d.* a day. Forging Exchequer bills, or the indorsements thereon, is felony. See Felony.

Excise, (from the Belg. accise, tributum) Is a duty or imposition laid upon beer, ale, and other liquors which had its beginning in the reign of King Charles the Second. 12 Car. 2. c. 23. One principal office of excise to be erected in London, &c. and the commissioners and sub-commissioners appointed to levy this duty, may, under their hands and seals, appoint so many gaugers as shall be needful; who are to enter the houses of brewers, innkeepers, &c. to gauge all the coppers, fats, and vessels in the same, and make returns to the commissioners of excise, &c. under whose office and limits they live: and upon refusal, may forbid the parties to sell any beer, under 5*l.* forfeiture, &c. by this act. And by subsequent statutes, additional duties have been granted on low wines, spirits, or brandy drawn from corn: also a duty of excise is laid upon malt, and upon sweets, &c. which is annually continued. An officer of the excise in the day-time, or in the night with a constable, may enter into a house or brewhouse, and stay there during the time of brewing, &c. Brewers erecting or altering any back, cooler, copper, &c. or keeping any private store-house; and malsters keeping any private vessels for steeping of barley, without giving notice to the officers of the excise; in either case, forfeit 50*l.* and bribing a gauger incurs the penalty of 10*l.* 15 Car. 2. c. 11. 2 W. & M. 4 W. & M. 7 & 8 W. 3. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 19. See 1 Geo. 3. whereby the excise on beer and ale, &c. is granted to King George the Third for life. Officers of excise may go on board ships, and search for rum, arrack, and other exciseable liquors, as officers of the customs may do, and seize commodities forfeited, &c. Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 30. And three of the commissioners of excise have power to determine all complaints and informations concerning the excise duties; as well as justices of peace at their sessions, &c. Stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 21. Vide 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. See Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 17. 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. and 26 Geo. 2. c. 32. See farther Table to the 4to edition of the Statutes at Large: and also an account of the method of charging the duties of excise, &c. and of the names and business of some of the officers employed therein, at the end of Gillb. Exib. edit. 1758, p. 293.

Exclusa, Exclusagium. A sluice for the carrying off water; and the payment to the lord for the benefit of such a sluice. Et duo molendina in eodem manerio cum aquis exclusagiis, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 398. 537.

Excommunication. Is in Law French the same with excommunication in English. Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 3.

Excommunication. (excommunicatio) An ecclesiastical censure, by which a person is excluded from the communion of the church, and from the company of the faithful. It hath been thus defined: excommunicatio est nihil aliud quam censura a canonibus vel iudice ecclesiastico prolata et inflicta privans legitimam communionem sacramentorum et quoadq; hominum. And it is divided into majorem and minorem; minor est, per quam quis a sacramentorum participatione conscientia sententia arceatur: major est, quæ non solum in sacramentorum, verum etiam fidelium communione excludit, & ab omni actu legitimo separat & dividit. Venatorius de sent. Excom. The form of an excommunication was of old: Auctoritate Dei Patris omnipotentis & Filii & Spiritus Sancti, & Beatæ Dei Genetricis Mariæ, omniumque Sanctorum, excommunicamus, anathematizamus, & a limitibus Sanctæ Matris Ecclesiæ sequestramus, &c. Leg. Will. 1.

The sentence of excommunication was instituted originally for preserving the purity of the church; but ecclesiastics did not scruple to convert it into an engine for promoting their own power, and inflicted it on the most frivolous occasions. Robert. Hist. Emp. Charles V. 2 V. 109, &c.

Herein is to be considered,

- I. In what cases and by whom persons may be excommunicated.
- II. Of the disabilities the excommunicated are under.
- III. Of the proceedings in excommunications, and how the excommunicated are absolved.

- I. In what cases and by whom persons may be excommunicated.

This excommunication is generally for contempt in not appearing, or not obeying a decree, &c. And in other respects the causes of it are many; as for matters of heresy, refusing to receive the sacrament, or to come to church; incontinency, adultery, simony, &c. A man may not be excommunicated for matter of defamation, &c.

In some cases persons incur excommunication ipso facto by act of parliament; but they are to be first convicted of the offence by law, and the conviction is transmitted to the ordinary. Dyer 275. 1 Vent. 140.

By 6 Edw. 6. c. 4. "If any person shall smite, or lay violent hands upon any other, either in any church or churchyard, that then ipso facto every person so offending shall be deemed excommunicate, and be excluded from the fellowship and company of Christ's congregation."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, "That if any person shall maliciously strike any person with any weapon, in any church or churchyard, or shall draw any weapon in any church or churchyard, to the intent to strike another with the same weapon, that then every person so offending shall stand ipso facto excommunicated as aforesaid."

By the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 5. sect. 11 & 12. it is enacted, "That every popish recusant convict shall stand to all intents and purposes disabled, as a person lawfully excommunicated."

None but the bishop is to certify excommunication, unless the bishop be beyond sea, or in remotis; or except the certificate be by one that hath ordinary jurisdiction, &c. And if the ordinary excommunicates a person for any thing where he hath not cognisance of the cause; the party may bring an action against him, or the ordinary it is said may be indicted. 1 Inst. 134. 2 Inst. 527. Wood's Inst. 508.

Anno 38 H. 3. Boniface archbishop of Canterbury, and the other bishops, with burning tapers in their hands, in Westminster-Hall before the King, and the other estates of the realm, denounced a curse and excommunication against the breakers of the liberty of the church: and by Stat. 9 E. 3. Bishops may excommunicate not only all perturbors of the peace of the church, but also felons, and other offenders, &c. And by the ecclesiastical laws, excommunicated persons are not permitted to have Christian burial.

- II. Of the disabilities the excommunicated are under.

An offender excommunicated is disabled to do any judicial act, as to sue any action at law, be a witness, &c. though he may be sued: but every excommunication doth not disable one; for if a mayor and commonalty bring an action, an excommunication of the mayor shall not disable them, because they sue and answer by attorney: and if a bishop is defendant, an excommunication by that bishop shall not disable the plaintiff: and an excommunication against an appellant, while the appeal is depending, is void. 1 Inst. 134. 4 Inst. 340. Wood 508. Popish recusants convict are disabled as persons excommunicated, &c. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5.

Excommunication is a good plea to an executor or administrator, though they sue in auter droit, for an excommunicated person is excluded from the body of the church, and incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses: also it is one of the effects of excommunication, that he cannot be a procurator or attorney for any other person, and therefore cannot represent the deceased. 43 E. 3. 13. Co. Lit. 134.

Excommunication is no plea on a qui tam, because it is for example; and the statute having given the informer an ability to sue, and not excepted excommunicated persons from the liberty of informing, he is enabled to sue by the statute, notwithstanding the censures of the church. 12 Co. 61.

When excommunication is pleaded in the plaintiff, he shall not reply, that he has appealed from the sentence, for the sentence is in force until it is repealed; and whilst it is in force, he cannot appear in any of the courts of justice, but he may reply, he is absolved; for then his disability is taken away. Bro. Excommunication 3. 3 Bulst. 72. 20 H. 6. 25. Placita. Gen. 10, 72.

- III. Of the proceedings in excommunications, and how the excommunicated are absolved.

Excommunication is published in the church, and if the offender do not submit in forty days, then the bishop is to certify the excommunication into the temporal court, setting forth specially the cause of excommunication, that the judges may see whether the ecclesiastical court hath cognisance of the matter; and thereupon the party may be taken and imprisoned by virtue of the writ significavit or capias excommunicatum, and is to remain in prison till he submits and is absolved; when the bishop likewise certifying the same, another writ issues to the sheriff to discharge him. 2 Inst. 139. 8 Rep. 68. 2 Nelj. Abr. 768.

The bishop's certificate, if he die before the return of the writ, shall not be received, for his successor shall certify; the significavit must mention that the party lived within the diocese where he was excommunicated, and by what bishop; if it be pleaded, the time when is to be shewed; and excommunication must be declared in the ecclesiastical court before they proceed, &c. 8 Rep. 68. 2 Cro. 84. Moor, ca. 667. Latch 174. Heiley 86.

It hath been adjudged, that the spiritual court hath not power to meddle with the body of any persons whatsoever, or to send process to take them; for if a person is excommunicated for contempt, &c. they ought to certify it into the Chancery, whence it is sent into B. R. and thence issues process. Cro. Eliz. 741. See the next article, Excommunicato Capiendo.

- As to the method by which persons excommunicated may be absolved.

If a person be unjustly excommunicated for a matter of which the spiritual court hath not cognizance, and he is taken on a writ of excommunicato capiendo, the party grieved shall have a writ out of Chancery to the sheriff, to deliver him out of prison. 2 Inst. 623. 12 Co. 76. F. N. B. 141.

So if the spiritual court proceeds inverso ordine, as if they refuse a copy of the libel, &c. a prohibition shall go, with a clause to absolve and deliver the party injured. 1 Sid. 232.

Also if a man be excommunicated, and offers to obey and perform the sentence, and the bishop refuse to accept it, and to absolve him, he shall have a writ to the bishop, requiring him, upon performance of the sentence, to absolve him; and the reason thereof is, for that by the excommunication the party is disabled to sue any action, or to have any remedy for any wrong done unto him, so long as he shall remain excommunicated; and also the party grieved may have his action upon his case against the bishop, in like manner as he may when the bishop doth excommunicate him for a matter which belongeth not to the ecclesiastical cognizance; also the bishop, in those those cases, may be indicted at the suit of the King: z Inst. 623.

But if the excommunication be for a just cause, the party must make present satisfaction before he can be absolved, or he must put in caution, that he will hereafter perform that which the bishop shall reasonably and according to law enjoin him; which caution, in the Civil law, is of three sorts. 1. Fidejussoria, as when a man bindeth himself with sureties to perform somewhat. 2. Pignoratia, or realis cautio, as when a man engageth goods or mortgageth lands for the performance. 3. Juratoria, when the party who is to perform any thing, taketh a corporal oath to do it; which last is now the most frequent method.

This method of taking caution was held to be against law. 1 Bull. 122. — But was afterwards on great debate held to be good; and that the bishop having a discretionary power herein, it was much in his option to take caution by obligation as by either of the two other methods. 2 Lev. 36. Raym. 225.

If after a person is excommunicated, there comes a general act of pardon, which pardons all contempts, &c. it seems that this offence is taken away without any formal absolution. See Cro. Car. 199. Cro. Jac. 212. 8 Co. 68. 1 Jon. 227. 2 Lev. 36. Gibb. Cod. 1110.

Excommunicato Capiendo, Is a writ directed to the sheriff for apprehending him who stands obstinately excommunicated forty days; for the contempt of such a person not seeking absolution, being certified or signified into the Chancery; this writ issues for the imprisoning him without bail or mainprize until he conforms. F. N. B. 62. By the Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 23. Writs de excommunicato capiendo shall issue out of the court of Chancery in term-time, and be returnable in B. R. &c. They shall be brought sealed into the King's Bench, and there opened and delivered of record to the sheriff, and there must be twenty days between the teste and the return: and if the sheriff return a non est inventus on the writ, a capias with proclamation is to be granted for the party to yield his body to gaol under the penalty of 10*l.* And if he do not appear on the first capias and proclamation, a second is to go forth, and he is to forfeit 20*l.* &c. But by this statute, if in the excommunicato capiendo, the party excommunicated hath not a sufficient addition, as to his place of dwelling, &c. according to 1 H. 5. c. 6. Or if in the significavit it is contained, that the excommunication proceeds upon a cause of contempt or some original matter of heresy; for refusing to have a child baptized, to receive the sacrament, to come to divine service, or for error in matters of religion and doctrine, for incontinency, usury, simony, perjury in the ecclesiastical courts, or idolatry; he shall not incur the penalties in this act, for his contempt in not rendering himself prisoner upon the capias, &c. So that the statute doth not require the capias with proclamations, and the penalties in other cases, besides the ten cases mentioned. 2 Inst. 664. And it has been adjudged where a person has been excommunicated, and none of those causes were contained in the significavit, that the person excommunicated should be discharged of the penalties; but not of the excommunication. 3 Mod. 89. It has also been held, that for any of the causes expressed in the statute, there ought to go a capias with a penalty, and be an addition to the writ: in other cases it is not necessary; and if then the capias be with a penalty, the court will not discharge the party, but the penalty only: but for want of addition, in cases where that is required, the party shall be discharged upon motion. 1 Bull. 294, 295. See a very full Comment on the Stat. 25 Eliz. c. 23, for the due execution of this writ, and the mode of proceeding, which the party who is taken ought to pursue, in British Liberties, fr. 224. &c.

Excommunicato Deliberando, Is a writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicate person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. F. N. B. 63. Reg. Orig. 67. And where a man is unduly excommunicated, he may be delivered in some cases by an habeas corpus; and sometimes by pleading, as well as by an excommunicato deliberando; also sometimes by prohibition, &c. And on a general pardon, the party may have a writ to the bishop to absolve him. 12 Rep. 76. Latch 205. God. 272.

If a plaintiff in an action be excommunicate, and after he gets letters of absolution; on shewing them in court, he may have a re-summons, &c. upon his original. 1 Inst. 133.

Excommunicato Recipiendo, Is a writ whereby persons excommunicated being for their obstinacy committed to prison, and unlawfully delivered, before they have given caution to obey the authority of the church, are commanded to be sought after and imprisoned again. Reg. Orig. 67.

Executio, (executio) Signifies the last performance of an act, as of a judgment, &c. And is the obtaining of possession of any thing recovered by judgment of law. 1 Inst. 389. Sir Edw. Coke, in his Reports, makes two sorts of executions; one final, another with a quousque, tending to an end: an execution final is that which makes money of the defendant's goods, or extends his lands, and delivers them to the plaintiff, which he accepts in satisfaction, and is the end of the suit, and all that the King's writ requires to be done: the other writ with a quousque, though it tendeth to an end, is not final: as in case of a capias ad satisfaciendum, which is not a final execution, but the body of the party is to be taken, to the intent the plaintiff be satisfied his debt, &c. and the imprisonment of the defendant not being absolute, but until he do satisfy the same. 6 Rep. 87.

Under this head it is material to consider,

- I. Of the nature and several kinds of executions, and what things were liable thereto at Common law, &c.
- II. Of the judgments on which the several executions may be taken out, and where the party shall be concluded by the election of one of them, &c.
- III. By whom, against whom, and at what time execution may be sued, and by whom they shall be executed, and how they are to be released and discharged.
- IV. To what time executions shall relate, so as to avoid alienation, and of the King's prerogative in respect of executions.
- V. Of the party's remedy against irregular executions, and of the offence of obstructing execution.

- I. Of the nature and several kinds of executions, and what things were liable thereto at Common law, &c.

The writs of execution at Common law were only a fi. fa. on the goods and chattels; and a levari factas to levy the debt or damages upon the land and chattels: afterwards a ca. ad satisfac. was given by Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17. And an elegit by Stat. Westm. 2. c. 18. which makes the body liable, and the future profits of lands, &c. 1 Inst. 154. 2 Inst. 394.

The reason why by the Common law, where a subject had execution for debt or damages, he could not have the body of the defendant, or his lands in execution, (unless it were in special cases) was, that the defendant's body might be at liberty, not only to follow his own affairs and business, but also to serve his King and country; and taking away the possession of his lands would hinder the following of his husbandry and tillage. 2 Inst. 394.

Though neither the body, nor lands of the debtor on a judgment could be taken in execution at Common law, but only his goods; yet in action of debt against an heir, upon the bond of his ancestor, his land which he had by descent was subject to be taken in execution. 3 Rep. 11. In action of debt against the heir upon his ancestor's bond, there was judgment by nil dicit: and it was held that the plaintiff should have execution against the heir, of any of his own lands or goods. Dyer 89, 149. Judgment was had against the heir by nil dicit, and a fi. fa. being brought against him to have execution, he pleaded riens per dicit; it was adjudged that this plea was too late after the judgment by nil dicit, and the execution shall be on his own lands. Dyer 344.

But there is a difference between a fi. facias and an action of debt brought against an heir upon a bond of his ancestor, in which the heir is named. Poph. 193. On a judgment for the debt of an ancestor, where the heir hath made over lands descended to him, execution may be taken against such heir to the value of the land, &c. for the debt of his ancestor, as if his own debt. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14.

If a person have judgment given against him for debt or damages, or be bound in a recognizance and ditch, and his heir be within age, no execution shall be sued of the lands during the minority; and against an heir within age, no execution shall be sued upon a statute merchant or staple, &c. 1 Inst. 290. There is an execution on body, lands and goods, upon a statute merchant, staple and recognizances. 1 Inst. 289. 2 Inst. 678.

In personal actions, execution is either by capias ad satisfaciendum, or fiat facias against the body or goods; or elegit against the lands, &c. In real and mixed actions the writs of execution are habere facias seisinam, to put the party in possession of his freehold recovered by judgment of law; and habere facias possessionem, to put him in possession of his term, &c. And after judgment, issues process of execution; for it begins where the action ends. No execution for damages recovered in a real action, shall be had by capias ad satisfaciendum: but where a man hath judgment to recover lands and damages, he may have execution of both together. 8 Rep. 141.

Whatever may be assigned or granted may be taken on an execution. Francis and Nash's Rep. temp. Hardw. per Annaly 53. Nothing can be taken in execution that cannot be sold, as deeds, writings, &c. Id. Banknotes, &c. cannot be taken in execution, as they remain, in some measure, choses in action. Ib.

II. Of the judgments on which the several executions may be taken out, and where the party shall be concluded by the election of one of them, &c.

When a judgment is signed, execution may be taken out immediately upon it, and need not be delayed till it is entered, it being a perfect judgment of the court before entered. Co. Litt. 505. And if the judges of the court of B. R. see one against whom there is a judgment of that court walk in Westminster hall, they may send an officer to take him up, if the plaintiff desire it, without a writ of execution. Farrell's Rep. 52. If execution be not sued within a year and a day after judgment, where there is no fault in the defendant, as if writ of error be not brought, &c. there must be a fiat facias to revive the judgment, which in that time may be had without moving the court; but if it be of longer standing, the court is to be moved for it. 1 Inst. 290. 2 Inst. 771. But if the defendant be outlawed after judgment, (as he may where he cannot be taken in execution, or hath no lands or goods to pay the debt, &c. when the suit is commenced by original) the plaintiff need not renew the judgment by fiat facias to obtain execution after a year. 1 Inst. 290.

It hath been adjudged, that by the Common law, if a man was outlawed after judgment in debt, the plaintiff was at the end of his suit, and he could have no other process after that personally; but was put to his new original, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 772. If the plaintiff does not proceed upon the fiat facias, he may bring an action upon the judgment: and after judgment against the defendant, an action where special bail hath been given, the plaintiff may have execution against the defendant, or prosecute his bail. Common Law Com. placed 206. If one be arrested upon process in B. R. and puts in bail; and afterwards the plaintiff recovers, and the defendant renders not himself according to law, in safe-guard of his bail, the plaintiff may at his election take execution against the principal, or his bail; but if he takes the bail, he shall never afterwards meddle with the principal. Cro. Jac. 320.

Execution may not be sued forth against the bail, till a default returned against the principal. Goldsb. 175. That is, by getting the sheriff to return a non est inventus, on a ca. sa. sued out against the principal. If one recovers jointly against two in debt, the execution must be joint against them: the court cannot divide an execution, which is intire, and grounded on the judgment. Mich. 24 Car. B. R. A man and his wife recovered in an action of debt against the defendant 100*l.* and damages; then the wife died, and the husband prayed to have execution upon this judgment: the court at first inclined, that it should not survive to the husband, but that administration ought to be committed of it, as a thing in action; but at last, they agreed that the husband might take out execution, for that by the judgment it became his debt due to him in his own right. Cro. Car. 608. 1 Mod. Rep. 179, 180.

If judgment be against two, on the death of one, the plaintiff shall have execution by fiat facias against the survivor; and though he pleads, that the other defendant has an heir alive, &c. it will not prevent it. Raym. 26. And where two persons recover in debt, and before execution one of them dies; it has been held, that execution may be sued in both their names by the survivor, and it will be no error; which may be done without a fiat facias. Noy 150. An execution may be executed after the death of the defendant; for his executor being privy, is bound as well as the testator: and where execution is once begun, it cannot be delayed, unless there appears irregularity; an audita querela is no superfedeas to it, nor shall any thing stop the sheriff from selling, &c. Cro. 73. Comberb. 33, 389.

A man can have but one execution; but it must be intended an execution with satisfaction; and the body of the defendant is no satisfaction, only a pledge for the debt. 5 Rep. 86. When a person dies in execution, it is without satisfaction; so that the plaintiff may have a fiat facias against the goods, or elegit against the lands. It was not so at Common law. Hob. 57. But 'tis given by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. *Where a person was taken on a capias utlagatum, and died in prison, the plaintiff having chosen this execution, which is the highest in law; it has been held that the defendant dying, the law will adjudge it a satisfaction. Cro. Eliz. 850. By statute, if a person in execution dies, a new execution shall issue against the lands, &c. as if he had never been taken in execution. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. If an execution be executed and filed, the party can have no other execution upon that judgment; because there can be but one execution with satisfaction upon one judgment. 1 Lill. Abr. 565. If the execution be not returned and filed, another execution may be had: and if only part of the debt be levied on a fiat facias, another writ of execution may be sued out for the residue thereof. Ibid.

But if you once charge the body of the defendant in execution on a capias satisfaciendum, you may not have any other execution against his goods, &c. except the defendant make an escape, or is privileged, or die in execution. Practis. Solec. 248. Though if one take out any writs of execution, and they have no effect, he may have other writs on their failure. Hob. 57. If a person taken by ca. sa. escapes, the plaintiff may have a new execution. Cro. Car. 174. In case any prisoner committed in execution shall escape, any creditor, at whose suit he stands charged, may retake him by a new capias ad satisfaciendum, or sue forth any other kind of execution, as if the body of such prisoner had never been taken in execution. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. Where two are bound jointly and severally, and judgment is had against both of them; if one in execution escapes, the creditor may take out execution against the other: but if he go by licence of the creditor, then the other will be discharged. Cro. Car. 53. If one in execution be delivered by privilege of parliament, when the privilege ceases, the plaintiff may sue out a new execution against him. 1 Jac. 1. c. 13.

III. By whom, against whom, and at what time execution may be sued, and by whom they shall be executed, and how they are to be released and discharged.

See ante Division II.

No person is intitled to, or can sue out execution, who is not privy to the judgment, or intitled to the thing recovered, as heir, executor, or administrator to him who has judgment. 1 Rol. Abr. 889.

If one have judgment to recover lands, and die before execution, his heir shall have it; and where tenant in tail recovers and dies before the execution without issue, he in remainder may sue out execution: an heir is to have execution for lands, and the executor or administrator for damages. Co. Litt. 251. Dyer 26. The executors of executors may sue out execution of a judgment; but but an administrator getting judgment in behalf of the intestate, and then dying, neither his executor, or administrator shall take out the execution, but the administrator de bonis non administratis of the first intestate. 5 Rep. 9. And see 17 Car. 2. c. 18.

But if an administrator, durante minori etate of an executor, recovers in debt, and before execution the executor comes of age, he shall have a scire facias on this judgment; for carrying on the suit in right of the executor, made the executor privy thereto. 1 Rol. Abr. 888-9.

If a man has judgment for the arrears of rent, and dies, his executor shall sue out execution, and not the heir; for by the recovery it becomes a chattel vested, to which the executor is intitled. 1 Rol. Abr. 880.

If a statute be entred into to husband and wife, and the husband dies, the wife shall take out execution. 1 Rol. Abr. 889.

So if husband and wife recover lands and damages, and the husband dies, the wife shall have execution of the damages, and not the executors of the husband. 1 Rol. Abr. 342, 889, 890.

If there be judgment in debt against two, and one dies, a scire facias lies against the other alone, reciting the death; and he cannot plead, that the heir of him that is dead has assets by descent, and demand judgment, if he ought to be charged alone; for at Common law, the charge upon a judgment being personal survived, and the statute of Westm. 2. that gives the elegit, does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at Common law; and therefore the party may take out his execution which way he pleases, for the words of the statute are, fit in electione; but if he should, after the allowance of this writ and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by suggestion, or else by audita querela. Raym. 26. 1 Lev. 30. S. C. 1 Keb. 92, 123. S. C.

By the Common law, if judgment be given against a man for debt, or damages, and the defendant dies before execution sued, his heir within age is not liable to execution during his minority; but the parol must demur in such case till he comes of age. Co. Litt. 290. a. 1 Rol. Abr. 140.

And this privilege of infancy does not only protect the infant, but all others who are affected by the judgment; as if there be father and two daughters, and judgment be given for debt against the father, who dies, one of the daughters being within age, partition being made, the eldest shall not be charged alone, but shall have the benefit of her sister's minority, which puts a stop to the execution. Co. Litt. 290. a.

There can be no execution taken out against a member of parliament during privilege of parliament: also no capias can issue against a peer; for even in the case of a private person at Common law, the body was not liable to creditors; and the statute of Ed. 3. which subjects the body, does not extend to peers, because their persons are sacred; as also the law supposes, that persons thus distinguished by the King, have wherewithal otherwise to satisfy their creditors. 6 Co. 52. Hob. 61. Cro. Car. 205.

If a writ of execution be taken out against a clerk in holy orders, on a judgment obtained against him; or upon a statute staple, or recognizance in nature of it, which he has entred into; and the sheriff returns, that he is a clerk, he ought to extend his lay fee and chattels, or return that he hath neither; but if he returns, quod clericus sit beneficiatus nullum habens laicum seculum, sed quod beneficiatus est in such a diocese, then a writ of requestration shall issue to the bishop to sequester the living. 2 Rol. Abr. 474. 1 Rol. Abr. 891. 2 Inst. 472. Jenk. 207.

A capias ad satisfaciendum may be executed upon a prisoner in prison for felony; and if he be acquitted of the felony, the sheriff is to keep him. 1 Lill. Abr. 567. But where a person is in prison for criminal matters, he ought not to be charged with a civil action without leave of the court; yet if he be charged, he shall not be discharged. Raym. 58. Where not allowed, on a pardon, see Farest. 153. A ca. sa. will lie against a man who is outlawed for felony, and he may be taken in execution at the suit of a common person. Owen 69. And if he was taken upon a capias utlagat, which was at the King's suit, he shall be in execution at the suit of the party, if he will. Moor 566. But this is not without prayer of the party: and if after a judgment given, the judges of their own heads, or at the request of any person, without prayer of the plaintiff, commit the defendant to prison; by this he shall not be said to be in execution for the plaintiff. Dyer 297. If one arrested be in prison for debt, and judgment is had against him; though it be in arrest on a latitat, or capias, he shall not be in execution upon the judgment, unless the plaintiff prays it of record; or sues a capias ad satisfaciendum, and delivers it to the sheriff. Dyer 197, 306. Jenk. Cent. 165.

With respect to the time of suing execution.

At Common law, in real actions, where land was recovered, the demandant, after the year, might take out a scire facias to revive his judgment, because the judgment being particular in the real action, quoad the lands with a certain description, the law required, that the execution of that judgment should be entred upon the execution of that judgment should be entred upon the roll, that it might be seen, whether execution was delivered of the same thing of which judgment was given; roll, a scire facias issued to shew cause, why execution should not be. 2 Inst. 471. 5 Co. 88. Cro. Eliz. 416. 6 Mod. 288.

But if the plaintiff, after he had obtained judgment in any personal action, had lain quiet, and had taken no process of execution within the year, he was put to a new original upon his judgment, and no scire facias was issuable at law on the judgment, because there was not a judgment for any particular thing in the personal action, with which the execution could be compared; therefore after a reasonable time, which was a year and a day, it was presumed to be executed, and therefore the law allowed him no scire facias to shew cause why there should not be execution; but if the party had slipped his time, he was put to his action on the judgment, and the defendant was obliged to shew how that debt, of which the judgment was an evidence, was discharged. 2 Inst. 469. Carth. 30, 31. 1 Sid. 351.

To remedy this, and to make the forms of proceeding more uniform in both actions, the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 45. gave the scire facias to the plaintiff to revive the judgment, where he had omitted to sue execution within the year after judgment obtained.

A scire facias lies on a judgment in ejectment, for the words of the act are, Sive servitia sive consuetudines sive alia quaecunque irrotulata, which comprehend all judgments, and give the like remedy on them by scire facias, as the demandant had on a judgment in a real action at Common law. 1 Sid. 351. 2 Salk. 600.

But tho' the general rule be, that the plaintiff cannot take out execution after the year and day without a scire facias, yet the rule must be understood with these restrictions.

That if the defendant brings a writ of error, and thereby hinders the plaintiff from taking his execution within the year, and the plaintiff in error is not suit, or the judgment affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed to execution after the year without a scire facias, because the writ of error was a superseades to the execution, and the plaintiff must acquiesce till he hears the judgment above; besides, while the cause is still sub judice, whether the plaintiff shall recover, or not, and the year for the execution ought to be accounted from the final judgment given. Cro. Jac. 364. Yelv. 7. 1 Rol. Abr. 899. 4 Leon. 197. 5 Co. 88. Carth. 236-7. 6 Mod. 288.

So if the plaintiff hath a judgment, with stay of execution for a year, he may, after the year, take out his execution without the scire facias, because the delay is by consent of parties, and in favour of the defendant; and the indulgence of the plaintiff shall not turn to his prejudice, nor ought the defendant to be allowed any advantage of it, when it appears to be done for his advantage, and at his instance. 6 Mod. 288. 1 R. 1. 104.

But if the defendant had been tied up by an injunction out of Chancery for a year, yet he cannot take out execution without a scire facias, because the courts of law do not take notice of Chancery injunctions, as they do of writs of error; besides, in that case it had been no breach of the injunction to have taken out the execution within the year, and continued it down by vis non misit brevis, which cannot be done in the case of a writ of error, because that removes the record out of the court where the judgment was; and therefore there can be no proceedings below till it be affirmed, and returned to the inferior courts. 1 Salk. 322. 6 Mod. 288. S. C.

In debt, if defendant acknowledge the action for part, and as to the remainder pleads to issue, and the plaintiff hath judgment for that he confesseth; here he may not have execution till the issue is tried for that which he is to recover damages: though if he releases the damages, he may have execution presently for the rest. Roll. 897.

All judgments of courts in debt are to be executed in the peculiar jurisdictions where given, and cannot be removed to be executed by the superior courts. Cro. Car. 34. But if a judgment given in another court be affirmed, or reversed for error in B. R. because the proceedings in the court below are entered upon record in the King's Bench, the party shall have execution in that court: And so if a judgment of debt, &c. in the Common Pleas be affirmed in B. R. on a writ of error. 5 Rep. 88. Though where the record of a judgment given in C. B. is removed into B. R. the party cannot take out execution upon it, without a scire facias quare executionem habere non debeat. 1 Lill. Abr. 562. And where a writ of error is brought in the Exchequer Chamber, to reverse a judgment in B. R. if the judgment is affirmed there, yet that court cannot make out execution upon the judgment affirmed; but the record must be transmitted back to the court of King's Bench, where execution must be done. 1 Lill. 565.

As an execution is an entire thing, he who begins must end it; a new sheriff may distrain an old one to sell the goods on a distringas nuper vicecom, and to bring the money into court, or sell and deliver the money to the new sheriff; and the authority of the old sheriff continues by virtue of the first writ, so that when he hath seized, he is compellable to return the writ, and liable to answer the value according to the return; likewise by the seizure the property of the goods, &c. is divested out of the defendant, and he is discharged, whereby no further remedy can be had against him. 1 Salk. 322. 3 Salk. 159.

A sheriff shall have his fees for executions, upon a writ of capias satisfaciendum for the whole debt; upon a feri fac, according to the sum levied; and on an elegit it is held by some, that he shall have fees according to what is levied, and by others for the whole debt recovered, because the plaintiff may keep the land till he is satisfied the entire debt. 1 Salk. 333. If a sheriff in doing of execution at the suit of a common person, break open any man's house, the execution may be good; but the party shall have his action of trespass against him for it: And where the sheriff hath a feri facias or ca. sa. against a man, and before execution, he pays him the money, execution may not be done afterwards; if it be, trespass or false imprisonment lies. 5 Rep. 93. 12 Car. B. R.

It is laid down as a general rule in our books, that the sheriff in executing any judicial writ, cannot break open the door of a dwelling-house; this privilege which the law allows to a man's habitation, arises from the great regard the law has to every man's safety and quiet, and therefore protects them from the inconveniences which must necessarily attend an unlimited power in the sheriff and his officers in this respect: hence, every man's house is called his castle. 5 Co. 91, &c. 3 Inst. 162. Moor 668. Yelv. 28. Cro. Eliz. 908. Dall. Sherr. 350.

Yet in favour of executions, which are the life of the law, and especially in cases of great necessity, or where the safety of the King and commonwealth are concerned, this general case hath the following exceptions:

1. That whenever the process is at the suit of the King, the sheriff or his officer may, after request to have the door opened, and refusal, break and enter the house to do execution, either on the party's goods, or take his body, as the case shall be. 5 Co. 91. b.

2. So in a writ of seisin or habere facias possessionem in ejectment, the sheriff may justify breaking open the door, if denied entrance by the tenant; for the end of the writ being to give the party full and actual possession, consequently the sheriff must have all power necessary for this end; besides, in this case the law does not, after the judgment, look upon the house as belonging to the tenant, but to him who has recovered. 5 Co. 91.

3. Also this privilege of a man's house relates only to such execution as affects himself; and therefore if a feri facias be directed to the sheriff to levy the goods of A. and it happens that A.'s goods are in the house of B. if after request made by the sheriff to B. to deliver these goods, he refuses, the sheriff may well justify the breaking and entering his house. 5 Co. 93. a. 1 Sid. 186.

4. Also this privilege extends to a man's dwelling-house, or out-house adjoining thereto, and therefore it hath been adjudged, that the sheriff, on a feri facias, may break open the door of a barn, standing at a distance from the dwelling-house, without requesting the owner to open the door, in the same manner as he may enter a close, &c. 1 Sid. 186. 1 Keb. 698. S. C.

5. So on a feri facias, when the sheriff or his officers are once in the house, they may break open any chamber-door or trunks for the completing execution. 2 Sherr. 87.

6. So if the sheriff's bailiffs enter the house, the door being open, and the owner locks them in, the sheriff may justify breaking open the door, for the setting at liberty the bailiffs; for if in this case he were obliged to stay till he could procure a homine replegiando, it might be highly inconvenient; also it seems, that in this case, the locking in the bailiffs is such a disturbance to the execution, that the court will grant an attachment for it. Palm. 52. Cro. Jac. p. 555. S. C. 2 Rol. Rep. 132. S. C.

7. That if the sheriff in executing a writ, breaks open a door, where he has no authority for so doing by law, yet the execution is good, and the party has no other remedy but an action of trespass against the sheriff. 5 Co. 93. a.

If the sheriff refuses to execute any judicial writ; this is a contempt to the court, for which an attachment will be granted. 1 Salk. 323.

So if he executes the writ, and makes a false return, the party injured may have an action on the case against him. 1 Salk. 323.

As to the manner of releasing and discharging executions.

By a release of all suits, execution is gone; for no one can have execution without prayer and suit, but the King only, in whose case the judges ought to award execution ex officio, without any suit: And a release of all executions, bars the King. By release of all debts or duties, the defendant is discharged of the execution, because the debt or duty on which it is founded is discharged: But if the body of a man be taken in execution, and the plaintiff release all actions, yet he shall remain in execution. 1 Inst. 291. If a judgment is given in action of debt, and the defendant taken in execution, the plaintiff releaseth the judgment, the body shall be discharged of the execution: And if the plaintiff after judgment releaseth all demands, the execution is discharged. Ibid. Where one is in execution at my suit, and I bid the sheriff let him go; this is a good discharge and release both to the party and sheriff. Poph. 207. But if the plaintiff make a release to the defendant being in execution, or other act amounting to a discharge; it will not be a discharge ipso facto, but by this means he may have the same. 5 Rep. 86. Dyer 152. A person in execution shall not be delivered out of prison, but by by writ of superfedeas. 1 Lill. Abr. 565. And if a sheriff proceeds after a superfedeas to stay execution on goods, &c. it is a great contempt; and a writ of restitution may be awarded. 2 Bullf. 194.

Persons charged in execution for any sum not exceeding 100*l.* in any gaol, who are willing to satisfy their creditors as far as they are able, may exhibit a petition to the court whence the process issued, with an account of their whole estate upon oath, praying to be discharged, &c. And thereupon the court shall order the prisoner to be brought up, and his creditors summoned at a certain day, when the court in a summary way is to examine into the same, &c. and order the estate and effects of the prisoner to be assigned to the creditors by indorsement on the back of the petition; whereupon the prisoner shall be discharged out of prison; but if creditors are dissatisfied with the truth of the prisoner's oath, he is to be remanded till another day, and then if his creditors cannot discover any effects omitted, he shall be released; unless the creditors insist on the prisoner's being detained in prison, and agree by writing to pay him 2*s.* 4*d.* a week, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 22.

Prisoners in execution ut supra in any prison (except in London and Westminster) before they petition any of the courts from whence the process issued for a rule to be brought up, are to give notice to their creditors in writing, that they design to petition, and also a true copy of the account or schedule of their whole estates which they intend to deliver into the court, &c. And then upon such petition, the prisoners shall have a rule of court to be brought to the next assizes for the county, at an expence not exceeding 12*d.* a mile, to be paid to the officer out of the effects of the prisoners, &c. And the creditors must be summoned to appear at the said assizes by order served on them, or left at their houses thirty days before; and at the assizes, the judges on examination shall determine the matter, and give judgment and relief; a record of which judgment is to be returned and certified to the court whence the process issued, on which the prisoners were taken in execution. 3 Geo. 2. c. 27. No person charged in execution, shall be allowed to exhibit a petition to any court at law to be discharged, pursuant to the above acts, unless it be done before the end of the next term after he is charged; and those statutes shall not relate to any one taken on a ca-pias for running customable goods, &c.

IV. To what time executions shall relate, so as to avoid alienation, and of the King's prerogative in respect of executions.

Writs of execution bind the property of goods only from the time of the delivery of the writs to the sheriff; who upon receipt thereof indorses the day of the month when received: But land is bound from the day of the judgment. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. Cro. Car. 149. But the judgment must be docketed, by 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20. See Post. Notwithstanding this statute, if after the writ delivered to the sheriff, and before execution is executed, the defendant becomes bankrupt, that will hinder execution. 3 Salk. 159. The plaintiff takes out execution by fi. facias against the defendant; all the goods and chattels that he had at the time of the execution, will be liable to it: And where debt or damages are recovered, the plaintiff shall have execution of any land the defendant had at the time of the judgment; not of the lands he had the day when the first writ was purchased. Roll. Abr. 892. Sheriffs may deliver in execution all lands whereof others shall be seised in trust for him against whom execution is had, on a judgment, &c. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. If there are chattels sufficient, the sheriff ought not to take the lands; nor may things fixed to the freehold, goods bought bona fide, goods pawned, &c. be taken in execution. 8 Rep. 143. And if a defendant hides his goods in secret places, so that the plaintiff cannot take them in execution, it is said no action will lie against him. 5 Rep. 92, 93.

The sale of goods for a valuable consideration, after judgment, and before execution awarded, is good: And if judgment be given against a lessee for years, and afterwards he selleth the term before execution, the term assigned bona fide is not liable; also if he assign it by fraud, and the assignee sells it to another for a valuable consideration, it is not liable to execution in the hands of the second assignee. Godb. 161. 2 Nels. Abr. 783. If a person has a bill of sale of any goods, in nature of a security for money, he shall be preferred for his debt to one who hath obtained a judgment against the debtor before those goods are sold; for till execution lodged in the sheriff's hands, a man is owner of his goods, and may dispose of them as he thinks fit, and they are not bound by the judgment. Preced. Chan. 286.

But where a man generally keeps possession of goods after sale, it will make the same void against others, by the statute of fraudulent conveyances. And where on an execution, the owner of the goods by agreement was to have the possession of them upon certain terms; afterwards another got judgment against the same person, and took those goods in execution: It was adjudged they were liable, and that the first execution was by fraud, and void against any subsequent creditor; because there was no change of the possession, and so no alteration of property. Ibid. 287. A fi. facias being executed fraudulently, a fi. facias at the suit of another person afterwards shall stand good, and be preferred; and on trial, it is a matter proper to be left to a jury. Bradley v. Wyndham, Sheriff of Hampshire. Wilf. Rep. Par. 1 fo. 44.

Execution may be made of lands that the defendant hath by purchase after the judgment; although he sell the same before execution. Roll. 892. Where there is an execution against goods or chattels, of a tenant for life, or years, the plaintiff before removal of the goods by the execution is to pay the landlord the rent of the land, &c. so as there be not above a year due; and if more be due, paying a year's rent, the plaintiff may proceed in his execution, and the sheriff shall levy the rent paid, as well as the execution money. Stat. 8 Ann. c. 17.

For the greater security of purchasers, it is enacted by the 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20. That the clerk of the escheins of the court of C. B. the clerk of the doggets of the court of King's Bench, and the master of the office of pleas in the court of Exchequer, shall make and put into an alphabetical dogget, by the defendant's names, a particular of all judgments by confession, non sum informatus, nihil dicit, entred in their several courts, &c. and that no judgment not doggeted, and entred in the books as aforesaid, shall effect any lands or tenements as to purchasers or mortgagees, or have any preference against heirs, executors or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors, testators or intestates estates."

With respect to the King's prerogative.

The King by his prerogative, may have execution of the body, lands, or goods of his debtor, at his election. Hob. 60. 2 Inst. 19. 2 Rol. Abr. 472.

And here we must observe, that the King's execution relates, as to land, to the time of becoming in debt to the King; for as to debts that were of record, they always bound the lands and tenements; for all lands being held mediately, or immediately from the King, when any debt was returned of any person, it laid the estate as liable to such debt, as if it had been a reservation on the first grant. 8 Co. 171. 2 Rol. Abr. 156, 157.

And as to debts not of record, they bind the lands from the time they are entred into; but this is by force of the statute 33 H. 8. cap. 39.

As to the King's execution of goods, the same relates to the time of the awarding thereof, which is the teste of the writ, as it was in the case of a common person at law; for so by the 29 Car. 2. c. 3. No execution shall bind the property of goods, but from the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff; yet as this act does not extend to the King, an extent of a later teste supercedes an execution of the goods by a former writ; because by the King's prerogative at Common law, if there had been an execution at the subjects suit, and afterwards an extent, extent, the execution was superseded till the extent was executed, because the publick ought to be preferred to private property. 2 New Abr. 363.

If the King's debt be prior on record, it binds the lands of the debtor, into whose hands soever they come, because it is in the nature of an original charge upon the land itself, and therefore must subject every body that claims under it; but if the lands were aliened in whole, or in part, as by granting a jointure before the debt contracted, such alienee claims prior to the charge, and in such case the land is not subject. See 2 Rol. Abr. 156-7. Moor 126. 3 Leon. 239, 240. 4 Leon. 10.

V. Of the party's remedy against irregular executions, and of the offence of obstructing execution.

An execution may be set aside as irregular, by superfedeas; and the party have restitution, &c. Caribben 460, 461, 468. It hath been resolved, that a writ of error is a superfedeas from the time of the allowance: though if a writ of execution be executed before the writ of error is allowed, it may be returned afterwards. 1 Salk. 321. No writ of execution shall be stayed by any writ of error or superfedeas, after verdict and judgment, in any action upon the case for payment of money, covenant, detinue, trespass, &c. until recognisance be entered into as directed by 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 2. And judgment was had against a person at Bristol, and his goods attached there; and the court of B. R. being moved to stay the execution until a writ of error brought should be determined, they granted a habeas corpus, but nothing to stay the execution. 1 Bull. 268.

If, where two are jointly bound, they are sued severally; and several judgments are had against them, as an elegit is sued against one, and executed and returned, and a ca. sa. against the other, he may bring audita querela: For there must be the same kind of process against both. Cro. Jac. 338. 2 Nell. Abr. 772. See qu. A defendant cannot plead to any writ of execution, (tho' he may in bar of execution to a fiere facias brought;) but if he hath any matter after judgment to discharge him of the execution, he is to have audita querela. 1 Inst. 290. If husband and wife are taken in execution for the debt of the wife, the wife shall be discharged; for the husband being in execution, the wife shall not be so also, and because the wife hath nothing liable to the execution. 1 Lev. 51. The execution of a liberate is good without being returned; and where a man is taken upon a ca. sa. the execution is good, though the writ is not returned: And so in all cases where no inquest is to be taken, but only lands delivered, or seisin had, &c. which are only matters of fact. 4 Rep. 67. 5 Rep. 89.

With regard to the obstructing of execution.

There were anciently castles, fortresses and liberties, where they resisted the sheriff in executing the King's writs, which creating great inconvenience, the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 39. (13 Ed. 1.) hindered the sheriff from returning rescuers to the King's writ of execution, and directed him to take the posse comitatus. See the Stat. and 2 New Abr. 368.

The judges construed the words of the statute to extend only to executions, and not to writs on mesne process, that the sheriff was not obliged to carry the posse comitatus where the man was bailable, for they did not presume, that in such cases the King's writ would be disobeyed. 2 New Abr. 368.

The original of commitment for contempts seems to be derived from this statute; for since the sheriff was to commit those who resisted the process, the judges who awarded such process, must have the same authority to vindicate it; hence, if any one offers any contempt to his process, either by word or deed, he is subject to imprisonment during pleasure, viz. from whence they shall not be delivered without the King's special commandment; so that, notwithstanding the statute of Magna Charta, that none be imprisoned without judgment of their peers; or by the law of the land, this is one part of the law of the land to commit for contempts, and confirmed by this statute. 2 New Abr. 368. See tit. Debt-Error.

Execution for the King's debt, or prerogative execution, is always preferred before any other executions. 7 Rep. 20. And if a defendant is taken by capias ad satisfaciendum, and before the return thereof a prerogative writ issues from the Exchequer, for the debt of the King, tested a day before he was taken, here he shall be held in execution for the King's debt, and that of the subject. Dyer 197. Lands intailed in the hands of the issue in tail, when subject to the King's extent, and where not, see 7 Rep. 21. See also King.

Execution of Criminals. Must be according to the judgment, and the King cannot alter a judgment from hanging to beheading, because no execution can be warranted unless it be pursuant to the judgment. 3 Inst. 52, 211. H. P. C. 272. But there are ancient precedents, wherein men condemned to be hanged for felony, have been beheaded by force of a special warrant from the King. Bract. 104. Staudf. 13. And the King may pardon part of the execution in judgment for treason, viz. all but beheading. The court may command execution to be done without any writ: though sometimes execution is commanded by writ. 2 Haw. P. C. 463. Judgment belongs to the judge; but the execution must be done by the sheriff, &c. And an execution cannot be lawfully made by any but the proper officer; who may do it on the precept of the judge under his seal: And if the sheriff, or other officer, alters the execution, or any other executes the offender, or if he is killed without authority of law, it is felony. 2 Haw. Ibid.

It is said by Hale Chief Justice, That there is no warrant for the execution of persons condemned, but a calendar directing it left, with the sheriff under the hand of the justice that sits; though anciently there was a precept, or warrant, under their hands and seals: And where the prisoner is in custody of the sheriff, the open pronouncing and entering the judgment suspendatur, is a warrant for the execution. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 31, 409. See ante tit. Calendar of Prisoners.

Subsequent justices have no power by the Stat. 1 Ed. 6, c. 7. to award execution of persons condemned by former judges; but if judgment has not been passed on the offenders, the other justices may give judgment, and award execution, &c. 2 Haw. 27. Execution ought to be in the same county where the criminal was tried and convicted; except the record of the attainer be removed into B. R. which may award execution in the county where it sits. 3 Inst. 31, 211, 217. Where a person attainted hath been afterwards at large, if on the court's demanding why execution should not be awarded against him, he denies he is the same person, it shall be tried by a jury for that purpose, and then he is to be executed. 1 H. P. C. 463.

If upon a record removed, an outlawed person confess himself to be the same person, execution shall be had; but if he deny it, and the King's Attorney confesses he is not, he shall be discharged; though if the Attorney-General take issue upon it, the same shall be tried. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 402. If a person, when attainted, stands mute to a demand why execution shall not go against him, the ordinary execution (and not penance) shall be awarded. 2 Haw. 462. In case a man condemned to die, come to life after he is hanged, as the judgment is not executed till he is dead, he ought to be hung up again. Fitch 389.

If a woman quick with child be condemned either for treason, or felony, she may allege her being with child in order to get the execution respited, and thereupon the sheriff, or marshal shall be commanded to take her into a private room, and to impanel a jury of matrons to try and examine whether she be quick with child or not; and if they find her quick with child, the execution shall be respited till her delivery. But it is agreed, that a woman cannot demand such respit of execution by reason of her being quick with child more than once; and that she can neither save herself by this means from pleading upon her arraignment, nor from having judgment pronounced against her upon her conviction. Also it is said, both by Staudford and Coke, that a woman can have no advantage from being found with child, unless she be also found quick with child. 2 Haw. P. C. 462, 463, 464.

The

The body of a traitor or felon is forfeited to the King by the execution; and he may dispose of them as he pleases. The execution of persons under the age of discretion is usually respited, in order to a pardon. 1 Hawk. 2. By the Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. Persons convicted of murder are to be executed the day after sentence, and their bodies delivered to surgeons to be anatomised. The judge may stay the sentence, and appoint the body to be hung in chains or anatomised, but not buried.

Execution of Statutes. The court of Star Chamber erected in the reign of King Hen. 7. was said to be for the execution of Statutes, &c. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1.

Executione facienda in Wiltshernantum. A writ that lies for taking his cattle, who hath conveyed the cattle of another out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot replevy them. Reg. Orig. 82.

Executione Judicii. Is a writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution. F.N.B. 20. If execution be not done on the first writ, an alias shall issue, and a pluries with this clause, quod causam nobis significet quare, &c. And if upon this writ execution is not done; or some reasonable cause returned why it is delayed, the party shall have an attachment against him who ought to have done the execution, returnable in B.R. or C.B. New Nat. Br. 43. If the judgment be in a court of record, this writ shall be directed to the justices of the court where the judgment was given, and not unto the officer of the court; for if the officer will not execute the writs directed unto him, nor return them as he ought, the judges of the court may amerce him. Ibid. One may have a writ de executione judicii out of the Chancery to execute a judgment in an inferior court, although a writ of error be brought to remove the record, and reverse the judgment; if he that brings the writ of error do not take care to have the record transcribed, and the writ of error returned up in due time. 1 Lill. Abr. 562.

Executive Power. The supreme executive power of these kingdoms is vested by our laws in a single person, the King, or Queen, for the time being. Black. Com. 1 P. 190, &c.

The executive power, in this state, hath a right to a negative, in parliament, i. e. to refuse assent to any acts offered, or otherwise the other two branches of the legislative power would, or might, become despotic. See Montesquieu's L'Esprit des Loix Liv. XII. chap. 6. De la Constitution d'Angleterre.

Executors, (Lat.) Is one that is appointed by a man's last will and testament, to have the execution thereof after his decease, and the disposing of all the testator's substance according to the tenor of the will: he is as much as heres designatus or testamentarius in the Civil law, as to debts, goods, and chattels of his testator. Terms de Ley.

Herein is to be considered,

- I. The different kinds of executors, &c.
- II. Who may make executors, as also who may be appointed executor, and in what manner.
- III. Of the probate of wills, with the power, interest, and duty of executors.
- IV. Of actions by, and against executors, and therein of devastavit.

I. Of the different kinds of executors, &c.

Under this head might be considered, administrations during the minority of an infant executor, and administrations de bonis suis; but for these see title Administrator. It will suffice in this place to treat of executors de son tort. An

Executor de son tort. Or executor of his own wrong. Is he that takes upon him the office of an executor by intrusion, i. e. being so constituted by the testator; or for want thereof, appointed by the ordinary to administer. 577 1661. If an executor of his own wrong takes upon himself the office of an executor without a lawful authority, he is chargeable to the rightful executor, and to all the creditors of the testator, and likewise to the legatees, so far as the goods amount unto which he wrongfully possessed:

and such an executor is made by any act of acquisition, transferring or possessing himself of any of the estate or goods of the deceased; but not by acts of necessity, piety or charity. 2 Nels. Abr. 793. Where a person gets the goods of the intestate into his hands; he is chargeable for them as executor de son tort, until he gives satisfaction for them to the true administrator; or satisfies the true debts of the intestate to the value. Cro. Eliz. 88. And such a one cannot retain for his own debt, against another creditor. 5 Rep. 31. And by statute, persons obtaining any goods or debts of an intestate by fraud, or procuring administration to be granted to a stranger, &c. are chargeable as executors in their own wrong, to the value of the goods or debts, &c. And executors and administrators of executors in their own wrong, shall be liable to pay the debts of the testator; in like manner as their testator or intestate. 43 Eliz. cap. 8. 30 Car. 2. cap. 7.

If a man who is neither executor nor administrator; acts as executor, as when he takes into his hands the goods of the deceased for his own use, or alters the property by sale, &c. or delivers goods of the deceased to creditors or legatees, receives any debt due to the intestate, &c. he is executor in his own wrong, and shall answer as far as he acts. 5 Rep. 31, 32. 8 Rep. 135. 9 Rep. 39. Tho' every taking of the goods of the deceased is not enough to make one chargeable; as if a person take away his own goods in the house of the deceased, or use some of the deceased's goods in the necessary occasions of his family; bury the deceased, and sell some of the goods for that purpose; or if he take them by the delivery of another, &c. Dyer 166, 167. Noy's Max. 102.

When there is a rightful executor, and a stranger possesses himself of the testator's goods, without doing any further act as executor, he is not an executor de son tort; but a trespasser: but where there is neither an executor or administrator, it is otherwise; for there the creditors have no person against whom they may bring any action but him who hath possessed himself of the goods. Dyer 105. Roll. Abr. 918. See 5 Rep. 82. An executor of his wrong may be sued as executor; and he shall be sued for legacies, as well as a rightful executor. Noy 13. Tho' an executor de son tort cannot maintain any suit or action because he cannot produce any will to justify it: and he will be severely punished for a false plea, for in such case the execution shall be awarded for the whole debt, though he meddled with a thing of very small value. Noy 69.

Debt was brought against an executor of his own wrong, who pleaded that he never was executor, nor administered as such; it was held, not to be material whether he had assets or no, but to prove that he had administered any thing was enough; for this would make him chargeable with the debt: but if he had not pleaded falsely, he would have been liable for no more than the value of the goods of the deceased. Style 120. If a plaintiff alleges that the defendant administered of his own wrong, and the defendant demurs, it is a confession of it to be true; and then the action may be brought against the defendant as executor de son tort. 5 Mod. 136. 1 Salk. 298. An executor of his own wrong possesses himself of goods, and afterwards administration is granted him, he may by virtue thereof retain goods for his own debt. 5 Rep. 30. And where a man took possession of an intestate's goods wrongfully, and sold them to another, and then took out administration, it was adjudged that the sale was good by relation. Moor 126. But where an executor de son tort delivered goods to one to whom administration was afterwards granted, it was held that if the administration had been granted to himself, it would not have purged the tort, much less where granted to another; for he having once made himself liable to an action as executor de son tort, he shall never after discharge himself by matter ex post facto. Mob. 49. An executor de son tort shall be allowed in equity, all such payments which a rightful executor ought to have paid. 2 Chanc. Rep. 31.

II. Who may make executors, and who may be appointed an executor, and in what manner.

A man attainted of felony cannot make executors; because he hath forfeited all that he had: but a person outlawed may make executors; so may an excommunicate person, person, &c. 1 Leon. 326. Cro. Eliz. 577. All persons capable of making a will, are capable of being executors. 3 Cro. 9. And a woman covert may be an executor, and do any lawful act which another executor may do; but she may not damage her husband thereby, by assenting to a legacy before debts are paid, &c. 5 Rep. 27. A feme covert executrix cannot release a debt of her testator's, or give away the goods she hath as executrix, without the husband; but the husband may do it, and yet the goods which the wife hath as executrix are not divested out of her, as her own goods are; nor if she dies, shall they go to the husband, but to her executors, or the next of kin, being administrator of her testator. Offic. Exec. c. 17. Husband and wife must be named in actions brought for goods which the wife is intitled to as executrix. Ibid. A woman may be executrix to her husband, and the husband executor to his wife; and by this means he may recover all the debts due to her before marriage, &c. Fitz. Executor 24, 47, 87. An infant may be an executor; though he cannot act till he is seventeen years of age; and till that time administration durante minori etate is to be granted. 6 Rep. 67. 4 Inst. 335. If two are executors, one whereof is under age, he of full age may solely prove the will. 1 Lev. 181.

A traitor, or felon, bastard begotten in incest, or a notorious usurer, 'tis said, may not be executor to another. Swinb. 222. A popish recusant convict cannot be an executor. 9 Rep. 37. A mayor and commonalty may be executors. 1 Rel. Abr. 915. And if the King is made executor, he appoints others to take the execution of the will upon them, and to take account. 5 Rep. 29. Where executors are appointed, they may accept of, or refuse the executorship; but they may not refuse after acceptance, nor on the other hand accept after refusal. 9 Rep. 37.

It seems agreed, that by our law, an alien, or one born out of the allegiance of our King, may be an executor or administrator; also it hath been adjudged, that such a one shall have administration of leases as well as personal things, because he hath them in auter droit, and not to his own use. Off. of Ex. 17.

But it has been long doubted, whether an alien enemy should maintain an action as executor, for on the one hand it is said, that by the policy of the law, alien enemies shall not be admitted to actions to recover effects, which may be carried out of the kingdom to weaken ourselves and enrich the enemy, therefore publick utility must be preferred to private convenience; but on the other hand it is said, that those effects of the testator are not forfeited to the King by way of reprisal, because they are not the alien enemy's, for he is to recover them for others; and if he allows such alien enemies to possess the effects as well as an alien friend, he must allow them power to recover, since in that there is no difference, and by consequence he must not be disabled to sue for them; if it were otherwise, it would be a prejudice to the King's subjects, who could not recover their debts from the alien executor, by his not being able to get in the assets of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 683. Moor 431. Carrier 49, 191. Skin. 370.

There are few or none, who, by our law, are disabled, on account of their crimes, from being executors; and therefore it hath been always holden, that persons attainted or outlawed may sue as executors or administrators; because they sue in auter droit, and for the benefit of the party deceased. Co. Lit. 128. Cro. Car. 8, 9. 1 Rel. Abr. 914. 1 Pern. 184.

But an excommunicated person cannot be an executor or administrator, for by the excommunication he is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses. Co. Lit. 134. Swinb. 349. Godolph. 85.

It is laid down as a general rule, that if a creditor makes his debtor executor, it is an extinguishment of the debt, for he cannot sue himself. 1 Rel. Abr. 920-1. 5 Co. 30. Offic. of Ex. 30. Godolph. 113.

But if a person dies intestate, and the ordinary commits administration to a debtor, the debt is not thereby extinguished, for he comes into the administration by the act of law, whereas the other is the act of the party. 5 Co. 136. 1 Salk. 306. Offic. of Ex. 31.

An executor may be appointed either by express words, or words that amount to a direct appointment; as if the testator declares by his will, that a certain person shall have his goods to pay debts, and otherwise dispose of; &c. And executors may be made upon condition; for a fixed time; or some part of the estate. Wood's Inst. 320. A man that can make an executor, may either make one, two, three, or more his executors; and he may appoint one person his executor for one year, and another man for another year, &c. If he make a will, and appoint an executor for seven years; after that the ordinary may grant administration of the goods; so till the power of executor takes place: and where one makes an executor as to part of his estate, he shall die intestate as to the residue. 4 Shep. Abr. 66, 67, 68. If there is no executor, there is properly no will; and where there is no will, there can be no executor: but this is understood of goods; for where lands in fee are devised, this is good, tho' no executor be named: executors having nothing to do with land, which is not testamentary but by act of parliament. Offic. Exec. 3, 4. Finch. 167.

III. Of the probate of wills, with the power, interest, and duty of executors.

When a will with executors is made, the ordinary may send out process against the executors to come in and prove it; and if they do not come in, they are to be excommunicated; but if they come in, and refuse to take upon them the execution of the will, then the ordinary is to commit administration: and the refusal must be by some act registered in the Spiritual Court. Offic. Exec. If an executor hath administered, he cannot refuse; but the ordinary is to compel him to take upon him the executorship. Offic. Exec. 38. Executors cannot refuse for a time, but for ever; but they may have time to advise upon it, and the ordinary is to grant letters ad colligendum, not administration. Cro. Eliz. 92. See Dyer 160.

If there are many executors of a will, and one of them only proves the will, and takes upon him the executorship, it is sufficient for all of them; but the rest after may join with him, and intermeddle with the testator's estate: but if they all of them refuse the executorship, none of them will ever afterwards be admitted to prove the will; the ordinary in this case grants administration with the will annexed, and the testator is in law adjudged to die intestate, and without executor. 9 Rep. 37. 1 Rep. 113. Perk. 485. If an executor dies before probate, it is the same; for such an executor's executor cannot prove the will, because he is not named therein, and no one can prove a will but he who is named executor in it; but if the first executor had proved the will, then his executor might have been executor to the first testator, there requiring no new probate. 1 Salk. 299.

An executor of an executor may be executor to the first testator; but he may take upon him the executorship of his own testator, and refuse to intermeddle with the estate of the other: and if the first executor refuses, or dies before probate, his executor shall not administer to the first testator: nor can an executor of an administrator take administration of the goods of his intestate. Dyer 372. A testator having thought the executor appointed a proper person to be intrusted with his affairs, the ordinary cannot adjudge him disabled or incapax; but a mandamus shall issue from B. R. for the ordinary to grant probate of the will, and admit the executor, if he refuse him: neither can the ordinary insist upon security from the executor, as the testator hath thought him able and qualified. 1 Salk. 299.

And altho' an executor becomes bankrupt, yet 'tis said the ordinary cannot grant administration to another: but if an executor becomes non compos, the Spiritual Court may commit administration for this natural disability. 1 Salk. 307. If an executor takes goods of the testator, and convert them to his own use; or if he either receives, or pay debts of the testator, or give bond for payment; make acquittances for them, or demand the testator's debts as executor; or give away the goods of the testator, &c. these are an administration, so that he cannot afterwards refuse the executorship: and it has been held, that if the wife of the testator take more apparel than is necessary, it is an administration. Offic. Exec. 39.

It is usual, when there is a contest about a will, or when the right of administration comes in question, to enter a caveat in the Spiritual Court, which by their law is said to stand in force for three months. Godolph. 258. Goldsb. 119, 2 Rel. Rep. 6. Cro. Jac. 463-4.

But it is said, that our law takes no notice of a caveat, and that it is but a mere cautionary act done by a stranger, to prevent the ordinary from doing wrong, and that therefore if administration be granted pending a caveat, this is valid in our law, tho' by the law in the Spiritual Court, it may be such an irregularity as will be sufficient to repeal it. 1 Rel. Rep. 191. Cro. Jac. 463. 2 Rel. Rep. 6.

As to their interest and power.

All goods and chattels which belonged to the testator at the time of his death, in any part of the world, come to the executor as assets, and make him chargeable to creditors and legatees; and debts, &c. recovered by the executor, by action after the death of the testator, are to be accounted as assets, but not before recovered. 6 Rep. 47. 1 Inst. 374. If an executor never recover, or get in a debt, he shall never be charged, provided he hath used his utmost endeavours to recover it, and cannot do it. 1 Rep. 98. And where an executorship is controverted in the Spiritual Court by another executor who sets up another will; an injunction may be granted to the testator's debtors not to pay any money till the title to the executorship is settled. Chanc. Rep.

The chattels real and personal of the testator coming to the executor, are leases for years, rent due, corn growing and cut, grass cut and severed, &c. cattle, money, plate, household goods, &c. Co. Lit. 118. Dyer 130, 537. An executor having a lease for years of land in right of the deceased, if he purchase the fee, whereby the lease is extinct; yet this lease shall continue to be assets, as to the creditors and legatees. 1 Rep. 87. Bro. Lease 63. Though a plantation be an estate of inheritance, yet being in a foreign country, it is a chattel in the hands of executors to pay debts. 1 Vent. 358. The executor is not only intitled to all personal goods and chattels of the testator, of what nature soever they are; but they are also accounted to be in his possession, though they are not actually so; for he may maintain an action against any one who detains them from him: he is likewise intitled to things in action; as right of execution on a judgment, bond, statute, &c. Also to money awarded on arbitration, where the party dies before the day, &c. 1 Inst. 207. 2 Vent. 249. 1 Danv. Abr. 549.

If goods of the testator are kept from the executor, he may sue for them in the Spiritual Court, or at common law; and if one seized of a messuage in fee, &c. hath goods in the house, and makes a will and executors, and dies, the executors may enter into the house, and carry away the goods. Lit. 60. An executor may in convenient time after the testator's death, enter into a house descended to the heir, for removing and carrying away the goods; so as the door be open, or the key be in the door. Offic. Exec. 8. He may take the goods and chattels to himself, or give power to another to seize them for him, 9 Rep. 38. An executor with his own goods redeems the goods of the testator; or pays the testator's debts, &c. the goods of the testator shall, for so much, be changed into the proper goods of the executor. Jenk. Cent. 188.

Executors having their power wholly by the will, may release an action, debt, or duty, or do any thing as executors before probate of the will, so as afterwards they prove it; except it be bringing actions for debts, &c. but to maintain these they must shew the testament proved, and the probate is to be brought into court before the defendant will be bound to plead. Rowd. 277. 1 Inst. 207. 1 Rel. Abr. 917, 926. Where a man by will desires that his lands shall be sold for payment of debts, executors shall sell the land, to whom it belongs to pay the debts. 2 Leam. c. 276. And if lands are devised to executors to be sold for payment of the testator's debts, those executors that act in the executorship, or that will sell, may do it without the others. 1 Inst. 113. By statute 21 H. 8. c. 4. Bargains and sales of lands, &c. devised to be sold by executors, shall be as good, if made by such of the executors only as take upon them the execution of the will, as if all the executors had joined in the sale: if lands are thus devised to pay debts, a surviving executor may sell them; but if the devise be, that the executors shall sell the land, and not of the land to them to be sold, here being only an authority, not an interest, if one dies, the other cannot sell. 1 Lev. 203.

When lands are devised or disposed for paying debts, goods in the hands of an executor shall not be liable; though in case of an administrator it is otherwise. Ibid. Each executor hath the whole of the testator's goods and chattels, and each may sell or assign the whole: (but one of them cannot assign or release his interest to the other, if he doth it will be void.) If one executor grant his part of the testator's goods, all passeth, and nothing is left in the other, each having the whole; and there are no parts or moieties between executors: yet one executor may demise or grant a moiety of the land, for the whole term, and so may the other; and this way they may settle in friends trusted for them a moiety for each. Offic. Exec. c. 9.

With regard to their duty.

The duty and office of an executor is to bury the testator in a decent manner, according to his rank and quality, and with a due regard to the estate left after debts are satisfied; for whatever an executor lays out extravagantly in funeral charges, if there be not enough to pay debts, he must bear it at his own expence. Wood's Inst. 325. The common sum allowed for a funeral of an insolvent is 40s. But all reasonable and necessary funeral charges must be allowed before debts and legacies. 1 Rel. Abr. 926. The executor is to make an inventory of all the goods and chattels of the deceased, with their values, and of all debts due to the testator; and this inventory ought to be made and appraised in the presence of the executor, by two or more of the creditors, or two next of kin to the testator; or in their default, by two or more of the neighbours or friends of the deceased: and then the executor must deliver the same upon oath to the ordinary. Doll. & Stud. c. 10. 21 H. 8. c. 5.

The inventory shews the charge of the executor, and his account must be his discharge, for so much as he can prove to be laid out in the payments for funeral charges, making the inventory, probate of the will; debts and legacies: this account will discharge him of all suits in the Spiritual Court; but will not discharge him of suits at the common law; for there each particular must be again proved. Wood. 328. An executor is to pass his account before the ordinary, for the goods and chattels of the testator; but the ordinary may not call executors to account ex officio. 9 Rep. 39.

By statute no executor or administrator shall be cited into any Ecclesiastical Court to render an account, otherwise than by inventory, unless at the instance of a creditor, &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17. It has been held, an executor is bound to account; and the ordinary must take the executor's account, when he is summoned by any creditor, and cannot hold plea of it, because 'tis made upon oath: but if a legatee comes, he may unravel the account, though if the executor will pay him his legacy, then he cannot compel him to exhibit an inventory or to account, he having the end of his suit. 2 Inst. 600. Raym. 407. Hill. 6 Ann.

The executor is to prove the will before the ordinary in common form, by his own oath, or by witnesses, if required by those who have a right to question it; and being exhibited in the register's office of the Ecclesiastical Court, a copy in parchment is delivered the executor under the ordinary's seal, which is called the probate. Perk. 486. 9 Rep. 37. 1 Inst. 488. One may prove a will before the ordinary, which contains goods and lands; though formerly a prohibition was granted as to the lands: and a will of freehold land is to be proved by witnesses in the Chancery. 1 Vent. 207. 6 Rep. 23. The proving of the will is necessary for goods and chattels, to give the the executor power to bring actions, and confirm the acts he did as executor before: when this is done, the executor is to pay all the testator's debts before any legacies. For the order of paying them, see Administrator, also 1 Rol. Abr. 927. Plowd. 543. See Jenk. Cent. 274. And if the executor pays the debts in any other order, he is liable to the payment of the debts of a higher degree, though out of his own estate. Doct. & Stud. c. 10. The executor, &c. paying debts on contract, shall not be relieved against a bond-debt, although he had no manner of notice of it; for this would be to alter the course of the law. Preced. Chan. 534. An executor is allowed to retain his own debt in preference to others of equal degree. Preced. Chan. 179. Noy Max. 104. 3 Lein. cap. 364. If no suit is begun against the executor, he may pay the whole debt to any one creditor in equal degree, though there be nothing left to pay another any part of his debt. Wood's Inst. An executor pays a debt upon bond before a statute broken, and afterwards the statute is broken, the payment of the debt upon bond is a good plea against the statute. Cro. Jac. 9. Pending a bill in equity against an executor, he may pay any other debt of a higher nature, or of as high a nature, where he has legal assets: but where there is a final decree against an executor, if he pays a bond, it is a mispayment; for a decree is in nature of a judgment. 2 Salk. 507.

If there be several debts due on several bonds from the testator, his executor may pay which bond debt he pleases, except an action of debt is actually commenced against him upon one of those bonds; and in such case, if pending an action; another bond-creditor brings another action against him, before judgment, obtained by either of them, he may prefer which he will by confessing a judgment to one and paying him, which judgment he may plead in bar to the other action. Vaugh. 89. See Sid. 21.

Executors sometimes confess judgment presently to a friend for his debt, for they are not bound to stand suit; and plead dilatory pleas to a stranger's debt, that the friend may be first paid upon the execution: and executors may give precedence as they please before execution: but if judgment for 100*l.* is suffered, and the plaintiff compounds for 60*l.* the judgment for the whole sum shall not be allowed to keep off other creditors. 8 Rep. 133. In action of debt against an executor, he may plead a judgment obtained against him by another, ultra quod he hath not assets, which judgment is in force; though judgments are not to be kept on foot by fraud. Sid. 230. 1 Vent. 76. On a Sci. fac. against an executor, he cannot plead fully administered, but must plead specially that no goods of the testator came to his hands, whereby he might discharge the debt; for he may have fully administered, and yet be liable to the debt, where goods of the testator's afterwards come to his hands. 1 Lill. 568. Cro. Eliz. 575. In Scire facias against executors, upon a judgment against their testator, they pleaded Plene Administravit, by paying debts upon bonds ante Notitiam: It was adjudged no plea, for at their peril they ought to take notice of debts upon record, and first pay them; and though the recovery be in another county than that where the testator lived: but where an action is brought against executors in another county than where they live, and they not knowing thereof, pay debts upon specialty, it is good. Cro. Eliz. 793. Where day of payment is past, the penalty of a bond is the sum due at law, but where the day of payment is not come the sum in the condition is the debt, and the executor cannot cover the assets any further. The Bank of England v. Morrice Widow, Rep. Temp. Hardw. Per Annull. 224.

If a surety pay the debt of his principal, who is dead, 'tis said the executor is not liable at law to repay him, without a promise; but he is liable in equity. Sid. 89. 3 Salk. 96. A bill may be exhibited in the Chancery against an executor, to discover the testator's personal estate; and thereupon he shall be decreed to pay debts and legacies. Abr. Ca. Eq. 238. If a person being executor, and his testator greatly indebted, be desirous to pay the assets as far as they will go, and that his payments may not be afterwards questioned, he may bring a bill in equity against all the testator's creditors, in order that they may, if they will, contest each other's debts, and dispute who ought to be preferred in payment. 2 Vent. 37.

Where there are only equitable assets, they must be equally paid amongst all the creditors; for a debt by judgment, and simple contract is in conscience equal. 2 Peer Williams 416. As to what are legal, and what equitable assets, see Vin. Abr. title Payment. And it is held, that bonds, and other debts, shall be paid equally, by executors, where a person has devised lands to them, to be sold, for the payment of his debts. 1 Peer Will. 430. A debt devised by the testator, is not to be paid by the debtor to the legatee, but to the executor, who can give a sufficient discharge for it, and is answerable to the legatee if there be sufficient assets. If an executor pays out the assets in legacies, and afterwards debts appear, of which he had no notice, which he is obliged to pay; the executor by bill in Chancery may force the legatees to refund. Chan. Rep. 136, 149. One legatee paid shall refund against another, and against a creditor of the testator, that can charge the executor only in equity: but if an executor pays a debt upon simple contract, there shall be no refunding to a creditor of a higher nature. 2 Vent. 360.

Executors are not bound to pay a legacy, without security to refund. Chan. Rep. 149, 257. And if sentence be given for a legacy in the Ecclesiastical Court, a prohibition lies, unless they take security to refund. 2 Vent. 358. If an executor pays legacies, and seven years after covenant is broken, for which action is brought against the executor; the court inclined that it was a Devastavit, and that the executor ought to have taken security for his indemnity upon payment of the legacies. Allen 38. Though it has been adjudged, that a covenant is no duty till broken; and therefore since it is uncertain, whether it will be broken or not; it shall be presumed it will not; and the legacies being a present duty shall be paid by the executor, notwithstanding any covenant not actually broken. Style 37. 1 Nelf. Abr. 786. If one binds himself and his executors in an obligation, &c. to perform a certain thing, and in his will gives divers legacies and dies, leaving goods only sufficient to pay the obligation when forfeited; this obligation shall be no bar to the legacies, because it is uncertain whether the same may ever be forfeited: though the executor may therefore make a delivery upon condition, viz. to return the legacies if the obligation becomes forfeit, and the penalty be recovered. 1 Rol. Abr. 928. 2 Vent. 358.

The executor is to pay the legacies, after the debts; and he may prefer a legacy to himself, if nothing remains to discharge the other legacies. Plowd. 545. Offic. Exec. 204. But executors cannot in equity pay their own legacies first, where there is not enough to pay all of them; but shall have an equal proportion with the rest of the legatees. Chan. Rep. 354. An executor has election, where any chattel is given to him, to have and take in one right or the other, viz. as executor, or legatee; which is to be made by a special taking or declaration, &c. 10 Rep. 47. Plowd. 519. Dyer 277. After the executor hath his own legacy, he may pay what legacies he pleases first; or pay each legatee a part in proportion, if there be not enough to pay every one his whole legacy; and he is not bound to order, as he is in the payment of debts due from the testator. 2 Vent. 358, 360.

If there be a specific legacy given of any thing, as a horse, silver cup, &c. it must be delivered before any other legacy, provided there be assets. Offic. Exec. 317. And if there be enough to pay all the legacies, after the debts are satisfied, the legacies shall all be paid; but if there is not sufficient to pay debts or more, the legatees must lose their legacies. Plowd. 526. See 1 Lill. Abr. 579. Wood's Inst. 322. 4 Ann. in B. R.

A testator made one executor who was no relation to him, and gave him 50*l.* And the next of kin exhibited a bill in Chancery for the Residuum of the estate; and it was determined that the executor should not have the residue, but the next of kin to the testator; but if the executor had been nearly related to the testator, it might be otherwise; though in such case, if there were other relations in equal degree, poor and indigent, equity would give the residue among them. 3 Salk. 82. I there be an express legacy given to an executor, and no devise of the surplus estate, that shall generally go to the next kindred according to the statute of distributions. And where two persons were appointed executors, having legacies given them; it was decreed in equity, that the executors should be only trustees as to the residue of the estate, after the legacies paid, which should remain to the testator's next of kin, &c. 2 Vern. Rep. 361, 677.

In a case of the like nature, the surplus of the testator's personal estate, has been adjudged to be in trust for his children, though they had particular legacies. 1 Vern. 473. Abr. Cas. Eq. 244. Also a man by his will gave legacies to relations, near the value of his estate, and made a certain person executor, to whom he gave a small legacy, and desired him to take the trouble of the executorship; after the making of which will, the testator lived ten years, and acquired a considerable additional estate, and then died; on a bill brought by his relations, against the executor, to have an account of the personal estate, and the surplus distributed amongst them; here the new acquired estate was decreed to go to the legatees, in proportion of each one's legacy. Preced. Canc. 12. The surplusage of an estate, given to pay debts, &c. after debts, legacies and portions paid, hath been ordered by the Court of Chancery to go to the heir. Chan. Rep. 189. Overseers of a will have nothing to do with the execution of it, but are only to give advice to the executors; and if they will not do their duty, to complain of them to the spiritual court, &c.

IV. Of actions by and against executors and therein of De-rapavit.

For the goods of the testator, taken from them, or for trespass upon the land, &c. Executors may before the will proved bring action of trespass, detinue, &c. And if they sell cattle, or other goods of the testator, before the will is proved, they may have actions for the money payable, before the same is proved: and an executor may be sued for the debts of the testator before probate of the will, if he be executor by his own act of administering, which makes him liable to actions. Offic. Exec. 35. It has been ruled, that an executor may commence an action before probate; but he cannot declare upon it, without producing in court the letters testamentary: he is not like an administrator, who hath no right till administration committed; for his right is the same before, as after probate of the will, and the not proving it, is only an impediment to the action. 1 Salk. 303.

Executors may maintain action of trover for goods converted in the life of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 377. And by the statute, executors shall have a writ of account, and the like action and process, as the testator might have had. 13 Ed. 1. c. 23. The executors may bring actions for trespass done to their testator, as for goods and chattels carried away in his life, and shall recover their damages in the same manner as he should have done. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 7. Also executors of executors shall have actions of debt, account, and of goods taken away of the first testator's; and have execution of statutes, &c. and shall answer to others, so far as they recover goods of the first testator, as the first executors. 25 Ed. 3. c. 5.

The word executor is a word collective, and doth comprehend in it the executor of an executor; for he is accountable for the first testator's goods, and is as it were his executor for such goods as remain unadministered by the first executor. 1 Lill. Abr. 568. Formerly, if an executor wasted goods and left an executor, and died leaving assets, his executor should not be chargeable, because it was a personal tort. 2 Lev. 120. But now it is otherwise by the statute 30 Car. 2. cap. 7. made perpetual by 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. And see Cam. Dig. 1 P. 276. (I. 3.) The law subjects the executors to every person's claim and action, which he had against the testator; for which reason the executor is said to be the testator's assignee, and to represent the person of the testator: but for personal wrongs done by the testator to the person, or goods, &c. of another, the executor doth not represent him; because personal actions die with the person. 1 Inst. 209. 9 Rep. 89.

Nothing can be debt in the executor, which was not debt in the testator. Cro. Eliz. 232. A promise to pay to an executor, when the testator is not named, is not good. Cro. Jac. 570. But a testator may bind his executors as to his goods, though he himself is not bound, Ibid. And an executor may recover a duty due to the testator, though he be not named. Dyer 14. Action lies against an executor upon a collateral promise made and broke by the testator. Cro. Jac. 663. The testator's Assumpsit to do any collateral thing, as to build an house, &c. which is not a debt, binds executors. Jenk. Cent. 290, 336. Assumpsit lies upon a contract of the testator; and the reason is the same upon a promise, where the testator had a valuable consideration. Palm. 329. Though a debt upon a simple contract of the testator, cannot be recovered of the executor by action of debt; yet it may by Assumpsit. 1 Lev. 200. 9 Rep. 87.

If two persons are jointly bound, and one of them dies, the survivor only shall be charged, and not the other's executor. Pasch. 16 Car. 2. Also when there are two executors, if one of them dies, action is to be brought against the surviving executor, and not the executor of the deceased: but in equity, the testator's goods are liable in whosoever's hands they are. 1 Leon. 304. Chan. Rep. 57. Bills in equity for debts without specialty, have been allowed to be brought against executors, with an averment that they had assets; and no difference has been made where the party seeks for relief either before or after a judgment given against him at law. Moor 566.

Assets shall be always intended, till the executors alledge the want of them in excuse. 9 Rep. 90, 94. If an obligee makes the obligor executor, this is a release in law of the debt; but it shall be assets in his hands; if there be no assets beside to pay other creditors. 8 Rep. 136. 2 Roll. Abr. 920. When an obligor is made executor by the obligee, by administering some of the goods, he hath accepted the executorship, and 'tis that which makes the release; because by being executor he is the person who is to receive the money due on the bond, and he is likewise the person to pay it; and the rule is, that where the same hand is to receive and pay, that amounts to an extinguishment. 1 Salk. 305.

But a person who owed the testator 400 l. was made executor, where debts, legacies, and a residuary estate were devised; and though it was insisted that the debt was discharged by the debtor's being made executor, and that there was sufficient to pay the debts and legacies, yet it was decreed in equity against the executor, that he should pay the 400 l. to the residuary legatee. 1 Chan. Rep. 292. It has been adjudged, that an obligee making the wife of an obligor executrix, had suspended the action on the bond so long as the executorship continued; and that a personal action being suspended by the act of the party himself, is quite extinguished: this was in a case where the testator devised all his goods to the wife of the obligor, and made her sole executrix. Moor 855. Hutt. 128. If an obligee is made executor by the obligor, the debt is not released, but the obligee may still sue for the debt, unless he administers, when if he sues he must sue himself, which cannot be, and in this case he may retain the goods of the obligor testator in satisfaction of his debt. 2 Lev. 73. 2 Nels. Abr. 785. And if there be no assets, the obligee executor may sue the heir of the obligor testator in action of debt upon his bond. 1 Salk. 304. 1 Lill. Abr. 575.

If an executor releases all actions, suits and demands, it extends only to demands in his own right, not such as he hath as executor. Shew 153. And where an executor grants omnia bona sua, though some are of opinion that the goods which he hath as executor will pass; yet others hold the contrary. Noy 106. 4 Leon. 70. An executor shall be charged with rent in the detinet, if hath assets; and if he continues the possession, he shall be charged in the debet and detinet, in respect of the perception of the profits, whether he hath assets or not. 1 Lev. 127. But an executor is not suable in the debet and detinet for part, and in the detinet for the other part; because they require several judgments, viz. De bonis propriis for the debit and detinet, and de bonis testatoris for the detinet. 3 Lev. 74. See title Debit and Detinet.

If an executor has a term, and the rent reserved is more than the value of the premises, in action brought against him for it in the debit and detinet, he may plead the special matter, viz. That he hath no assets, and that the land is of less value than the rent, and demand judgment if he ought not to be charged in the detinet tantum: and he cannot waive the lease; without renouncing the whole executorship. 1 Salk. 297. It hath been held, that if an executor alters the property of things from the testator to himself, by paying a debt to the value; or by paying the rent of a lease, and receiving the profits, or part of the profits equal to the rent, the things and profits received are his own. Dyer 187, 885. 5 Rep. 31.

One executor cannot regularly sue another at law; but he may have relief in equity: In the eye of the law all are but as one executor; and most acts done by, or to any of them, are esteemed acts done by, or to all of them. 1 Rol. Abr. 918. If where one executor is sued, he plead that there is another executor, he ought to shew that he hath administered. 1 Lev. 161. And he only that administers is to be sued in actions against executors; but actions brought by executors are to be in the name of all them, though some do not take upon them the executorship. 1 Roll. 924. Jenk. Cent. 106, 107. If any executor refuses to join in an action, with his co-executors, he must be summoned and sequestered.

An executor is not disabled by outlawry, to sue for the debts of the testator. Special bail is not required of executors, &c. in any action brought for the testator's debt: and executors, or administrators are not liable to costs. i. e. Where they sue in right of the testator. Hur. 69. Cro. Eliz. 503. Yel. 168. Dal. 96. Bend. pl. 28. 2 Rol. 87. Com. Dig. 2 V. 439.

If an executor brings a writ of error, though the judgment is affirmed, he shall not pay any costs; because as he is executor, it is in outer droit: also an executor shall not put in bail on a writ of error, causa supra. Mich. 5 W. & M. Executors are excused from paying costs, as being presumed to have no knowledge of the affairs of the testator; and therefore they shall pay costs for not going on to trial, or where the cause of action arises to the executor himself, &c. 1 Salk. 207. 3 Salk. 106. No action shall charge an executor to answer damages out of his own estate, upon any promise to another, unless there be some writing thereof signed by the party to be charged therewith. 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

On any judgment after verdict, had by or in the name of an executor, or administrator; an administrator de bonis non may sue forth a Scire facias, and take execution upon such judgment. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8. Before this statute it was not so; where an executor, &c. died, for want of privacy, the administrator was to begin again. 2 Nels. Abr. 789. If an executor makes himself a stranger to the will of the testator, or pleads Ne unques executor, or any false plea, and it is found against him, judgment shall be de bonis propriis: in other cases, de bonis testatoris. Cro. Jac. 447. If on a Scire facias against an executor, the sheriff return a Devasavit; the plaintiff shall have judgment and execution de bonis propriis of the defendant: and if nulla bona be returned, he may have either a Capias Satisfaciend. or an Elegit. 2 Nels. 791. Dyer 185. But one executor shall not be charged with a Devasavit made by his companion; for the act of one shall charge the other no further than the goods of the testator in his hands amount to. Cro. Eliz. 318. If an executor does any waste, or misemploys the estate of the deceased, or doth any thing by negligence or fraud, &c. it is a Devasavit, and he shall be charged for so much out of his own goods. 8 Rep. 133. And a new executor may have an action against a former executor, who wasted the goods of the deceased; or the old one may remain chargeable to creditors, &c. Hob. 266.

If an executor takes an obligation in his own name, for a debt due by simple contract to the testator, this shall charge him as much as if he had received the money; for the new security hath extinguished the old right, and is quasi a payment to him. Off. of Ex. 158. Yelv. 10. 1 Lev. 189.

So if the executor sues a person by trover and conversion, in which he has a right to recover; and afterwards he and the defendant come to an agreement, that he shall pay the executor such a sum at a future day, and the party fails, this is a Devasavit; and he shall answer ad valorem. 2 Lev. 189. 2 Jon. 88. S. C. 1 Vern. 474. S. C.

It is a Devasavit to permit interest to run in arrear, and then suffer judgment for it; and want of assets to pay before the incurring of it; by the administrator shall not be intended unless it be expressly pleaded. 2 Lev. 40. Hill. 23 & 24 Car. 2. B. R. Seaman v. Dee.

An executor in case of a Devasavit is in nature of a trustee of an estate. Chanc. Cases 304. Mich. 29 Car. 2. in Vanacre's case. See more of Executors, under Administrators, Assets, Joint Executors, Wills, &c.

Executory, is where an estate in fee created by deed or fine, is to be afterwards executed by entry, livery, writ, &c. And leases for years, rents, annuities, conditions, &c. are called inheritances executory. Wood's Inst. 293. Estates executed are when they pass presently to the person to whom conveyed, without any after-act. 2 Inst. 513.

Executory Devise, is said to be where a future interest is devised, that vests not at the death of the testator, but depends on some contingency which must happen before it can vest. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 186.

These executory devises may be,

I. Of lands of inheritance.

II. Of terms for years.

I. With respect to the former.

If a particular estate is limited, and the inheritance passes out of the donor, this is a contingent remainder; but where the fee by a devise is vested in any person, and to be vested in another upon contingency, this is an executory devise: and in all cases of executory devises, the estates descend until the contingencies happen. Raym. 28. 1 Lutw. 798. Where a contingent estate limited, depends upon a freehold, which is capable of supporting a remainder, it shall never be construed an executory devise, but a remainder. And so it is, if the estate be limited by words in presenti, as when a person devises his lands to the heirs of A. B. who is living, &c. Though if the same were to the heir of A. after his death, it would be as good as an executory devise. 2 Saund. 380. 4 Mod. 255.

One by will devises land to his mother for life, and after her death, to his brother in fee; provided, that if his wife, being then ensuit, be delivered of a son, then the lands to remain to him in fee, and dies, and the son is born; in this case it was held, that the fee of the brother shall cease, and vest in the son, by way of executory devise, on the happening of the contingency; and here such fee estate enures as a new original devise to take effect when the first fails. Dyer 33, 127. Cro. Jac. 592. A remainder of a fee may not be limited by the rules of law after a fee simple; for when a man hath parted with his whole estate, there cannot remain any thing for him to dispose of: but of late times a distinction hath been made between an absolute fee-simple and a fee-simple which depends upon a contingency, or is conditionally limited; especially where such a contingency may happen in the course of a few years, or of one or two lives; and where such a remainder is limited by will, it is called an executory devise. 2 Nels. Abr. 797.

An estate devised to a son and his heirs, upon condition that if he did not pay the legacies given by the will within such a time, that then the land should remain to the legatees, &c. and their heirs: this limitation of a fee in remainder, after a fee limited to the son, being upon the contingency, of the son's failing in payment of the legacies, was adjudged good by way of executory devise. Cro. Eliz. 833. And where the father devised his lands to his youngest son and his heirs, and if he died without issue, issue, the eldest son being alive, then to him and his heirs; this was held a good remainder in fee to the eldest brother, after the conditional contingent estate in fee to the youngest, as depending upon the possibility that he might be alive when his youngest brother died without issue; and his dying without issue, was a collateral determination of his estate, whilst the other was living. Godb. 282. 2 Nels. Abr. 798.

There can be no executory devise after an estate-tail generally limited, because that would tend to a perpetuity; and a contingency is too remote where a man must expect a fee upon another's dying without issue, generally: But dying without issue, living another, may happen in a little time, because it depends upon one life; and therefore a devise of a fee-simple to one, but to remain to another upon such a contingency, is now held good by executory devise. 2 Cro. 695. Sometimes cross remainders in tail by implication, have been pleaded against executory devises.

II. As to executory devises of terms.

Formerly where a term of years, (which is but a chattel) was devised to one; and that if he died, living another person, it should remain to the other person, during the residue of the term, such a remainder was adjudged void. For a devise of a chattel to one for an hour, was a devise of it for ever. Dyer 74. But since it has been held, that a remainder of a term to one, after it was limited to another for life, was good: In a case where a testator having a term, devised that his wife should have the lands for so many years of the term as she should live; and that after her death the residue thereof should go to his son and his assigns; and this was the first case wherein an executory remainder of a term for years was adjudged good. Dyer 253, 358.

A person possessed of a term, devised it to his wife for eighteen years, and after to his eldest son for life, after to the son's eldest issue male during life; though he have no such issue, at the time of the devise, and death of the deviser, if he has before his own death, he shall have it as an executory devise. 1 Roll. 612. But if one devise a term to his wife for life; the remainder to his first son for life, and if he dies without issue, to his second son, &c. the remainder to the second son is void, and no executory devise; yet where he dying without issue living at a person's death, may be confined to one life, it hinders not a remainder over. Abr. Ca. Eq. 194.

Executory devises, as to terms for years, are not extended beyond a life or lives; they ought to arise within the compass of one life. 1 Salk. 229. Where there is an executory devise, there needs not any particular estate to support it; and because the person who is to take upon contingency, hath not a present but future interest, his estate cannot be barred by a common recovery; and for that it was a remainder not in being when the recovery was suffered, it has been adjudged it could not be barred by such a recovery. 2 Nels. Abr. 797, 798. It is held executory devises, and limitations of the trust of a term, are governed alike. 1 Vern. 234.

It is material to observe, that distinctions have been made where the devise was of the occupation and profits of the land, &c. in lease, and where the devise was of the lease, or term itself; as for instance, the husband being possessed of a lease for years, devised the occupation of the lands to his wife, for so many years as she should live, the residue to his son, and made her sole executrix, and died; the widow sold the lease, and died; adjudged, this was not a devise of the whole term to the wife; for she had it only conditionally, if she lived so long as the term continued, and her interest was to determine upon her death, so that her sale thereof was void against her son, because the remainder was to vest in him, upon the contingency of her dying before the term expired, therefore the devise to him shall be expounded to preclude the devise to her, that both may stand, and the rather, because there was no express estate for life devised to her; for if it had, then she would have a title to the whole term, because an estate for life, is in judgment of law more valuable than an estate for years. Plow. Com. 519. Welken versus Elkington.

Lessee for years devised all his term to his son, and his will was, that his wife should have the occupation and profits of the lands, during the minority of his son, &c. and he made her sole executrix, and died; the afterwards proved the will, then she sold the term, and died; adjudged, that this sale was void against her son, because it shall be intended that the devise to the wife, shall preclude the devise to the son, though it followed in words, and then she will not have the whole term, but only so much thereof for so long time as she should live, before her son came of age; and that the remainder was to vest in him, upon the contingency of his living till he came of full age. Plow. Com. 53. Paramour versus Yardley.

The husband being possessed of a term for years, devised the lease itself to his wife for her life, and after her death to her children unpreferred; it was insisted for the wife, that she had the whole term, for this was not like either of the cases last mentioned; it was not like the first, for that was a devise of the lands to the wife, for so many years as she should live; and it was not like the second, for that was a devise of the profits of the lands unto the wife, until her son came of age; but here the devise is of the lease itself, and the lands are not mentioned throughout the will; but adjudged that the wife had only an estate for so many years of the lease as she should live, and that so much as remained unexpired at her death, was to vest in the children upon the contingency of their living at that time. 1 And. 61. Amner versus Ladington. 2 Leon. 92. S. C. 3 Leon. 89. S. C. Gold. 26. S. C.

In these three cases, (as ought to be in all) the court hath regarded the intent of the testator: and it seems so to have done, without much regard to the niceties in law. And with respect to devises, much greater latitude is allowed in the construction of wills, than of deeds.

What shall be construed an executory devise, and what a remainder, see Wealby on the devise of Manley v. Boswells. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Anny, 258, &c.

Exemplification of Letters Patent. Is a copy or transcript of letters patent, made from the enrolment thereof, and sealed with the Great Seal of England, which exemplifications may be shewed or pleaded, as the letters patent themselves. But neither an exemplification nor constat was pleadable at Common law, because there was only the tenor of an enrolment, and the tenor of a record is not pleadable: Though by the statutes 6 R. 2. c. 4. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 4. and 13 Eliz. c. 6. they are pleadable. 5 Rep. 53. By the last mentioned statute, exemplifications of the enrolment of grants by letters patent, shall be of as good force in pleading for the patentees, &c. as if the patents were produced. One may exemplify a patent under the Great Seal in Chancery; and also any record or judgment, in any of the courts at Westminster, under the proper seal of each court; and such an exemplification may be given in evidence to a jury, &c. 1 Lill. 583. Shep. Abr. 134. A rule made, or writ filed in any court at Westminster, may be exemplified in the court where made, or filed. 1651. C. B. But nothing but matter of record ought to be exemplified. 3 Inst. 173. Attested copies of records on stamped paper, are in general good evidence. The person who examines them proving the examination, and that the copy in question is a true copy.

Exemplification, Is a writ granted for the exemplification of an original record. Reg. Orig. 290.

Exemption, (Exemptio) Signifies a privilege to be free from service or appearance; as knights, clergymen, &c. are exempted to appear at the county-court by statute; and Peers from being put upon inquests. 6 Rep. 23. Persons seventy years of age, apothecaries, &c. are also exempted by law from serving on juries: And justices of peace, attorneys, &c. from parish offices: 2 Inst. 247. There is an exemption from tolls, &c. by the King's Letters Patent: And a writ of exemption, or of ease, to be quit of serving on juries, and all publick service. Shep. Epitome 1029.

Exercisable, Was anciently used for a heriot; being paid only in arms and military accoutrements. Exercisable Viscontis filii Baronis Regis, qui erit proximus si, quatuor equi. Leg. Edw. Conf. 1.

Exeter. By letters patent under the Great Seal, the site of the castle of Exon (part of the duchy of Cornwall) to be granted to some persons appointed by the justices in quarter-sessions for the county of Devon, for the term of 99 years, to the use of the said county and for other publick uses; under the ancient yearly rent of 10 l. per annum, payable to the crown. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 19.

Exfrediare, (From the Sax. Frede, Frið, Peace, and Frithian) To break the peace, or commit open violence. Leg. H. 1. c. 13.

Ex gravi Querela, Is a writ that lies for him to whom any lands or tenements in fee are devised by will, (within any city, town or borough, wherein lands are devisable by custom) and the heir of the devisor enters, and detains them from him. Reg. Orig. 244. Old Nat. Br. 87. And if a man devises such lands or tenements unto another in tail, with remainder over in fee, if the tenant in tail enter, and is seised by force of the intail, and afterwards dieth without issue; he in remainder shall have the writ ex gravi querela to execute that devise. New Nat. Br. 441. Also where tenant in tail dies without issue of his body, the heir of the donor, or he who hath the reversion of the land, shall have this writ in the nature of a formedon in the reverter. Ibid. If a devisor's heir be ousted by the devisee, by entry on the lands; he may not after have this writ, but is to have his remedy by the ordinary course of the common law. Co. Lit. 111.

Exennium or Exennium, A gift or present, and more properly a new year's gift.—In expensis domini Regis & exennis eidem factis apud, &c. lxxv. fol.—Ex Compt. Dom. de Farend. MS.

Exhibit, (Exhibitum) A word mentioned in the statute 14 Car. 2. cap. 14. And where a deed, or other writing is in a suit in Chancery exhibited to be approved by witnesses, and the examiner or commissioners appointed certify on the back of it, that the deed or writing was shewed to the witness, to prove it at the time of his examination, and by him sworn to; this is called an exhibit in law proceedings. The same, under a commission of bankruptcy.

Exhibito, An allowance for meat and drink, such as was customary among the religious appropriators of churches, who usually made it to the depending vicar; and the benefactions settled for the maintaining of scholars in the universities, not depending on the foundation, are called exhibitions. Paroch. Antiq. 304.

Exigendaries of the Common Pleas, (Exigendarii de Banco Comuni) Are otherwise called Exigenters, by Stat. 10 H. 6. c. 4.

Exigent, (Exigenda) Is a writ that lies where the defendant in an action personal cannot be found, nor any thing of his, within the county, whereby to be attached or distrained; and is directed to the sheriff, to proclaim and call him five county-court days, one after another, charging him to appear upon pain of outlawry: It is called exigent, because it exaltat the party, i. e. requires his appearance or forth-coming to answer the law; and if he come not at the last day's proclamation, he is said to be quinqvies exaltus, and is outlawed. Crompt. Juris. 188. The statutes requiring proclamations on exigents awarded in civil actions, are 6 Hen. 8. c. 4. and 31 Elix. cap. 3. Exigents are to be awarded against receivers of the King's money, who detain the same; and against the conspirators, rioters, &c. Stat. 18 Ed. 3. c. 1. And a writ of proclamation shall be issued to the sheriff to make three proclamations in the county where the defendant dwells, for him to yield himself, &c. by the Stat. 31 Elix. c. 3. The writ of exigent also lies in an indictment of felony, where the party indicted cannot be found: And upon suing out an exigent for a criminal matter before conviction, there shall be a writ of proclamation, &c. 3 Inst. 31. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. If a person indicted of felony absent so long that the writ of exigent is awarded, his withdrawing will be deemed a flight in law, whereby he will be liable to forfeit his goods; and though he renders himself upon the exigent, after such withdrawing, and is found Not guilty, it is said the forfeiture shall stand. 5 Rep. 110. 3 Inst. 232. After a capias directed to the sheriff to take and imprison a person, &c. if he cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded: And after a judgment in a civil action, the exigent is to go forth after the first capias; but before judgment, there must be a capias, alias and pluries. 4 Inst. 177. If the defendant be in prison, or beyond sea, &c. he or his executors may reverse the award of the exigent. See Outlawry.

Exigenter, (Exigendarius) Is an officer of the court of Common Pleas; of which officers there are four in number: They make all exigents and proclamations, in actions where process of outlawry doth lie; and also writs of superseatas, as well as the prothonotaries, upon such exigents made out in their offices. 18 H. 6. c. 9. But the issuing writs of superseatas is taken from them by an officer in the same court, constituted by letters patent by King James the First.

Exigi facias, The exigent is so called. See Black. Com. 3 V. 283. and Exigent.

Exile, A banishment or driving out of a person. Lit. Diæ. And this exile is either by restraint, when the government forbids a man, and makes it penal to return; or it is voluntary, where he leaves his country upon disgust, but may come back at pleasure. 2 Lev. 191.

Exilium, Signifies in law construction, a spoiling: And by the statute of Marlbridge it seems to extend to the injury done to tenants, by altering their tenure, ejecting them, &c. and this is the sense that Fleta determines; who distinguishes between vassum, destructio and exilium; for he tells us that vassum and destructio are almost the same, and are properly applied to houses, gardens or woods; but exilium is when servants are infranchised, and afterwards unlawfully turned out of their tenements.—Vassum & destructio fere equipollent, & convertibiliter se habent in Domibus, Boscis & Gardinis; sed exilium dici poterit, cum servi manumittuntur, aut à tenementis suis injuriose ejiciuntur. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 11.—Venditionem vel exilium non faciunt de Domibus, Boscis, vel hominibus, &c. Stat. Marl. c. 25.

Exitus, Issue or off-spring: and applied to the issues or yearly rents and profits of lands.—Et sciat vicecomes, quod redditus, blada in grangia, & omnia mobilia, præter equetaturam, indumenta & utensilia domorum, continentur sub nomine exituum. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 45.

Exlegalitus, Is he who is prosecuted as an outlaw. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 38.

Ex mero motu, Are words used in the King's charters and letters patent, to signify that he grants them of his own will and motion, without petition or suggestion of any other: And the intent and effect of these words, is to bar all exceptions that might be taken to the charters or letters patent, by alledging that the King in granting them was abused by false suggestions. Kitch. 352. When the words ex mero motu are made use of in any charter, they shall be taken most strongly against the King. 1 Co. Rep. 451.

Ex Officio, Is so called from the power a person has by virtue of an office, to do certain acts, without being applied to: As a justice of peace may not only grant surety of the peace, at the complaint or request of any person, but he may demand and take it ex officio at discretion, &c. Dalt. 270.

Ex Officio Informations, Are informations at the suit of the King, filed by the Attorney-General, as by virtue of his office, without applying to the court wherein filed, for leave, or giving the defendant any opportunity of shewing cause why it should not be filed. Add to this, the subject hereby loses the benefit intended by Magna Charta, i. e. of one jury, out of two, in criminal charges. How long this mode of proceeding will be admitted, in this free country, time must discover.

Exoneratone festin, Was a writ that lay for the King's ward, to be free from all suit to the county-court, hundred court, leet, &c. during wardship. F. N. B. 158.

Exoneratone festin ad Curiam Baron. A writ of the same nature, sued by the guardian of the King's ward, and directed to the sheriff or stewards of the court, that they do not distrain him, &c. for not doing suit of court. New Nat. Br. 352. And if the sheriff distrain tenants in ancient demesne to come to the sheriff's torn or leet, they may have a writ commanding the sheriff to sequestrare, &c. Ibid. 359. Likewise if a man have lands in divers divers places in the county, and he is constrained to come to the leet where he is not dwelling, when he resides within the precinct of any other leet, &c. then he shall have this writ to the sheriff to discharge him from coming to any other court-leet than in the hundred where he dwelleth. Ibid. 357. By the Common law, parsons shall not be distrained to come to court-leets, for the lands belonging to their churches; and if they be, they may have the writ exoneracione seclæ, &c. F. N. B. 394. So shall a woman holding land in dower, if she is distrained to do suit of court for such land; when the heir has lands sufficient in the same county. Ibid.

Ex parte, Of the one part; as a commission in Chancery ex parte, is that which is taken out and executed by one side or part only, on the other party's neglecting or refusing to join: When both plaintiff and defendant proceed, it is a joint commission.

Ex parte talis, Is a writ that lies for a bailiff or receiver, who having auditors assigned to take his account, cannot obtain of them reasonable allowance, but is cast into prison: And the course in this case is to sue this writ out of the Chancery, directed to the sheriff to take four mainpernors to bring his body before the Barons of the Exchequer at a certain day, and to warn the lord to appear at the same time. F. N. B. 129.

Expectant, Having relation to or depending upon; and this word is used in the law with fee, as fee-expectant. If land is given to a man and his wife, to hold to them and their heirs; in this case they have a fee-simple. Kitch. 153.

Expectancy, Estates in; Are of two sorts; one created by act of the parties, called a remainder; the other by act of law, called a reversion. Black. Com. 2 V. 163, 4, &c.

Expeditate, (Expeditare) In the laws of the forest, signifies to cut out the ball of the dogs fore-feet, for the preservation of the King's game: But the ball of the foot of a mastiff is not to be taken out, but the three claws of the fore-foot on the right side are to be cut off by the skin. Crompt. Jurisd. 152. Manswood, cap. 16. This relates to every man's dog who lives near the forest; and was formerly done once in every three years: And if any person keeps a great dog not expeditated, he forfeits to the King 3 s. 4 d. 4 Inst. 308.

Expeditate Arbores, Trees rooted up or cut down to the roots.—Inquiratur de arboribus expeditatis in foresta. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 41.

Expeditores, Are the persons appointed by commissioners of sewers to pay, disburse or expend the money collected by the tax for the repairs of sewers, &c. when paid into their hands by the collectors, on the reparations, amendments and reformations ordered by the commissioners, for which they are to render accounts when thereunto required. Laws of sewers 87, 88. These officers are mentioned in the statute 37 H. 8. c. 11. and other statutes: the steward who supervises the repair of the banks and water-courses in Romney-Marsh is called the Expeditor.

Expensis Litis, Costs of suit allowed a plaintiff or defendant recovering in his action. See Costs.

Expensis militum non levandis, &c., Is an ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire, upon those that hold lands in ancient demesne. Reg. Orig. 261. For there is a writ de expensis militum levandis, for levying expences, for knights of the parliament, &c. Reg. Orig. 191.

Expleses, The rents or profits of an estate, &c. Vide Esplees.

Explorator, A scout; also a huntsman or chaser.—In memoriam Henrici Croft equitis aurati, exploratoris in Hibernia generalis, qui obijt anno 1609.

Exportation, Is the shipping or carrying out the native commodities of England for other countries; mentioned in the statutes relating to the customs. See Importation.

Expofition of Deeds, It shall be favourable, according to the apparent intent; and be reasonable and equal, &c. Co. Lit. 313. See Deed.

Courts will go great lengths in the construction of words to support the party's right, especially after verdict. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Anstwy 21.

Ex post facto, Is a term used in the law, signifying something done after another thing that was committed before. And an act done, or estate granted, may be made good by matter ex post facto, that was not so at first, by election, &c. As sometimes a thing well done at first, may afterwards become ill. 8 Rep. 146. 5 Rep. 22.

Extend, (Extendere) Is to value the lands or tenements of one bound by a statute, who hath forfeited his bond, at such an indifferent rate, as by the yearly rent the creditor may in time be paid his debt. F. N. B.

Extendi facias, A writ of extent, whereby the value of lands is commanded to be made and levied, &c. Reg. Orig.

Extent, (Extenta) Signifies a writ or commission to the sheriff for the valuing of lands or tenements; and sometimes the act of the sheriff or other commissioner upon this writ. Bro. 313. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. cap. 5. It hath been held more frequently to be the estimate or valuation of lands, which when done to the utmost value, is said to be the full extent; whence come our extended rents, or rack-rents. And if one bound to the King by specialty, or to others by statute, recognisance, &c. hath forfeited it; so that by the yearly rent of the debtor's lands, the creditor is to be paid his debt; upon this the creditor may sue a writ to the sheriff out of the Chancery to deliver him the lands and goods to the value of the debt, which is termed a liberate. F. N. B. 131. This is after the extent directed to the sheriff to seize and value the lands, &c. of the debtor, to the utmost extent. 4 Rep. 67. Lands and goods are to be appraised and extended by the inquest of twelve men, and then delivered to the creditor, in order to the satisfaction of his debt: Every extent ought to be by inquisition and verdict, by the Stat. West. 2. And the sheriff without an inquisition cannot execute the writ. Cro. Jac. 569.

The body of the cognisor, and all lands and tenements that were his at the time of the statute, &c. entered into, or afterwards, into whose hands soever they come, are liable to the extent. 2 Inst. 396. But copyhold lands are chargeable only during the life of the cognisor; and may not be extended by elegit, so as to admit a stranger to have interest in the lands held by copy, without the admittance of the lord. Lands in ancient demesne, annuities, rents, &c. are extendible. 1 Roll. Abr. 88. Two parts of an intire rent, may be delivered upon an extent by the sheriff. 1 Cro. 742. But if the cognisor of a statute have a rent-charge, and before the extent he purchase parcel of the land; the rent is gone, and shall not be in execution: 'Tis otherwise if he purchases after extent of the rent. Dyer 206. A reversion of lands, &c. may not be extended; but a plaintiff had judgment for his debt and damages de reversione cum acciderit, and a special elegit to extend the moiety, &c. 2 Sid. 86. Dyer 373.

An advowson in gross is not extendible on elegit, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 18. An office of trust cannot be extended, because 'tis not assignable; and nothing shall be extended, but what may be assigned over. Dyer 7. Though an office is extendible in equity. Chanc. Rep. 39. Goods and chattels, as leases for years, cattle, &c. in the cognisor's own hands, and not sold for valuable consideration, are subject to the extent. As the lands are to be delivered to the party at a reasonable yearly value, so the goods shall be delivered in extent at a price that is reasonable: And on a seire facias ad computand. the cognisee is to account according to the extended value; not the real value of the land. Hardr. 136. If the extenders appraise and value the lands too high, the cognisee at the return of the writ may pray that they may take and retain the lands at the rate appraised; and then 'tis said he may have execution against their lands for the debt; but this may not be on elegit. Cro. Jac. 12. It has been adjudged, that at the return of the writ, the cognisor may refuse the lands, &c. extended, if over-valued. Cro. Car. 148.

Where lands are extended at under-value, and delivered in execution; the cognisee hath an interest in the land, which cannot be divested by finding of surplussage.

1 Cro. 266. 2 Cro. 85. The cognisor cannot enter upon the cognisee, when satisfaction is received for the debt, but is put to his scire facias on an extent: Though on an elegit, the defendant may enter because the land is only awarded, till the debt, which is certain, is satisfied; whereas on extent, the land is to be held until the debt, damages and costs, &c. are satisfied: And the cognisee being in by matter of record, shall not be put out but by matter of record, viz. a scire facias brought against him. 4 Rep. 67. March's Rep. 207, 208. See qu. Where is the difference? Is not the tenant by elegit in by matter of record?

The cognisee hath no absolute property in lands by the extent, till the delivery upon the liberate; but notwithstanding, by the very extent they are in custodia legis for his benefit. Cro. Car. 106, 148. No actual seisin can be on an extent, and a cognisee of a statute staple, &c. cannot bring ejectment before the liberate; nor can the sheriff upon the liberate turn the tertenant out of possession, as he may upon a hab. fac. possessionem. 1 Vent. 41. Where there is an extent upon a statute, and a liberate thereupon, but not returned, yet it is good; though regularly when inquisitions are taken, the writ ought to be returned. 4 Rep. 67. 1 Lill. Abr. 592. The sheriff may be charged to make a return of his writ, if he put the cognisee in possession of part only; and so the cognisee may have possession of the whole. 2 Nels. Abr. 774. But if a person suing out an extent, die before the return of a writ, the sheriff may not proceed in his inquisition, &c. afterwards; for there must be a prosecution de novo. 1 Cro. 325.

After a full and perfect execution had by extent, returned, and of record, there shall never be any re-extent upon an eviction: But if the extent be sufficient in law, there may be a new extent. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 5. 1 Inst. 200. So if lands be extended upon a mistake, &c. and see Dyer 299. If part of the lands is evicted, the cognisee is to hold over the residue of the land till the debt is satisfied. 4 Rep. 66. When lands are delivered in extent, it is as if the cognisee had taken a lease thereof for years, until the debt is satisfied; and he shall never afterwards take out a new execution: The cognisee having accepted the land upon the liberate, the law presumes the debt to be satisfied. 1 Lutw. 429. An extent was filed, and tho' it was discovered that lands were omitted, the court would not grant a re-extent. Sid. 356. Lands or goods, &c. are not to be sold on an extent; but delivered. See Statute.

Extinguishment, (From Extinguo) Signifies a consolidation: For example; If a man hath an yearly rent out of lands, and afterwards purchases the lands whereout it ariseth, so that he hath as good an estate in the land as the rent; now both the property and rent are consolidated or united in one possessor; and therefore the rent is said to be extinguished. Also where a person has a lease for years, and afterwards buys the property; this is a consolidation of the property and fruits, and is an extinguishment of the lease: But if a man have an estate in land for life or years, and hath a higher estate as a fee-simple in the rent; the rent is not extinguished, but in suspense for a time; for after the term, the rent shall revive. Terms de Ley.

Extinguishment of a rent is a destroying of the rent by purchase of the land; for no one can have a rent going out of his own land; though a person must have as high an estate in the land, as in the rent, or the rent will not be extinct. 1 Inst. 147. If a person hath a rent-charge to him and his heirs, issuing out of lands, and he purchaseth any part of the land to him and his heirs; as the rent is intire and issuing out of every part of the land, the whole rent-charge is extinguished: Though it is not so where one hath a rent-service, and purchaseth part of the land out of which it issues; rent-service being apportionable according to the value of the land, so that it shall only extinguish the rent for the land purchased. Litt. 222. 1 Inst. 148. And if the grantee of a rent-charge, purchases parcel of the lands, and the grantor by his deed granteth that he may distrain for the rent in the residue of the land, this amounts to a new grant. 1 Inst. 147.

If a man be seised of a rent-charge in fee, and grants it to another and his heirs, and the tenant attorns; the grantor is without remedy for the rent in arrear before his grant; and such arrears become as it were extinct. Vaugh. 40. 1 Lill. Abr. 594. A. B. made a lease for years of lands to another, and afterwards granted a rent-charge to C. D. who devised the said rent to the said A. B. till 100 l. should be levied; then to B. G. and died: Adjudged that by the devise to A. B. the rent was suspended, and that a personal thing once suspended by the act of the party, is extinguished for ever. Dyer 140. But if a man in contemplation of marriage gives a woman a bond, to leave her at his death, if she survive him, so much, and afterwards marries her, dies, and she survives him, yet tho' the bond was by the marriage, in some sort, extinguished, yet 'tis said (and we think with justice) that on his death, the bond is revived.

If tenant for life, makes a lease for years, rendering rent, and after the reversion descends to the tenant for life; this is not an extinguishment of the term; but it is otherwise if he have the reversion by purchase. 1 Co. Rep. 96. A jointenant for life purchases the land in reversion, it will extinguish the estate for life for a moiety, and sever the jointure. 2 Rep. 60. Lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their bodies; though they have an estate for life jointly, and several inheritances, yet the estate for life is not extinct: Contra, if it be by several conveyances; as where a lease is made to two for their lives, and after the lessor grants the reversion to them and their heirs, &c. here the life estate will be extinguished. 1 Inst. 182. If one after his title begun to be tenant by the curtesy, make a feoffment in fee upon condition, and enter for the condition broken; the estate is extinct, so that if his wife die, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy. 1 Rep. 18. Where a man hath an estate for his own life, and for another's life at once; the estate pur autre vie will be extinguished in the estate for his own life, which is greater in law than the other. 11 Rep. 87. Dyer 11. See Bro. 409. Moor 94. 2 Nels. Abr. 821. When the freehold cometh to the term, the estate for years is extinct. Nels. Ibid. 820. Where the remainder of a term is granted over to another, if the party in possession purchase the fee-simple, though by this means his interest is extinguished; yet that shall not defeat the reversionary interest. 10 Rep. 52. 2 Nels. 820. A fine, &c. of lands, will extinguish a term: And by purchase of an estate in fee-simple, an estate-tail in land is extinct. 9 Rep. 139. But if a fee-simple and fee-tail meet together by descent, the estate-tail will not be extinguished. 3 Rep. 61. Descent of lands to the same person who has a term, will extinguish the term. Moor 286. When a lessor enters tortiously upon the lessee against his consent, the rent is extinguished. 2 Lev. 143. But it has been adjudged, that rent is not extinct by the entry of the lessor, but only suspended; and revives by the lessee's re-entry. Dyer 361. An infant has a rent, and purchases the land out of which it is issuing; by this the rent will be suspended, but not extinct. Bro. Extinguish. A man lessee for years takes a wife, or woman lessee a husband, that hath the reversion after the lease; here the term is not extinguished. 12 Rep. 81.

There are likewise extinguishments of other kinds, which comes next in their order. As Extinguishment of Common. By purchasing lands wherein a person hath common appendant, the common is extinguished. Cro. Eliz. 594. A commoner releases his common in one acre, it is an extinguishment of the whole common. Show. Rep. 350. And where a person hath common of vicinage, if he incloses any part of the land, all the common is extinct. 1 Brownl. 174.

But if one hath common appendant in a great waste, belonging to his tenant, and the lord improve part of the waste leaving sufficient; if he after make a feoffment to the commoner of the land improved, this will be no extinguishment. Dyer 339. Hobd 172. A commoner aliens part of his land, to which the common doth belong; the common is not extinct, but shall be divided. 2 Shep. Abr. 152. Vide Common.

Extinguishment of Copyhold. As to the extinguishment of copyholds, it is laid down as a general rule, that any act of the copyholder's, which denotes his intention to hold no longer of his lord, and amounts to a determination of his will, is an extinguishment of his copyhold. Hutt. 81. Cro. Eliz. 21. 1 Jon. 41.

As if a copyholder in fee accepts a lease for years of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate; or if the lord leases the copyhold to another, and the copyholder accepts an assignment from the lessee, his copyhold is extinct. Moor 184. 2 Co. 16. b. Godb. 11. 101.

So if a copyholder bargains and sells his copyhold to the lessee for years of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinguished; or if he joins with his lord in a feoffment of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinct, for these are acts which denote his intention to hold no longer by copy. Hutt. 65. 1 Jon. 41. S. C. Godb. 11.

So if a copyholder accepts to hold of his lord, by bill under the lord's hand, this determines his copyhold; so if he accepts an estate for life by parol, if livery, this is an extinguishment; otherwise not; for without livery nothing but an estate at will passes, which cannot merge or extinguish an estate at will. 1 And. 199. Latch. 213.

If one seised of a manor in right of his wife lets lands by indenture for years; this doth not destroy the custom as to the wife; for after the death of her husband she may demise it again by copy. Cro. Eliz. 459.

So if a copyhold is in the hands of a subject, who after becomes King, the copyhold is extinct, for it is below the Majesty of a King to perform such servile services; yet after his decease the next that hath right shall be admitted, and the tenure revived. 2 Sid. 82. 4 Co. 24. Cro. Eliz. 257. See 2 Leon. 208. 4 Co. 26. b. Cro. Eliz. 103. And a copyhold estate is extinct whenever it becomes not demisable by copy. Coke's Copyhold 62.

Extinguishment of Debt. If feme sole debtee take the debtor to husband; or there be two joint obligors in a bond, and the obligee marries one of them; or in case a person is bound to a feme sole and another, and she takes the obligor to husband; in these cases, the debt will be extinguished. 8 Rep. 136. And if a debtor makes the debtee his executor, or him and another executors, and they take the executorship upon them; or if the debtee makes his debtor executor, &c. it is an extinguishment of the debt, and it shall never revive. Plowd. 184. 1 Salk. 304. But where a debtee or debtor executor legally refuseth; or he and others being made executors they all refuse, then the debt is revived again. Plowd. 185.

It seems to be agreed as a general rule, that a creditor's accepting a higher security than he had before, is an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a creditor by simple contract accepts an obligation, this extinguishes the simple contract debt. 1 Roll. Abr. 470, 471, 604. 6 Co. 44.

So if a man accepts a bond for a legacy, he cannot after sue for his legacy in the spiritual court; for by the deed the legacy is extinct, and it is become a mere debt at Common law. Yelv. 38.

So if a bond creditor obtains judgment on the bond, or has judgment acknowledged to him, he cannot afterwards bring an action on the bond; for the debt is drowned in the judgment, which is a security of a higher nature than the bond. 6 Co. 44. b.

But these cases must be understood where the debtor himself enters into these securities; and therefore if a stranger give bond for a simple contract due by another, this does not extinguish the simple contract debt; but if upon making the contract, a stranger gives bond for it, or being present, promises to give bond for it, and after does so, the debt by simple contract is extinguished, the obligation being made upon, or pursuant to the contract. 2 Leon. 110.

But the accepting a security of an inferior nature is by no means an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a bond be given in satisfaction of a judgment. Cro. Jac. 579. 2 Brownl. 29. Cro. Jac. 649, 650.

Also the accepting a security of equal degree is no extinguishment of the first debt; as where an obligee has a second bond given to him; for one deed cannot determine the duty upon another. Cro. Eliz. 304, 716, 727. 1 Brownl. 74. Lit. Rep. 58. Cro. Car. 86.

Though a bond is taken for a simple contract debt, yet if it is after an act of bankruptcy, the simple contract is not extinguished. Stran. 1042.

A person hath 20*l.* due by contract, if he take an obligation for 10*l.* of it, the debt is extinct; and by release of part of a debt due on bond, the whole is gone, and the obligation extinguished. Bro. Contract 80. 1 And. 235.

Extinguishment of Liberties. As to liberties and franchises granted by the King, sometimes they may be extinguished, and sometimes they shall not. Moor 474. When the King grants any privileges, liberties or franchises, which were in his own hands, as parcel of the flowers of the crown; such as bona felenum, fugitivorum & urlagatorum, waifs, strays, deodand, wreck on the sea, &c. if they come to the crown again, they are drowned and extinct in the crown, and the King is seised of them jure coronæ: but if liberties of fairs, markets or other franchises, and jurisdictions, be erected and created by the King, they will not be extinguished, nor their appendances severed from the possessions. 9 Rep. 25. A man has liberties by prescription, if he takes letters patent of them, the prescription will be gone and extinct; for things of a higher determine those of a lower nature 2 H. 7. 5.

Extinguishment of Services. The lord purchases or accepts parcel of the tenancy, out of which an intire service is to be paid or done; by this the whole service will be extinct: but if the service be pro bono publico, then no part of it shall be extinguished; and homage and fealty are not subject to extinguishment, by the lord's purchasing part of the land. 6 Rep. 1, 105. Co. Lit. 149. If the lord and another person do purchase the lands, whereout he is to have services, they are extinct: also by severance of the services, a manor may be extinguished. Co. Lit. 147. 1 And. 257.

Extinguishment of Ways. If a man hath a highway as appendant, and after purchases the land wherein this way is, the way is extinct. Terms de Ley. Though a way of necessity to market, or church or to arable land, &c. is not extinguished by purchase of ground, or unity of possession. 11 H. 7. 25. 1 Inst. 155.

Extirpation. Is a judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lies against a person who when a verdict is found against him for land, &c. doth maliciously overthrow any house, or extirpate any trees upon it. Reg. Jud. 13, 56.

Extorcate. To grub up lands, and reduce them to arable or meadow. Mon. Ang. tom 2. p. 71.

Extortion. (extorsio, from extorqueo, to wrest away) Is an unlawful taking by an officer, &c. by colour of his office, of any money, or valuable thing, from a person where none at all is due, or not so much is due, or before it is due. 1 Inst. 368. 10 Rep. 102. At the Common law, which was affirmed by the statute of Westm. 1. c. 26. it was extortion for any minister of the King, whose office did any way concern the administration and execution of justice, or the common good of the subject, to take any reward for doing his office, except what he received from the King: though reasonable fees for the labour and attendance of officers of the courts of justice are not restrained by statute, which are stated and settled by the respective courts; and it has been thought expedient to allow these officers to take certain immediate fees in many cases. 2 Inst. 209. 3 Inst. 149. 1 Hawk. P. C. 170, 171. The taking of money by virtue of an office, implies the act to be lawful; but to take any money by colour of an office, implies an ill action: and the taking being for expedition of business, is judged by colour of the office, and unlawful. 2 Inst. 206. 1 Inst. 368.

Yet according to some it seems that an officer, who takes a reward which is voluntarily given to him, and which has been usual in certain cases, for the more diligent or expeditious performance of his duty, cannot be said to be guilty of extortion; for without such a premium it would be impossible in many cases to have the laws executed with vigour and success. 2 Inst. 210. 3 Inst. 149. Co. Lit. 368.

But it has been always held, that a promise to pay an officer money for the doing of a thing, which the law will not suffer him to take any thing for, is merely void, however however freely and voluntarily it may appear to have been made. 1 Rol. Abr. 16. 1 Rol. Rep. 313. Noy 76. 1 Jon. 65. Cro. Eliz. 654. Moor 468. Cro. Jac. 103.

There must be a positive charge in cases of extortion, and that the person charged with it took so much extorsive or colore officii; which words are as essential as proditorie or felonice for treason or felony. 2 Salk. 680. Extortion by the Common law is severely punished on indictment by fine and imprisonment, and removal of officers from the offices wherein committed. By the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 30. Officers of justice, &c. guilty of extortion, are to render treble value; and there are divers statutes for punishing extortions of sheriffs, bailiffs, gaolers, clerks of the assize, and of the peace, attornies and solicitors, &c. 23 Hen. 6. c. 7. c. 9. 33 Hen. 8. c. 24. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. 10 & 11 H. 3. c. 23. The extortion of officers of the customs, distraining merchants for undue charges, &c. See Stat. 28 H. 6. c. 5. Officers may be jointly indicted of extortion, as they may be jointly guilty of the offence. 1 Salk. 382. Against attornies for extortion, action may be brought, and the party grieved shall have treble damages and costs; but information will not lie on the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 7. Sid. 434. 2 Nels. 822. If an officer by terrifying another in his office, take more than his ordinary fees or duties, he is guilty of extortion; which may be compared to unlawful usury, &c. And Crompton says, that wrong done by any man is a trespass; but excessive wrong is properly extortion. Crompt. Just. 8. And extortion has been deemed more odious than robbery, because it carries an appearance of truth; and is often accompanied with perjury in officers, &c. by breaking their oaths of office.

The place where the extortion was committed should be set down in the declaration. See Pl. C. 200. Stradling v. Morgan.

The sum certain extorted must be particularly set forth, and he cannot say, that the defendant did extort divers sums from divers men generally; and so it was adjudged in Reynold's case; per Richardson Ch. J. Godb. 438. pl. 583. Micb. 4 Car. in the Star-Chamber; Floyd v. Cannon.

Extortion, in a large sense, is taken for any oppression by power or pretence of right. 1 Hawk. P. C. 170. See Exaction.

Extracta Curia. The issues or profits of holding a court, arising from the customary fees, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 572.

Extracts of writings or records, being notes thereof. See Extracts.

Extrajudicial. Is when judgment is had in a cause, not depending in that court where given; or wherein the judge has not jurisdiction.

Extra-parochial. Signifies to be out of any parish; and where any thing is privileged and exempt from the duties of a parish.

If a place be a reputed parish, and have churchwardens and overseers of the poor, it is within 43 Eliz. c. 2. though in truth it be no parish; but if it be merely extraparochial, as the justices cannot send to such a place, so they cannot send from it; as it is exempt from receiving, so it shall not have the benefit of removing, for they have not proper persons to complain; persons in extraparochial places must subsist on private charity, as all persons did at Common law before 43 Eliz. c. 2. which enacts, That every parish shall keep their own poor; and that act does not extend to extraparochial places. Per Holt Ch. J. 2 Salk. 487. pl. 48. Trin. 12 W. 3. B. R. Inhabitants of the Forest of Dean v. The Parish of Linton. Sed vide post.

By virtue of 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 12. sect. 21. The justices may exercise the powers given by 43 Eliz. c. 2. and that act, in all extraparochial places containing more houses than one, so as to come under the denomination of a vill or township. Adjudged by Parker Ch. J. and tot. cur. 2 Salk. 486. pl. 44. in Marg. cites 11 Ann. B. R. Stoke-Lane Inhabitants v. Doling.

The statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2. extends to extraparochial places, and so do all poor acts, when such places are within the same mischief as other parishes, and shall be subject to the controul of the justices of peace, and the penalty for not meeting in the church shall never be inflicted on the overseers of the poor, because the inhabitants of such places have no church to meet in. Most of the forests in England are extraparochial, and so is Christ-Church in Oxford; but they ought to maintain their own poor. 8 Mod. 39. Pasch. 7 Geo. Rufford parish's case.

Extrabagants. Are certain constitutions of popes, so called, because they are extra corpus canonicum gratiani, five extra decretorum libros vagantur. Du Cange.

Extum. Reliques in churches and tombs.—Cartular. Abbat. Glasston. MS. f. 15.

Exuperare. To overcome; and it sometimes signifies to apprehend or take, as, exuperare vivum vel mortuum. Leg. Edm. c. 2.

Ey. Insula, an island: and where the names of places end in ey, it denotes them an island. As Ramsey, is the island of Rams; Sheppy, the island of Sheep; Hersey, the island of Harts, &c.

Every of hawks. See Aery.

Eyre. Vide Eire, and Justices in Eyre.

F.

F Is a letter wherewith felons, &c. are branded and marked with an hot iron, on their being admitted to the benefit of clergy. See the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 13.

Fabrick Lands. Are lands given towards the rebuilding or repairing of cathedral and other churches; for in ancient times, almost every person gave by his will, more or less, to the fabrick of the cathedral or parish church where he lived; and lands thus given were called fabrick lands, being ad fabricam reparandum: these lands are mentioned in the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 8.

Facta Armorum. Feats of arms, jousts, tournaments, &c. —Rex Ricardus in Angliam transfens statuit facta armorum, quæ vulgo torneamenta dicuntur; in Angliâ exerceri. Hist. Joh. Brompton, in R. 1. p. 1261.

Fatto. In fact; as where any thing is actually done, &c. See De fatto.

Factor. Is a merchant's agent residing beyond the seas, or in any remote parts, constituted by letter or power of attorney: if the principal give the factor a general commission to act for the best, he may do for him as he thinks fit; but otherwise he may not. Though in commissions at this time, it is common to give the factor power in express words, to dispose of the merchandize, and deal therein as if it were his own; by which the factor's actions will be excused, though they occasion loss to his principal. Leg. Mercat. 151.

A bare commission to a factor to sell and dispose of merchandize, is not a sufficient power for the factor to entrust any person, or to give a further day of payment than the day of the sale of the goods; for in this case, on the delivery of the one he ought to receive the other: and by the general power of doing as if it were his own, he may not trust an unreasonable time, viz. beyond one or three months, &c. the usual time allowed for the commodities disposed of; if he doth, he shall be answerable to his principal out of his own estate. 1 Bull. 103. 7 Jar. 1. B. R.

If a factor buys goods on account of his principal where he is used so to do, the contract of the factor shall oblige the principal to a performance of the bargain; and he is the proper person to be prosecuted, on non-performance; but if the factor enters into a charter-party of affreightment with a master of a ship, the contract obliges him only; unless he lades aboard generally his principal's goods, when both the principal and lading become liable for the freight, and not the factor. Goldb. 137.

Goods remitted to a factor ought to be carefully preserved; and he is accountable for all lawful goods which shall come to his hands; yet if the factor buy goods for his principal, and they receive damage after in his possession, thro' no negligence of his, the principal shall bear the loss; and if a factor be robbed, he shall be discharged in account brought against him by his principal. 4 Rep. 83. If the factor has orders from his principal not to sell any goods but in such a manner, and he breaks those orders, he is liable to the loss or damage that shall be received thereby: and where any goods are bought, or exchanged without orders, it is at the merchant's curtesy whether he will accept of them, or turn them on his factor's hands. Lex Mercat. 154, 155.

When a factor has bought, or sold goods pursuant to orders, he is immediately to give advice of it to his principal; lest the former orders should be contradicted before the time of his giving notice, whereby his reputation might possibly suffer: and where a factor has made a considerable profit for his principal, he must take due care in the disposition of the same; for without commission, or particular orders, he is answerable. Ibid. A factor shall suffer for not observing of orders; and no factor acting for another man's account in merchandize, can justify receding from the orders of his principal, though there may be a probability of advantage by it: if he make any composition with creditors without orders, he shall answer it to his principal. Ibid.

Factors ought to observe the contents of all letters from their principals, or written to them by their order. A merchant is answerable in action upon the case for the deceits of his factor, in selling goods abroad: and as somebody must be a loser by such deceit, it is more reason that he who employs, and puts confidence in the deceiver, should lose, than a stranger. 1 Salk. 289.

Factors are liable to the statutes concerning bankruptcy, 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 39. Factor not to buy cattle on his own account, 31 Geo. 2. c. 40. sect. 11.

It was held by Lee Ch. J. that though a factor has power to sell, and thereby bind his principal, yet he cannot bind or affect the property of the goods by pledging them as a security for his own debt, though there is the formality of a bill of parcels and a receipt. Stran. 1178. Where goods are sold by a factor at his own risque, the vendee is not answerable to the owner. Stran. 1182.

It hath been ruled in equity, that if one employs a factor, and intrusts him with the disposal of merchandize, and the factor receives the money, and dies indebted, to debts of a higher nature, and it appears by evidence, that this money was vested in other goods, and remains unpaid, those goods shall be taken as part of the merchant's estate, and not as the factor's; but if the factor have the money, it shall be looked upon as the factor's estate, and must first answer the debts of his creditors, &c. for as money has no ear-mark, equity will follow that in behalf of him who employed the factor. 1 Salk. 160.

If a person doth employ a factor to sell goods, who sells them on credit, and before the money is paid dies indebted, more than his assets will pay; this money shall be paid to the principal merchant, and not to the factor's administrator, but thereout must be deducted what was due for commission: for a factor is in nature only of a trustee for his principal, 2 Vern. 638.

Factorage, Is the wages or allowance paid and made to a factor by the merchant. The gain of factorage is certain, however the success proves to the merchant; but the commissions and allowances vary according to the customs and distance of the country, in the several places where factors are resident: in the West-Indies, the commission runs at about 8 per cent. but in France and Spain, &c. not above 2 per cent. and in Holland but one and a half per cent. Lex Mercat. 155.

Fatum, A man's own act, fact, or feat, and particularly used in the Civil law, for any thing stated and made certain. See Fait.

Faculty. (facultas) As restrained from the original and active sense, to a particular understanding in law, is used for a privilege granted to a man by favour and indulgence, to do that which by law he ought not to do. And for the granting of these, there is an especial court under the Archbishop of Canterbury, called the Court of the Faculties; and the chief officer thereof the Master of the Faculties; who has power by the Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 21. to grant dispensations; as to marry persons without the banns first asked, (and every diocesan may make the like grants) to ordain a deacon under age, for a son to succeed the father in his benefice, one to have two, or more benefices incompatible, &c. And in this court are registered the certificates of bishops and noblemen granted to their chaplains, to qualify them for pluralities and non-residence. 4 Inst. 337.

Fasting-men, In Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 100. are rendered to signify vassals: but Corwel thinks they rather mean pledges or bondsmen; which, by the customs of the Saxons, were fast bound to answer for one another's peaceable behaviour. See Festing-men.

Fag, A knot or excrescency in cloth; and in this sense it is used in the statute 4 Ed. 4. cap. 1.

Faggot, A badge wore in the times of popery, by persons who had recanted and abjured what the then powers adjudged heresy: those poor wretches that opposed the doctrine of the arbitrary priesthood, were condemned not only to the pittance of carrying a faggot, as an emblem of what they had merited, to such an appointed place of solemnity; but for a more durable mark of infamy, they were to have the sign of a faggot embroidered on the sleeve of their upper garment: and if this badge or faggot was at any time left off, it was often alledged as the sign of apostacy.

Faiba, Malice or deadly feud. Leg. H. 1. c. 88.

Failure of Record, Is when an action is brought against a man, who alleges in his plea matter of record in bar of the action, and avers to prove it by the record; but the plaintiff saith, Nul tiel record, viz. denies there is any such record: upon which, the defendant hath day given him by the court to bring it in; and if he fails to do it, then he is said to fail of his record, and the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover. Terms de Ley. In debt upon an escape, the plaintiff declared, that he had obtained a judgment in an inferior court, upon which the defendant was taken, and the sheriff suffered him to escape; the defendant pleaded Nul tiel record, and being at issue, the record was certified at the day; by which it appeared that there were several variances in the continuances and process; but because the plaint, count, and judgment certified, agreed with the plaintiff's declaration, it was held that those variances made no failure of record. Hob. 179. 2 Nels. Abr. 823.

In formedon for the manor of Isfield, the defendant pleaded in bar a common recovery of the said manor against the donee in tail, who replied Nul tiel record, and the defendant having brought in the record, it appeared that the recovery was of the manor of Isfield; and adjudged, that this being in a common recovery, shall be no failure being the mispleading small variance, but shall be amended, a fine with proclamations &c. 5 Rep. 46. And where Nul tiel record, on which it was brought upon an issue of the year of the King was left out in the proclamation made in one term, as it was expressed in the proclamations of the other two terms, they were held to be right, and the omission no failure of record. Dyer 234. If a judgment, &c. be reversed for error, Nul tiel record may be pleaded. 8 Rep. 142. And where a tenor only of a record, &c. is brought in, it is a failure of record. Dyer 187. 2 Nels. 824.

Faine-Don, (Fr. feinte) A feigned action; such that altho' the words of the writ are true, yet for certain causes the plaintiff hath no title to recover thereby; but a false action is properly where the words of the writ are false. 1 Inst. 361.

Faint-Pleader, Is a fraudulent, false or collusory manner of pleading, to the deceit of a third person; against which, among other things, was made the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 19.

Fair-Pleader, Or not pleading fairly, &c. See Beau-pleader.

Fair, (Fr. feire, Lat. nundina) A solemn or greater sort of market, granted to any town by privilege, for the more speedy and commodious providing of such things as the subject needeth; and the utterance of what commodities we abound in above our own uses and occasions: and both our English and the French word seems to come from seria, because it is incident to a fair that persons shall be privileged from being molested or arrested in it, for any other debt, or contract than what was contracted in the same, same, or at least was promised to be paid there. Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2. And 1 R. 3. c. 6.

 Herein is to be considered,

- I. The right to a fair, and the manner of holding it.
- II. The duty, power, and interest of the owners of fairs.
- III. How far a sale in a fair changes the property of a thing therein sold.

I. Of the right to a fair, and the manner of holding the same.

The first institution of fairs and markets seems plainly to be for the better regulation of trade and commerce, and that merchants and traders may be furnished with such commodities as they want, at a particular mart, without that trouble and loss of time, which must necessarily attend travelling about from place to place; and therefore as this is a matter of universal concern to the commonwealth; so it hath always been held, that no person can claim a fair or market, unless it be by grant from the King, or by prescription, which supposes such a grant. 2 Inst. 220. 3 Mod. 123.

And therefore if any person sets up any such fair or market, without the King's authority, a quo warranto lies against him; and the persons who frequent such fair, &c. may be punished by fine to the King. 3 Mod. 127.

Also it seems, that if the King grants a patent for holding a fair or market, without a writ of ad quod damnum executed and returned, that the same may be repealed by scire facias; for though such fairs and markets are a benefit to the commonwealth; yet too great a number of them may become nuisances to the publick, as well as a detriment to those who have more antient grants. 3 Lev. 222.

Fairs are generally kept once or twice in the year; and it has been observed, that fairs were at first occasioned by the resort of people to the feast of dedication, and therefore in most places the fairs, by old custom, are on the same day with the wake or festival of that saint to whom the church was dedicated; and for the same reason kept in the church-yard, till by authority restrained. 2 Inst. 221. Blount. The court of Piepowder is incident to every fair, &c. By the statute 2 Ed. 3. cap. 15. Fairs are not to be kept longer than they ought by the lords thereof, on pain of their being seized into the King's hands, until such lords have paid a fine for the offence; and proclamation is to be made how long fairs are to continue: also no merchant shall sell any goods, under the dise at a fair after the time of the sale of the goods sold, penalty of forfeiting to the prosecutor, and the rest to one fourth. 5 Ed. 3. c. 5. Any citizen of London may carry his goods or merchandise to any fair or market in England at his pleasure. See 3 Hen. 7. c. 9.

It seems clearly agreed, that if a person hath a right to a fair or market, and another erects a fair or market so near his, that it becomes a nuisance to his fair, &c. that for this detriment and injury done to him, an action on the case lies; for it is implied in the King's grant, that it should be no prejudice to another. 2 Rol. Abr. 140.

Also, although the new market be held on a different day, yet an action on the case lies; for this, by forestalling the antient market, may be a greater injury to the owner, than if held on the same day with his. 2 Saund. 172. 1 Mod. 69.

If a man hath a fair or market, and a stranger disturbs those who are coming to buy or sell there, by which he loses his toll, or receives some prejudice in the profits arising from his fair, &c. an action on the case lies. 1 Rol. Abr. 106. 2 Vent. 26, 28. So if upon a sale in a fair a stranger disturbs the lord in taking the toll, an action upon the case lies for this. 1 Rol. Abr. 106.

The King is the sole judge where fairs and markets ought to be kept; and therefore it is said, that if he grants a market to be kept in such a place, which happens not to be convenient for the country, yet the subjects can go to no other; and if they do, the owner of the soil where they meet is liable to an action at the suit of the grantee of the market. 3 Mod. 123. But if no place be limited for keeping a fair by the King's grant, the grantees may keep it where they please, or rather where they can most conveniently and if it be so limited, they may keep it in what part of such place they will. 3 Mod. 108.

By the 13 Ed. 1. st. 2. c. 6. No fairs or markets shall be kept in churchyards.

At what time fairs are to be held, see 27 H. 6. c. 5. 1 Car. 1. c. 1. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. A. also 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 21. 9 Ann. c. 23.

II. Of the duty, power, and interest of the owners of fairs.

Owners and governors of fairs are to take care that every thing be sold according to just weight and measure, who for that and other purposes may appoint a clerk of the fair or market, who is to mark and allow all such weights, and for his duty herein can only take his reasonable and just fees. See 4 Inst. 274. Moor 523. 1 Salk 327.

Fairs and markets are such franchises as may be forfeited, as if the owners of them hold them contrary to their charter, as by continuing them a longer time than the charter admits, by disuse, and by extorting fees and duties where none are due, or more than are justly due. 2 Inst. 220. Finch 164. 3 Mod. 108.

As to their interest, it arises chiefly from tolls. Toll payable at a fair or market is a reasonable sum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon sale of things tollable within the fair or market, or for stallage, pikeage, or the like. 2 Inst. 222. 2 Jon. 207.

But this is not incident to a fair or market without special grant; for where it is not granted, such a fair or market is accounted a free fair or market. 2 Inst. 220. Cro. Eliz. 559.

Toll is a matter of private benefit to the owner of the fair or market, and not incident to them; therefore if the King grants a fair or market, and grants no toll, the patentee can have none, and such fair or market is counted free. Cro. Eliz. 558. 2 Inst. 220. S. P. 2 Lutw. 1336. S. P. resolved.

Also if the King, at the time he grants a fair or market, grants a toll, and the same is outrageous and excessive, the grant of the toll is void, and the same becomes free. 2 Inst. 222. Lutw. 1336. But the King, after he has granted a fair or market, may grant that the toll may have a reasonable toll; but this must be in consideration of some benefit accruing from it to those who trade and merchandise in such fair or market. 2 Inst. 221.

No toll shall be paid for any thing brought to the fair or market, before the same is sold, unless it be by custom time out of mind, and upon such sale the toll is to be paid by the buyer; and therefore my Lord Coke says, that a fair or market by prescription is better than one by grant. 2 Inst. 221.

And by Westm. 1. cap. 31. "Touching them that take outrageous toll, contrary to the common custom of the realm in market towns, it is provided, that if any do so in the King's town, which is let in fee-farm, the King shall seize into his own hand the franchise of the market; and if it be another's town, and the same be done by the lord of the town, the King shall do in like manner; and if it be done by a bailiff, or any mean officer, without the commandment of his lord, he shall restore to the plaintiff as much more, for the outrageous taking, as he had of him, if he carried away his toll, and shall have forty days imprisonment."

But where by custom a toll is due upon the sale of any goods in a fair or market, and he who ought to pay it refuses, an action on the case lies against him. 1 Rol. Abr. 103, 104, 106. But see 3 Lev. 400. where this point is doubted, because toll is quasi a debt, for which debt, or an assumpsit lies.

Some persons however are exempt from payment of toll, and if the King or any of his progenitors have granted to any to be discharged of toll, either generally, or specially; this grant is good to discharge him of all tolls to the King's own fairs or markets, and of the tolls, which, together with any fair or market have been granted after such grant of discharge; but cannot discharge tolls formerly due to subjects either by grant or prescription, 2 Inst. 221.

Also the King himself shall not pay toll for any of his goods; and if any be taken, it is punishable within the statute Westm. 1. cap. 31. 2 Inst. 221. So tenants in ancient demesne are free and quit from all manner of tolls in fairs and markets, whether such tenants hold in fee, or life, years, or at will. 4 Inst. 269. 2 Inst 221. 1 Rel. Abr. 321.

But this privilege does not extend to him who is a merchant, and gets his living by buying and selling, but is annexed to the person in respect of the land, and to those things which grow and are the produce of the land. F. N. B. 228. 2 Leon. 191. Cro. Eliz. 227. 2 Inst. 221. 1 Rob. A'r. 321-2.

Owners of fairs and markets are to appoint toll-takers or book-keepers, on pain of 40*s.* and they shall enter and give account of horses sold, &c. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7. and 31 Eliz. c. 12.

Falbage, (Faldagium) Is a privilege which lords and lords antiently reserved to themselves, of setting up folds for sheep in any fields within their manors, for the better manurance of the same; and this was usually done not only with their own, but their tenant's sheep, which they call setla faldæ. This faldage is termed in some places a fold course; and in old charters faldsoca, i. e. libertas faldæ, or faldagii.

Falducursus, A sheep walk, or feed for sheep. Vent. Rep. 139.

Faldbrey, Faldbreye. A fee or rent paid by some customary tenants for liberty to fold their sheep upon their own land.

False Witness, If brought against one, whereby he is cast into prison, and dies pending the suit, the law giveth no remedy in this case, because the truth or falsehood of the matter cannot appear before 'tis tried: and if the plaintiff be barred or nonsuited, at Common law, regularly all the punishment is amercement. Jenk. Cent. 161. See Faint-Action.

Falſe Claim, By the foreſt laws, is where a man claims more than is his due, and is amerced and puniſhed for the ſame. A perſon had a grant by charter of the tenth of all the veniſon in the foreſt of Lancaſter, viz. In carnis tantum, ſed non in corio; and becauſe he made a falſe claim, by alledging that he ought to have the tenth of all veniſon within the foreſt, as well in carne, as in corio, therefore he was in miſericordia de decima venationis ſuæ in corio non percipiendo. Manwood, cap. 25. num. 3.

False form, In proceedings at law, is aided by a verdict; though not where there is want of certainty, 6 C. 1 Keb. 734, 876.

False Imprisonment, (falsum imprisonamentum) Is a trespass committed against a person, by arresting and imprisoning him without just cause, contrary to law; or where a man is unlawfully detained without legal process: and it is also used for a writ which is brought for this trespass. If a person be any way unlawfully detained, it is false imprisonment; and considerable damages are recoverable in these actions. 1 Inst. 124. The law favours liberty, and the freedom of a man from imprisonment, so that false imprisonment is a great offence; and lawful imprisonment is so far pitied, that by several statutes, as well as by the Common law, defaults are saved on that account. Wood's Inst. 16.

The King cannot give any power to imprison, where imprisonment may not be awarded by the Common law. 2 Brownl. 18. And if a person is imprisoned on any by-law of a corporation, &c. it is false imprisonment: because a by-law to imprison is against Magna Charta, quod nullus liber homo imprisonetur, &c. 5 Rep. 64. It is the same of a custom to imprison persons; but 'tis incident to a court of record to imprison. 2 Nelf. Abr. 827.

If a justice of peace, &c. commits a person without just cause, it is false imprisonment; and a constable cannot imprison a man at his pleasure, to compel him to do any thing required by law; but is to carry him before a justice. Ibid. 1 Leon. 327. Where any justice sends for a man, and commits him to gaol without any examination, the party may have action of false imprisonment against him; and if a justice of peace sends a general warrant to arrest a person, and say not for what; action lies against him, but not against the officer. Mich. 8 Jac. B. R.

In false imprisonment brought against an officer of an inferior court, if he justify an arrest by virtue of their warrant, he must intitle the court to jurisdiction, or the action lies against him. Marsh, pl. 195. If erroneous process issues out of a court that hath jurisdiction of the matter, and the ^{clerk} or officer executes it, whereby the party is imprisoned: but ^{he} shall be excused in action of false imprisonment: but ^{if} he shall be excused in action of false issues hath no cognizance wth out of which the process for in such case the whole proceeding is it is otherwise; and the officer will not be excused. 10 Rep. 730 judice,

If an arrest is made by one who is no legal officer, it is false imprisonment, for which action lies. 1 Inst. 69. An action of false imprisonment lies against a bailiff for arresting a person without warrant, though he afterwards receives a warrant: and so it is if he arrest one after the return of the writ is past; for it is then without writ. 2 Inst. 53. If a sheriff or any of his bailiffs arrests a man out of his county, &c. or after the sheriff is discharged of his office; or a person arrests one on a justice's warrant after his commission is determined, &c. it will be false imprisonment. Dyer 41. And if the sheriff, after he hath arrested a man lawfully, when a legal discharge comes to him, as a superfedeas, or the like, do not then discharge the party, he may be sued in this action. 2 R. 1. 12. In cas the plaintiff in a suit brings an unlawful warrant to a sheriff, and shews him the defendant, requiring him to make the arrest; or if he bring a good warrant, and and direct the sheriff to a wrong man, &c. for this the action of false imprisonment will lie against both. Bro. Tresp. 99. 307. Faux Impr. 19. 1 Brownl. 211. If a warrant be granted to arrest, or apprehend a person, where there are several of the name, and the bailiff or other officer arrests a wrong person, he is liable to action of false imprisonment; and he is to take notice of the right party at his peril. Dyer 244. Moor 457.

A man arrested on a Sunday may bring his action of false imprisonment; but one has been refused to be released in such a case. 5 Mod. 95. If a bailiff demand more than his just fees, when offered him, and keep a person in custody thereupon, it is false imprisonment and punishable: and if a sheriff, or gaoler, keeps a prisoner in gaol, after his acquittal, for any thing except for fees, it is unlawful imprisonment. 2 Inst. 482. Wood 16. If a man falsely imprisons A. B. and the gaoler detains him till he pays so much money, he shall have action of false imprisonment, and taking so much money from him against such person: and it is illegal to use a lawful means for oppression. Mod. Caf. 179.

Unlawful or false imprisonment is sometimes called duress of imprisonment, where one is wrongfully imprisoned till he seals a bond, &c. 2 Inst. 482. If a person bind himself to pay money; and if he do not pay it, that the other shall imprison him; if he pays it not, and the other doth imprison him, it is false imprisonment. 23 E. 3. 3. And where a man owes me money, or hath done any trespass, &c. and I imprison him for it, without order of law, he may bring false imprisonment against me. F. N. B. 88.

An imprisonment will be unlawful, and give this action, altho' the cause be good, when he that makes it doth the same without any colour of authority; or if he has a colour, yet no good authority, from the court, &c. or where a court or officer hath power, but do not well make it out; or when the authority is well made forth, and not rightly pursued and executed. 4 Rep. 64. 8 Rep. 67. Dyer 242. And all persons male or female, that have a hand in a wrong imprisonment, shall be sued in action of false imprisonment; and the party grieved may sue any one of them for it. 1 Inst. 57. *Bro. False Judgment, (Falsum Judicium) It is a writ that lieth where false judgment is given in the county-court, court baron, or other courts not of record F. N. B. 17. 18. This writ may be brought on a judgment in a plea, real or personal: and for errors in the proceedings of inferior courts; or where they proceed without having jurisdiction, writ of false judgment lieth: though the plaintiff assign errors in a writ of false judgment, he shall not say, In hoc erratum est, &c. but unde queritur diversimodo sibi falsum judicium factum fuisse (Judicium in hoc, &c. Moor 73. 2 Nell. Abr. 829. If writ of false judgment abate for any fault in the writ, the plaintiff shall not have Scire facias ad audiend. Errores, upon the record certified, because it comes without an original: but if the plaintiff dies, and false judgment is given in the inferior court, his heir shall have a Sci. fac. ad audiend. Error against him who recovered upon that record which is removed into C. B. And where the plaintiff in a writ of false judgment is nonsuit, it was formerly a question, whether the other party shall sue execution upon this record so removed against the plaintiff, without suing out a Scire facias; but it has been adjudged, that he may do it. Hill. 23 Hen. 6. New Nat. Br. 39.

When a record is removed into B. R. by writ of false judgment, if the party alleges variance between the record removed, and that on which judgment was given, the trial shall be by those who were present in court when the record was made up. 2 Lutw. 957. Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 4. A man shall not have a writ of false judgment but in a court where there are suitors; for if there be no suitors, there the record cannot be certified by them. New Nat. Br. 40. A tenant at will, according to the custom of the manor, which is tenant by copy of court roll, shall not have a writ of false judgment upon a judgment given against him: but where false judgment is given on a writ of justicies, directed to the sheriff, the party grieved shall have a faux judgment; although the judgment be for debt, or trespass above the sum of 40 s. Ibid.

Where a record of a judgment in the county-court was vicious, and the judgment reversed in C. B. the suitors were ordered to be amerced a mark, and the county clerk fined 5 l. And if a plaintiff in an inferior court declare for more than 40 s. Judgment shall be reversed by writ of false judgment: but where damages are laid under that sum, costs may make it amount to more. 1 Mod. 249. 2 Mod. 102, 206.

Upon false judgment before bailiffs, or others who hold plea by prescription, in every sum in debt by bill before them, a party shall not have a writ of false judgment; but a writ of error thereupon. M. 4 E. 4. For defaults of tenants for life, in writs of right, &c. Faux judgment lies by him in reversion: and this writ may be brought against a stranger to the judgment, if he be tenant of the land. A judgment shall be intended good till reversed by writ of false judgment, &c. See Accedas ad Curiam, and Attaint.

False Latin. Before the late statute for turning law proceedings into English, if a Latin word was significant though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine, should not be made void by it: but if the word was not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. 5 Rep. 121. 2 Nell. 830. Vide Latin.

False News. Spreading false news, to make discord between the King and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, is punished by common law, with fine and imprisonment, which is confirmed by statutes Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 34. 2 Ric. 2. st. 1. c. 5. And 12 Ric. 1. c. 11. See 2 Inst. 226. 3 Inst. 198.

False Oath. See Perjury.

False Plea. In præcipe quod reddat against two, if the one comes and takes the intire tenancy upon him, upon which they are at issue, and it is found against the tenant, by this he shall lose his moiety; for it is found against the tenant for his part, because it is tried per pais upon issue; contra of plea to the writ by demurrer. Note the difference. Br. Peremptory, pl. 73. cites 8 Ed. 3. 17.

Plaintiff in a suit in Chancery against an executor, shall have the same advantage thereof, as if the same plea were found false by verdict at law; and shall have all the same consequences here, as follow on a false plea at law to all intents. Mich. 26 Car. 2. 2 Chanc. Cases 201. Parker v. Dee. See Plea.

False Prophecy. See Prophecy.

False Return. On a false return by a mayor, &c. to a mandamus, or by a sheriff, &c. to a writ, a special action on the case will lie. See Black Com. 3 V. 111, 163.

False tokens. As where persons get money or goods into their hands, by forged letters, or other counterfeit means, is punishable by imprisonment, &c. by Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 1. See Cheats and Counterfeits.

False Verdict. A writ of attaint lieth, to inquire whether a jury of 12 men have given a false verdict; that so the judgment following thereupon may be reversed. It is allowed in almost every action except in a writ of right. See statutes 1 Ed. 3. c. 6. 5 Ed. 3. c. 7. 28 Ed. 3. c. 8. 34 Ed. 3. c. 7. 9 Ric. 2. c. 3. Black. Com. 3 V. 403. Quær. If it would would not lie on a verdict, upon an information, as the defendant hath only the benefit of one jury? consequently is found guilty only by one jury.

Falsify, Seems to signify as much as to prove a thing to be false. Perk. 383.

Falsifying a Record. A person that purchases land of another, who is afterwards outlawed of felony, &c. may falsify the record, not only as to the time wherein the felony is supposed to have been committed, but also as to the point of the offence: but where a man is found guilty by verdict, a purchaser cannot falsify as to the offence; though he may for the time, where the party is found guilty generally in the indictment, &c. because the time is not material upon evidence. 2 Illok. P. C. 456. And any judgment given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, may be falsified by shewing the special matter, without writ of error. Ibid. Also where a man is attainted of treason or felony, if he be afterwards pardoned by parliament, the attainder may be falsified, by him or his heir, without plea. Ibid.

Falsifying a Recovery, Issue in tail may falsify a recovery suffered by tenants for life, &c. And it has been held, that a person may falsify a recovery had by the issue in tail, where an estate tail is before bound by a fine. 2 Nils. Abr. 831. But where there was tenant for life, remainder in tail, and reversion in fee, tenant for life suffered a common recovery, in which he in remainder was vouched, and the uses were declared to him, who had the remainder in tail; it was adjudged, that by the recovery all remainders and reversions were barred, and that they could not falsify this recovery. 10 Rep. 43.

He in reversion suffered a common recovery, and declared the uses; his heir shall not falsify it by pleading that his father had nothing at the time of the recovery, because he is estopped to say he is not tenant to the præcipe. Godb. 189. An infant brought an assise in B. R. Pending which action the tenant brought an assise against the infant in C. B. for the same land, and had judgment by default, which he pleaded in bar to the assise brought by the infant; who set forth all this matter in his replication, and that the demandant at the time of the second writ brought was tenant of the land, and prayed that he might falsify this recovery; and it was held that he might, because he could not have writ of error, or attain. Godb. 271. 2 Cro. 264. It has been determined, that a recovery is not so firm, but it may be falsified in point of recovery of the thing itself, between the same parties. Ibid.

Falsifying a Verdict. Where in any real action, there is a verdict against tenant in tail, the issue can never falsify such verdict in the point directly tried; but only in a special manner, as by saying that some evidence was omitted, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 1050.

Fardel of Land, (Fardelle Terræ) Is generally accounted the fourth part of a Yard-Land; but according to Noy, (in his Compleat Lawyer, p. 57.) It is an eighth part only, for there he says that two fardels of land make a nook, and four nooks a yard-land.

Farding-deal, (Quadrantata terræ) Is the fourth part of an acre: and besides quadrantata terræ, we read of obolata, denariata, solidata, and librata terræ, which probably arise in proportion of quantity from the farding-deal, as an half-penny, penny, shilling, or pound in money, rise in value; and then mult obolata he half an acre, denariata an acre, solidata twelve acres, and librata terræ twelve score acres of land: but some hold obolata to be but half a perch, and denariata a perch; and I find viginti libratis terræ vel redditus, Reg. Orig. 94, 248. whereby seems it that librata terræ is so much as yields 20s. per annum. F. N. B. 87. Spelm. Gloss.

Farlingarti, Are whoremongers and adulterers. Saxon.

Farm, or Ferm, (Lat. firma, from the Sax. ferum. i. e. Food, and fermain to feed or yield victuals) signifies a large messuage and land, taken by lease under a certain yearly rent, payable by the tenant; and in former days, about the time of William the First, called the Conqueror, these rents were reserved to the lords in victuals and other necessaries arising from the land; but afterwards in the reign of King Hen. 1. were altered and converted into money. Terms de Ley. A farm is most properly the chief messuage in a village; and it is a collective word, consisting of divers things gathered into one, as a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, wood, common, &c. Locare ad firmam is sometimes taken for as much as to let or set to farm; and the reason of it may be in respect of the firm or sure hold the tenants thereof have above tenants at will. A farm in Lancashire, is called Ferm-holt; in the north a Tuck, and in Essex a Wike: And ferm is taken in various ways. Flowerd. 195.

Farmer, Is he that tenants a farm, or is lessee thereof. Terms de Ley. And it is said generally every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called Farmer, as he is that occupieth the farm: as this word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandry, husbandman, is the proper addition of a farmer. 2 Hawk. 188. By statute, no parson or spiritual person may take farms or leases of land, on pain of forfeiting 10 l. per month, &c. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. And no person whatsoever shall take above two farms together, and they to be in the same parish, under the penalty of 3 s. 4 d. a week. 25 H. 8. c. 13. 32 H. 8. c. 28. s. 4.

Farthing, Was the fourth part of a Saxon penny, as it is now of the English penny.

Farthing of Gold, (Quasi fourth thing) A coin used in ancient times, containing in value the fourth part of a Noble. It is mentioned in the stat. 9 H. 5. c. 7. where it is ordained, that there shall be good just weight of the Noble, Half Noble, and Farthing of Gold, &c.

Farthing of Land, Seems to differ from Farthing-deal; for it is a large quantity of land: in a survey book of the manor of West Slapton in Com. Devon is entered thus: A. B. holds six farthings of land at 126 l. per annum.

Farundel of land, the same with farding-deal.

Fassus, (Fr. Faisseau) A faggot of wood. Mod. Ang. Tom. 2. p. 238.

Fast-Days, Are days of fasting and humiliation, appointed to be observed by publick authority. There are fixed days of fasting enjoined by our church, at certain times in the year, mentioned in ancient statutes, particularly the 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. and 5 El. c. 5. And by 12 Car. 2. c. 14. the 30th of January is ordained to be a day of fasting and repentance, for the murder of King Charles I. Other days of fasting which are not fixed, are occasionally appointed by the King's Proclamation. Though abstinence from eating of flesh is required on those days, by our laws; it is made penal to affirm that any forbearing of flesh, is necessary to salvation. 1 Hawk. P. C. 8. See Embring Days.

Fastermans, Among the Saxons were pledges. Leg. Ed. Confess. cap. 38. Vide Fastingsmen.

Fat, or Wate, Is a large wooden vessel used by maltsters and brewers, for measuring of malt with expedition, containing eight bushels or a quarter. Stat. 1 H. 5. c. 10. and 11 H. 6. c. 8. It is also a leaden vessel or pan, made use of by brewers to run their wort into, and by others for the making of salt at Droitwich in the county of Worcester.

Fatua mulier, A whore. Cum quadam fatua muliere nudus in lecto cum nuda extitit deprehensus. Du Fresne.

Faufetum, A faucet, musical pipe or flute.—Organum & decentum faufetum in divino officio omnibus nostris, &c. interdicimus.

Fautors, Are favourers or supporters of others; abettors of crimes, &c.

Feal. The tenants by knight service did swear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e. to be faithful and loyal. Spel. de Parliament 59.

Fealty, (Fidelitas) Fr. Feaulte, i. e. Fides Signifies an oath taken at the admittance of every tenant, to be true to the lord of whom he holds his land: and he that holds land by the oath of fealty, has it in the freest manner; because all persons that have fee hold per fidem and fiduciam, that is, by fealty at the least. Smith de Repub. Ang. lib. 3. c. 8. This fealty, which is used in other nations, as well as England, at the first creation of it bound the tenant to fidelity; the breach whereof was the loss of his fee.

It is usually mentioned with homage, but differs from it; being an obligation permanent, which binds for ever: and these differ in the manner of the solemnity, for the oath of homage is taken by the tenant kneeling; but that of fealty is taken standing, and includes the six following things, viz. 1. In elume, that he do no bodily injury to the lord. 2. Tutum, that he do no secret damage to him in his house, or any thing which is for his defence. 3. Honestum, that he do him no injury in his reputation. 4. Utile, that he do no damage to him in his possessions. 5. Facile, and 6. Possibile, that he render it easy for the lord to do any good, and not make that impossible to be done, which was before in his power to do: all which is comprised in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 5.

Fealty has likewise been divided into general and special; general, to be performed by every subject to his prince; and special, required only of such as in respect of their fee, are tied by oaths to their lords. Grand Custom. Normand. Fealty special is with us performed either by freemen, or by villains. The particulars of the oath of fealty, as it is used by the Feudists, is well expressed by Zafius, in his Traetat. de Feudis. Part 7. Numb. 15, 16. which is worth comparing with the usual oath taken here in England.

By stat. 17 Ed. 2. st. 2. the form of this oath is appointed, and as now observed, it runs as follows, viz. I A. B. will be to you my lord C. true and faithful, and bear to you fealty and faith for the lands and tenements which I hold of you: and I will truly do and perform the customs and services that I ought to do to you. So help me God. The oath is administered by the lord or his steward; the tenant holding his right hand upon the book, and repeating after the lord, &c. the words of the oath; and then kissing the book. Terns de Ley.

This oath is in some manors neglected; but in copyhold manors, where courts are kept, and copyhold estate granted, it is generally used: lessees for life or years, ought to do fealty to their lords, for the lands they hold; and there can be no tenure without some service. Wood's Inst. 183. But a bare tenant at will, shall not do fealty, because he hath no certain estate; and the matter of an oath ought to be certain. Lit. 131, 132. 1 Inst. 93.

Fealty is incident to all manner of tenures, except frankalmoign and tenancy at will. Ibid. Fidelitas est fidei, obsequii et servitii ligamen quo particulariter vassalus domino astringitur. Spelm.

Feasts, Anniversary times of feasting and thanksgiving, as Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, &c. The four feasts which our laws especially take notice of, are the feasts of the annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary, of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, of St. Michael the Archangel, and of St. Thomas the Apostle; on which quarterly days, rent on leases is usually reserved to be paid. See the Statutes 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 3. 3 Jac. 1. c. 1. 12 Car. 2. c. 30.

Fee, (Feodum, or Feudum) Fee, comes of the French Fief, i. e. Prædium beneficiarium, vel res clientelaris, or from the Sax. Feb, viz. Merces, stipendium, quasi dicitur status Beneficiarius; it is said to be that estate which we hold by the benefit of another, and for which we do service or pay rent to the chief lord; and is applied to all those lands and tenements which are held by perpetual right, by an acknowledgment of any superiority to a higher lord. The writers on this subject, divide all lands wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, into allodium and feudum.

Allodium they define to be every man's land, &c. which he possesseth merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of service or payment of any rent to another; and this is a property in the highest degree:

But feudum is such land as is held of another, for which service is done or rent is paid, as an acknowledgment thereof. All the land in England, except the crown-lands in the King's own hands in right of his crown, are in the nature of feudum, or fee; for though many have lands by descent from their ancestors, and others have bought land, it cannot come to any either by descent or purchase, but with the burden that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it from his lord; so that there is no person hath directum dominium, i. e. the very property of domain in any land but the King, in right of his crown: and notwithstanding he that hath fee, hath jus perpetuum et utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own; and he that can say most of his estate, saith thus: I am seised of this or that land or tenement, in my domain, as of fee; seistus inde in dominio meo ut de feodo, which is as much as if he had said, it is my domain or proper land to me and my heirs for ever; but yet I hold it in nature of a benefit of and from another. Camb. Britan. 93. By this doctrine is to be understood that every man in society, holds his estate, subject to the laws of that society, and must be supposed to hold of the community, as what he possesses is supposed to have been taken out of the common stock. When he neglects to fulfil the duties of society, he forfeits to the community, the estate he hath received. The King is the trustee for that community. He, as such, is the superior lord: and in that sense every one may be said to hold mediately, or immediately of the King. This is what the editor (J. M.) supposes is meant by the doctrine in question.

All that write de feudis, hold that feudatarius hath not an entire property in his fee: and as fee cannot be without fealty, sworn to a superior, the lands of the crown are not properly fee; for no man may grant that our King or crown oweth fealty to any superior on earth.

The word fee is sometimes used for the compass or circuit of a lordship or manor, as we say the lord of the fee, &c. as well as the particular estate of the tenant: and also for a perpetual right incorporeal; as to have the keeping of prisons, &c. in fee. Bract. Lib. 2. c. 5. Old Nat. Br. 41. And when a rent or annuity is granted to one and his heirs, it is a fee personal. 1 Inst. 1, 2. Fee is commonly divided into fee absolute, otherwise called fee simple; and fee conditional, termed otherwise fee-tail. See Tail.

Fee-

Fee-simple (feodum simplex) is where a man hath lands or tenements, to hold to him and his heirs for ever : fee-tail is an estate whereof one is seised with limitation, to him and the heirs of his body, &c. Litt. 14, 16. All estates at the common law were fee-simple ; and all other estates and interests are derived out of it, wherefore there must be a fee-simple at last in some body. Litt. 647.

Under this head it may be proper to consider,

- I. In what things a man may have a fee-simple.
- II. By what means such an estate may be acquired.
- III. By what words it may be created.

I. In what things a man may have a fee-simple.

A man may have an estate, in fee-simple of all lands or tenements, or other things real. Co. L. 1. b. Of hereditaments, advowsons, commons, cisterns, and all hereditaments. Co. L. 4. a. So he may have a fee-simple in things mixt ; as in franchises, liberties, &c. Co. L. 2. a.

So if a man grants to another and his heirs all woods, underwood, timber-trees or others in such a part of a forest, saving the soil ; the grantee has a fee to take in alieno solo. R. 8 Co. 137. b.

So, in things personal ; as in annuity. Co. L. 2. a. In a dignity granted to him and his heirs. Co. L. 2. a. In a squau-mark. 7 Co. 17. In a part or share of the New River water. Ca. Parl. 207.

So, in the patronage of an hospital, or other thing created de novo, in which there was not a precedent estate, a man may have a fee to him and his heirs, qualified in a particular manner : as if a Queen consort institutes an hospital, and reserves the patronage sibi & reginis Angliæ succedentibus. R. Ca. Ch. 214.

But in estates in esse before such defaultory inheritance it cannot be : as the duchy of Cornwall limited to the prince & filiis regis Angliæ primogenitis, shall not be good except when limited by act of parliament. R. 8 Cl. 16.

II. By what means such an estate may be acquired.

A man may take a fee by descent, or by purchase.

In what manner a man may take by descent, see under title Descent.

With respect to purchasers it is to be noted, that some are incapable of purchasing.

An alien cannot purchase any lands in England. Vaugh. 227, 291. 7 Co. 16, 17, 18. Dyer 2 pl. 8. See Alien.

All persons attainted of treason or felony are incapable of purchasing. 2 New Abridge. 249. Co. Lit. 8. a. See Dig. Feud. lib. 2. tit. 23, 24. Vigellius 242, 350. Spelman's Gloss. 214, 215.

If a man be attainted of felony, and after purchase land, and dies, the King shall have it by his prerogative, and not the lord of the fee ; because his person being forfeited to the King, he cannot purchase but for the King. Co. Lit. 2. b.

A monster not having human shape cannot purchase or inherit, but an hermaphrodite shall inherit or purchase secundum prævalentiam sexus incalcentis ; one born deaf and dumb may inherit ; so may one born deaf, dumb and blind, because it is for their advantage ; but they cannot contract, because they cannot understand the signs of contracting ; an infant, an idiot, and a person of non sane memory may inherit, because the law in compassion to their natural infirmities, presumes them capable of property ; so also an infant or a person of non sane memory may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and the freehold is in him till he disagree thereto, because an agreement is presumed, it being for their benefit, and because the freehold cannot be in the grantor, contrary to his own act, nor can be in abeyance, for then a stranger would not know against whom to demand his right ; if at full age, or after recovery of his memory they agree thereto, they cannot avoid it ; but if they die during minority or lunacy, the heirs may avoid it ; for they shall not be subject to the contracts of persons who wanted ca-capacity to contract ; so if after his memory recovered, the lunatick or person non compos die without agreement to the purchase, their heirs may avoid it. Co. Lit. 8. 1 Inst. 2. 2 Vent. 303.

A female covert is capable of purchasing ; for such an act does not make the property of the husband liable to any disadvantage, nor does it suppose a separate will or power of contracting in the wife ; but here the will of the wife is supposed the mind of the husband, since no man is supposed not to assent to that which is for his benefit ; but in this case the husband may disagree, and it shall avoid the purchase. 1 Inst. 3. a.

By the stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. Papists are disabled from purchasing lands, &c.

Persons capable of purchasing may gain a fee-simple by feoffment ; or by fine, or common recovery ; which are of the nature of a feoffment upon record ; or by grant, or by exchange, release, or confirmation, which are in the nature of grant ; or by bargain and sale ; or by covenant to stand seised ; or by devise. 3 Com. Dig. 215.

So a man may gain a fee by wrong : as by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion. Id. Ibid.

III. By what words a fee-simple may be created.

It is the word heirs makes the inheritance ; and a man cannot have a greater estate. Litt. 1. To have fee-simple implies, that it is without limitation to what heirs, but to heirs generally : though it may be limited by act of parliament. 4 Inst. 206. If one give or grant land to J. S. and his heirs ; and if he die without heirs, that J. D. shall have it to him and his heirs : by this J. S. hath a fee-simple, and J. D. will have no estate. Dyer 4, 33. Where land is given or granted by fine, deed, or will, in possession, reversion, or remainder, to another and his heirs ; it will be a fee-simple. Floud. 134. And if land be granted to a man and his heirs, habendum to him for life only, and livery of seisin is made ; it is a fee-simple estate, because a fee is expressed in the grant. 2 Rep. 23.

A lease is granted to one for a term of years, and after that the lessee shall have the land to him and his heirs by the rent of 10 l. a year ; if the grantor make livery upon it, 'tis a fee-simple ; otherwise but for years. 1 Inst. 217. Where lands are granted to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of A. here A. hath a fee-simple. 20 Hen. 6. 35. Bro. Eft. 34, 35. A gift or grant is to a man's wife during life, after to him in tail, and after to his right heirs ; he will have a fee-simple estate. 2 Rep. 91.

If lands are granted to a man and his successors, this creates no fee-simple ; but if such a grant be made to a corporation, it is a fee-simple ; and in case of a sole corporation, as a bishop, person, &c. a fee-simple is to them and their successors. Wood 119. An estate granted to a person, to hold to him for ever, or to him and his assigns for ever, is only an estate for life ; the word heirs being wanted to make it fee-simple ; but in wills, which are more favoured than grants, the fee-simple and inheritance may pass without the word heirs. 1 Inst. 19. 9.

And by deed of feoffment a fee-simple may be created, which would be an estate-tail by will ; as where lands are given to another, and his heirs male, &c. without the word body. Hob. 32. A gift to a man and his children, and their heirs, is a fee-simple to all that are living ; though if land is given to a man and his heir, in the singular number, it is but an estate for life, and the heir cannot take by descent, he being but one, and therefore it is said shall take nothing. 1 Inst. 8. Litt. Rep. 6. Quare, If the intent of the testator appears, that he designed a fee, whether a fee shall not pass, by the devise ?

A feoffment to B. & heredibus, without saying suis, gives him a fee-simple. Co. L. 8. b. So to a son and the heirs of his father. Semb. Co. L. 220. b. So to B. & liberis suis and their heirs ; if he has issue, it gives them a joint-estate in fee. Co. L. 9. a. So to B. heredibus & successoribus suis, gives a fee. Co. L. 9. a. So a feoffment or grant to a body politic and their successors, gives them a fee-simple. Co. L. 8. b.

So a grant to the King in perpetuum gives him a fee, without the words, his heirs or successors, for he never dies. Co. L. 9. b. So a feoffment to a corporation aggregate in perpetuum gives a fee; for it never dies. Co. L. 9. b. 1 Rol. 832. l. 55.

Or, to a corporation sole, to be held in frankalmoigne. Co. L. 9. b. 1 Roll. 833. l. 5. So, if A. re-entfeoffs B. adeo plene as B. enfeoffed him, he has a fee without the word, heirs. Co. L. 9. b.—2. 1 Rol. 833. l. 12. So a grant to the church of B. gives a fee, without the word, heirs or successors. 1 Rol. 833. l. 3.

And a limitation to the right heirs of B. gives a fee, without the words, and their heirs. 1 Rol. 833. l. 16. So by a devise, a fee may be given without the words, his heirs. Co. L. 9. b. Or, by fine sur connissance de droit come ceo, &c. Co. L. 9. b. Or, by a common recovery. Co. L. 9. b.

So, a fee passes without the words, his heirs, where a man gives land with his daughter, &c. in frankmarriage. Co. L. 9. b. If a parcener, or joint-tenant releases to his companion. Co. L. 9. b. If the lord, &c. releases to the terretenant; which enures by way of extinguishment. Co. L. 9. b. If a man releases a mere right; as, where a disseisor releases to the disseisor all his right. Co. L. 9. b.

So, if a rent be granted upon partition, for owelty of partition. Co. L. 9. 10. So if a peer be summoned to parliament by writ, he has a fee in his dignity, without the word, heirs. Co. L. 9. b. So, by the forest law, if the King at a justice seat, grants to another an assart in perpetuum, without more, he has a fee. Co. L. 10. a. So, by custom, a grant of a copyhold, sibi & suis, or, sibi & assignatis, may give the inheritance. 4 Co. 29. b.

A fee-simple may not come after a fee-simple; nor can a remainder, it being an absolute estate, so that nothing can come after it. Dyer 33.

A fee-simple determinable upon a contingency, is a fee to all intents; though not so durable as absolute fee. Vaugh. 273. But see title Executory Devise.

In pleading estates in fee-simple, they may be generally alledged, but the commencement of estates-tail, and other particular estates, must regularly be shewn. 1 Inst. 303. The fee-simple estate, being the chief and most excellent; therefore he who hath it in lands or tenements, may give, grant, or charge the same by deed or will at his pleasure; or he may make waste or spoil upon it: And if he bind himself and his heirs to warranty; or for money by obligation, or otherwise; and leaving such land to the heir, it shall be charged with the warranty and debts: Also the wife of a man that is seised of such an estate, shall be endowed; and the husband of a woman having this estate, be tenant by the curtesy. Co. Lit. 273. Dyer 330. Perk. Sect. 236. Though fee-simple is the most ample estate of inheritance, it is subject to many incumbrances; as judgments, statutes, mortgages, fines, jointures, dower, &c. And there is a fee-simple conditional, where the estate is defeasible by not performing the condition; and a qualified fee-simple, which may be defeated by a limitation, &c. This is called a base fee, upon which no reversion or remainder can be expectant. 1 Inst. 18. 10 Rep. 97. See Discent, Executory Devise, Wills.

Fee Expectant. (Feudum Expectativum) See Expectant.

Fee-farm. (Feudum Firma) Is when the lord upon creation of the tenancy, reserves to himself and his heirs, either the rent for which it was before let to farm, or was reasonably worth, or at least a fourth part of the value; without homage, fealty or other services, beyond what are especially comprised in the feoffment. 2 Inst. 44. By Fitzherbert, a third part of the yearly value of the land may be appointed for the rent, where lands are granted in fee-farm, &c. F. N. B. 110. And Lord Coke says, fee-farm rents may be one half, a third, or fourth part of the value. Co. Lit. 143. Though these fee-farm rents seem to be more or less according to the conditions or consideration of the purchase of the lands out of which they are issuing. It is the nature of fee-farm, that if the rent be behind and unpaid for the space of two years, then the feoffor or his heirs may bring an action to recover the lands, &c. Brit. cap. 66. num. 4. See 10 Ann. c. 18. sec. 4. 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. sec. 5.

Fee-farm Rents of the Crown. The fee-farm rents remaining to the Kings of England from their ancient demesnes, were many of them alienated from the crown in the reign of King Charles II. And by Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 6. the King was enabled by letters patent to grant fee-farm rents due in right of his crown, or in right of his dutchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, except quit-rents, &c. to trustees to make sale thereof, and the trustees were to convey the same by bargain and sale to purchasers, &c. who may recover the same as the King might. But it has been observed, that men were so very doubtful of the title to alienations of this nature, that while these rents were exposed to sale for ready money, scarce any would deal for them, and they remained unsold; but what made men earnest to buy them, was the stop upon some of his Majesty's other payments, which occasioned persons to resort to this as the most eligible in that conjuncture: No tenant in tail of any of the said rents, is enabled to bar the remainder. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 24. On the taxing of fee-farm rents, receivers, &c. were to allow to the persons paying them so much in the pound as the land-tax amounts to. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 18. See 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. sec. 27, 28. 7 Geo. 2. c. 7. sec. 5. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 24. sec. 8. and 10 Ann. c. 18. sec. 4.

Fees. Are certain perquisites allowed to officers who have to do with the administration of justice, as a recompence for their labour and trouble; and these are either ascertained by acts of parliament, or established by ancient usage, which gives them an equal sanction with an act of parliament. 2 New Abr. 463.

Herein may be considered,

I. In what cases fees are due.

II. At what time they may be demanded.

I. In what cases fees are due.

At Common law no officer, whose office related to the administration of justice, could take any reward for doing his duty, but what he was to receive from the King. Co. Lit. 368. 2 Inst. 176, 208-9.

And this fundamental maxim of the Common law is confirmed by Westm. 1. cap. 26. which enacts, "That no sheriff, or other King's officer, shall take any reward to do his office, but shall be paid of that which they take of the King; and that he who so doth shall yield twice as much, and shall be punished at the King's pleasure." This statute comprehends escheators, coroners, bailiffs, gaolers, the King's clerk of the market, aulneger, and other inferior ministers and officers of the King, whose offices do any way concern the administration or execution of justice. 2 Inst. 209.

And so much hath this law been thought to conduce to the honour of the King and welfare of the subject, that all prescriptions whatsoever, which have been contrary to it, have been holden void; as where by prescription the clerk of the market claimed certain fees for the view and examination of all weights and measures, and it was held merely void. 4 Inst. 274. Moor 523. 2 Inst. 209. 2 Rol. Abr. 226.

But it hath been holden, that the fee of 20 d. commonly called the bar fee, which hath been taken time out of mind, by the sheriff, of every prisoner who is acquitted; and also the fee of one penny, which was claimed by the coroner of every visne, when he came before the justices in eyre, are not within the meaning of the statute, because they are not demanded of the sheriff or coroner for doing any thing relating to their offices, but claimed as perquisites of right belonging to them. 2 Inst. 210. Stann. P. C. 49.

Also it is holden by Lord Coke, that within the words of the statute 34 Ed. 1. which are, "No tallage or aid shall be taken or levied by us or our heirs in our realm, without the good will and assent of archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, burghers, and other free-men of the land; no new offices can be erected with new fees, fees, or old offices with new fees; for that is a tallage upon the subject, which cannot be done without common assent by act of parliament. 2 Inst. 533.

Yet it is holden, that an office erected for the public good, tho' no fee is annexed to it, is a good office; and that the party, for the labour and pains which he takes in executing it, may maintain a quantum meruit, if not as a fee, yet as a competent recompence for his trouble. Moor 808. Bishop of Sarum's case.

All fees allowed by acts of parliament become established fees; and the several officers intitled to them may maintain actions of debt for them. 2 Inst. 210. All such fees as have been allowed by the courts of justice to their officers, as a recompence for their labour and attendance, are established fees; and the parties can't be deprived of them without an act of parliament. Co. Lit. 368. Pres. Chan. 551.

Where a fee is due by custom, such custom, like all others, must be reasonable; and therefore where a person libelled in the spiritual court for a burying fee due to him for every one who died in his parish, tho' buried in another; the court held this unreasonable, and a prohibition was granted. Hob. 175. 1 Roll. Abr. 557, 559. S. C. adjudged.

The plaintiff brought an action on the case for fees due to him as Usher of the Black Rod, and obtained a verdict. Stran. 747. Trin. 13 Geo. 1. No fee shall be taken for a report upon a reference from any court. 1 Jac. 1. c. 10. Certain fees of sheriffs settled. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. sec. 16. Sec. Sheriff. Fees on nisi prius records out of the Exchequer to be the same as on other records. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. sec. 10. Fees of justices clerks to be regulated. 26 Geo. 2. c. 14. 27 Geo. 2. c. 16. sec. 4. Debt lies for the sheriff's fees for executing an elegit. Lord Raym. 1212.

As to the quantum of the fees due, it must be observed in general, that it is extortion for any officer to take more for executing his office, than is allowed by act of parliament, or is the known, and settled fee in such case. 10 Co. 102. a. Co. Lit. 368.

But in this place we shall only take notice of the fees of sheriffs for executions, about which there seems to have been the most controversies in our books. We must first observe, that by 28 Elix. cap. 4. it is enacted, "That it shall not be lawful for any sheriff, &c. nor for any of their officers, &c. by colour of their office, to take of any person, directly or indirectly, for the serving and executing of any extent or execution upon the body, lands, goods or chattels of any person, more recompence than in this present act appointed, i. e. twelve-pence of and for every twenty shillings where it exceedeth not one hundred pounds; and six-pence of and for every twenty shillings, over and above the said sum of 100*l.* that he or they shall so levy or extend, and deliver in execution, or take the body in execution for; upon pain, that the person offending, shall forfeit, to the party grieved, his treble damages; and shall forfeit the sum of 40*l.* for every time that he, they, or any of them shall do the contrary.

II. As to the time when fees may be demanded.

It is extortion for any officer to take his fee before it is due; and therefore where an under-sheriff refused to execute a capias ad satisfaciendum till he had his fees, the court held, that plaintiff might bring an action against him for not doing his duty, or might pay him his fees, and then indict him for extortion. Co. Lit. 368. 10 Co. 102. a. 1 Salk. 330.

Officer must obey a writ, though fees unpaid. Stran. 814. Process must be obeyed though fees are not tendered. Stran. 1262. If an habeas corpus ad subjiciendum be directed to a gaoler, he must bring up the prisoner altho' his fees were not paid him; and he can't excuse himself of the contempt to the court, by alledging that the prisoner did not tender him his fees. 1 Keb. 272. pl. 57. So as to an habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum. March 89. 2 Keb. 280. 2 Inst. 178. but 1 Keb. 566. cont.

But if the gaoler brings up the prisoner by virtue of such habeas corpus, the court will not turn him over till the gaoler be paid all his fees; nor, according to some opinion, till he be paid all that is due to him for the prisoner's diet; for that a gaoler is compellable to find his prisoner sustenance. See 1 Roll. Rep. 338. Co. Lit. 295. 9 Co. 87. Plowd. 68. a. 2 Roll. Abr. 32. 2 Jon. 178.

If a person pleads his pardon, the judges may insist on the usual fee of gloves to themselves and officers, before they allow it. Fitz. Coron. 294. Pulton de Pace 88. Keling. 25. 2 Jon. 56. 1 Sid. 452.

If an erroneous writ be delivered to the sheriff, and he executes it, he shall have his fees, though the writ be erroneous. 1 Salk. 332. It seems to be laid down in the old books as a distinction, that upon an extent of land upon a statute, the sheriff is to have his fees, so much per pound according to the statute immediately; but that upon an elegit he is not to have them till the liberate. Poph. 156. Winch 51. S. P.

A solicitor in Chancery may exhibit his bill for his fees for business done in that court; and so he may where the business is done in another court, if it relates to another demand the plaintiff makes in Chancery. 1 Fern. 203. 2 Chan. Ca. 153. But it hath been held, that chancellors, registers and proctors who are officers of temporal profit, and whose fees do not relate to the jurisdiction of the spiritual court, can't sue for them in the spiritual court. See 3 Leon. 268. 2 Roll. Rep. 59. 1 Mod. 167. 2 Keb. 615. 3 Keb. 303, 441, 516. 4 Mod. 254. 5 Mod. 242.

Fees of Attornies and Officers. Are considerations allowed them as a recompence for their labour: and in respect to officers, they are granted over and above their salaries, to excite them to diligence in executing their offices. They differ from wages which are paid to servants for certain work and labour done in a certain space; whereas fees are disbursed to officers, &c. for the transacting of business which occasionally occurs. If a client, when his business in court is dispatched, refuseth to pay the officer his court fees; the court on motion will grant an attachment against him, on which he shall be committed until the fees are paid. 1 Lill. Abr. 598. Ecclesiastical courts have not power to establish fees: But if a person bring a quantum meruit in B. R. &c. for fees, and the jury find for him, then they become established fees. 1 Salk. 335.

Action of the case lies for an attorney for his fees, against him that retained him in his cause: And attornies are not to be dismissed by their clients, till their fees are paid. 1 Lill. 142. But attornies are not to demand more than their just fees; nor to be allowed fees to counsel without tickets, &c. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. An attorney may have action of debt for his fees, and also of counsel, and costs of suit: As a counsellor is not bound to give counsel till he has his fee; tis said he can have no action for it: Though it has been held otherwise. F. N. B. 121. 1 Brownl. 73. 31 H. 6. c. 9.

There were no fees due to sheriffs for executing their offices, till the Stat. 29 Elix. &c. which allows them fees for executing writs of execution, &c. By the Stat. of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 42 & 44, the ancient fees of officers of courts of justice were ordained: And by statutes, the fees of sheriffs, gaolers, bailiffs, &c. are limited. See Extortion. In an action of false imprisonment, it has been adjudg'd that a bailiff cannot detain a person arrested for his fees. 1 Ld. Raym. 4.

Feigned Action. See Faint Action.

Feigned Issue. If in a suit in equity, any matter of fact is strongly contested, the court usually directs the matter to be tried by a jury; especially such important facts as the validity of a will, or whether A. is the heir at law to B. or the existence of a modus decimandi, or real and immemorial composition for tithes. But as a jury cannot be summoned to attend a court of equity, the fact is usually directed to be tried at the bar of the court of King's Bench, or at the assizes, upon a feigned issue. For this purpose, a feigned action is brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of 5*l.* with the defendant, that A. was heir at law to B. then avers that he is so; and brings his action for the 5*l.* The defendant allows the wager, but avers that A. is not the heir to B. and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of Chancery to be tried: And thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity. Black. Com. 3 P. 452.

Felagus, (Quasi fide cum eo ligatus) A companion, but particularly a friend, who was bound in the decennary for the good behaviour of another. In the laws of King Ina, it is said, if a murderer could not be found, &c. the parents of the person slain should have six marks, and the King forty; if he had no parents, then the lord should have it. Et si dominus non haberet, felagus ejus. LL. Ina, cap. 15.

Feld, Is a Saxon word, signifying field; and in its compound it signifies wild, as feld honey, is wild honey, &c. Blount.

Felle Homagers, Were faithful subjects, from the Sax. fai, i. e. fides.

Felo de se, One that commits felony by laying violent hands upon himself, whereby he is the occasion of his own untimely death. When a person with deliberation and direct purpose kills himself, by hanging, drowning, shooting, stabbing, &c. this is felo de se; but the person that commits this felony, must be of the age of discretion, and compos mentis: And therefore if an infant under fourteen years of age, or a lunatick during his lunacy, or one distracted by a disease, or an idiot, kills himself, it is not felony. 3 Inst. 44. Dalt. cb. 145. Also if a person during the time that he is non compos mentis giveth himself a mortal wound, though he dieth thereof when he recovers his memory; he is not felo de se, because at the time of the stroke he was not compos mentis. Dalt. 342, 344. And he who desires and persuades another man to kill him, is not a felo de se; his assent being void in law, and the person killing him a murderer. Kelw. 136. It is felo de se where a man maliciously attempts to kill another, and falls upon his sword, &c. whereby he kills himself; but he must be the only agent. 1 H. P. C. 68.

A felo de se shall forfeit all his goods and chattels real and personal; but not until it is lawfully found by the oath of twelve men, before the coroner super visum corporis, that he is felo de se. 3 Inst. 55. By the return of the inquisition the goods, &c. are vested in the King: Though it hath been said, that the goods of a felo de se are forfeited before inquisition, viz. immediately upon committing the fact. 1 Lev. 8. But see 5 Rep. 110. where it is adjudged that they are not forfeited till it is found of record. The lands of inheritance of a felo de se are not forfeited, by reason he was not attainted in his life-time: nor is such a person's wife barred of dower, or his blood corrupted. 1 Hawth. 68. If a judgment is obtained by a plaintiff in any action, and the plaintiff hangs himself, so as to become felo de se, the debt is forfeited to the King. 1 Saund. 36. 2 Nelf. Abr. 840. Goods are forfeited to the King by a felo de se, for the loss of a subject, and breach of the peace. 1 Plowd. 261. But these forfeitures are oftentimes saved, by the coroner's jury finding their verdict lunacy; to which they are inclined on a favourable interpretation, that it is impossible for a man in his senses to do a thing so contrary to nature: but if this argument be good, self-murder can be no crime, because a madman cannot be guilty of any crime. 1 Hawth. 67.

If a person felo de se is secretly made away with, that the coroner cannot view the body; presentment is to be made of it by justices of peace, &c. to entitle the King to the forfeiture of goods. 5 Rep. 110. Where a person is found felo de se, who on account of lunacy, &c. ought not to be so; or where one is returned non compos, when in truth the party is felo de se, &c. if there be no fault in the coroner, or incertainty in the inquisition, a melius inquirendum will not be granted; but the inquisition is traversable in B. R. 3 Mod. 238. 2 Nelf. Abr. 840. Although there can be no melius inquirendum, 'tis said the court may order an indictment to be against the felo de se; and if that be found, his goods shall be forfeited. 1 Lill. Abr. 601. A pardon of murder, doth not pardon felo de se; but a pardon of all felonies and forfeitures doth. By custom and practice, the bodies of felo de se's are buried in the highway, &c.

Felons Woods. The statute de prerogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 1. grants to the King, among other things, the goods of felons and fugitives. If the King grant to a man and his heirs felons goods, the grantee cannot devise them, &c. on the statute 32 H. 8. c. 1. because they are not of a yearly value; but where a person is seised of a manor, to which they are appendant, it is otherwise, for they will pass as appurtenant. 3 Rep. 32. A person committed to prison on suspicion of felony, having the money taken from him which he had about him before conviction, brought an action of trespass for seizing his money, &c. on the Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 3. by which it is enacted, that no person shall take the goods of another, &c. Raym. 414. 2 Nelf. 839. See Flight.

Felony, (Felonia, Fr. Felonnie) As Sir Edward Coke tells us, is derived from the Latin word fel, or from the old Sax. fell, one signifying gall, and the other fierce; and his reason is, because either of these words are suitable to the crime, which is always intended to be done with a bitter or fierce mind: But the learned Spelman gives a different account of the derivation of this word, that it comes from the Saxon word seab, which signified a reward or estate, and the German lon, which in English is price; and this was formerly a crime punished with the price, viz. the loss of estate. And before the reign of K. H. 1. felonies were punished with pecuniary fines; for he was the first who ordered felons to be hanged, about the year 1108.

The judgment against a man for felony hath been the same since the reign of this King, i. e. That he be hanged by the neck till dead; which is entered suspendatur per collum, &c. 4 Inst. 124. Felony was anciently every capital crime perpetrated with an evil intention: All capital offences by the Common law, came generally under the title of felony; and could not be expressed by any word but felonice; which must of necessity be laid in an indictment of felony. 1 Inst. 391. It is always accompanied with an evil intention; and therefore shall not be imputed to any misanimadversion. But the bare intention to commit a felony is so very criminal, that at the Common law it was punishable as felony, where it missed of its effect through some accident; and as our law now is, the party may be severely fined for such an intention. 1 Hawth. P. C. 65.

Felony is included in high treason. H. P. C. 11. We account any offence felony, that is in degree next petit treason; and at this day felony includes petit treason, murder, homicide, sodomy, rape, burning of houses, burglary, robbery, breach of prison, rescous and escape, after one is imprisoned or arrested for felony, with other offences particularly enumerated in the tables to the statutes. It is either by the Common law, or by statute: Felony by the Common law is against the life of a man; as murder, manslaughter, felo de se, se defendendo, &c. Against a man's goods, such as larceny, and robbery: Against his habitation, as burglary, arson or house-burning; and against publick justice, as breach of prison. 3 Inst. 31. Piracy, robbery, or murder upon the sea, are felonies punishable by the Civil law; and likewise by statute: And felonies by statute are very numerous. Mod. Just. 180. Felony is distinguished from lighter offences, in that the punishment of it is death; but not always, for petit larceny is felony, and the indictment against such an offender must run, felonice cepit, yet it is not punished by death, though it be loss of goods: And of felonies in general, there are two sorts; one of which for the first offence is allowed clergy, and another that is not; but clergy is granted where it is not expressly taken away by statute. Staundf. lib. 1. Felony is punished with loss of life, and of lands, not entailed, goods and chattels; but the statutes make a difference in some cases concerning lands, as the 37 H. 8. c. 6. And felony ordinarily works corruption of blood; unless a statute making an offence felony, ordains it shall be otherwise, as some statutes do.

The punishment of a person for felony, by our ancient books, is, 1st, To lose his life. 2dly, To lose his blood, as to his ancestry, and so as to have neither heir nor posterity. 3dly, To lose his goods. 4thly, To lose his lands; and the King shall have annum, diem & vastum, to the intent that his wife and children be cast out of the house, his house pulled down, and all that he had for his comfort comfort or delight destroyed. 4 Rep. 124. A felony by statute incidentally implies, that the offender shall be subject to the like attainder and forfeiture, &c. as is incident to a felon at Common law. 3 Inst. 47, 59, 90. And when persons are to undergo judgment of life and member for any crime by statute, it is felony thereby, whether the word felony be mentioned or not. 1 Hawk. 107.

All felonies are several, and cannot be joint; so that a pardon of one felon, cannot discharge another: but the felony of one man may be dependant upon that of another, and the pardon of the one by a necessary consequence enure to the benefit of the other, as in cases of principal and accessory, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 387, 380. Private persons may arrest felons by their own authority, or by warrant from a justice of peace: And every private person is bound to assist an officer to take felons, &c. 2 Hawk. 75. And if a person be brought before a justice on suspicion of felony, where a felony is committed, though it appears on examination that he is not guilty, yet it is said he is not to be discharged without trial. Lamb. 229.

But one ought not to be arrested upon suspicion of felony, except there be probabilis causa shewed for the ground of the suspicion. 1 Lill. Abr. 603. If a felony is not done by a man, but some person else, if another hath probable cause to suspect he is the felon, and accordingly doth arrest him, this is lawful, and may be justified: But to make good such justification, there must be in fact a felony committed by some person, without which there can be no ground of suspicion. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 78. And as to the person, there ought to be reasonable cause to suspect him, otherwise the arrest will be illegal.

A private man arresting one for felony, cannot justify breaking doors, to take the party suspected; but he doth it at his peril, viz. if in truth he be a felon, it is justifiable; but if innocent, then it is not: To prevent a murder or manslaughter, private persons may break doors open. 2 Hale Ibid. 82. Officers may break open a house to take a felon, or any person justly suspected of felony; and if an officer hath a warrant to take a felon, who is killed in resisting, it is not felony in the officer; but if the officer is killed, it is otherwise. Dalt. 289.

Persons indicted of felony, &c. where there are strong presumptions and circumstances of guilt, are not repleviable; but for larceny, &c. when persons are committed who are of good reputation, they may be bailed. 2 Hawk. 101. If one be committed to prison for one felony, the justices of gaol delivery may try him for another felony, for which he was not committed, by virtue of their commission. 1 Lill. 602.

A felon refusing to plead, and put himself upon his trial, shall be put to the penance of paine fort & dure, &c. If a felon stands mute by the act of God, the felony is to be inquired of by jury, and whether the prisoner be the same person, and all other matters in the same manner as if the criminal had pleaded. 2 Hawk. 327. And it may be inquired of by inquest of office, whether he do so of malice, or by the act of God. Ibid. Where a married woman commits felony, in company with her husband, it shall be presumed to be done by his command, and she shall be excused. 3 Inst. 310. If a man's horse be going into the ground of another, and he takes it felice animo, not as damage-feasant, it is no finding, but felony: But if A.'s sheep stray into the flock of B. and he drives the same along with his flock, or by mistake shears him, this is not a felony; though if he knew it to be another person's, and marks it with his mark, it is an evidence of felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 506.

Where one steals another's goods, and a third person feloniously takes them from him; he is a felon as to both the others. And when there is a pretence of title to things unlawfully taken, it may be only a trick to colour felony; and the ordinary discovery of a felonious intent is, if the party doth it secretly, or being charged with the goods denies it. Ibid. 507, 509. If a person to whom goods are delivered on a pretended buying them, runs away with them, it is felony: And a guest stealing plate set before him at an inn, &c. is felony; also persons who have the charge of things, as a servant of a chamber, &c. may be guilty of felony: And the least removing of a thing in attempts of felony, is felony, though it be not carried off. 3 Inst. 308. Raym. 275.

But goods must not be of a base nature; such as dogs, &c. nor feræ naturæ, as deer, hares, &c. except they be made tame, when it will be felony to steal them. If any turkeys, geese, poultry, fish in a trunk, &c. are taken away, it is felony. 3 Inst. 309, 310. Stealing of tame peacocks, is felony; so of herons, and young hawks in their nests: 'tis otherwise of pheasants, partridges, conies, &c. although they be so kept that they cannot escape; if they be not reclaimed, and known. Jenk. Cent. 204. As to cats, dogs, monkeys, and the like; though it be not felony to take them, trespass lies for them. Jenk. ibid.

Felonies by statute, Are very numerous, and as this work will not admit of a proper enumeration, we must refer to the Table of the quarto edition of the Statutes, where they are set forth in alphabetical order.

Feme Covert, Is a married woman; who is likewise said to be covert baron. See Baron and Feme.

Feme sole, (Fr.) A woman alone, that is unmarried; and if she marries, her debts become those of the husband, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 351. Feme Sole Merchant. See Baron and Feme, and London.

Fence, Is a hedge, ditch, or other inclosure of land for the better manurance and improvement of the same. And where a hedge, and ditch join together, in whose ground or side the hedge is, to the owner of that land belongs the keeping of the same hedge or fence, and the ditch adjoining to it on the other side, in repair and scoured. Par. Offic. 188. An action of the case or trespass lies, for not repairing of fences, whereby cattle come into the ground of another, and do damage. 1 Salk. 335. Also it is presentable in the Court-Baron, &c. Vide Appropriation. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. and Inclosure.

Fence-month, (mensis prohibitionis, or mensis vetitus) Is a month wherein female deer in forests, &c. do season, and therefore it is unlawful to hunt in forests during that time; which begins fifteen days before Midsummer, and ends fifteen days after it, being in all thirty days. Marrus. part 2. cap. 13. Stat. 20 Car. 3. cap. 3. Some ancient foresters call this month the defence-month, because then the deer are to be defended from being disturbed, and the interruptions of fear and danger; as there are certain defence-months for fish, particularly salmons, as appears by the Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 47, &c. Serjeant Fleetwood saith, that the fence-month hath been always kept with watch and ward, in every bailiwick throughout the whole forest, since the time of Canutus. Fleetwood's Forest Laws, p. 5.

Fengeld, (Sax.) A tax or imposition, exacted for the repelling of enemies.—Pecunia vel tributum ad arcendos hostes erogatum. MS. Antiq.

Fens, (paludes) Are low marshy grounds, or lakes for water; for the draining whereof in this kingdom several statutes have been enacted: The statutes 4 Jac. 1. c. 8. & 13. make provision for draining and securing from inundation the drowned grounds and marshes of Leisnes and Fants in Kent; and the fens and low grounds in the isle of Ely. The 15 Car. 2. cap. 17. appoints William, Earl of Bedford, and other adventurers, a corporation, for the draining of Bedford Level in Bedfordshire, consisting of a governor, bailiffs, and conservators, &c. who have power to lay and levy taxes within the great level of the fens; and also to erect works within the same, for carrying the water to the sea, making satisfaction to the owners of lands for injury received; and throwing down any of the said works, incurs treble damages, &c.

By 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11. Deeping fens, &c. in Lincolnshire, are to be drained from water; and Edward Earl of Manchester, and several others are declared undertakers thereof, on certain trusts, with power to erect banks, bridges, drains, locks, sluices, &c. for recovery of the said fens; and assignees of lands held by the adventurers under the trustees, may hold assemblies for making of by-laws, for the management of the works of draining; they may charge the owner of the lands by an acre tax, &c. and on default of payment, sell the defaulters lands, &c.

The 11 Geo. 2. c. 34. ordains that commissioners shall be appointed to put this act in execution, for effectually draining and preserving of the fens in the isle of Ely in Cam-

Cambridgeshire, who are authorised to make drains, dams, &c. and proper works thereon: and the said commissioners may charge proprietors with a proportionable acre tax, viz. for Waterden Fen, at the rate of 5 s. and Redmoor, Carwile Fen, and the Holts, at 2 s. an acre by the year, for four years; and afterwards at an yearly rate, not exceeding 1 s. 6 d. per acre; they may likewise borrow money for maintaining and effecting the works, by assigning over the duties: persons obstructing the draining to forfeit 100 l. and if any person shall burn any of the engines erected, he shall be imprisoned three years; and being convicted again of the like offence, to be guilty of felony. And for raising money, for draining and future preservation of Deeping fens, a rate of 20 s. an acre is to be paid, by all the taxable land owners, according to agreement of the proprietors; levied by distress of goods, or sale of defaulters lands; which may be also mortgaged to raise the money, &c. by 11 Geo. 2. c. 39.

By the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 18. Commissioners are appointed for draining and preserving certain fen lands in the several parishes of Maney, Upwell, Welney, Downham, Witcham, and in a certain extraparochial place, in Byal Fen, within the isle of Ely, and county of Cambridge, who may make an assessment of 1 s. 6 d. per acre yearly, on which they may borrow money, with like powers, authorities and directions as in Stat. 11 Geo. 2. cap. 34. See Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 11, 16, 19. as to fen lands in the parishes of Sutton, Mepal, Witcham, Chatteris, Doddington, Somersham, Upwell, Outwell, Demer, Welney, Whittlesey and Padley with Fenton in Ely, Cambridge and Huntingdon, with many others, which see in the Table to the 4th edition of Statutes at Large.

Feod or Feud, Is defined to be a right which a vassal hath in lands, or some immoveable thing of his lord's, to use the same, and take the profits thereof hereditarily; rendering unto the lord such feudal duties and services as belong to military tenure, &c. and the property of the soil always remaining to the lord. Spelm. of Tenures, cap. 1.

Feodal, (feodalis, vel feudalis) Of or belonging to the fee. Stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

Feodality, Fealty paid to the lord by his feudal tenant. Fecit feodalitatem suam, prout decet dicto domino. Cartular. Rading. MS.

Feodary, or Feudary, (feudatarius) An officer of the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court, by virtue of the statutes 32 Hen. 8. cap. 26. whose business it was to be present with the escheator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give in evidence for the King as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was also to survey the lands of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He did likewise assign the King's widows their dowers; and receive all the rents of wards lands within his circuit, which he answered to the receiver of the court. This office seems to be wholly taken away by Statute 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

Feodary, Was the tenant who held his estate by feudal service; and grantees, to whom lands in feud or fee were granted by a superior lord, were sometimes called homagers; and in some writings are termed vassals, feuds, and feudataries. See Feuds.

Feodum. See Feud.

Feodum Militis, A knight's fee: feodum laicum, a lay fee, or land held in fee of a lay lord. Kenes's Gloss. See Feuds.

Feoffment, (feoffamentum, from the Gothic word feudum, and signifies donationem feudi) Is a gift or grant of any manors, messuages, lands or tenements, to another in fee, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin and possession of the thing given or granted; and in every feoffment, the giver or grantor is called the feoffor, and he that receives by virtue thereof, is the feoffee. Littleton says, the proper difference between a feoffor and a donor, is, that the one gives in fee-simple, the other in fee-tail. Litt. lib. 1. cap. 6. Accomp. Conv. 1 Vol. 71. The deed of feoffment is our most antient conveyance of lands; and in records we often find fees given to knights under the phrases of de veteri feoffamento, and de novo feoffamento; the first whereof were such lands as were given or granted by King Henry I. And the others, such as were granted after the death of the said King, since the beginning of the reign of Henry II. At Common law the usual conveyance was by feoffment, to which livery and seisin was necessary, the possession being thereby given to the feoffee; but if livery and seisin could not be made, by reason there was a tenant in possession, the reversion was granted, and the particular tenant attorned. 1 Inst. 9, 49. And a feoffment is said, in some respects, to excel the conveyance by fine and recovery; it clearing all disseins, abatements, intrusions, and other wrongful estates, which no other conveyance doth: and for that it is so solemnly and publicly made, it has been of all other conveyances the most observed. West. Symb. 235. Plowd. 554.

This head will be best illustrated by considering,

- I. Of what things a feoffment may be made.
- II. Who may make a feoffment, and how it is to be made.
- III. Of the different kinds of livery, with their effects and operations.

I. Of what things a feoffment may be made.

A feoffment may be of a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, or other corporal thing; and of a moiety, third, or fourth part of it; that lies in livery.

So a feoffment may be made of lands, in which a man has no fixed estate; as, if he has twelve acres to be annually assigned in such a meadow; and livery in any acre, which he has at the time of the feoffment, is sufficient. Co. L. 4. a. 48. b. 2 Rol. 10. l. 40 ad 50.

So, if a feoffment be of fifty acres towards the north in such a moor, which contains 100 acres, livery in any of them is sufficient. 2 Rol. 11. l. 5. Dy. 372. b.

So, if two manors be divided alternis vicibus between parceners, either may make a feoffment of her manor; and the deed ought to comprehend both, and she shall make livery in one secundum formam chartæ this year, and in the other the next year. Co. L. 48. b.

But a feoffment cannot be made of a thing of which livery cannot be given; as, of incorporeal inheritances, rent, advowson, common, &c. 2 Rol. 1. l. 20. Though it be an advowson, &c. in gross. Cont. 11 H. 6. 4. Acc. 2 Rol. 1. l. 21.

So a feoffment of lands, which are uncertain till a future act, is void; for livery does not operate in futuro: as, if A. agrees by indenture to convey 20 l. per annum in land to such an use, and 20 s. per annum to such an use, and makes a feoffment of all his lands to the uses in the indenture; it will be void for all but that where livery was made, it not being ascertained which shall be to one use, and which to the other. R. 1. Rol. 187.

In deeds of feoffment, there must be a good feoffor, that is, one able to grant the thing conveyed by the deed; a feoffee capable to take it; and a thing grantable, and granted in the manner the law requireth. 1 Inst. 42, 49, 190.

II. Who may make a feoffment, and how it is to be made.

If a person non compos makes a feoffment, and gives livery himself, this is allowed on all hands to be good to bind himself, so that he can by no process or plea avoid the feoffment, and restore himself to the possession; the same law of an idiot; and the reason is, because the investiture being made before the pares curiæ, their solemn attestation could not be defeated by the person himself, because it is presumed they are competent judges of the ability of the feoffor to make such feoffment. 2 Rol. Abr. 2. Co. Lit. 247. 4 Co. 125. B. Show. Parl. Cases 153. and see tit. Idiots and Lunatics, and post.

But if an infant makes a feoffment, and makes a livery himself, this shall not bind him, but he himself may avoid it by writ of dum fuit infra ætatem; yet the feoffment of the infant is not void in itself, as well because he is allowed to contract for his benefit, as that there ought to be some act of notoriety to restore the possession to him equal to that which transferred it from him. 4 Co. 125. 2 Rol. Abr. 2. 8 Co. 42, 43. Whittingham's case.

But if an infant makes a feoffment, and a letter of attorney to make livery, that is void; so if a person non compos makes a surrender or release, this is void in law; so if he makes a letter of attorney to give livery; but the heir at law after the death of the person of nons compos memory, mory, or idiot, may avoid his feoffment; and so may the King upon an office found of his lunacy during his life. 8 Co. 45. Co. Lit. 247. a. 4 Co. 125. a. 2 Rol. Abr. 2. Show. Parl. Cases 153.

There must be livery of seisin in all feoffments, and gifts, &c. where a corporal inheritance or freehold doth pass; and without livery, the deed is no feoffment, gift or demise. Lit. 59. 8 Rep. 82. But a freehold may pass without livery by the statute 27 H. 8. c. 10. By force of which statute, a feoffment to the use of the feoffor, feoffee, &c. supplies the place of livery and seisin. Wood's Inst. 239.

But a feoffment may not be of such things whereof livery and seisin may not be made; for no deed of feoffment is good to pass an estate without livery of seisin; and if either of the parties die before livery, the feoffment is void. Plowd. 214, 219. Though where a feme feoffor made a feoffment of lands with livery in view, and then married the feoffee before the livery was executed by actual entry; it was adjudged the livery might be executed after marriage, the feoffee having not only an authority to enter, but an interest passed by the livery in view, and the woman did all on her part to be done. 1 Vent. 186.

A man may either give or receive livery by letter of attorney; for since a contract is no more than the consent of a man's mind to a thing, where that consent or concurrence appears, it were unreasonable to oblige each person to be present at the execution of the contract, since it may as well be performed by any other person delegated for that purpose by the parties to the contract. Co. Lit. 52. 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But such delegation or authority, to give or receive livery, must be by deed, that it may appear to the court, that the attorney had a commission to represent the parties that are to give or take the livery, and whether the authority was pursued. Co. Lit. 48. b. 52. a. 2 Rol. Pulfreman and Grobie.

If a man be disseised, and makes a deed of feoffment, and a letter of attorney to enter and take possession of the land, and afterwards to make livery, according to the form of the charter, it will be a good feoffment, though he was out of possession at the time of the deed made; for the feoffment takes effect by the livery, and not by the deed. Co. Lit. 48, 52.

A feoffment being a Common law conveyance, and executed by livery, makes a transmutation of estate; but a conveyance on the statute of uses, as a covenant to stand seised, &c. makes only a transmutation of possession, and not of estate. 2 Lev. 77. 1 Vent. 378. A feoffment to the use of A. for life, the remainder to B. If A. refuses to take the estate, B. shall take presently, because the whole estate is out of the feoffor by livery; but if it had been by covenant to stand seised, he should not have taken till after the death of A. but it would rest in the covenantor, who shall have the use in the mean time. 2 Lev. 77. 1 Leon. Ca. 279. Before the Stat. Westm. 3. If a man had made feoffment in fee, without declaring any use, it should have been to the use of the feoffee; though now by that statute, where no consideration or declaration of use is expressed, it shall go to the feoffor himself. 2 Leon. 15, 16. If I convey lands by feoffment, which I have on the part of the mother, to J. S. and his heirs, without consideration; the use will be void, and the land shall return again to me and my heirs on the part of the mother; yet if I declare the use to me and my heirs, or upon such feoffment reserve a rent in like manner, it shall go to my heirs at the Common law, it being a new thing divided from the land. Hob. 31. Co. Lit. 13, 231. 1 Rep. 100. Dyer 134. Where a man makes a feoffment, without any consideration; by that the estate and possession passes, but not the use, which shall descend to his heir. 1 Leon. 182.

A feoffment in fee is made to the use of such persons, and for such estates, as the feoffor shall appoint by his will, or to the use of the last will; by operation of law the use vests in the feoffor, and he is seised of a qualified fee, viz. until he makes his will, and declares the uses; and after the will is made, it is only directory, for nothing passes by it but all by the feoffment. 6 Rep. 18. Moor 567. A feoffment in fee, upon condition, &c. was inrolled, but no livery made; and it was adjudged no good feoffment, but the inrollment shall conclude the person to say that it was not his deed. Popb. 6. 2 Nels. Abr. 844. If a bargain and sale of lands be not inrolled, and the bargainor deliver livery and seisin of the lands secundum formam chartae, &c. it has been held a good feoffment. 2 And. 68.

A feoffment in fee made upon condition not to alien, the condition is void; because 'tis repugnant to the estate; but if livery is had, the feoffment will be good against the feoffor: and a bond with condition that the feoffee shall not alien, is said to be good. 1 Co. Inst. 206. 2 Cro. 596. If a man makes a feoffment of lands on condition; that the feoffee shall give the lands to the feoffor, and his wife in special tail, remainder to the heirs of the feoffor; and he dies before such gift is made, the feoffee ought to make it as near the intent of the condition as may be, viz. to the wife without impeachment of waste, remainder to the heirs of the body of her husband, on her body begotten, and remainder to the husband's right heirs. In case the feoffor and his wife both die, the feoffee then should make the estate to the issue, and heirs of the body of his father and mother begotten, remainder to the right heirs of the husband or father. 1 Inst. 219, 220.

Tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee; the inheritance of the tail is not given to the feoffee by the feoffment, nor is he thereby tenant in tail; for none shall be tenant in tail but he only who is comprehended in the gift made by the donor. But it gives away all the immediate estate the feoffor had. Plowd. 562. Hob. 335. If lessee for life, and the reversioner in fee, make a feoffment in fee by deed, each gives his estate; the lessee his by livery, and the fee from him in remainder. 6 Rep. 15. Lill. Abr. 609. A feoffment was made habendum to the feoffee and his heirs, after the death of the feoffor, and livery was made; yet it was held to be a void feoffment, for an estate of freehold in lands cannot begin at a day to come: but where a lessor made a lease for lives, and granted the reversion to another for life, whose estate for life was to begin after the death of the survivor of the other lessees for life, this was adjudged a good estate in reversion for life. Hob. 171. 1 Nels. Abr. 846.

If the husband alone make a feoffment of his wife's land, or of both their lands, his wife being on the land and disagreeing to it; this will be good against all persons but the wife: also so it is, if one jointenant make a deed of feoffment of the whole land, his companion being then upon it: or if a man disseise me of my lands, and then enfeoff another thereof, whilst I am upon the land, &c. Perk. Sett, 219, 220.

Every gift of feoffment of lands made by fraud or maintenance, shall be void; and the disseisee, notwithstanding such alienation, shall recover against the first disseisor his land and double damages; provided he commence his suit in a year after the disseisin, and that the feoffor be pernor of the profits. Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 9. See 11 H. 6. c. 3.

III. Of the different kinds of livery, with their effects and operations.

Livery may be by deed; and within view, or in law.

The livery in deed, is the actual tradition of the land, and is made either by the delivery of a branch of a tree, or a turf of the land, or some other thing, in the name of all the lands and tenements contained in the deed; and it may be made by words only, without the delivery of any thing; as if the feoffor being upon the land, or at the door of the house, says to the feoffee, I am content that you should enjoy this land according to the deed, or Enter into this house or land, and enjoy it according to the deed; this is a good livery to pass the freehold, because in all these cases, the charter of feoffment makes the limitation of the estate, and then the words spoken by the feoffor on the land, are a sufficient indicium to the people present, to determine in whom the freehold resides during the extent of the limitation; besides, the words being relative to the charter of feoffment, plainly denote an intention to enfeoff. Co. Lit. 48. a. 9 Co. 137. b. Fbarwood's case. 6 Co. 26. Sharp's case. 2 Rol. Abr. 7. And see Cro. Jac, 80, which seems contr.

But if a man without any charter, being in his house, says, I here demise you this house, as long as I live, paying 20l. per annum, this passes no freehold, but only an estate at will, because the word demise denotes only the extent of the limitation of the estate intended to be conveyed; but bare words of limitation, without some acts or words to discover the intention of the feoffor to deliver over the possession, are not sufficient to convey the freehold; for if a charter of feoffment be made to a man and his heirs, this, without some other act, or word to give the possession, only passes an estate at will, because the act of delivery is requisite to the perfection of the charter; but besides the charter of feoffment, there must be some act or words to deliver over the possession, before the feoffee can enjoy it pursuant to the charter. 6 Co. 26. 2 Rel. Abr. 7. Co. Lit. 48. Cro. Eliz. 482. 9 Co. 138. Moor, pl. 632.

The livery within view, or the livery in law, is when the feoffor is not actually on the land, or in the house, but being in sight of it says to the feoffee, I give you yonder house, or land, go and enter into the same, and take possession of it accordingly; this sort of livery seems to be made at first only at the court barons, which were antiently held sub dio, (that is, in the open air) in some open part of the manor, from whence a general survey or view, might have been taken of the whole manor, and the pares curiæ easily distinguished that part which was then to be transferred. Pollex. 47.

But this sort of livery is not perfect to carry the freehold, till an actual entry made by the feoffee, because the possession is not actually delivered to him, but only a licence or power given him by the feoffor to take possession of it; and therefore, if either the feoffor or feoffee die before livery, and entry made by the feoffee, the livery within the view becomes ineffectual and void; for if the feoffor dies before entry, the feoffee can't afterwards enter, because then the land immediately descends upon his heir, and consequently no person can take possession of his land without an authority delegated from him who is the proprietor; nor can the heir of the feoffee enter, because he is not the person to whom the feoffor intended to convey his land, nor had he an authority from the feoffor to take possession; besides, if the heir of the feoffee were admitted to take possession after his father's death, he would come in as a purchaser, whereas he was mentioned in the feoffment to take as the representative of his ancestor, which he can't do since the estate never vested in his ancestor. Co. Lit. 48. b. 2 Rel. Abr. 3, 7. 1 Vent. 186. Moor 85. Pollex. 48.

The livery within view may be made of lands in another county than where the lands lie, because the translation of the feud was often made at the court-baron, in the presence of pares curiæ; and these courts being held sub dio, the pares could have a distinct view of every part of the manor; and therefore were proper to attest this sort of investiture, tho' the lands were in a different county, for notwithstanding that, they might have been part of the same manor, for which the court was held. Co. Lit. 48. b.

This ceremony was first instituted, that the pares of the county may, upon any dispute relating to the freehold, determine in whom it is lodged, and from thence be the better enabled to determine in whom the right is. Hence therefore it is, that if a man makes a feoffment, or lease for life, to commence in futuro, and makes livery immediately, the livery is void, and only an estate at will passes to the feoffee; for the design of the institution would fail, if such livery were effectual to pass the freehold; for it would be no evidence, or notoriety of the change of the freehold, if after the livery made, the freehold still remained in the feoffor; the use of the investiture would rather create than prevent the uncertainty of the freehold, and in many cases would put men to fruitless trouble and expence in pursuit of their right; for by that means, after a man had brought his præcipe against a person, whom he supposed to be tenant to the freehold, and had proceeded in it a considerable time, the writ might abate by the freehold's vesting in another, by virtue of a livery made before the purchase of the writ. Another reason why such future interests can't be allowed to pass by any act of livery was, because no man would be safe in his purchase, if the operation of livery might create an estate, to commence many years after the livery was made; and though they have allowed a future interest, to commence by way of lease, yet that had no such ill effect in making purchases uncertain, because antiently they were under the power of the freeholder, who by recovery might destroy them; and now, unless such leases are made upon good considerations, they are fraudulent against a purchaser; and 'tis not to be presumed, that leases at great distances should be purchased for value. Cro. Eliz. 451. 2 Vent. 204. Co. Lit. 217. 5 Co. 94. b.

Hence, by the way, we may account why a freehold in reversion or remainder can't be granted in futuro, though there no livery is necessary to pass it; as where A. is tenant for life, remainder to B. in fee; A. makes a lease for years to C. and afterwards grants the land to D. habend' from Mich. next ensuing, for life; this grant to D. was adjudged void, though C. attorned to it after Michaelmas, because such future grants create an uncertainty of the freehold, and the tenant of the freehold being the person who is to answer the stranger's præcipe, and was answerable to the lord for the services, it were unreasonable to permit him, by any act of his own, to prevent or delay the prosecution of their right. Cro. Eliz. 451. 2 Ven. 204. Co. Lit. 217. 5 Co. 94. b. 2 Co. 55. Buckler's case. 2 And. 29. Moor 423. Cro. Eliz. 450, 585. Hob. 170, 171. 5 Co. 94. 1 Rel. Rep. 261. See Livery of Seisin.

A deed of feoffment is be made by the words have granted, bargained, enfeoffed, &c. The way of pleading a feoffment is thus, viz. That A. Feuds are called by various names, according to their respective natures, As Feudum antiquum, A feud descending to a son, &c. from his ancestors. Black. Com. 2 V. 212, 221.

Feudum apertum, A feud resulting back again to the lord of the fee, where the blood of the person last seized in fee-simple, is utterly extinct and gone. Black. Com. 2 V. 245.

Feudum honorarium, (and Feudum individuum) An honorary feud, or title of nobility, not of a divisible nature, and descendible to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest. Black. Com. 2 V. 56, 7. 215.

Feudum improprium, An improper or derivative feud; and feoda impropria are all such feuds as do not fall within the description of feoda propria. Black. Com. 2 V. 58.

Feudum maternum, A feud descending to the son from the mother. Black. Com. 2 V. 212, 243.

Feudum novum, A feud newly acquired by the son, to which in ancient times only the descendants from his body could succeed, by the known maxim of the early feudal constitutions. Black. Com. 2 V. 212, 221.

Feudum novum, Held ut antiquum: descendible in the same manner as a feudum novum. Black. Com. ib.

Feudum paternum, A feud descendible from father to son, &c. Black. Com. 2 V. 243.

Feudum proprium, A proper feud, distinguished from an improper, which are the two grand and general divisions. Black. Com. 2 V. 58.

Fiat, In our law, is a short order or warrant of some judge for making out and allowing certain processes, &c. If a certiorari be taken out in vacation, and tested of the precedent term, the fiat for it must be signed by a judge of the court, some time before the effoin-day of the subsequent term, otherwise it will be irregular: but it is said there is no need for a judge to sign the writ of certiorari itself; but only where it is required by statute. 1 Salk. 150. 2 Hawk. 289.

Fiat Justitia. On a petition to the King, for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition fiat justitia, and then the writ of error is made out, &c. And when the King is petitioned to redress a wrong, he indorses upon the petition, Let right be done the party. Dyer 385. Stamf. Prærog. Reg. 22.

Fiction of Law, (Fictio juris) Is allowed of in several cases: but it must be framed, according to the rules of law; not what is imaginable in the conceptions of man; and there ought to be equity and possibility in every legal fiction.

fiction. There are many of these fictions in the civil law ; and by some civilians, it is said to be an assumption of law upon an untruth, for a truth, in something possible to be done, but not done. Godolphin & Bartol. The seisin of the conusee in a fine is but a fiction in our law ; it being an invented form of conveyance only. 1 Lill. Abr. 610. And a common recovery is factio juris, a formal act or device by consent, where a man is desirous to cut off an estate-tail, remainders, &c. 10 Rep. 42. By fiction of law, a bond made beyond sea, may be pleaded to be made in the place where made, to wit, in Ullington in the county of Middlesex, &c. to try the same here ; without which it cannot be done. 1 Inst. 261. And so it is in some other cases ; but the law ought not to be satisfied with fictions, where it may be otherwise really satisfied ; and fictions in law shall not be carried farther than the reasons which introduce them necessarily require. 1 Lill. Abr. 610. 2 Hawk. 320.

Fidem mentiri, Is when a tenant doth not keep that fidelity which he hath sworn to the lord. Leg. H. 1. c. 53.

Fief, Which we call fee, is in other countries the contrary to chattels : in Germany, certain districts or territories are called Fiefs ; where there are fiefs of the empire. See Black. Com. 2 V. 45.

Kings and chieftains, when they settled in a conquered country, bestowed land on their adherents, as a recompence for their service, &c. These grants were called Beneficia ; because they were gratuitous donations, and honores, because they were regarded as marks of distinction : this is the origin of fiefs. See the history thereof Robert Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 217, 18, &c.

Fieri facias, Is a judicial writ, given by the statute of Westm. 2. 13. Ed. 1. that lies where judgment is had for debt, or damages recovered in the King's courts ; by which writ the sheriff is commanded to levy the debt and damages of the goods and chattels of the defendant, &c. Old. Nat. Br. 152.

This writ, though mentioned in the statute W. 2. 18. is a writ of execution at common law, and is called a feri facias, because the words of the writ directed to the sheriff are Quod feri facias de bonis & catallis, &c. and from these words the writ takes its denomination. Co. Lit. 290. b.

The property of goods is vested by the delivery of the fi. fa. and an extent afterwards for the King comes too late, and that on the statute of frauds and perjuries ; per Holt. Comb. 123. Trin. 1 W. & M. in B. R. Lechmere v. Thoroughgood.

This writ is to be sued out within a year and a day after judgment ; or the judgment must be revived by scire facias : but if a feri facias be not executed, a second feri facias, or elegit may be sued out ; and 'tis said some years after, without a scire facias, provided continuances are entered from the first fi. fa. which 'tis also held may be entered after the second fi. fa. taken out, unless a rule is made that proceedings shall stay, &c. Sid. 59. 2 Nels. Abr. 776. If a man recover debt against A. B. and levy part of it by feri facias, and this writ is returned ; yet he may take the body in execution by capias for the rest of the debt. Roll. Abr. 904. The sheriff on a feri facias is to do his best endeavours to levy the money upon the goods and chattels of the defendant ; and for that purpose to inquire after his goods, &c. And the plaintiff may inquire and search if he can find any, and give notice thereof to the sheriff, who ex officio is to take and sell them if he can, or if not, by a writ of venditioni exponas. 2 Shep. Abr. 111. There may be a testatum feri facias into another county, if the defendant hath not goods enough in the county where the action is laid to satisfy the execution ; and the feri facias for the ground of the testatum, may be returned of course by the attornies, as originals are. 2 Salk. 589. If all the money is not levied on a feri facias, the writ must be returned before a second execution can be issued ; because it is to be grounded on the first writ, by reciting that all the money was not levied. 1 Salk. 318.

Where the sheriff sells goods which he levied by feri facias, and doth not pay the money, action of debt will lie against him ; for the defendant is discharged as to the plaintiff, and the sheriff is now become his debtor in law ; and if the sheriff die after he hath levied the debt, the like action will lie against his executors, as it is a duty when levied. March Rep. 13. Cro. Car. 387. If a sheriff that hath seized goods by feri facias is going out of his office, he must deliver them to the new sheriff, and return his writ executed pro tanto ; and he ought not to deliver them to the owner, by reason the writ of execution is warranted by a record, and therefore the discharge thereof must appear by record. Kelw. 44. Upon a feri facias the sheriff returned, that he had levied goods ad valentiam of the debt ; the return being filed, a motion was made that he might bring in the money, which not being done an attachment was granted, and then the sheriff appeared and prayed to amend the return, for that the goods were damaged by lying, and he could not get buyers ; but it was adjudged that the return shall not be altered, for he might have returned this at first by way of excuse ; and having returned that he had levied goods ad valentiam, he shall pay the money. Sid. 407.

The sheriff cannot deliver the goods by him taken in execution to the plaintiff, in satisfaction of his debt ; because his authority is to sell the goods. Lut. 589. 1 Lill. Abr. 611. And if a sheriff sells the goods taken by feri facias at under price, the sale is good, and the defendant can have no remedy ; though where there appears to be covin between the sheriff and the buyer, the owner shall have his action upon the case. Kelw. 64. 1 Salk. 28. On a feri facias the sheriff has power to take any thing, but wearing cloaths ; and if the defendant hath two gowns, &c. it is said he may sell one. If the sheriff executes a writ of feri facias, he may afterwards return nulla bona, if there appear a prerogative writ ; or on better information, that the goods taken were not the defendant's. Comb. 356, 452. By the seizure of the goods, the sheriff hath a property in them ; but goods of a stranger, &c. in the possession of the defendant shall not be seized in execution ; for the sheriff at his peril must take notice whose goods they are : though if the sheriff inquires by a jury, where the property is lodged, and it is found that they are the defendant's goods, when they are not, this will indemnify the sheriff. Dalt. Sher. 60. Wood's Inst. 608.

The sheriff cannot break open the door of an house to execute a feri facias upon the goods of the owner or occupier ; but a man's house shall be a protection for his own goods only, and not for the goods of another. 5 Rep. 91. 2 Nels. Abr. 775. If the defendant is a beneficed clergyman, and the sheriff returns Quod est Clericus beneficiatus, &c. a writ shall go to the bishop of the diocese to levy the debt de bonis Ecclesiasticis, who thereupon sends forth a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens, &c. But this writ of sequestration must be renewed every term. 2 Inst. 4. 472, 627. By virtue of a feri facias a term for years may be sold, as well as any other goods, and without an inquest or jury : also corn growing may be sold. 8 Rep. 96. 1 Roll. Abr. 892. And if the sheriff on a feri facias, &c. selleth a term for years, and after that the judgment is reversed ; the term shall not be restored, but the money for which it is sold. 4 Rep. 141.

But where a term is delivered to the plaintiff upon an elegit, and then the elegit is reversed, restitution shall be of the term. Cro. Jac. 246. When upon a feri facias the sheriff sells a term, reciting it falsely, as to its commencement and ending, &c. the sale is void, because there is no such term, yet if he reciteth generally, and being of divers years yet to come, sells all the interest which the defendant had in the land, the sale will be good. 4 Rep. 74. If an execution is sued on a fi. fa. and the defendant dies before it is executed, it may be served on the defendant's goods in the hands of his executor or administrator. Cro. Elix. 181. Two feri facias's are delivered the same day to the sheriff against the same person ; he is bound to execute that first, which was first delivered ; and if he executes the last first, he must answer it to the party if

2 P. 348. Lands bought of divers persons, by several purchasers, may pass in one fine, to save charges; but the writ of covenant must be brought by the vendee against all the vendors, and every vendor warrant against him and his heirs.

The nature of a fine being explained it remains to consider,

- I. Of the several sorts and parts of a fine, and how fine operate.
- II. Of what things a fine may be levied.
- III. By whom, and to whom it may be levied.
- IV. Before whom, and in what manner it may be levied.
- V. Who may be barred by a fine, and who not.
- VI. How fines may be reversed.

I. Of the several sorts and parts of a fine, and how fine operate.

As to fines, there are various kinds; they are either with proclamations, or without: that with proclamations is termed a fine according to the statutes, 1 R. 3. c. 7 and 4 H. 7. c. 24. And such a fine, every fine that is pleaded, is intended to be, if it be not shewn what fine it is: And these fines are the best sort, and most used. If there be error in the proclamations, it shall be taken as a good fine at common law. 3 Rep. 36. A fine may stand, though the proclamations according to the statute are irregular; for fines are matter of record, and remain in substance and form as they were before Plowd. 265. If tenant in tail levies a fine, and dies before all the proclamations are made, though the right of the estate tail descends upon the issue, immediately on the death of the ancestor; yet if proclamations are made afterwards, such right shall be barred by the fine, by the statutes 4 H. 7. c. 24. and 32 H. 8. c. 36. 3 Rep. 84.

The fine without proclamations is called a Fine at the Common Law, being levied in such manner as was used before the stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. and is still of the like force by the common law, to discontinue the estate of the cognisor, if the fine be executed. A fine also with or without proclamations is either executed or executory: A fine executed is such a fine as of its own force gives present possession to the cognisee, without any writ of seisin to enter on the lands, &c. as a fine sur cognissance de droit come ceo; and in some respects a fine sur Release, &c. is said to be executed. A fine executory doth not execute the possession in the cognisee, without entry or action, but requires a writ of seisin; as the fine sur connissance de droit tantum, &c. unless the party be in possession of the lands; for if he be in possession at the time of levying the fine, there need not be any such writ, or any execution of the fine; and then the fine will enure by way of extinguishment of right, not altering the estate or possession of the cognisee, however it may better it. West. Sel. 20. Fines are likewise single or double; single, where an estate is granted by the cognisor to the cognisee, and nothing is thereby rendered back again from the cognisee to the cognisor. The double fine is that which doth contain a grant or render back again from the cognisee, of the land itself; or of some rent, common, or other thing out of it, and by which remainders are limited, &c. West. Sel. 21, 30. And a fine is sometimes called a double fine, when the lands lie in several counties.

But there is a more particular division of fines; for,

Fines are further divided into four sorts, viz. 1. A fine sur cognissance de droit come ceo, que il ad de son don. 2. A fine sur cognissance de droit tantum. 3. A fine sur concessit. And 4. A fine sur done grant & render.

The fine sur cognissance de droit come ceo, &c. is a single fine levied with proclamations, according to the stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. And it is the principal and surest kind of fine, it being said to be executed, because it gives present possession (at least in law) to the cognisee, so that he needs no writ of hab. fac. seisinam, or other means for execution thereof; for it admits the possession of the lands of which the fine is levied to pass by the fine, so that the cognisee may enter, and the estate is thereby in him, to such uses as are declared in the deed to lead the uses thereof: but if it be not declared by deed to what use the fine was levied, such fine shall be to the use of the cognisor that levied the same. 2 Inst. 513. If the cognisee of a fine levied of lands, pay money unto the cognisor at the time of the fine levied, and there is no use declared of the fine, the law will construe the fine to the use of the cognisee: and if there be no money paid by the cognisee, nor any use declared, the fine shall enure to the cognisor that levied it. Pash. 23 Car. B. R. Where a fine is levied to the use of two persons in tail, &c. in consideration of marriage, though the deed to lead its uses do not mention any marriage had between them, yet it hath been adjudged that the estate-tail is executed before marriage; for the fine doth carry the uses, and they are perfected by the fine, notwithstanding the consideration is perfected afterwards; but without a fine, the marriage must be had, before any use could arise. 1 Leon. 138. If a feme covert alone declares the uses of a fine intended to be levied by husband and wife of her land, and the husband alone declares other uses; it hath been hold that both declarations of uses are void, and the use shall follow the ownership of the lands: But in another case it was determined that the uses declared by the wife were void; and the uses declared by the husband, good only against himself, during the coverture. 2 Rep. 56. If husband and wife levy a fine of the lands of the wife, and he alone declares the uses, this shall bind the wife, if her dissent doth not appear; because otherwise it shall be intended that she did consent. Ibid. 59. Though there be a variance between a deed declaring uses, and the fine levied; yet if nothing appears to the contrary, such fine by construction of law shall be to the uses declared in the deed, and which is evidence thereof: and where a fine varies from a former description, it has been held that a new deed made after, will declare the uses of the fine. 1 Ld. Raym. 289, 290. 'Tis not absolutely necessary, to insert the word Use, in the declaration of uses of fines; for any words which shew the intent of the parties will be sufficient. Ibid. A fine sur connissance de droit come ceo, &c. may not be levied to any person but one that is party to the writ of covenant; though a vouchee, after he hath entered into the warranty to the demandant, it is said, may confess the action, or levy a fine to the demandant, &c. he is then supposed to be tenant of the land, though he is not a party to the writ; and yet a fine levied by the vouchee to a stranger, is void. No single fine can be with a remainder over to another person not contained in it: But if A. levy a fine to B. sur connissance de droit come ceo, and B. by the same concord, grants back the land again to A. for life, remainder to E. the wife of A. for her life, remainder to A. and his heirs; this will be a good fine. Plowd. 248, 249.

A fine sur connissance de droit tantum, is also a fine executory, and much of the nature of a fine sur concessit; it is commonly made use of to pass a reversion, and then it is expressed by such fine that the particular estate is in another, and that the cognisor willeth that the cognisee shall have the reversion, or that the land shall remain to him after the particular estate is spent: sometimes it is used by tenant for life, to make a release (in nature of a surrender) to him in reversion, but not by the word Sur-render; for it is said a particular tenant, as for life, &c. cannot surrender his term to him in reversion by fine; but he may grant and release to him by fine. Plowd. 268. Dyer 216. A fine upon a release, &c. shall not be intended to be to any other use, but to him to whom it is levied.

Leon. 61:

A fine sur concessit is where the cognisor is seised of the lands contained therein, and the cognisee hath no freehold in it, but it passeth by the fine: this fine is used to grant away estate for life, or years, and it is executory, so that the cognisee must enter or have a writ of hab. fac. seisinam to obtain possession; if the parties to whom the estate is limited, at the time of levying such fine, be not in possession of the thing granted.

A fine sur done grant & render, is a double fine, being in a manner two fines, i. e. A fine sur connissance de droit come ceo, &c. and a fine sur concessit, both formed into one; whereby the cognisee, after a release and warranty made to him by the cognisor of the lands contained therein, both grant and render back to the cognisor the lands,

Et. thereby often limiting remainders to persons that are strangers, and not named in the writ of covenant. This fine is partly executed and partly executory; and as to the first part of it, is altogether of the same nature with a fine sur conuissance de droit come ceo; but as to the second part, containing a grant and render back, it is taken in law to be rather a private conveyance or charter between party and party, and not as a writ or judgment upon record; and this render is sometimes of the whole estate, and sometimes of a particular estate, with remainder or remainders over; or of the reversion, and sometimes with reservations of rent and clause of distress, and grant thereof over by the same fine. 5 Rep. 38. A. B. and C. D. levied a fine of lands, and the cognisee by the same fine rendered back the land to A. B. in tail, reserving a rent to himself, Et. the rent and reversion shall pass, tho' in one fine; and it shall enure as several fines. Cro. Eliz. 727. It is said, a grant and render of land, cannot be immediately in primo gradu to a person who is, no party to the writ; but mediately, or in secundo gradu it may. 3 Rep. 514. Bro. 108. The fine with grant and render, differs from the fine sur conuissance de droit come ceo, Et. as that must be levied of the land in the original; but the grant and render may be of another thing than is expressed in the original: Tho' to make a good grant and render, the land rendered must pass to the cognisee by the fine; for he cannot render what he hath not. 3 Rep. 98, 510. Hughes's Abr. 936. A man may not by this fine reserve to himself a less estate by way of remainder, than the fee; and the render of a rent (if any be) must be to one of the parties to the fine, and not to a stranger. Dyer 33, 69. 2 Rep. 39. To make a lease for years, Et. by fine with a render; the lessee must acknowledge the land to be the right of the lessor that is seised thereof, and then such lessor grants and renders the same back again to the lessee, for a certain number of years, reserving rent, Et. and this is a good fine: but if the lessor be tenant in tail, then he bind him, he and the lessee are to acknowledge the tenements the right of A. B. who is to render the same fine to lessee for years, the remainder to the lessor and his heirs, Et. 44 Ed. 3. 45. 2 Leon. 206. A fine and render is a conveyance at Common law, and makes the cognisor render back a new purchaser; by which, lands arising on the part of the mother, may go to the heirs on the part of the father, Et. 1 Salk. 337. 2 Nels. Abr. 864.

Having shewn how each particular sort of fine operates, it may be material to observe, that a fine may enure to a confirmation of a former estate, which was defeasible before: as, if tenant in tail by bargain and sale, lease and release, Et. conveys to B. in fee, and afterwards levies a fine to B. and his heirs; this gives him a base fee determinable upon his death without issue. Vide 1 Sand. 261.

So a fine may enure by way of extinguishment; therefore, if tenant in tail makes a lease, or other estate, to A. and afterwards levies a fine to B. the lease, or other estate, shall be indefeasible; for his right during such former estate was extinct by the fine. R. Jon. 60. 2 Cro. 689. Vide Essex.

As to the parts of a fine.

There are in every fine five parts, viz. 1st. An original writ, usually a writ of covenant. 2. The licence concordandi, or King's licence, for which the King hath a fine called the King's silver. 3. The concord itself, containing the agreement between the parties how the land, Et. shall pass, being the foundation and substance of the fine; it begins, Ecce concordia talis, Et. 4. The note of the fine, or, abstract of the original contract. 5. The foot of the fine, which includes all, setting forth the day, year, and place, and before what justices the concord was made, Et. Of this there are indentures made forth in the office, which is called the ingrossing of the fine; and it beginneth thus, Hec est finalis concordia facta in curia Domini Regis apud Westm. a die Pasche in quindacim dies anno, Et. 2 Inst. 511, 517. 'Tis said, the concord being the compleat fine, it shall be adjudged a fine of that term in which the concord was made, and the writ of covenant returnable. 1 Salk. 341. A concord cannot be of any thing but what is contained in the writ of covenant: and the note of the fine remaining with the Chirographer, it hath been held, est principale recordum. 3 Leon. 234.

II. Of what things a fine may be levied.

A fine may be levied of any things whereof a præcipe quod reddat lies; as of manors, messuages, lands, rents, Et. or of any thing, whereof a præcipe quod faciat lies, as customs, services, Et. or whereof a præcipe quod permittat, or præcipe quod teneat may be brought. 2 Inst. 513.

As fines may be levied of things in possession, so they may be levied of a remainder, or reversion, or of a right in future. 3 Rep. 90.

Now, since the Stat. 32 H. 8. 7. it may be levied of rectories, vicarages, tithes, pensions, oblations, and all ecclesiastical inheritances made temporal. Of a chantry. Vide West. Symb. 7. So it may be of a feignory. 11. Of all services; as, homage, fealty, Et. West. Symb. 6. b. Of acquittal, and of every thing, for which a præcipe quod faciat lies. 2 Inst. 513. So it may be levied of common of pasture. Vide West. Symb. 6. b. Of a corody. Ibid. Of an office; as, of the custody of a forest. Of a boilary. Of two pools and a fishery in the water of D. Of an annuity.

Fines may be had of all things in esse tempore finis, which are inheritable; but not of things uncertain; or of lands held in tail by the King's letters patent; of land restrained from sale by act of parliament, or of lands in right of a man's wife, without the wife, Et. 5 Rep. 225. West. Sess. 25.

And almost any kind of contract may be made and expressed by a fine, as by a deed; and therefore it may be so made that one of the parties shall have the land, and the other's rent out of it; and that one shall have it for a time, and another for another time; also a lease for years, or a jointure for a wife, may be made; and a gift in tail, and a remainder over, may be limited and created thereby. 1 Rep. 76.

III. By whom and to whom a fine may be levied.

The King, and all persons who may lawfully grant by deed, may levy a fine; but not infants, idiots, lunatics, Et. 7 Rep. 32. Civil corporations, as mayor and commonalty, Et. may levy a fine of land belonging to their body: but bishops, deans and chapters, parsons, Et. are restrained from levying of fines to bind their successors. All persons that may be grantees, or that may take by contract, may take by fine; though in cases of infants, feme coverts, persons attainted, aliens, Et. who, it is said, may take by fine, before the ingrossing of the fine, there goes a writ to the justices of C. B. quod permittant finem levare. Lit. 669. Tenant in fee-simple, fee-tail general, or special, tenant in remainder or reversion, may levy a fine of their estates; so may tenant for life, to hold to the cognisee for life of tenant for life; but a person who is tenant, or hath an interest only for years, cannot levy a fine of his term to another. 3 Rep. 77. 5 Rep. 124.

A fine by a man non compos, though it ought not to be levied, binds for ever when it is levied. So a fine by a man attainted for treason, or felony, binds all but the King. Vide West. Symb. 3. a. So a fine by an infant, or feme covert without her husband, binds till it be avoided. Vide Comyn's Digest, tit. Baron and Feme, (P. 1.) — Infant, (B. 2.)

But a fine cannot be levied by a corporation aggregate; for it cannot act but by attorney, and it cannot make conveyance by attorney. So, if commissioners take a fine of an infant, Et. the court will grant an attachment against them; and upon examination and inspection, the fine shall be vacated. R. Stin. 24.

Land assured for dower, or term of life, or in tail, to any woman by means of her husband, or his ancestors, cannot be conveyed away from her by fine, Et. without her act; but if a woman and her husband levy a fine of her jointure, she is barred of the same; tho' if the jointure be made after coverture, when the wife hath an election to have her jointure, or dower on the husband's death, it is said this will be no bar of her dower in the residue residue of the land of the husband. Dyer 358. Leon. 185. No fine of the husband alone, of the lands of the wife, shall hurt her; but that she or her heirs, or such as have right, may avoid it; but if she joins with him, it shall bind her and her heirs. Women covert ought to be cautious in levying fines with their husbands of their own lands, and if a married woman under age levies a fine of her lands, she cannot reverse it during her husband's life, nor after his death, if she be of full age when he dies; but if the husband dies during her minority, she may. Dyer 359. Wood's Inst. 243. A married female ought not to be admitted alone without her husband to levy a fine; and if she be received, the husband may avoid the fine by entry; but if he do not, it is good to bar her and her heirs, except she be an infant at the time of the fine levied: the husband and wife together may dispose of her land, &c. 12 Rep. 122. If baron and feme levy a fine, the feme within age, she may be brought into court by habeas corpus; and if it be found by inspection, that she is under age, it hath been adjudged, where the baron and feme brought a writ of error, that as to both, quod finis revocetur. 1 Leon. 116, 117. 3 Salk. 168.

Husband and wife, tenants in special tail, the husband only levies a fine, this bars the issue in tail; but it remains in right to the wife as to herself, and to all the estates and remainders depending upon it, and all the consequences of benefit to herself and others, so long as she lives, as if the fine had not been levied. Hob. 257, 259. If a husband make a feoffment of the wife's land, upon condition, which is broken, and the feoffee levies a fine, and the husband and wife die having issue, and five years pass; the heir is barred to enter as heir to the father upon the condition, but he shall have five years after the death of his father, as heir to his mother. Plowd. 367. If a woman with her second husband acknowledge a fine, it shall not bind her; though if she levies a fine with her right husband by a wrong Christian name, she is bound by estoppel during her life, and the tenant may plead. See 1 Ass. pl. 11. Brook 117. When the husband and wife join in a fine of the wife's lands, all the estate passeth from her, and he is joined only for conformity; so that if the fine levied by husband and wife in such a case be reversed, she shall have restitution. Rep. 77. A husband and his wife covenanted to levy a fine of the lands of the wife, to the use of the heirs of the body of the husband on the wife, remainder to the husband in fee; both dying without issue; it was held that the heir of the wife had the title, because the limitation to the heirs of the body of the husband was merely void, there being no precedent estate of freehold for life, &c. to support it as a remainder. 2 Salk. 675. 4 Mod. 253.

If a widow having an estate in dower accept of a fine, and by the same fine render back the land for 100 years, &c. this is a forfeiture of her estate within the Stat. 11 H. 7. 20. by which statute she may not make a greater estate than for her own life; if she do, it is a present forfeiture. 2 Cro. 689. If tenant for life grants a greater estate by fine than for his own life, it is a forfeiture: and if there be tenant for life, and remainder for life, and the tenant for life levy a fine to him in remainder and his heirs, both their estates are forfeited; the tenant for life by levying the fine, and the remainderman for life by accepting it. 2 Lev. 209. Where a fine is levied by tenant for life, for a greater estate, the fine may be good; but it is a forfeiture of the estate of tenant for life, whereof he in remainder, &c. may take present advantage and enter: and when a person enters for a forfeiture, all estates are avoided. Dyer 111. Tho' if such a tenant for life levy a fine sur grant & release to the cognisee for the life of tenant for life; or by fine grant a rent out of the land for a longer time, the fine is good, and there will be no forfeiture of the estate of tenant for life: so likewise if a fine be levied of lands by tenant for life to a stranger, who thereby acknowledges all his right to be in the tenant for life, and releases to him and his heirs. 27 Ed. 1. 1. 44 Ed. 3. 36.

If there be tenant in tail upon condition not to alien, or discontinue the lands, &c. if he doth, the donor to re-enter, and his issue levy a fine of the land; this is a forfeiture of the estate. 1 Leon. 292. An estate being settled on husband and wife for life, remainder to first and other sons in tail, with remainders over; after the birth of their eldest son, they by release and fine, mortgaged the lands: on a bill exhibited against the son to redeem, &c. he pleaded the marriage settlement of his father and mother, whereby they were but tenants for life, and that this fine was a forfeiture of their estate; and so it was adjudged. Præd. Canc. 591. But it is said where a wife by settlement has only a trust for life, if she joins with her husband in a mortgage in fee and fine of the lands; this trust is not forfeited, as it would be in case of a legal estate. 1 Piers Williams 147.

As to femes covert, the books which say, that a fine shall not bind a woman under coverture unless she be examined, must not be understood as if it were in her power to reverse the fine for want of her examination, but they are to be understood in this sense, that the judge ought not to receive a fine from a feme covert without examining her, lest it should not proceed from her own freedom and choice; but if such a fine be once admitted, and recorded without any examination, tho' the judge has omitted a very necessary part of his duty, yet the fine shall stand, and neither the feme nor her heirs shall be admitted to aver that she was not examined; for that were to lessen the credit of the judgment of the courts of justice, which is the highest evidence of the law. 2 New Abr. 527.

As to fines levied by an infant, tho' strictly speaking all contracts made by infants are in their own nature void, because a contract is an act of the understanding, which, during their infancy, they are presumed to want; yet civil societies have so far supplied that defect, and taken care of them, as to allow them to contract for their benefit and advantage, with power to recede from and vacate it when it may prove prejudicial to them; now the method to set aside such a contract must be by matter of equal notoriety with the manner in which it was made; and therefore if an infant levies a fine, which is no more than his own agreement recorded as the judgment of the court, he must reverse it by writ of error, and this must be brought during his minority, that the court of B. may by inspection determine the age of the infant; but the judges by adjuncts may in such cases inform themselves by witnesses, church-books, &c. 2 New Abr. 526. Co. Lit. 380. b. Moor 76. 2 Roll. Abr. 15. Bro. tit. Error. Bro. tit. Fines, 74, 79. 2 Inst. 482. 2 Bulst. 320. 12 Co. 122.

With regard to ideots and lunatics, it is necessary to distinguish between their acts done in pais, and those solemnly acknowledged on record; tho' the law is clear, that in neither case are they admitted to disable themselves, for the insecurity that may arise in contracts from counterfeit madness and folly, but their heirs and executors may avoid such acts in pais by pleading the disability; because if they can prove it, it must be presumed real, since nobody can be thought to counterfeit it, when he can expect no benefit from it himself. 4 Co. 124. Co. Lit. 247. Bro. tit. Fals. 62. Cro. Eliz. 398, 622. F. N. B. 202.

But neither the lunatick himself, nor his heir, can vacate any act of his done in a court of record; and therefore if a person non compos acknowledges a fine, it shall stand against him and his heirs; for tho' the judge ought not to admit of a fine from a man under that disability, yet when it is once received, it shall never be reversed, because the record and judgment of the court being the highest evidence in the law, presumes the consensus, at that time, capable of contracting; and therefore the credit of it is not to be contested, nor the record avoided by any averment against the truth of it. 4 Co. 124. 2 Inst. 483. Bro. tit. Fines, 75. Co. Lit. 247.

IV. Before whom, and in what manner, a fine may be levied.

Fines are now levied in the court of Common Pleas at Westminster, on account of the solemnity thereof, ordained by the Stat. 18 Ed. 1. ff. 4. before which time they were sometimes levied in the Exchequer, in the County-Courts, Courts Baron, &c. They may be acknowledged before the

the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, as well in, as out of court; and two of the justices of the same court, have power to take them in open court: also justices of assize may do it by the general words of their patent or commission; but they do not usually certify them without a special writ of dedimus potestatem. 2 Inst. 512. Dyer 224. The King by patent or commission, with a non obstante, may give power to A. and B. justices of assize in a circuit, when A. is not a judge of either of the benches, only a serjeant at law, &c. to take the cognisance of all fines conjunctim & separatim; and upon such a commission, the cognisance of a fine taken by A. will be good, without any dedimus potestatem sued out before, or after it. Jenk. Cent. 277.

Fines are also taken by commissioners in the country, impowered by dedimus potestatem; the writ of dedimus doth surmise, that the parties who are to acknowledge the fine are not able to travel to Westminster for the doing thereof: these commissions, general and special, issue out of the Chancery. By the Common law all fines were levied in court; but the Stat. 15 Ed. 2. ff. de fin. allows the dedimus potestatem to commissioners, who may be punished for abuses, and the fines taken before them set aside: and it is said an information may be brought by him in reversion against commissioners, who take the caption of a fine, where a married woman, &c. is an infant. 3 Lev. 36.

In the levying of fines in court, a pleader shall say, Sir justice conge d' accorder, &c. i. e. he desires leave to accord or agree: and when the sum for the King's fine is agreed, after proclamation and crying the peace, the pleader shall repeat the substance of the fine, &c. Stat. de Finibus, 18 Ed. 1. ff. 4.

Touching the form of fines, it is to be considered upon what writ, or action the concord is to be made: and there must first pass a pair of indentures between the cognisor and cognisee, whereby the cognisor covenants to pass a fine to the cognisee of such things, by a time limited; and these indentures preceding the fine, are said to lead the uses of the fine: but by the Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. The uses of a fine, &c. may be declared after the fine levied, and be good in law. Upon this the writ of covenant is brought by the cognisee against the cognisor, who then yields to pass the same before the judge; and so the acknowledgment being recorded, the cognisor and his heirs are presently concluded, and all strangers (not excepted) after five years past; and if the writ, whereon the fine is grounded, be not a writ of covenant, which is usual, but of warrantia chartæ, or a writ of right, or of customs and services, &c. then the writ is to be served upon the party that is to acknowledge the fine; and he appearing doth it accordingly. West. sess. Dyer 179.

By statute a fine's concord cannot be levied in the King's court, without original writ, &c. And when a fine is passed, it is to be in the presence of the parties, who are to be of full age, good memory, &c. And if a feme covert be one, she is to be privately examined if she consent freely; for if she doth not, the fine cannot be levied. Stat. 18 Ed. 1. ff. 4. A fine after the ingrossing is to be openly read and proclaimed in the court of C. B. and a transcript to be sent to the justices of assize, and another to the justices of the peace of the county where the land lieth, to be openly proclaimed there; which being certified, concludes all persons; feme coverts, persons under age, in prison, &c. excepted; if they lay no claim by way of action or entry in five years: persons out of the land, or non sane memoria, &c. have that time after their imperfections are removed, 1 R. 3. c. 7. 4 H. 7. c. 24. And by subsequent acts, fines after ingrossing are to be proclaimed in court the same term, and the three next terms, formerly four several days in each term; but of late only once in the term where ingrossed, and once in each of the succeeding terms. 4 H. 7. c. 24. 31 Eliz. c. 2. The day and year of acknowledging a fine, and warrant of attorney for the suffering a recovery, are to be certified with the concord: and an office hath been erected for the enrolment of writs for fines, &c. the fees whereof are limited and appointed; likewise the Chirographer the first day of every term is to fix in the court of C. B. a table containing the fines passed in the term before in every county, &c. by 23 Eliz. c. 3.

V. Who may be barred by a fine, and who not.

The statutes of 4 H. 7. c. 24. and 32 H. 8. c. 36. declare the force of fines how far they bar and take away the entry or action of parties, privies and strangers, having right: privies in blood, as heirs of the cognisor, are barred presently by a fine; but strangers to the fine, such as are not parties nor privies, have five years to enter and claim their rights, &c. Plowd. 367, 375. Co. Lit. 372. See 4 Ann. c. 16. Feme coverts have five years after the death of their husbands, to avoid the fine of the husband of the wife's lands; and also to claim their dower; and if they do not make their claim in that time by action or entry, they are barred by statute. Dyer 72. 2 Rep. 93. An infant shall have five years after he comes of age, although he was in his mother's womb at the time of the fine levied. Plowd. 359. And an infant is allowed time, during his minority, to reverse his own fine and prevent the bar; and if not reversed during that time, their fines will be good. Aff. pl. 53. Strangers out of the realm at the time of the fine levied, shall have five years after their return to prevent the bar; and so if they were in England when the fine was levied, and within five years are sent in the King's service by his commandment. Plowd. 366. A person in Scotland or Ireland shall be said to be out of the realm. 4 H. 7. c. 24. Madmen, &c. shall have five years after the cure of their maladies, and tho' the infirmity happen after the fine levied, if before the last proclamation. Plowd. 367. Dyer 3. And they who have divers defects have five years after the last infirmity removed; but if the impediments are once wholly gone, and afterwards the party relapses into the like again, the five years shall begin immediately after the first removal; and if the party dies, his heir shall not have a new five years. Plowd. 375. Dyer 233.

If a feme covert dies during the coverture, being no party to the fine, &c. or if an infant being party to the fine, and having present right, dies in his infancy: if a person beyond sea when the fine was levied, never return, &c. a person in prison dies whilst therein: or if one non compos, &c. dies such, in all these cases, their heirs are not limited to any time. 2 Inst. 519, 520. Five years are given after a remainder falls; and five years after the forfeiture of tenant for life. Plowd. 374. And he that hath two titles, shall have two five years to make his claim. Jenk. Ca. 45. A future interest of another person, cannot be barred by fine and non claim, until five years after it happens; as in case of a remainder or reversion. 2 Rep. 93. Raym. 151. And where there is no present nor future right in land, &c. only a possibility at the time of levying the fine, a person may enter and claim when he pleases. 10 Rep. 49. Also when there is only right to a rent, &c. issuing out of lands, and not the land in the fine, the persons that have it are not barred at all. 5 Rep. 124.

No fine bars any estate in possession or reversion, which is not divested, or put to a right. 9 Rep. 106. He that at the time of a fine levied had not any title to enter, shall not be immediately barred by the fine: but this is in case of an interest not turned to a right, where a man is not bound to claim; and not in the case of tenant in tail, barring his issue. 32 H. 8. c. 36.

When an estate is put to a right, and there comes a fine and non-claim, it is a perpetual bar. Carter 82, 162. A fine, grant and render was levied, and a seire facias brought and judgment given, and also writ of seisin awarded, but not executed; and afterwards a second fine was levied and executed, and five years passed; it was the opinion of the court that the second fine barred the first. March's Rep. 194. 2 Nels. Abr. 864.

If a man attainted of treason or felony, levy a fine of his land, this, as to the King, and lord of whom the land is held, is void, and no bar to their disadvantage and title of forfeiture: but as to all others it is a good bar. 2 Shep. Abr. 241. One levied a fine, and then was outlawed for treason and died; the heir reversed the outlawry, and it was held the wife should have have her dower, if she bring her action within five years. Moor. c. 876. A fine is levied by lessee for life, &c. who continues the possession, and pays the rent; it shall not bind the lessor, who shall have five years claim after the determination of the lessee's estate, &c. 3 Rep. 77, 78. If one doth levy a fine of my land, while I am in possession, this will not hurt me; nor where a stranger levies a fine of my lands let to a tenant, if the tenant pays me his rent duly: And if there is tenant in tail, or for life, remainder in tail, &c. And the first tenant in tail or for life, bargains and sells the land by deed inrolled, and levies a fine to the bargainee, the remainders are not bound; for the law adjudges them always in possession. 9 Rep. 106.

Lessors who pretend title to the inheritance of the lands, cannot by fine bar the inheritance. 3 Rep. 77. But if a lease is made for years, and the lessor before entry of the lessee levies a fine with proclamations, and the lessee doth not make his claim within five years, the lessee is barred, and no relief can be had for him; for tho' the lessee for years cannot levy a fine, yet he shall be barred by a fine levied by the tenant of the land, &c. 5 Rep. 124. If a person hath a remainder depending on an estate for years, and the termor is disseised, and a fine is levied and five years pass, &c. the termor and reversioner are barred; because the termor might presently have entered, and he in remainder had an assise. West. Sect. 183. In case a person enters upon, and puts out a copyholder, and the disseisor doth levy a fine of the lands, if the copyholder suffer five years to pass after the disseisin and fine, without making any claim, the interest of the copyholder and his lord are hereby barred for ever: And if a copyholder makes a slossment in fee upon good consideration, and the feoffee levies a fine with proclamations, and five years pass, the lord is barred; but if a copyholder himself levies a fine, and five years do pass, the lord is not barred; for the copyholder not having a freehold, the fine will be void. Wood's Inst. 247, 248.

A fine of cestui que trust shall bar and transfer a trust, as it should an estate at law, if it were on a good consideration. Chan. Rep. 49. And fines of cestui que use are as good as if levied of immediate possessions, &c. 1 R. c. 2. 2 Nelf. Abr. 860.

Interests in estates which may be barred by fine, are either interests by Common law, or by custom; as copyholds, &c. And if I have a fee-simple, and am disseised, and the disseisor levies a fine with proclamations, and I do not claim within five years after, I and my heirs (allowance being made for impediments) are barred for ever. Plowd. 353. 3 Rep. 79. If a man purchase lands of another in fee, and after finding his title to be bad, and that a stranger hath right to the land, levies a fine thereof with intent to bar him; and he suffers five years to pass without claim, &c. he is barred of his right for ever: And in these cases none shall be relieved in equity. 3 Rep. Dec. & Stud. 83, 155.

A fine with proclamations levied by persons of lands intailed to them or their ancestors, &c. is a good bar against their heirs, claiming only by such intail. 32 H. 8. c. 36. Where the ancestor is barred by the fine, there for the most part the heir is barred also. 9 Rep. 105. Altho' the issue in tail be within age, out of the realm, &c. when a fine is had and the proclamations passed; the estate tail shall be barred. 3 Rep. 84. If the estate passed by the fine, be afterwards (before all the proclamations had) avoided, it is said the issue in tail are barred by it. 3 Rep. 91. The tenant in tail, to him and the heirs male of his body, hath three sons, the second levies a fine in the life of the father, and the father dies; here the eldest is not barred. But if the elder die without issue, living the second, it is a bar to the third. Hob. 333. Jenk. Cent. 96. Tenant in tail discontinues; the discontinuer levies a fine with proclamation, and five years pass without claim in the life of tenant in tail: In this case the issue may have a formedon, and shall not be barred; for his father could not claim, 'Tis otherwise where he is disseised, and the disseisor levies such fine; there the tenant in tail may claim, &c. Jenk. Cent. 192.

A tenant for life, and he that is next in remainder in tail join in a fine, it is a good bar to the issue in tail for ever, so long as that estate-tail shall continue. 10 Rep. 96. But tho' a fine bars the estate-tail and the issue in tail, yet it doth not remainders or reversions; tho' recoveries bar them all.

And if one makes his title as heir by another, and not by him that levied the fine, he is not barred. 1 Cro. 377. Also he that is privy in blood only, and not in estate, is not within the statutes to be barred by a fine: As if lands are given to a man and the heirs female of his body, and he hath a son and a daughter, and the son levies a fine, and dies without issue, this is no bar to the daughter; for notwithstanding she be heir to his blood, yet she is not heir to the estate, nor need make her conveyance to it by him; but if her father had levied the fine, it would have been otherwise. Trin. 21 Jac.

A fine, &c. cannot destroy an executory estate, which depends upon contingencies, as it is uncertain whether there will ever be an estate in being for the fine to work upon; but a fine and recovery will bar an estate in remainder, as that is an estate vested. 1 Lill. Abr. 617. Estates by statute merchant, statute staple, and elegit, may be barred, if a fine is levied, and those that have right suffer five years to pass without claim, &c. 5 Rep. 124. If a fine be levied of lands in ancient demesne, it doth not bar by the statute of non-claim. Lut. 781. As deans, bishops, parsons, &c. are prohibited by statutes to levy fines, and may not have a writ of right; they are not barred by five years non-claim, and their non-claim will not prejudice their successors. Plowd. 238, 375. If a corporation which hath an absolute estate, so as to maintain a writ of right, is disseised of land, and a fine is levied by the disseisor; if they claim not in five years, they are barred: but in such case it is said, that every successor being head of the corporation, may have a new five years to make their claim. Plowd. 537.

By the ancient Common law, he that had right was to make his claim, &c. within a year and a day of the fine levied and the execution thereof, or he was barred for ever: But this bar is now gone; and if a fine without proclamations according to the Common law be now levied, he that hath right may make his claim or entry, &c. at any time to prevent the bar. 1 Inst. 254, 260. By statute, a claim or entry to avoid the bar of a fine is to be made in five years: And no claim or entry shall avoid any fine with proclamations, unless an action be commenced within one year after such entry, and prosecuted with effect. 1 R. c. 7. 4 Ann. c. 16.

Where a fine may be a bar as to some lands, and not as to other lands. See F. N. B. 98. A fine was levied, and five years passed without bringing a writ of error; and it was held a good bar within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 14. Cro. Jac. 333. But it has been adjudged that where five years pass, that shall not hinder, where the fine is erroneous. 2 Nelf. Abr. 838.

VI. How fines may be reversed.

Fines may be reversed for error, so as the writ of error be brought in twenty years, &c. and not afterwards, by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 14.

As to erroneous fines, and the manner of reversing them, it must be observed in the first place, that no person can bring a writ of error to reverse a fine, or any judgment, that is not intitled to the land, &c. of which the fine was levied, for the courts of law will not turn out the present tenant, unless the demandant can make out a clear title, possession always carrying with it the presumption of a good title till the right owner appears; besides, where the plaintiff in the writ of error can't make out a title, he can receive no damage by the fine, which the writ of error always supposes to be done, tho' it should be erroneous; and therefore it is no less than trifling with the courts of justice, to seek relief when he can't make appear he has received any injury. 1 Roll. Abr. 747. Dyer 90. 3 Lev. 36.

But if there be several parties to an erroneous fine, they shall all join with the party that is to enjoy the land, tho' they themselves can have nothing. 1 Roll. Abr. 747. Dyer 89.

Another rule to be observed is, that nothing can be assigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of justice, being things of the greatest credit, can't be questioned but by matters of equal notoriety with themselves; wherefore tho' the matter assigned for error should be proved by witnesses of the best credit, yet the judges would not admit it. 1 Roll. Abr. 757.

Hence it is, that in a writ of error to reverse a fine, the plaintiff can't assign that the conusor died before the teste of the dedimus potestatem, because that contradicts the record of the conusance taken by the commissioners, which evidently shews, that the conusor was then alive, because they took his conusance after they were armed with the commission and the dedimus issued. Dyer 89. b. 1 Roll. Abr. 757. Cro. Eliz. 469.

But the plaintiff in error may say, that after the conusance taken, and before the certificate thereof returned, the conusor died; because this is consistent with the record. 1 Roll. Abr. 757.

If a lessee for years, or a disseisee, or one that hath right only to a reversion or remainder, levy a fine to a stranger that hath nothing in the land, this fine will be void or voidable as to the stranger; and he that hath cause to except against it, may shew that the freehold and seisin was in another at the time of the fine levied, and that partes finis nihil habuerunt tempore levationis finis, and by this avoid the fine: And yet a disseisor, who hath a fee-simple by wrong in him, may levy a fine to a stranger that hath nothing in the land, like unto one that is rightfully seised of land in fee, &c. and it will be a good fine. Plowd. 353. 3 Rep. 87. If the cognisor of a fine hath nothing in the land passed, at the time of the fine levied, the fine may be avoided: But where the cognisor or cognisee is seised of an estate of freehold, whether by right, or by wrong, the fine will be a good fine in point of estate. 41 E. 3. c. 14. 22 Hen. 6. c. 43.

Fines are not reversible for rasure, interlineation, misentry, &c. or any want of form; but it is otherwise if of substance. 23 Eliz. c. 3. A fine shall not be reversed for small variance, which will not hurt it; nor is there occasion for a precise form in a render upon a fine, because it is only an amicable assurance upon record. 5 Rep. 38. If a fine be levied of lands in a wrong parish, tho' the parish in which they lie be not named, it will be a good fine, and not erroneous, being an amicable assurance: And a fine of a close may be levied by a lieu conus in a town, without mentioning the town, vill, &c. Godb. 440. 2 Cro. 574. 2 Mod. 47. If there be want of an original, or not writs of covenant for lands in every county; or if there is any notorious error, in the suing out a fine, or any fraud or deceit, &c. writ of error may be had to make void the fine. 1 Inst. 9. 1 Cro. 469. So if either of the parties dies before finished, &c. And if the cognisor of a fine die before the return of the writ of covenant, (tho' after the caption of the fine) it is said it may be reversed. 3 Salk. 168. If the King's silver is paid, before death of cognisor, the fine may be finished and good. See several cases towards the end of this division.

A writ of error may be brought in B. R. to reverse a fine levied in C. B. and the transcript only, not the very record of the fine, is removed in these cases: But if the court of B. R. adjudge it erroneous; then a certiorari goes to the chirographer to certify the fine itself, and when it comes up it is cancelled. 1 Salk. 341. And where on a writ of error in B. R. to reverse a fine in C. B. the fine was affirmed; a writ of error coram vobis resident. hath been allowed to lie, Ibid. 357. The court of B. R. will not reverse a fine without a sci. fac. returned against the tertenant, because the cognisees are but nominal persons. Ibid. 339. A fine may be set aside, by pleading that neither of the parties had any thing in the estate, at the time of levying the fine, &c. But those that are privy to the person that levied the fine, are estopped to plead this plea. 3 Rep. 88. In pleading a fine or recovery to uses, the deeds need not be set forth; but the pleader is to say, that the fine, &c. was levied to such uses, and produce the deeds in evidence to prove the uses. 8 W. 3. B. R.

Fines may be avoided where they are obtained by fraud, covin or disceit, tho' there be no error in the process; and that may be done either by writ of disceit or averment, setting forth the fraud or covin. Cro. Eliz. 471.

Thus if a fine be levied of land in ancient demesne, the lord shall have a writ of disceit against the conusor and the tenant, and by that avoid the fine. F. N. B. 98. a. Moor 6.

If a fine be levied to secret uses to deceive a purchaser, and the conusor pleads the fine in bar, the purchaser may aver the fraud in avoidance of the fine, by 27 Eliz. cap. 4. and such averment is not contrary to the record, because it admits the fine, but sets it aside for the covin and fraud in obtaining it. 3 Co. 8. a. Plowd. 49. a.

So if a fine be levied upon an usurious contract, it may be avoided by averment, by 13 Eliz. cap. 8. because such fine being levied for ends the law has prohibited, the law will not encourage any evasion out of the act, nor suffer such usurious contracts to be supported by the solemn acts of the courts of justice against the intention of the act. 3 Co. 80.

A fraudulent obtaining of a fine, or irregularity therein, cannot be relieved against in Chancery; but must be in the court where levied, though the officers may be examined and punished, if they did it criminaliter. Preced. Canc. 150. And where one was personated on levying a fine, it was not set aside in equity, but a reconveyance ordered of the land. Ibid. 151.

If a feme sole marries after the dedimus potestatem to take her fine, &c. the fine shall nevertheless be passed as her fine. Dyer 246.

And if either of the parties cognisors die after the King's silver is entered, the fine shall be finished, and be good. 1 Cro. 469.

A record of a fine may be amended, (if the King's silver is paid) where it is the misprision of the clerk. 5 Rep. 43. A fine is perfect, when the King's silver is paid thereon. 1 And. 229.

Tho' one concord will serve for lands that lie in divers counties; yet there must be several writs of covenant. 3 Inst. 21. Dyer 227. A concord of a fine may have an exception of part of the things mentioned therein: And if more acres are named, than a man hath in the place, or are intended to be passed; no more shall pass by the fine than is agreed upon. 1 Leen. 81. 3 Bull. 317, 318. A fine as well as a deed may be covinous, and avoidable for this; where it is suffered by fraud to deceive a purchaser, or creditor, &c. 3 Rep. 80. 16 H. 7. c. 5.

Fines levied before the justices in Wales; or in the counties Palatine of Chester, Durham, &c. have the same effect as fines levied before the justices of C. B. 34 E. 3. H. 8. c. 22. 37 H. 8. c. 19. 2 E. 3. Ed. 6. c. 28. 5 Eliz. c. 27. &c. See Recovery. See also Com. Dig. 3 V. tit. Fine. 2 V. New Abr. 520 to 554. Black. Com. 2 V. 118, 348, 352-3, &c. 3 V. 156. 4 V. 419, 422. and for Forms, 2 V. Appendix, xiv.

Sometimes a sum of money paid for the income of lands, &c. let by lease, is called fine. Fine also signifies an amends, or punishment for an offence committed; in which case a man is said facere finem de transgressionem cum rege, &c. See Post fines for offences. In all cases it is a final conclusion or end of differences.

Fine annullando levato Penemiento quod fuit de antiquo Dominico, Is a writ directed to the justices of C. B. for disannulling a fine levied of lands in ancient demesne, to the prejudice of the lord. Reg. Orig. 15.

Fines for Alienations, Were fines paid to the King by his tenant in chief, for licence to alien their lands according to the Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 12. But these are taken away by the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

Fines for Offences, Fine, in this sense, is amends, pecuniary punishment, or recompence for an offence committed against the King and his laws, or against the lord of a manor: In which case a man is said finem facere de transgressionem cum rege, &c. Reg. Jud. 1. 25. a. Corwell.

It seems that originally all punishments were corporal; but that after the use of money, when the profits of the courts courts arose from the money paid out of the Civil causes, and the fines and confiscations in criminal ones, the commutation of punishments was allowed of, and the corporal punishment, which was only in terroram, changed into the pecuniary, whereby they found their own advantage. This begat the distinction between the greater and the lesser offences; for in the crimina majora there was at least a fine to the King, which was levied by a capiatur; but upon the lesser offences there was only an amercement, which was assessed, and for which a distringas, or action of debt only lay. 2 New Abr. 502.

Under this head is to be considered,

I. Who may fine and amerce, and for what.

II. How fines, &c. may be mitigated and aggravated; as also how they may be recovered, and to whom they are payable.

III. What persons are exempt from being fined.

I. Who may fine and amerce, and for what.

Where a statute imposes a fine at the will and pleasure of the King, that is intended of his judges, who are to impose the fine. 4 Inst. 71. Courts of record only can fine and imprison a person, (except as aftermentioned): And such a court may fine a man for an offence committed in court in their view, or by confession of the party recorded in court. 1 Lill. Abr. 621. A man shall be fined and imprisoned for all contemptments done to any court of record against the commandment of the King's writs, &c. 9 Rep. 60. If a person is arrested coming to the courts of justice to answer a writ, the offender doing it shall be fined for the contempt: But there has been a difference made where it is done by the plaintiff in the writ, and a stranger, who it is said shall not be fined. 9 H. 6. c. 5: 1 Danv. 469. If an officer of the court neglects his duty, and gives not due attendance; a clerk of the peace doth not draw an indictment well in matter of form, or return thereof, upon a certiorari to remove the indictment into R. R. If a sheriff, &c. make an insufficient return of a habeas corpus issuing out of B. R. &c. Or if justices of peace proceed on an indictment after a certiorari issued to remove the indictment; the court may fine them. 1 Lill. 620. When a juror at the bar will not be sworn, he may be fined. 7 H. 6. c. 12. And if one of the jury depart without giving his verdict; or any of the jury give their verdict to the court before they are all agreed, they may be fined. 8 Rep. 38. 40 Aff. 10.

Also the sheriff in his torn, and the steward of a court-leet, have a discretionary power, either to award a fine, or amercement for contempt to the court; as for a suitor's refusing to be sworn, &c. and the steward of a court-leet may either amerce or fine an offender, upon an indictment for an offence not capital, within his jurisdiction, without any farther proceeding or trial; especially if the crime were any way enormous, as an affray accompanied with wounding. Keilw. 66. Kitchin 43, 51.

It is said, that some courts may imprison, but not fine, as the constables at the petit sessions. 11 Co. 44. 1 Roll. Rep. 74. 11 C. 43. b. Also some courts cannot fine or imprison, but amerce, as the county, hundred, &c. 11 Co. 43. b. But some courts can neither fine, imprison, nor amerce; as ecclesiastical courts held before the ordinary, archdeacon, &c. or their commissaries, and such who proceed according to the Canon, or Civil law. 11 Co. 44. a.

Every court of record may injoin the people to keep silence under a pain, and impose reasonable fines, not only on such as shall be convicted before them of any crime, on a formal prosecution, but also on all such as shall be guilty of any contempt in the face of the court; as by giving opprobrious language to the judge, or obstinately refusing to do their duty as officers of the court. 11 H. 6. 12. b. 1 Roll. Abr. 219. 8 Co. 38. 11 Co. 43. Cro. Eliz. 581. 1 Sid. 145.

If a dead body in prison, or other place, whereon an inquest ought to be taken, be interred, or suffered to lie so long, that it putrify before the coroner hath viewed it, the gaoler, or township shall be amerced. 1 Keilw. 278. 2 Hawth. P. G. 48. If any homicide be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with or without malice, or even by misadventure, or self-defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day-time, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced; and if out of a town, the hundred shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53. 4 Inst. 183. Cro. Car. 252. 3 Leon. 207. 2 Inst. 315. Dyor 210.

Besides fines imposed for offences, it seems, that regularly there was a fine or amercement in all actions; for if the plaintiff or demandant did not prevail, it was thought reasonable that he should be punished for his unjust vexation; and therefore there was judgment against him, quod sit in misericordia pro falso clamore. 8 Co. 59. F. N. B. 75.

Hence when the plaintiff takes out a writ, the sheriff, before the return of it, was formerly obliged to take pledges of prosecution, which, when fines and amercements were considerable, were real and responsible persons, and answerable for those amercements; but being now so very inconsiderable, that they are never levied, they are only formal pledges entered, vis. John Doe and Richard Roe. 1 Sand. 227. See tit. Rail.

In all actions, where the judgment is against the defendant, it was to be entered with a misericordia, or a capiatur; and herein the difference is, that if it be an action of debt, or founded on a contract, the entry is ideo in misericordia, without assessing any sum in certain, which was afterwards assessed by the coroners in the proper county; but if it were in action of trespass, the court set the fine, and levied it by a capiatur. 8 Co. 60. 1 Roll. Abr. 212, 219. Cro. Eliz. 844. Cro. Jac. 255. Therefore,

In actions quare vi & armis, as trespass, and the like; if judgment pass against the defendant in a court of record, he shall be fined. 8 Rep. 59. But in actions which have not something of force, or fraud, or deceit to the court; if the defendant comes the first day he is called, and tender the thing demanded to the plaintiff, he is not to be fined. 5 Rep. 49. 8 Rep. 59. 60, 99. 3 Aff. 9. 22 Aff. 82. 1 Danv. Abr. 471. 1 Vent. 116.

All capiatur fines are taken away by Stat. 4 3 5 W. & M. c. 12. Except where a defendant pleads non est factum, and it is found against him. 1 Lill. Abr. 621. In trespass, assault and battery, &c. there can be no capiatur pro fine entered since this Stat. See Capiatur.

II. How fines, &c. may be mitigated and aggravated; as also how they may be recovered, and to whom they are payable.

A fine may be mitigated the same term it was set, being under the power of the court during that time; but not afterwards. J. Raym. 376. And fines assessed in court by judgment upon an information, cannot be afterwards mitigated. Cro. Car. 251. If a fine certain is imposed by statute on any conviction, the court cannot mitigate it; but if the party comes in before conviction, and submits to the court, they may assess a less fine; for he is not convicted, and perhaps never might. 3 Salk. 33. The court of Exchequer may mitigate a fine certain, because it is a court of equity, and they have a privy seal for it. Ibid.

If an excessive fine is imposed at the sessions, it may be mitigated at the King's Bench. 1 Vent. 336. A defendant being indicted for an assault, confessed it, and submitted to a small fine; and it was adjudged that in such a case he may produce affidavits to prove on the prosecutor, that it was non assault, and that in mitigation of the fine; though this cannot be done after he is found Guilty. 1 Salk. 55. If a person is found Guilty of a misdemeanor upon indictment, and fined, he cannot move to mitigate the fine, unless he appear in person; but one absent may submit to a fine, if the clerk in court will undertake to pay it. 1 Vent. 209, 270. 1 Salk. 55. 2 Hawth. 446. It is a common practice in the court of B. R. to give a defendant leave to speak with the prosecutor, i. e. to make satisfaction for the costs of the prosecution, and also for damages sustained, that there may be an end of suits; the court at the same time shewing on that account an inclination to set a moderate fine on behalf of the King. Wood's Inst. 653. And in cases where costs are not given by law, after a prosecutor has accepted costs from the defendant, he cannot aggravate the fine; because having no right to demand costs, if he takes them, it shall be intended by way of satisfaction of the wrong. 2 H. P. C. 292.

All fines belong to the King, and the reason is, because the courts of justice are supported at his charge; and where ever the law puts the King to any charge for the support and protection of his people, it provides money for that purpose. Brañ. 129. When a person is fined to the King, notwithstanding the body remains in prison, it is said the King shall be satisfied the fine out of the offender's estate. 4 Leon. c. 393.

As to the method of recovering fines.

By the Common law, the King, or Lord may, at their election, distrain, or bring an action of debt for a fine or amercement. Cro. Eliz. 581. Savil 93. Rast. Ent. 151, 553, 606. 2 H. 4. 24. b. 10 H. 6. 7. Raym. 68. But every avowry, or declaration of this kind ought expressly to shew, that the offence was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, for if it were not, all the proceedings were coram non iudice, and a court shall not be presumed to have a jurisdiction where it doth not appear to have one. Hob. 129. Rast. Ent. 553. Co. Ent. 572. Also it is adviseable to alledge, that the offence was committed, as well as presented, and to shew the names of the presentors and the assessor in setting forth a presentment or assentment, and also to shew that proper notice was given of holding the court. But for this, vide Hawk. P. C. 59, 60.

Of common right, a distress is incident to every fine and amercement, in a torn or leet for offences of right within the jurisdiction thereof; but if the offence were only the neglect of a duty created by custom, and of a private nature, it is clear, that there must be a custom to warrant a distress, and perhaps such custom is also necessary, though the duty be of a publick nature. 2 Hawk. P. C. 60.

Also the sheriff, or lord mayor may for such fines or amercements distrain the goods of the offender, even in the highway, or in land not holden of the lord, unless such land be in the possession of the crown. 1 Roll. Ab. 670. 2 Inst. 104. But such fines and amercements being for a personal offence, no stranger's beasts can lawfully be distrained for them, tho' they have been levan and couchant upon the lands of the offender. Owen 146 Noy 20.

A joint award of one fine against divers persons is erroneous; it ought to be several against each defendant for otherwise one who hath paid his part might be continued in prison till the others have paid theirs, which would be in effect to punish for the offence of another 2 Hawk. 446. Fines to the King are estreated into the Exchequer. See farther as to fines, Black. Com. 3 259. 4 V. 372.

Fines le Roy, Are all fines to the King; and under this head are included fines for original writs. Originals on trespass on the case, where the damages are laid above 40*l.* pay a fine, viz. from 40*l.* damages to 100 marks, 6*s.* 8*d.* from 100 marks to 100*l.* the fine is 10*s.* From 100*l.* to 200 marks, 13*s.* 4*d.* From 200 to 400 marks, 16*s.* 8*d.* From 400 marks to 200*l.* it is 1*l.* fine; and so for every 100 marks more, you pay 6*s.* 8*d.* and every 100*l.* further 10*s.* Practis. Attorn. 1 Edit. p. 132. And fines are paid for original writs in debt; for every writ of 40*l.* debt, 6*s.* 8*d.* and if it be of 100 marks, but 6*s.* 8*d.* and for every 100 marks 6*s.* 8*d.* &c. also for every writ of plea of land, if it be not a writ of right patent, which is for the yearly value of 5 marks, 6*s.* 8*d.* and so according to that rate. 19 H. 6. 44. 7 H. 6. 33. *New Nat. Fire-ordeal. See Ordeal, and Black. Com. 4 V. 336.

Fire-Mozks. No person whatsoever shall make, sell, &c. squibbs, rockets, serpents, &c. or cases, moulds, &c.

&c. for making such squibbs, and every such offence shall be adjudged a common nuisance.

Persons throwing or firing squibbs, &c. or suffering them, &c. to be thrown or fired from their houses incur a penalty of 20 s. Likewise persons throwing, casting or firing, or aiding or assisting in the throwing, casting or firing of any squibbs, rockets, serpents, or other fireworks, in or into any publick street, house, shop, river, highway, road or passage, incur the like penalty of 20 s. and on nonpayment may be committed to the house of correction. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 7.

N. B. This statute doth not take from any person injured, by throwing of squibbs, &c. the remedy, at Common law, for the party may maintain a special action on the case, or trespass, &c. for recovery of full damages.

First-fruits, (Primitivæ) Are the profits after avoidance, of every spiritual living for the first year, according to the valuation thereof in the King's books. These were given in ancient times to the Pope throughout all christendom; and were first claimed by him in England of such foreigners as he bestowed benefices on here by way of provision; afterwards they were demanded of the clerks of all spiritual patrons, and at length of all other clerks on their admission to benefices: but upon the throwing off the Pope's supremacy in the reign of Hen. 8. they were translated to, and vested in, the King, as appears by the Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 3. And for the ordering thereof, there was a court erected 32 H. 8. but dissolved Anno 1 Mar. Though by 1 Eliz. c. 4. these profits are reduced again to the crown, yet the court was never restored; for all matters formerly handled therein, were transferred to the Exchequer, within the survey of which court they now remain. By Stat. 26 H. 8. the Lord Chancellor, &c. is empowered to examine into the value of First-fruits; and clergymen entering on their livings before the same are paid or compounded, are to forfeit double value. But the 1 Eliz. c. 4. ordains, that if an incumbent on a benefice do not live half a year, or is ousted before the year expired, his executors are to pay only a fourth part of the First-fruits; and if he lives the year, and then dies, or he ousted in six months after, but half of the First-fruits shall be paid. And by this statute livings not above 10 l. per Ann. &c. are discharged from payment of these duties: as are also benefices under and not exceeding 50 l. a year, by Stat. 5 Ann. c. 24. The 2 Ann. c. 11. settles upon a corporation the First-fruits and tenths of all benefices for the maintenance of the poor clergy; which is called the corporation of the bounty of Q. Anne. See the act, relating to large wastes in Yorkshire inclosed, a sixth part for the benefit of poor clergymen, whose livings do not exceed 40 l. per Ann. Stat. 12 Ann. c. 4. Vide 3 Geo. 1. c. 10. Black. Com. 1 V. 284. 2 V. 67. 4 V. 106.

Fish and Fishing. No fisherman shall use any net or engine, to destroy the fry of fish: and persons using nets for that purpose, or taking salmon or trout out of season, or any fish under certain lengths, are liable to forfeit 20 s. and justices of peace, and Lords of leets have power to put the acts in force. See 1 El. c. 17. 3 Jac. 1. c. 12. 30 Geo. 2. c. 21. & post. No person may fasten nets, &c. across rivers to destroy fish, and disturb passage of vessels, on pain of 5 l. Stat. 2 H. 6. c. 15. None shall fish in any pond or moat, &c. without the owner's licence, on pain of three months imprisonment. 31 H. 8. c. 2. And no person shall take any fish in any river, without the consent of the owner, under the penalty of 10 s. for the use of the poor, and treble damage to the party grieved, leviable by distress of goods; and for want of distress, the offender is to be committed to the house of correction for a month: also nets, angles, &c. of poachers may be seized, by the owners of rivers, or by any persons by warrant from a justice of peace, &c. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. The Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 21. was made for the increase and preservation of salmon in rivers in the counties of Southampton and Wilts; requiring that no salmon be taken between the 1st of August and 12th of November, or under size, &c. And by 1 Geo. 1. c. 18. salmon taken in the river Severn, Dee, Wye, Were, Ouse, &c. are to be 18 inches long at least; or the persons catching them shall forfeit 5 l. And sea fish sold must be of the lengths following, viz. Bret and turbot 16 inches, brill and pearl 14, codlin, bass and mallet 12, sole and plaice 8, flounders 7, whiting 6 inches long, &c. on pain of forfeiting 20 s. to the poor, and the fish. Vide the statute. Persons that import any fish, contrary to the 1 Geo. 1. c. 18. for better preventing fresh fish taken by foreigners being imported into this kingdom, &c. shall forfeit 100 l. to be recovered in the court at Westminster, one moiety to informers, and the other to the poor; and masters of smacks, hoys, boats, &c. in which the fish shall be imported, or brought on shore, forfeit 50 l. Also selling the same in England, is liable to 20 l. penalty. Stat. 9 Geo. c. 33.

By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 49. contracts for the buying fish (except fresh salmon, or soles brought by land carriage, oysters or salt or dried fish) to be sold by retail before the same are brought to market and exposed to sale, are declared void; and each party contracting shall forfeit 50 l. And fishermen not selling their fish within eight days after their arrival on the coast between North Yarmouth and Dover, shall forfeit the cargo, vessel and tackle, &c. And sea fish under the dimensions prohibited by the Stat. 1. Geo. 1. may be exposed to sale, provided they are taken with a hook, and so not capable of being preserved alive. But see Stat. 33 Geo. 2. c. 27. made to regulate the sale of fish at the first hand in the fish markets in London and Westminster; and to prevent salesmen of fish buying fish to sell again on their own account; and to allow bret and turbot, brill, and pearl, although under the respective dimensions mentioned in 1 Geo. 1. c. 18. to be imported and sold; and to punish persons who shall take or sell any spawn, brood, or fry of fish, unsizeable fish, or fish out of season, or smelts under the size of five inches. By this act every master of a vessel is to give a true account of the several sorts of fish brought alive to the shore in his vessel, and if after such arrival, he shall wilfully destroy or throw away any of the said fish, not being unwholesome or unmarketable, &c. he is liable to be committed to the house of correction, and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding 2 months not less than one. And see farther 2 Geo. 3. c. 15. for the better supplying the cities of London and Westminster with fish, and to reduce the exorbitant price thereof; and to protect and encourage fishermen.

Fish-royal, Whale and Sturgeon, which the King is intitled to when either thrown on shore or caught near the coasts. Plowd. 315. Black. Com. 1 V. 290.

Fishing Right of, and property of fish. It has been held, that where the Lord of the manor hath the soil on both sides the river, 'tis a good evidence that he hath the right of fishing, and it puts the proof upon him who claims liberam piscariam; but where a river ebbs and flows, and is an arm of the sea, there 'tis common to all, and he who claims a privilege to himself must prove it; for if trespass is brought for fishing there, the defendant may justify that the place where is brachium maris, in quo unusquisque subditus domini regis habet & habere debet liberam piscariam: In the Sewer, the soil belongs to the owners of the land on each side; and the soil of the river Thames, is in the King, &c. but the fishing is common to all. 1 Mod. 105. He who is owner of the soil of a private river, hath separatis piscaria; and he that hath libera piscaria, hath a property in the fish, and may bring a possessory action for them; but communis piscaria is like the case of all other commons. 2 Salk. 637. One that has a close pond in which there are fish, may call them pisces suos in an indictment, &c. But he cannot call them as bona & catalla, if they be not in trunks. Mod. Ca. 183. There needs no privilege to make a fish pond; as there doth in case of a warren. Ibid. See Black. Com. 2 V. 34, 39, 417.

Fishermen. There shall be a master, wardens and assistants of the Fishermen's Company in London, chosen yearly at the next court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen after the tenth of June, who are constituted a court of assistants; and they shall meet once a month at their common hall, to regulate abuses in fishery, register the names of fishermen, and mark their boats, &c. See Stat. 9 Ann. c. 26. Fish and Fishing, Herrings, &c.

Fishery. A Royal Fishery of England was established in the reign of King Car. 2. and the members of it incorporated into a company. The crown hath power to direct 20 s. out of every 100 l. South-Sea stock, to be applied plied for improving the fishery of the kingdom; carried on to Greenland, and in other Northern seas. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 21. And for recovery of the British fishery, allowances are made on fish exported to other countries, &c. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 28. Fishery in Scotland to be improved according to the articles of the union. 13 Geo. 1. c. 30. By stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 45. The whale fishery is further encouraged and enlarged. And see statutes 23 Geo. 2. c. 24. and 26 Geo. 2. c. 9. for the encouragement of the British White Herring Fishery. And tit. Fish and Fishing.

Fledwite or Flighdwite, (from the Sax. Flyth fuga & Wite, Multa) In our ancient law signifies a discharge from americiaments, where a person having been a fugitive, comes to the peace of our Lord the King of his own accord, or with licence. Rassal.

Fleet, (Sax. Fleet, i. e. Flota, a place of running-water, where the tide or float comes up) Is a famous prison in London, so called from a river or ditch that was formerly there, on the side whereof it stood. To this prison men are usually committed for contempt to the King and his laws, particularly against the courts of justice; or for debt, when persons are unable or unwilling to satisfy their creditors: there are large rules, and a warden belonging to the Fleet Prison, &c. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 7. By a late statute, the warden of the Fleet was disabled to hold any office, for his notorious oppressions of the prisoners; and the King was empowered to grant the said office to such person as he should think fit, &c. 2 Geo. 2. c. 32.

Fleet-Ditch. The Lord Mayor of London, &c. may fill up Fleet-Ditch, and make the soil level with the streets; and the fee is vested in the Mayor and commonalty. Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 22. And now, by virtue of the act for building Blackfriars Bridge the ditch is in part arched over, and so filled up to the foot of the bridge, that the ground is now level with Fleet-street.

Fleet of Ships. See Flota Navium, and Navy Royal of England.

Flem, Flema, (from the Sax. Flean, to kill or slay) An outlaw; and by virtue of the word Flemaflare were claimed bona felonum, as may be collected from a quo warranto Temp. Ed. 3.

Flemensfrit, Flemensfrithe, Flymenafrynthe, Signifies the receiving or relieving of a fugitive or outlaw. Leg. Ine. c. 29, 47. LL. H. 1. c. 10, 12.

Fogage, (Fogagium) Fog or rank after-grass, not eaten in Summer. LL. Forfeitar. Sect. c. 16.

Foiterers, By Blount are interpreted to be vagabonds. See Faitours.

Folk-lands, (Sax.) Copyhold lands so called in the time of the Saxons, as charter lands were called Boc-lands. Kitch. 174. Folkland was terra vulgi or popularis the land of the vulgar people, who had no certain estate therein, but held the same under the rents and services accustomed or agreed, at the will only of their Lord the Thane; and it was therefore not put in writing, but accounted prædium rusticum & ignobile. Spelm. of Feuds, cap. 5.

Folcmote or folkmore, (Sax.) Folcemet, i. e. Conventus populi Is compounded of Folk, populus, and mote or gemete, convenire; and signified originally, as Sommer in his Saxon Dictionary tells us, a general assembly of the people, to consider of, and order matters of the commonwealth: Omnes proceres regni & milites & liberi homines universi totius regni Britannia facere debent in pleno Folcmote Fidelitatem domino regii, &c. Leg. Edw. Confess. cap. 35. And Sir Henry Spelman says, the folcmote was a sort of annual parliament, or convention of the Bishops, Thanes, Aldermen and freemen, upon every May-day yearly; where the laymen were sworn to defend one another, and to the King, and to preserve the laws of the kingdom, and then consulted of the common safety. But Dr. Brady infers from the laws of our Saxon Kings, that it was an inferior court, held before the King's Reeve or steward, every month to do Folk right, or compose smaller differences, from whence there lay appeal to the superior courts. Brady's Gloss. p. 48. Squire seems to think the folcmote, not distinct from the Motemote, or common general meeting of the county. See his Engl. Sax. Gov. 155. n.

Manwood mentions folkmote as a court holden in London, wherein all the folk and people of the city did complain plain of the Mayor and Aldermen, for misgovernment within the said city: and this word is still in use among the Londoners; and denotes Celebrem ex tota civitate conventum. Stowe's Survey. According to Kennet, the folk-mote was a common council of all the inhabitants of a city, town or borough, convened often by sound of bell to the Mote Hall or House; or it was applied to a larger congress of all the freemen within a county, called the Shire-mote, where formerly all knights and military tenants did fealty to the King, and elected the annual sheriff on the first of October, till this popular election to avoid tumults and riots devolved to the King's nomination. Anno 1315. 3 Ed. 1. After which the City Folk-mote was swallowed up in a select committee or Common Council; and the County Folk-mote, in the Sheriff's Tour and Affises. The word Folk-mote was also used for any kind of popular or public meeting; as of all the tenants at the Court-Leet or Court-Baron, in which signification it was of a late extent. Paroch. Antiq. 120.

Foldage and Fold-course, A liberty to fold sheep, &c. Fallege and Faldfee.

Folgarit, Menial servants; Eos qui aliis deserviunt. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 10. House-keepers by the Saxons were called Husfascene; and their servants or followers, Feigheres or Folgeres. LL. Hen. 1. c. 9.

Forbider of Armour, (Forbator) Si quis forbitor arm. alicujus suscepit, ad purgandum, &c. LL. Aluredi, MS. c. 22.

Force, (Vis) Is most commonly applied in pejorem partem, the evil part, and signifies any unlawful violence. It is defined by West to be an offence, by which violence is used to things or persons; and he divides it into simple and compound; simple force, is that which is so committed that it hath no other crime accompanying it; as if one by force do only enter into another man's possession, without doing any other unlawful act: mixed or compound force, is when some other violence is committed with such a fact, which of itself alone is criminal; as where any one by force enters into another man's house, and kills a man, or ravishes a woman, &c. And he makes several other divisions of this head. West. Symbol. par. 2. sect. 65. Lord Coke says, there is also a force implied in law; as every trespass, rescous, or disseisin, implieth it; and an actual force, with weapons, number of persons, &c. where threatening is used to the terror of another. 1 Inst. 257. By law any person may enter a tavern; and a landlord may enter his tenant's house to view repairs, &c. But if he that enters a tavern, commits any force or violence: or he that enters to view repairs, breaketh the house, &c. it shall be intended that they entered for that purpose. 8 Rep. 146. All force is against the law; and it is lawful to repel force by force: there is a maxim in our law, Quod alias bonum & justum est, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum & injustum est. 3 Rep. 78.

Forcible Entry and Detainer. The first is a violent actual entry into houses or lands: and forcible detainer is a with-holding by violence, and with strong hand, of the possession of land, &c. whereby he who hath right of entry is barred or hindered. At common law, any one who had a right of entry into lands, &c. might regain possession thereof by force; but this liberty being much abused, to the breach of the publick peace, it was found necessary that it should be restrained by statute: at this day, he who is wrongfully dispossessed of goods, may justify the retaking them by force. Lamb. 135. Crompt. 70. Kelw. 92. But see 3 Salk. 187. By statutes, none shall enter into any lands or tenements, but where entry is given by law, and in a peaceable manner, tho' they have title of entry, on pain of imprisonment, &c. And when a forcible entry is committed, justices of peace are empowered to view the place, and inquire of the force by a jury summoned by the sheriff of the county; and cause the tenements to be seized and restored, and imprison the offenders till they pay a fine. 5 R. 2. stat. 1. c. 8. 15 R. 2. c. 2. 8 H. 6. c. 9. f. 2. If a justice of peace come to view a force in a house, and they refuse to let him in; this of itself will make a forcible detainer in all cases; but it must be upon complaint made. The justices of peace are not to inquire into the title of either party: and there shall be no restitution upon an indictment of forcible entry or detainer, where the defendant hath been in quiet possession for three years together without interruption, next before the day of the indictment found, and his estate in the land not ended; which may be allowed in stay of restitution, and restitution is to be stayed till that be tried, if the other will traverse the same, &c. Dalt. 312. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 11.

Indicement for forcible entry must be laid of liberum tenementum, &c. to have restitution by the statute 15 R. 2. c. 2. 8 H. 6. c. 9, &c. 2 Cro. 157. Though by 21 Jac. 1. c. 15. Justices of peace may give like restitution of possession to tenants for years, tenant by elegit, statute staple, &c. and copyholders, as to freeholders.

It remains to consider,

- I. What shall be deemed a forcible entry and detainer under the foregoing statutes.
- II. What remedy is provided in such cases.

- I. What shall be deemed a forcible entry and detainer under the foregoing statutes.

When one or more persons armed with unusual weapons, violently enter into the house or land of another; or where they do not enter violently: if they forcibly put another out of his possession; or if one enters another's house, without his consent, although the door be open, &c. These are forcible entries punishable by law. 1 Inst. 257. So when a tenant keeps possession of the land at the end of his term against the landlord, it is a forcible detainer. Cro. Jac. 199. And if a lessee takes a new lease of another person, whom he conceives to have better title, and at the end of the term keeps possession against his own landlord, this is a forcible detainer. Ibid. Also persons continuing in possession of a defeasible estate, after the title is defeated, are punishable for forcible entry; for continuing in possession afterwards, amounts in law to a new entry. 1 Inst. 256, 257. And an infant, or feme- covert may be guilty of forcible entry within the statutes in respect of violence committed by them in person; but not for what is done by others at their command, their commands being void. 1 Inst. 357.

If a man have two houses next adjoining, the one by a defeasible title, and the other by a good title; and he uses force in that he hath by the good title to keep persons out of the other house, this is a forcible detainer. 2 Shep. Abr. 203. A man enters into the house of another by the windows, and then threatneth the party, and he for fear doth leave his house, it is a forcible entry: so if one enter a house when no person is therein, with armed men, &c. Moor v. Inf. 185. If a person after peaceable entry, shall make use of arms to defend his possession, &c. it will be forcible detainer: a man put another out of his house by force, if he then puts in one of his servants in a peaceable manner, who keeps out the party, &c. it will be a forcible entry, but not a detainer; but if himself remaineth there with force, this this makes a forcible detainer. 2 Shep. 203. If I hear that persons will come to my house to beat me, &c. and I take in force to defend myself, 'tis no forcible detainer: tho' where they are coming to take possession only, it is otherwise. Ibid. This must mean, where they have a right to take possession, by law.

This offence may be committed of a rent, as well as of a house or land; as where one comes to distrain, and the tenant threatens to kill him, or forcibly makes resistance, &c. Ibid. 201. But no man can be guilty of forcible entry, for entering with violence into lands or houses in his own sole possession at the time of entry; as by breaking open doors, &c. of his house, detained from him by one who has the bare custody of it: but jointenants, or tenants in common, may be guilty of forcible entry, and holding out their companions. 1 Harw. P. C. 147. A person is not guilty of a forcible detainer, by barely refusing to go out of a house, and continuing therein in despite of another. Ibid. 146. And no words alone can make a forcible entry, although violent and threatening, without force used by the party. 1 Lill. Abr. 514. 1 Harw. 145.

II. What remedy is provided in such cases.

The remedy may be,

1. By action.

An action lies upon Stat. 15 R. 2. 2. against him who makes a forcible entry. So, upon Stat. 8 H. 6. 9. against him who makes a forcible entry, or detainer.

2. By justices of peace upon view.

By Stat. 15 R. 2. 2. A justice of peace may go to the place, &c. and if he find any hold forcibly, shall commit, &c. till, convicted by record of the justice, they make fine and ransom. And therefore, any justice of the peace, upon view of the force, may make a record of it, and commit the offender. Dalt. c. 44. And this, without a writ directed to him to execute the statutes. And, upon any information, without a complaint of the party. So every justice may take the sheriff, and posse comitatus, to restrain; or he may break open a house to remove the force. Ibid. The record made by a justice upon view, shall be a conviction, and is not traversable. Vide 8 Co. 121. Dalt. c. 44. And ought to be certified to B. R. or the next assizes, or quarter-sessions. And the party convicted shall be there fined. But the justice himself cannot fine. Ibid. Vide Sal. 353. And if a defect appears, in the conviction, to B. R. it shall be quashed. 1 Sid. 156.

The justices, on forcible detainer, may punish the force upon view, and fine and imprison the offenders; but cannot meddle with the possession. Sid. 156. Yet see post. And it hath been held, that in forcible entry and detainer, the jury are to find all or none; and not the detainer, without the forcible entry. 1 Vent. 25.

3. By inquisition, according to 8 H. 6. c. 9. or by indictment.

An indictment may be for a forcible entry, or detainer, before justices of peace of the county where the land lies, at the quarter-sessions. But an indictment for a forcible detainer, ought to shew, that the entry was peaceable. R. 2. Cro. 151.

Indictments for forcible entry must set forth, that the entry was manu forti, to distinguish this offence from other trespasses vi & armis; and there are many niceties to be observed in drawing the indictment, otherwise it will be quashed. 1 Cro. 461. Dalt. 298. There must be certainty in this indictment; and no repugnancy, which is an incurable fault. An indictment of forcible entry was quashed, for that it did not set forth the estate of the party: so where the defendant hath not been in possession peaceably three years before the indictment, without saying before the indictment found, &c. And force shall not be intended when the judgment is generally laid, for it must be always expressed. 2 Nels. Abr. 867, 869.

Indictment of forcible entry lies not only for lands, but for tithes; also for rents: but not against a lord entering a common with force, for which the commoner may not indict him, because it is his own land. Cro. Car. 201, 486.

In many cases restitution may be made. By 8 H. 6. c. 9. A justice of peace, if on inquiry, &c. a forcible entry or detainer is found, shall put the party in possession of the lands so entred or holden; and the justice shall make restitution, (after inquisition found) to the party ousted, by himself, or by his precept to the sheriff. 2 T. Ray. 85. Carth. 496. So restitution shall be made upon an indictment at the quarter-sessions. H. P. C. 140.

An indictment of forcible entry may be removed from before justices of peace into the court of B. R. coram rege, which court may award restitution. 11 Rep. 65. And the justices before whom such indictment was found, may, after traverse tendered, certify or deliver the indictment into the King's Bench, and refer the proceeding thereupon to the justices of that court.

So justices of gaol-delivery, upon an indictment before them. So re-restitution shall be, where the indictment is quashed. Sav. 68. 2 Cro. 151. So restitution shall be to a disseisor ousted by the force of the disseisee. To a lessee, tho' the lessor, who was disseised, thereby opposes it. To a copyholder, tho' his lord opposes it. Vide Dalt. c. 132. Cont. before the St. 21 Jac. 15. Dy. 142. in marg.

A copyholder cannot be disseised, because he hath no freehold in his estate; but he may be expelled. And a copyhold tenant may be restored, where he is wrongfully expelled; but if the indictment be only of disseisin, as he may not be disseised, there can be no restitution but at the prayer of him who hath the freehold. Yelv. 81. 2 Cro. 41. Possession of the termor is the possession of him in reversion: and when a lessee for years is put out of possession by force, restitution must be to him in reversion, and not the lessee; and then his lessee may re-enter. 1 Leon. 327. A termor may say that he was expelled, and his landlord in reversion disseised; or rather that the tenant of the freehold is disseised, and he the lessee for years expelled. 4 Mod. 248. 2 Nels. Abr. 869. If a disseisee within three years makes a lawful claim, this is an interruption of the possession of the disseisor. H. P. C. 139. Though it has been adjudged, that it is not the title of the possessor, but the possession for three years, which is material. Sid. 149. Since the Stat. 5 R. 2. st. 1. c. 8. if W. R. is seised of lands, and L. R. having good right to enter, doth accordingly enter manu forti, he may be indicted notwithstanding his right, &c. 3 Salk. 170. For a forcible detainer only 'tis said there is no restitution; the plaintiff never having been in possession. 1 Vent. 23. Sid. 97, 99.

No restitution shall be awarded to an advowson, common, rent, &c. for it shall only be to land. Dalt. c. 44. Nor, where he, who used force has the possession by operation of law: as if a disseisee enters, and afterwards, by force, ousts his disseisor, the possession shall not be restored; for it was re-vested in the disseisee by his entry. Dalt. c. 132. Nor, if a lessor enters by force, upon the lessee, for a forfeiture; nor, to any other than him who was ousted by force, as to his heir. Sal. 587. Or any abator, after the death of the ancestor. Dalt. c. 132. Nor if the party tenders a traverse to the inquisition. 1 Sid. 287. It shall be stayed, or granted at discretion. H. P. C. 141. It shall be stayed. Sal. 260. Sal. 588. Semb. that it shall be stayed. But it is said, that it shall be granted. Mod. Ca. 115. So upon a certiorari delivered to remove an indictment, it shall be stayed. H. P. C. 141. Or, if the indictment appears insufficient. H. P. C. 140. And in such case restitution granted may be stayed before execution. H. P. C. 140. So restitution shall not be, after a conviction by a justice upon his view. 1 Vent. 308. Nor by justices of assize, gaol-delivery, or justices of peace; if the indictment was not found before them. H. P. C. 140. Dalt. c. 44, 131. So restitution shall not be, unless immediately; not four or five years afterwards. R. Carth. 496. Nor by Stat. 31 El. 11. If by plea it appears, that the party had possession for three years before the inquisition found. T. Ray. 85. Sal. 260. Tho' the plea does not shew, how he was possessed. T. Ray. 85. 1 Sid. 149.

A record of justices of peace of forcible entry, is not traversable; but the entry and force, &c. may be traversed in writing, and the justices may summon a jury for trial of the traverse. 1 Salk. 353. The finding of the force force being in nature of a presentment by the jury, is traversable; and if the justices of peace refuse the traverse, and grant restitution, on removing the indictment into B. R. there the traverse may be tried; and on a verdict found for the party, &c. a re-restitution shall be granted. Sid. 287. 2 Salk. 588. If no force is found at a trial thereof before justices, restitution is not to be granted; nor shall it be had till the force is tried; nor ought the justices to make it in the absence of the defendant, without calling him to answer. 1 Havok. P. C. 154. No other justices of peace but those before whom the indictment was found, may either at sessions, or out of it, award restitution; the same justices may do it in person, or make a precept to the sheriff to do it, who may raise the power of the county to assist him in executing the same. 1 Havok. 152. And the same justices of peace may also supersede the restitution, before it is executed; on insufficiency found in the indictment, &c. But no other justices, except of the court of B. R. A certiorari from B. R. is a superfedeas to the restitution; and the justices of B. R. may set aside the restitution after executed, if it be against law, or irregularly obtained, &c. 1 Salk. 154. If justices of peace exceed their authority, an information may be brought against them. A conviction for forcible entry, before a fine is set, may be quashed on motion; but after a fine is set, it may not; the defendant must bring writ of error. 2 Salk. 450.

If a plaintiff proceeds not criminally by indictment for forcible entry, but commences a civil action on the case, (which he may do on the statute of 8 Hen. 6. c. 9.) the defendant is to plead Not guilty, or may plead any special matter, and traverse the force; and the plaintiff in his replication must answer the special matter, and not the traverse; and if it be found against the defendant, he is convicted of the force of course; whereupon the plaintiff shall recover treble damages and costs. 3 Salk. 169.

A reversioner cannot bring action of forcible entry, because he cannot be expelled, though he may be disseised. Dyer 141. And the words in the writ to maintain the action are, that the defendant expulsi & disseisavit, &c. yet it is said that every disseisin implies an expulsion in forcible entry. 2 Cro. 31. And if in trespass or assise upon the statute of forcible entries 8 H. 6. c. 9. the defendant is condemned by non sum informatus; he shall pay treble damages and treble costs: adjudged, and affirmed in error. For the words of the statute give them where the recovery is by verdict, or otherwise in due manner. Jenk. Cent. 197. Though forcible entry is punishable either by indictment or action; the action is seldom brought, but the indictment often. See Black. Com. 3 V. 179. 4 V. 147.

Forcible Marriage. Of a woman of estate, is felony; for by the Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 2. it is enacted, "That if any persons shall take away any woman having lands or goods, or that is heir apparent to her ancestor, by force, and against her will, and marry or defile her, the takers, procurers, abettors, and receivers of the woman taken away against her will, and knowing the same, shall be deemed principal felons." but as to procurers and accessaries, they are to be before the offence committed, to be excluded the benefit of clergy, by 39 Elix. c. 9. The indictment on the Stat. 3 H. 7. is expressly to set forth, that the woman taken away had lands or goods, or was heir apparent, and also that she was married or defiled, because no other case is within the statute; and it ought to alledge that the taking was for lucre: it is no excuse that the woman at first was taken away with her consent; for if she afterwards refuse to continue with the offender, and be forced against her will, she may from that time properly be said to be taken against her will; and it is not material whether a woman so taken away, be at last married or defiled with her own consent or not, if she were under the force at the time; the offender being in both cases equally within the words of the act. 3 Inst. 61. H. P. C. 119. 1 H. P. C. 109, 110.

Those persons who after the fact receive the offender, are but accessaries after the offence, according to the rules of the Common law; and those that are only privy to the damage, but not parties to the forcible taking away, are not within the act. H. P. C. 119. A man may be indicted for taking away a woman by force in another county; for the continuing of the force in any county amounts to a forcible taking there. Ibid. Taking away any woman child, under the age of sixteen years and unmarried, out of the custody and without the consent of the father or guardian, &c. the offender shall suffer fine and imprisonment; and if the woman agrees to any contract of matrimony with such person, she shall forfeit her estate during her life, to the next of kin to whom the inheritance should descend, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8. See 3 Mod. Rep. 84, 169. This is a force against the parents: and an information will lie for seducing a young man or woman from their parents, against their consents, in order to marry them, &c. 3 Cro. 557. Raym. 473. See Marriage, and Black. Com. 4 V. 208.

Ford, (forda) A shallow place in a river made so by damming or penning up the water. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 657.

Fordol, (from the Sax. fore, before, and dole, a part or portion) Signifies a butt or head-land, shooting upon other bounds.

Forecheapum, Præemption, from the Sax. fore, ante, and ceapcan, i. e. Nundinari, emere.—Et non licebat iis aliquod forecheapum facere burghmannis, & dare theolonium suum. Chron. Brompton. col. 897, 898. and LL. Æthelredi, c. 23.

Foreclosed, Shut out, or excluded, as the barring the equity of redemption on mortgages, &c. 2 Inst. 298. See Black. Com. 2 V. 159.

Foregoers. The King's purveyors were so called from their going before to provide for his household. 36 Ed. 3. 5.

Foreign, (Fr. foreign, Lat. forinſecus, extraneus) Strange or outlandish, of another country; and in our law, is used adjectively, being joined with divers substantives in several senses. Kitch. 126.

Foreign Attachment, Is an attachment of foreigners goods, found within a liberty or city, for the satisfaction of some citizen to, whom the foreigner is indebted; or of money in the hands of another person, due to him against whom an action of debt is brought, &c. Sed qu. if now, any distinction is made, as to the goods or money attached being the property of a foreigner, or a citizen? For we apprehend the custom now is to attach the property of the latter, as well as of the former. See Attachment.

Foreign Court. At Lemſter (anciently called Lrominſter) there is the borough and the foreign court; which last is within the jurisdiction of the manor, but not within the liberty of the bailiff of the borough; so there is a foreign court of the honour of Gloceſter. Claus. 8 Ed. 2. Foreign bought and sold, is a custom within the city of London, which being found prejudicial to the sellers of cattle in Smithſeld, it was enacted 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 19. that as well strangers, as freemen, may buy and sell any cattle there. See 25 Car. 2. c. 24. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17.

Foreign Kingdom, Is a kingdom under the dominion of a foreign prince; so that Ireland, or any other place, subject to the crown of England, cannot with us be called foreign; though to some purposes they are distinct from the realm of England. If two of the King's subjects fight in a foreign kingdom, and one of them is killed, it cannot be tried here by the Common law; but it may be tried and determined by the Constable and Marshal, according to the Civil law; or the fact may be examined by the Privy Council, and tried by commissioners appointed by the King in any county of England, by statute. 3 Inst. 48. 33 H. 8. One Hutchinson killed Mr. Colson abroad in Portugal, for which he was tried there and acquitted, the exemplification of which acquittal he produced under the Great Seal of that kingdom; and the King being willing he should be tried here, referred it to the judges, who all agreed, that the party being already acquitted by the laws of Portugal, could not be tried again for the same fact here. 3 Keb. 785.

If a stranger of Holland, or any foreign kingdom, buys goods at London, and gives a note under his hand for payment, and then goes away privately into Holland; the seller may have a certificate from the Lord Mayor, on proof of sale and delivery of the goods; upon which the people of Holland will execute a legal process on the party.

4 Inst. 38. Also at the instance of an ambassador or consul, such a person of England, or any criminal against the laws here, may be sent from a foreign kingdom hither. Where a bond is given, or contract made in a foreign kingdom, it may be tried in the King's Bench, and laid to be done in any place in England. Hob. 11. 2 Bull. 322. And an agreement made in France, on two French persons marrying, touching the wife's fortune, has been decreed here to be executed, according to the laws of England; and that the husband surviving should have the whole; but relief was first given for a certain sum, and the rest to be governed by the custom of Paris. Preced. Chanc. 207, 208.

Foreign Opposer, or opposer. See Exchequer.

Foreign Plantations. See Plantations.

Foreign Plea, Is a plea in objection to a judge, where he is refused as incompetent to try the matter in question, because it arises out of his jurisdiction. Kitch. 75. Stat. 4 Hen. 8. c. 2. And if a plea of issuable matter is alledged in a different county from that wherein the party is indicted or appealed, by the Common law, such pleas can only be tried by juries returned from the counties wherein they are alledged. 2 Hawk. P. C. 404. But by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 14. All foreign pleas triable by the country, upon an indictment for petit treason, murder or felony, shall be forthwith tried without delay, before the same justices before whom the party shall be arraigned, and by the jurors of the same county where he is arraigned, notwithstanding the matter of the pleas are alledged to be in any other county or counties: though as this statute extends not to treason, nor appeals, it is said a foreign issue therein must still be tried by the jury of the county wherein alledged. 3 Inst. 17. H. P. C. 255. In a foreign plea in a civil action the defendant ought to plead to that place where the plaintiff alleges the matter to be done in his declaration; and the defendant may plead a foreign plea where a matter is transitory, or not transitory; but in the last case he must swear to it. Sid. 254. 2 Nell. 871. When a foreign plea is pleaded, the court generally makes the defendant put it upon oath, that it is true; or will enter up judgment for want of a plea. See 5 Mod. 335. Foreign answer is such an answer as is not triable in the county where made; and foreign matter is that matter which is done in another county, &c.

Foreign Service, Is that whereby a mean lord holds of another, without the compass of his own fee: or that which the tenant performs either to his own lord, or to the lord paramount, out of the fee. Kitch. 299. Of these services, Bracton says thus: Item sunt quedam servitia, quæ dicuntur forinseca, quævis sunt in charta de feoffamento expressa & nominata; & quæ ideo dici possunt forinseca, quia pertinent dominum regem, & non ad dominum capitalem, &c. Quandoque enim nominantur forinseca, large sumpto vocabulo, quoad servitium domini regis quandoque scutagium, quandoque servitium domini regis, & ideo forinsecum dici potest, quia fit & capitur foris, sive extra servitium quod fit domino capitali. Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. And foreign service seems to be knight service, or feudage uncertain, Perkins 650—Salvo Forinseco Servitio. Men. Ang. tom. 2. p. 637.

Foreigners, Though made denizens or naturalized here are disabled to bear offices in the government, to be of the privy council, members of parliament, &c. by the acts of settlement of the crown. 12 W. 3. c. 2. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4.

Forejudger, (forejudicatio) A judgment whereby a person is deprived or put by the thing in question. Bract. lib. 4. To be forejudged the court, is when an officer or attorney of any court is expelled the same for some offence; or for not appearing to an action, on a bill filed against him, &c. And in the latter case, he is not to be admitted to practise in the court, till he appears. 2 Hen. 4. c. 8. If an attorney privileged in C. B. is sued, after a bill filed against him, the plaintiff's attorney delivers it to one of the criers of the court, who calls the attorney defendant by his name, and solemnly proclaims aloud, that if he does not appear to such a bill, he will be forejudged: and when the crier hath so called such an attorney, the bill is delivered to the secondary, who gives a rule for him to appear, or he will stand forejudged: after which this bill is to be carried to the prothonotary's office, and there filed and entered; and if the attorney appears not in four days, then the bill is entered upon a roll of that term, and carried to the clerk of the warrants and inrolments; and he thereupon strikes such attorney out of the roll of attorneys; when he stands unprivileged, and may be arrested as any other person, &c. Practif. Solic. 322. Attorn. Compan. 182, 183. But an attorney forejudged, may be restored, on clearing himself from his contumacy in not appearing when he was called, and on making satisfaction to the plaintiff; and then a judge will make an order to the clerk of the warrants, to replace him in the proper roll of attorneys: and there are instances of restoring attorneys forejudged, upon payment of a small fine. Ibid. Rastal 96.

Form of a forejudger of an attorney.

BE it remembered, that on the day of, &c. this same term, A. B. came here into this court by, &c. his attorney, and exhibited to the justices of our Sovereign Lord the King, his bill against C. D. Gent. one of the attorneys of the Common Bench of our said Sovereign Lord the King, personally present here in court; the tenor of which bill follows in these words, that is to say, To the justices of our Sovereign Lord the King, ss. A. B. by, &c. his attorney, complains of C. D. one of the attorneys, &c. for that whereas, &c. (setting forth the whole bill) The pledges for the prosecution are John Doe and Richard Roe; whereupon the said C. D. being solemnly called, came not; therefore he is forejudged from exercising his office of attorney of this court, for his contumacy, &c.

Foreshoke, (derelictum) Is of the same meaning with forfeited in modern language; in one of our statutes, it is specially used in lands or tenements, seized by a lord, for want of services performed by the tenant, and quietly held by such lord beyond a year and a day; now the tenant, who seeing his land taken into the hands of the lord, and possessed so long, and not pursuing the course appointed by law to recover it, doth in presumption of law disavow or forsake all the right he hath to the same; and then such lands shall be called foreshoke. Stat. 10 Ed. 2. c. 1.

Forest, (foresta, saltus) Signifies a great or vast wood; locus sylvestris & saltuosus. Our law writers define it thus, Foresta est locus ubi fera inhabitant vel includuntur; others say it is called Foresta, quasi ferarum statio, vel tuta mansio ferarum. Manwood, in his Forest Laws, gives this particular definition of it: A forest is a certain territory or circuit of woody grounds and pastures, known in its bounds and privilege, for the peaceable being and abiding of wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase and warren, to be under the King's protection for his princely delight; replenished with beasts of venary or chase, and great covert of vert for succour of the said beasts; for preservation whereof there are particular laws, privileges, and officers belonging thereunto. Manw. part 2. c. 1.

Forests are of that antiquity in England, that (except the New Forest in Hampshire, erected by William called The Conqueror, and Hampton Court, erected by King Hen. 8. see 31 H. 8. c. 5.) it is said there is no record or history doth make any certain mention of their erections and beginnings; though they are mentioned by several writers; and in divers of our laws and statutes. 4 Inst. 319. Our ancient historians tell us, that New Forest was raised by the destruction of twenty-two parish churches, and many villages, chapels and manors, for the space of thirty miles together; which was attended with divers judgments on the posterity of King Will. 1. who erected it; for William Rufus was there shot with an arrow, and before him Richard, the brother of Hen. 1. was there killed; and Henry, nephew to Robert, the eldest son of the Conqueror, did hang by the hair of the head in the boughs of the forest like unto Abraham. Blount.

Besides the New Forest, there are sixty-eight other forests in England; thirteen chases, and more than seven hundred parks; the four principal forests are New Forest on the Sea, Shirenewood Forest on the Trent, Dean Forest on the Severn, and Windfor Forest on the Thames. The way way of making a forest is thus: Certain commissioners are appointed under the Great Seal of England, who view the ground intended for a forest, and fence it round with metes and bounds; which being returned into the Chancery, the King causes it to be proclaimed throughout the county where the land lieth, that it is a forest, and to be governed by the laws of the forest, and prohibits all persons from hunting there without his leave; and then he appointeth officers fit for the preservation of the vert and venison, and so it becomes a forest on record. Manw. c. 2. Though the King may erect a forest on his own ground and wastes; he may not do it in the ground of other persons, without their consents; and agreements with them for that purpose ought to be confirmed by parliament. 4 Inst. 300.

Proof of a forest appears by matter of record; as by the eyres of the justices of the forests, and other courts, and officers of forests, &c. and not by the name in grants. 12 Rep. 22. As parks are inclosed with wall, pale, &c. so forests, and chases are inclosed by metes and bounds; such as rivers, highways, hills, viz. which are an inclosure in law; and without which there cannot be a forest. 4 Inst. 317. And in the eye of the law, the boundaries of a forest go round about it as it were a brick wall, directly in a right line the one from the other, and they are known either by matter of record, or prescription. Ibid. Bounds of forest may be ascertained by commission from the Lord Chancellor; and commissioners, sheriffs, officers of forests, &c. are empowered to make inquests thereof. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 16. Also the boundaries of forests are reckoned a part of the forest; for if any person kill or hunt any of the King's deer in any highway, river, or other inclusive boundary of a forest, he is as great an offender as if he had killed or hunted deer within the forest itself. 4 Inst. 318.

By the grant of a forest, the game of the forest do pass; and beasts of forest are the hart, hind, buck, doe, boar, wolf, fox, hare, &c. The seasons for hunting whereof are as follow, viz. that of the hart and buck begins at the feast of St. John Baptist, and ends at Holy-rod Day; of the hind and doe, begins at Holy-rod, and continues till Candlemas; of the boar, from Christmas to Candlemas; of the fox, begins at Christmas, and continues till Lady-Day; of the hare, at Michaelmas, and lasts till Candlemas. Dyer 169. 4 Inst. 316.

Not only game, &c. are incident to a forest, but also a forest hath divers special properties. 1. A forest truly and strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the King; for none but the King hath power to grant commission to any one to be a justice in eyre of the forest: but if the King grants a forest to a subject, and granteth further that upon request made in Chancery, he and his heirs shall have justices of the forest, then the subject hath a forest in law. 4 Inst. 314. Cro. Jac. 155. The second property of a forest is the courts; as the justice-seat, the swainmote, and court of attachment. The third property is the officers belonging to it; as first, the justices of the forest, the warden or warder, the verderors, foresters, agisters, regarders, keepers, bailiffs, beaules, &c. Though as to the courts, the most especial court of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than a court of piepowder to a fair: and, if this fail, there is nothing remaining of the forest, but it is turned into the nature of a chase. Manw. c. 21. Crompt. Jur. 146. There is but one Chief Justice of the forests on this side Trent, and he is named Justiciarius Itinerans Forestarum, &c. citra Trentam; and there is another, Capitali Justiciarius; and he is Justiciarius Itinerans omnium Forestarum ultra Trentam, &c. who is a person of greater dignity, than knowledge in the laws of the forest; and therefore when justice seats are held, there are associated to him such as the King shall appoint, who together with him determine omnia placita forestarum, &c. 4 Inst. 315.

A justice in eyre cannot grant licence to sell any timber, unless it be sedente curia, or after a writ of ad quod damnum: and it hath been resolved by all the judges, that though justices in eyre, and the King's officers within his forests, have charge of venison, and of vert or green hue, for the maintenance of the King's game, and all manner of trees for covert, browse and pannage; yet when timber of the forest is sold, it must be cut and taken by power under the Great Seal, or the Exchequer Seal by view of the foresters, that it may not be had in places inconvenient for the game: and the justice in eyre, or any of the King's officers in the forest, cannot sell or dispose of any wood within the forest without commission; so that the Exchequer and the officers of the forest have divisum imperium, the one for the profit of the King, the other for his pleasure. 3d Vol. Read. on Stat. p. 304, 305. Also no officer of the forest can claim windfalls, or dotard trees, for their perquisites, because they were once parcel of the King's inheritance; but they ought to be sold by commission, for the King's best benefit. Ibid. If any officers cut down wood, not necessary for browse, &c. they forfeit their offices. 9 Rep. 50. The lord of a forest may, by his officers enter into any man's wood within the regard of the forest, and cut down browsewood for the deer in winter. 2 Par. Game Law, p. 46.

A prescription for a person to take and cut down timber trees in a forest, without view of the forester, it is said may be good: but of this quære, without allowance of a former eyre, &c. If a man hath a wood in a forest, and hath no such prescription, the law will allow him to sell it, so as he doth not prejudice the game, but leave sufficient vert; but it ought to be by writ of ad quod damnum, &c. 4 Inst. Cro. Jac. 155. And every person in his own wood in a forest may take house-bote and hay-bote, by view of the forester; and so may freeholders by prescription, copyholders by custom, &c. 1 Ed. 3. c. 2. The wood taken by view of the forester, ought to be presented at the next court of attachment, that it was by view, and may appear of record.

Fences, &c. in forests and chases, must be with low hedges, and they may be destroyed, though of forty years continuance, if they were not before. Cro. Jac. 156. He whose wood is in danger of being spoiled, for want of repairing fences by another, ought to request the party to make good the hedges; and if he refuse, then he must do it himself, and have action on the case against the other that should have done it. 1 Jones 277.

A person may have action at Common law for a trespass in a forest, as to wood, &c. to recover his right. Sid. 296.

The court of the justice in eyre may proceed upon the presentments or verdicts in the swainmote, &c. And presentments and convictions of the court of attachment and swainmote, must be delivered to the Lord Chief Justice in Eyre, at the next court of justice-seat, &c. where judgment is to be given; and the plea of the forest runs thus: Presentatio per forestarios, & convictio per viridarios, &c. The court of attachment or woodmote in forests, is kept every forty days; at which the foresters being in the attachments de viridi & venatione, and the presentments thereof, and the verderors to receive the same, and inrol them; but this court can only inquire, not convict. 4 Inst. 289. The court of swainmote is holden before the verderors as judges, by the steward of the swainmote, thrice in the year: the freeholders within the forest are to appear at this court, to make inquests and juries; and this court may inquire de superacionibus forestariorum & aliorum ministrorum forestarum, & de eorum oppressionibus populo nostro illatis: it may inquire of offences, and convict also, but not give judgment, which must be at the justice-seat. Ibid.

The court of the Chief Justice in Eyre, or Justice-Seat, is a court of record, and hath authority to hear and determine all trespasses, pleas, and causes of the forests, &c. within the forest, as well concerning vert and venison, as other causes whatsoever; and this court cannot be kept oftener than every third year. As before other justices in Eyre, it must be summoned forty days at least before the sitting thereof; and one writ of summons is to be directed to the sheriff of the county, and another writ custodi forestarum Domini Regis vel ejus locum tenenti, &c. Which writ of summons consists of two parts: First, to summon all the officers of the forest, and that they bring with them all records, &c. Secondly, All persons which claim any liberties or franchises within the forest, and to shew how they claim the same: if there be erroneous judgment at the the justice-seat, the record may be removed by writ of error into B. R. 4 Inst. 291.

The Court of Regard, or Survey of Dogs, is holden likewise every third year, for expeditation, or lawing of dogs, by cutting off to the skin three claws of the fore feet, to prevent their running at or killing of deer. By statute, three courts of swainmote are to be held for forests in the year; one fifteen days before Michaelmas, another about Martinmas, and the third fifteen days before Midsummer: and presentments of trespasses of green hue, and hunting in forests, must be made at the next swainmote by foresters, &c. Also no officer of the forest shall surcharge the forest, on pain of imprisonment by the justices of the forest. Charta de Foresta, 9 H. 3. c. 1. Ordinatio de Foresta, 34 Ed. 1. Justices of forests, &c. may make deputies. 32 H. 8. c. 35.

The Chief Warden of the forest is a great officer, next to the justices of the forest, to bail and discharge offenders; but he is no judicial officer; and the constable of the castle where a forest is, by the forest law is Chief Warden of the forest, as of Windsor Castle, &c.

A Verdorer is a judicial officer of the forest, and chosen in full county, by the King's writ: his office is to observe and keep the assises or laws of the forests, and view, receive, and enrol the attachments and presentments of all trespasses of the forest, of vert and venison, and to do equal right and justice to the people: the Verderors are the chief judges of the swainmote court; although the Chief Warden, or his deputy, usually sits there. 4 Inst. 292.

The Regarder is to make regard of the forest, and to view and inquire of offences, concealments, defaults of foresters, &c. Before any justice-seat is holden, the Regarders of the forest must make their regard, and go thro' and view the whole forest, &c. They are ministerial officers, constituted by letters patent of the King, or chosen by writ to the sheriff. 4 Inst. 291.

A forester is in legal understanding a sworn officer ministerial of the forest, and is to watch over the vert and venison, and to make attachments and true presentments of all manner of trespasses done within the forest: a Forester is also taken for a Woodward: this officer is made by letters patent, and it is said the office may be granted in fee, or for life. 4 Inst. 293. Every Forester, when he is called at a court of justice-seat, ought upon his knees to deliver his horn to the Chief Justice in Eyre; so every Woodward ought to present his hatchet to my Lord.

A Riding Forester is to lead the King in his hunting. 1 Jones 277. The office of Forester, &c. though it be a fee-simple, cannot be granted or assigned over without the King's licence. 4 Inst. 316. If a forester by patent for life, is made justice of the same forest pro hac vice, the forestership is become void; for these offices are incompatible, as the forester is under the correction of the justice, and he cannot judge himself. 4 Inst. 313.

An agister's office is to attend upon the King's woods and lands in a forest, receive and take in cattle, &c. by agistment, that is to depasture within the forest, or to feed upon the pannage, &c. And this officer is constituted by letters patent. 4 Inst. 293. Persons inhabiting in the forest may have common of herbage for beasts commonable within the forest; but by the forest law, sheep are not commonable there, because they bite so close that they destroy the vert; and yet it has been held, that sheep may be commonable in forests by prescription. 3 Bull. 213. There may be a prescription for common in a forest at all times of the year; tho' it was formerly the opinion of our judges, that the fence-month should be excepted. 3 Lev. 127. A forest may be disafforested and laid open; but right of common shall remain. Popb. 93. He that hath a grant of the herbage or pannage of a park, forest, &c. cannot take any herbage or pannage, but of the surplusage over and above a competent and sufficient pasture and feeding for the game; and if there be no surplusage, he that hath the herbage and pannage cannot put in any beasts; if he doth, they may be driven out. 3 Vol. Read. on Stat. 305. None may gather nuts in the forest without warrant.

A Ranger of a forest is one whose business is to chase the wild beasts from the purlicus into the forest, and to present offences within the purlicu, and the forest, &c. And though he is not properly an officer in the forest, yet he is a considerable officer of, and belonging to it.

The Beadle is a forest officer, that warns all the courts of the forest, and executes process, makes all proclamations, &c. 4 Inst. 313.

There are also Keepers or Bailiffs of walks in forests and chases, who are subordinate to the Verderors, &c. And these officers cannot be sworn on any inquests, or juries out of the forest. If any man hunt beasts within a forest, although they are not beasts of the forest, they are punishable by the forest laws; because all hunting there, without warrant, is unlawful. 4 Inst. 314. If a deer be hunted in a forest, and afterwards by hunting it is driven out of the forest, and the Forester follows the chase, and the owner of the ground where driven kills the deer there; yet the Forester may enter into the lands and retake the deer: for property in the deer is in this case by pursuit. 2 Leon. 201. He that hath any manner of licence to hunt in a forest, chase, park, &c. must take heed that he do not abuse his licence, or exceed his authority; for if he do, he shall be accounted a trespasser ab initio, and be punished for that fact as if he had no licence at all. Mamw. 280, 288.

Every lord of parliament, sent for by the King, may, in coming and returning, kill a deer or two in the King's forest or chase through which he passes; but it must not be done privily, without the view of the Forester, if present; or, if absent, by causing one to blow a horn, because otherwise he may be a trespasser, and seem to steal the deer. Chart. Forest. c. 11. 4 Inst. 308.

Lex Forestæ is a private law, and must be pleaded. 2 Leon. 209. But it hath been observed, that the laws of the forest are established by act of parliament, and for the most part contained in Charta de Foresta, 9 H. 3. st. 2. c. 2. and 34 Ed. 1. st. 5. c. 1. By the law of the forest, receivers of trespassers in hunting or killing of deer, knowing them to be such, or any of the King's venison, are principal trespassers; though the trespass was not done to their use or benefit, as the Common law requires; by which the subsequent agreement amounts to a commandment: but if the receipt be out of the bounds of the forest, they cannot be punished by the laws of the forest, being not within the forest jurisdiction, which is local. 4 Inst. 317.

If a trespass be done in a forest, and the trespasser dies, it shall be punished after his death in the life-time of the heir, contrary to the Common law. Hue and cry may be made by the forest law for trespass, as to venison; though it cannot be pursued but only within the bounds of the forest. 4 Inst. 294. And not pursuing hue and cry in the forest, a township, &c. may be fined and amerced. In every trespass and offence of the forest in vert or venison, the punishment is, to be imprisoned, ransomed, and bound to the good behaviour of the forest, which must be executed by a judicial sentence by the Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of the forest.

If any Forester find any person hunting without warrant, he is to arrest his body, and carry him to prison, from whence he shall not be delivered without special warrant from the King, or his justices of the forest, &c. But by 1 Ed. 3. c. 8. Persons are bailable if not taken in the manner, as with a bow ready to shoot, carrying away deer killed, or smeared with blood, &c. Tho' if one be not thus taken, he may be attached by his goods. 4 Inst. 289.

The Warden of the forest shall let such to mainprise until the eye of the forest; or a writ may be had out of the Chancery to oblige him to do it; and if he refuse to deliver the party, a writ shall go to the sheriff to attach the warden, &c. who shall pay treble damages to the party grieved, and be committed to prison, &c. Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 8. No officer of the forest may take or imprison any person without due indictment, or per main curant, with his hand at the work; nor shall constrain any to make obligation against the assise of the forest, on pain to pay double damages, and to be ransomed at the King's will. 7 R. 2. c. 4.

A Forester shall not be questioned for killing a trespasser, who (after the peace cried unto him) will not yield himself; so as it be not done out of some former malice. 21 Ed. 1. But if trespassers in a forest, &c. kill a man who opposes them, although they bore no malice to the person killed, it is murder; because they were upon an unlawful act, and therefore malice is implied. Rel. Abr. 548. And if murder be committed by such trespassers, all are principals. Rel. Rep. 87. If a man comes into a forest in the night-time, the Forester cannot justify beating him before he makes resistance; but if he resists, he may justify the battery. Persons may be fined for concealing the killing of deer by others; and so for carrying a gun, with an intent to kill the deer; and he that steals venison in the forest, and carries it off on horseback, the horse shall be forfeited, unless it be a stranger's ignorant of the fact. 2 Par. Game Law 34, 35.

Where heath is burnt in a forest, the offenders may be fined; and if any man cuts down bushes and thorns, and carries them away in a cart, he is fineable, and the cart and horses shall be seized by the forest laws. Ibid. 36, 46. But a man may prescribe to cut wood, &c. And every freeman within the forest may on his own ground make a mill-dyke, or arable land, without inclosing such arable; but if it be a nuisance to others, it is punishable. Chart. Forest. c. 11. 12 Rep. 22. And if any having woods in his own ground, within any forest, or chase, shall cut the same by the King's licence, &c. he may keep them several and inclosed, for seven years after felling. 22 E. 4. 7.

By Charta de Foresta, 9 H. 3. §. 2. c. 2. No man shall lose life or member for killing the King's deer in a forest, &c. but shall be fined; and if he have nothing to pay the fine, he shall be imprisoned a year and a day; and then be delivered, if he can give good security not to offend for the future; and if not, he shall abjure the realm: before this statute, it was felony to hunt the King's deer. 2 Rel. 120. To hunt in a forest, park, &c. in the night, disguised, if denied or concealed, upon examination before a justice of peace, it is felony: but if confessed, it is only fineable. 1 H. 7. c. 7.

By the 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. If any persons armed and disguised, shall appear in any forest, chase, &c. where deer are kept, and hunt, wound, kill or steal any deer; or if any persons shall procure any one to join with them in any such unlawful act; or shall rescue such an offender, &c. they shall be guilty of felony. And the Norman Kings punished those who hunted and killed deer in forests with great severity, inflicting their punishments in various ways; as by hanging, forfeiture of goods, and loss of limbs, gelding, and putting out of eyes, &c. W. 1. H. 1. R. 1. &c. Felony committed within a forest is inquired of before the judges of the Common law, and not by the justices of the forest.

Penalty on officers of forests and parks confederating with deer-stealers, 5 Geo. 1. c. 15. sect. 5. Keepers, &c. may seize instruments used in unlawful cutting of trees, 4 Geo. 3. c. 31. See Drift of the Forest, Chase and Purlieu. Yet see farther on this subject, Black. Com. 1 V. 289. 2 V. 14, 38, 414, 416. 3 V. 71, 73. 4 V. 408, 413, 414, 415, 430. And as to the Charters of the Forest, see id. 4 V. 416, 418. and Black. Law Tracts, V. 2.

Forestagium, seems to signify some duty payable to the King's Foresters, as chiminage, or such like: et sint quieti de thelonia & passagio, & de forestagio, &c. Chart. 18 E. 1.

Forestal, (forestallamentum, from the Sax. fore, i. e. via, & stal) Is to intercept on the highway. Spelman says, it is via obstructio, vel itineris interceptio; with whom agrees Coke on Litt. fol. 161. And according to Fleta, forestalling significat obstructionem viæ vel impedimentum transitus & fugæ ateriorum, &c. lib. 1. c. 24. In our law, forestalling is the buying or bargaining for any corn, cattle, or other merchandise, by the way as they come to fairs or markets to be sold, before they are brought thither; to the intent to sell the same again, at a higher and dearer price.

All endeavours to enhance the common price of any victuals or merchandise, and practices which have an apparent tendency thereto, whether by spreading false rumours, or buying things in a market before the accustomed hour, or by buying and selling again the same thing in the same market, &c. are highly criminal by the Common law; and all such offences anciently came under the general appellation of forestalling. 3 Inst. 195, 196. And so jealous is the Common law of practices of this nature, which are a general inconvenience and prejudice to the people, and very oppressive to the poorer sort, that it will not suffer corn to be sold in the sheaf before thrashed; for by such sale the market is in effect forestalled. 3 Inst. 197. H. P. C. 152. By the Common law, Persons guilty of forestalling, upon an indictment found, are liable to a fine and imprisonment, answerable to the heinousness of their offence. 1 Hawk. 235.

By the 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. Any buying or contracting for merchandise, victuals, or other thing whatsoever in the way, coming by land or water to any fair or market, or to any port, &c. to be sold, or causing the same to be bought, or dissuading people by word, letter, message, or otherwise, from bringing such things to market, or persuading them to enhance the price after they are brought thither, is forestalling: and the party guilty of any offence of forestalling, &c. upon conviction at the quarter-sessions, by two witnesses, on bill, information, presentment, &c. shall, for the first offence, lose the goods so bought, or the value of them, and suffer two months imprisonment; for the second offence, he shall forfeit double the value, and be imprisoned six months; and for the third offence, he shall lose all his goods, be set upon the pillory, and be imprisoned at the King's pleasure. Stat. ibid. The forfeitures are to the King's use only, if there are no informers; otherwise a moiety goes to the King and moiety to the informer.

No information for any of the said offences against the statute can be good, without shewing in certain the quantity of the thing, for which the penalty is supposed to be incurred, not only because otherwise the judgment to be given on such an information can never be pleaded in bar of any other, and that it cannot appear that both of them were brought for the same thing; but also, because it cannot appear to the court what forfeiture the defendant ought to incur, unless the extent of the offence be specially set forth. 1 Hawk. 238. But nothing in the act abovementioned shall extend to the buying of any such thing, (otherwise than by forestalling) by any fishmonger, butcher, or poulterer, as concerns their trade, who shall sell the same again upon reasonable prices by retail, nor to the buying of wine, or other dead victuals, by any innholder, or victualler, to retail the same in his house; nor to the buying of any dried or salted fish (not forestalled), and sold for reasonable prices; nor to the buying of any corn, fish, butter, or cheese, by persons duly licensed, and not forestalling. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. sect. 7. Neither shall it extend to wines, oils, sugars, spices, currants, nor other foreign victuals, fish and salt only excepted. 13 El. c. 25. f. 21. And by the 15 Car. 2. c. 7. When the quarter of wheat (Winchester measure) doth not exceed 48 s. rye 32 s. barley or malt 28 s. buck wheat 28 s. oats 13 s. 4 d. pease or beans 32 s. any person (not forestalling, nor selling the same again in the same market in three months) may buy such corn, at or under such price, and lay it up, and sell the same again without incurring any penalty. Secl. 4. Also it hath been resolved, that such victual only, as is necessary for the food of man, is within the aforesaid statute of 5 & 6 Ed. 6. and therefore that apples and cherries, and such like fruit are not; but that salt is a victual within the meaning of it. 1 Hawk. 237. By 31 El. c. 5. which ordains that informations for offences against penal statutes, must be laid in the proper county, it is provided, that nevertheless an information on the said statute of 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. against forestalling, ingrossing, or regrating, where the penalty shall appear to be 20 l. or above, may be laid out of the proper county, and in any other county, at the pleasure of the informer. See Burn's Justice, 290, &c. and see Ingrasser and Regrator, and Black. Com. 4 V. 158.

Forestaller, Is a person guilty in any of the instances and particulars described of forestalling. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14.

Foretooth. Striking out the foretooth is a mayhem. Black. Com. 4 V. 206.

Forfang or Forfeng, (from the Sax. Fore, ante & fangen, prendere) is the taking of provision from any one in fairs or markets, before the King's Purveyors are served with necessaries for his Majesty.—Est captio obsoniorum quæ in foris aut nundinis ab aliquo fit, priusquam Minister Regis ea ceperit quæ Regi fuerint necessaria. Antecaptio vel preventio—Et fuit quieti de Wardwite & Forfeng & Withfang, &c. Chart. Hen. 1. Hosp. Sancti Barth. Lond. Anno 1133.

Forfeiture, (Forisfactura, from the Fr. Forfait) Signifies the effect or penalty of transgressing some law.

Forfeitures may be either in civil or in criminal cases. With respect to the first. A man that hath an estate for life or years, may forfeit it many ways, as well as by treason or felony, and such means as are before mentioned: as by alienation; by claiming a greater estate than he hath, or affirming the reversion to be in a stranger, &c. If tenant for life, in dower, by the curtesy, or after possibility of issue extinct, or lessee for years, tenant by statute merchant, staple, or elegit, of lands or tenements that lie in livery, shall make any absolute or conditional feoffment in fee, gift in tail, lease for any other life than his own, &c. or levy a fine sur conscience de droit come ceo, &c. or suffer a common recovery thereof: or being impleaded in a writ of right brought against him, join the mise upon the meer right, or admit the reversion to be in another; or in a quid juris clamor, claim the fee-simple; or if lessee for years being ousted, bring an assise ut de libero tenemento, &c. By either of these things, there will be a forfeiture of estate. Plowd. 15. 1 Rep. 15. 8 Rep. 144. 1 Inst. 251. Dyer 324, 152. 1 Bulst. 219. But where the land granted by tenant for life, or years, is not well conveyed; or the thing doth not lie in livery, as a rent, common, or the like; he will not forfeit his estate: and therefore if a feoffment, gift in tail, or lease for another's life, made by the tenant for life, is not good, for want of words in the making it, or due execution in the livery and seisin, this shall not produce a forfeiture. 2 Rep. 55. When tenant in tail makes leases, not warranted by the statute; a copyholder commits waste, refuses to pay his rent, or do suit of court; and where an estate is granted upon condition, on non-performance thereof, &c. they will make a forfeiture. 1 Rep. 15.

Entry for a forfeiture ought to be by him, who is next in reversion, or remainder after the estate forfeited. As, if tenant for life or years commits a forfeiture, he who has the immediate reversion, or remainder, ought to enter; tho' he has the fee, or only an estate-tail. 1 Rol. 857. l. 45, 50. 858. l. 5. It shall be a dispensation of the forfeiture, if he in reversion, or remainder be a party to the estate made, and accept it: as, if a husband, seised in right of his wife for life, leases to him in reversion for his own life. 1 Rol. 856. l. 10. A feoffment by a husband, or by husband and wife, of an estate for life, of which the husband is seised in right of his wife, or jointly with his wife, binds only during coverture. 1 Rol. 851. l. 45, 50. Vide Com. Dig. title, Baron and Feme, (K.—R.)

Also offices may be forfeited by neglect of duty, &c. See Fine. As to forfeitures in criminal cases, it is to be seen,

- I. For what crimes such forfeitures are inflicted, and blood corrupted.
- II. To what time they bear relation.
- III. When forfeitures may be seized.

- I. For what crimes such forfeitures are inflicted, and blood corrupted.

Forfeitures are in criminal matters, where a person is attainted of treason, felony, &c. And as all estates are said to be derived from the crown; so all forfeitures and escheats of land belong to the King, unless granted away. Finch. 132, 164. Also where land comes to the crown, as forfeited by attainder of treason, all mesne tenures of common persons are extinct; but if the King grant it out, the former tenure shall be revived, for which a petition of right lies. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 254. In treason, all lands of inheritance, whereof the offender was seised in his own right, were forfeited by the common law; and rights of entry, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 448. And the inheritance of things not lying in tenure, as of rent charges, commons, &c. shall be forfeited in high treason; but no right of action whatsoever to lands of inheritance is forfeited; either by the common or statute law. Ibid. 449. All lands, tenements, &c. are forfeited in treason by stat. 26 H. 8. c. 13. And the King shall be adjudged in possession of lands and goods forfeited for treason on the attainder of the offender, without any office found, saving the right of others. 33 H. 8. c. 20. Lands and hereditaments in fee-simple and fee-tail, are forfeited in high treason; but lands in tail could not be forfeited only for the life of tenant in tail, till the statute 26 H. 8. c. 13, by which statute, they may be forfeited. Where tenant for life, &c. is attainted, the King shall have the profits of the lands during the life of such tenant only. 2 Inst. 37.

There shall be no forfeiture of lands for treason of dead persons, not attainted in their lives. Stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 12. 3 Inst. 12. Though the chief justice of B. R. as sovereign coroner may view the body of a person killed in rebellion, and make a record thereof, whereby he shall forfeit lands and goods. Wood's Inst. 654. And a man may be attainted by act of parliament. After the decease of the Pretender, no attainder for treason in Scotland shall make any forfeiture, to disinherit the heir, &c. Stat. 7 Ann. c. 21. Upon outlawry in treason or felony, the offender shall forfeit as much as if he had appeared, and judgment had been given against him so long as the outlawry is in force. 3 Inst. 52, 212.

For petit treason, murder, burglary, robbery, and all felonies for which the offenders shall suffer death, they shall forfeit all their lands in fee-simple, goods and chattels. 1 Inst. 391. 1 Lill. Abr. 628. But Gavelkind land in Kent is not forfeited by committing of felony; and by a felony only, intailed lands are not forfeit. S. P. C. 3. 26. Land that one hath in trust; or goods and chattels in right of another, or to another's use, &c. will not be liable to forfeiture. Tho' leases for years, in a man's own, or his wife's right: estates in jointenancy, &c. and all statutes, bonds, and debts due thereby, and upon contracts, &c. shall be forfeited. 1 Inst. 42, 151. Staund. 188. A married man guilty of felony, forfeits his wife's term; and if a wife kill her husband, the husband's goods are forfeited. Jenk. Cen. 65. In man-slaughter, the offender forfeits goods and chattels: and in chancemedy and se defendendo, goods and chattels; but the offenders may have their pardon of course. 1 Inst. 391.

Those that are hanged by Martial Law in time of war, forfeit no lands. 1 Inst. 13. And for robbery or piracy, &c. on the sea, if tried in the Court of Admiralty by the Civil Law, and not by jury, there is no forfeiture: but if a person be attainted before commissioners by virtue of the stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 18. there works a forfeiture. 1 Lill. Abr.

The King shall have goods of felons, and year, day and waste in their lands, &c. which afterwards go to the Lord of the manor of whom held. Magna Charta, c. 22. and 17 Ed. 2. c. 14. And the profits of lands whereof a person attainted of felony is seised of an estate of inheritance in right of his wife; or of an estate for life only in his own right, are forfeited to the King, and nothing is forfeited to the Lord. 3 Inst. 19. Fitz. Aff. 166. By the conviction of a felon, his goods and chattels are forfeited; but by attainder, his lands and tenements. 1 Inst. 291.

Goods of persons that fly for a felony, are forfeited to the Lord of the franchise, when the flight is found of record. 2 Inst. 281. A felo de se forfeits all his goods and chattels. 3 Inst. 55. For misprision of treason the forfeiture is goods and chattels, and profits of lands during life. 3 Inst. 392. In a præmunire, lands in fee-simple are forfeited, with goods and chattels. 1 Inst. 129. For petit larceny the offender forfeits his goods. 1 Inst. 391. And for standing mute where persons are adjudged to penance, in cases of felony, there is a forfeiture of goods and chattels; and so for challenging above 35 jurors, &c. 3 Inst. 227.

It is clearly agreed, that by an attainder of treason or felony, the blood of the offender is so far stained and corrupted, that the party loses all the nobility, or gentility he might have had before, and becomes ignoble. Co. Lit. 8, 41. 3 Inst. 211. Staundf. P. C. 195.

Also it is clearly agreed, that he can neither inherit as heir to any ancestor, nor have an heir. Co. Lit. 8. a. 391. b. 392. Staundf. P. C. 165. Bro. Nobility 21. Cro. 66.

If a man be attainted, and after pardoned by charter, the children born before such pardon shall not inherit; but if they fail, the children born after such pardon may inherit him; for the pardon makes him capable of new relations as well as of new purchases, tho' all the old legal benefits and relations are lost. Noy 170. Co. Lit. 8. a. 3 Inst. 233.

Before the statute of 1 E. 6. cap. 12. the wife not only lost her dower at Common law, but also her dower ad ostium ecclesie, or ex assensu patris, or by special custom (except that of gavelkind,) by the husband's attainder of treason, or capital felony, whether committed before or after marriage. Co. Lit. 31. b. 37. a. 41. a. F. N. B. 150. Perk. sect. 308. Bro. tit. Dower 82. Plow. 261.

But the wife forfeited lands given jointly to her husband and her, whether by way of frank-marriage or otherwise, but only for the year and day and waste. Co. Lit. 37. 3 Inst. 216.

It is enacted by 1 E. 6. cap. 12. par. 17. That albeit any person shall be attainted of any treason or felony whatsoever; yet notwithstanding every woman, that shall fortune to be the wife or the person so attainted, shall be endowable and enabled to demand, have, and enjoy her dower, in like manner and form as tho' her husband had not been attainted, &c. But this is repealed as to treason by 5 & 6 E. 6. cap. 11. par. 9.

If the husband seized of lands in fee, makes a feoffment, and then commits treason, and is attainted of it, the wife shall not recover dower against the feoffee. Bendl. 56. Dyer 140. Co. Lit. 111. a. So if the husband is attainted of treason, and afterwards pardoned, yet the wife shall not recover dower; but of lands purchased by the husband after the pardon, the wife shall be endowed. 3 Leon. 3. Perk. sect. 391.

If a husband having levied a fine with proclamation, is erroneously attainted of treason, and the five years pass after his death, and then the outlawry is reversed, the fine and nonclaim are no bar till five years are passed after the reversal, because the wife could not sue for her dower while the attainder stood in force, neither could she any way reverse it. 3 Inst. 216. Moor 639. pl. 879.

After the making of the statute 1 E. 6. cap. 12. it seems to have been doubted, whether the wife should not lose her dower in case of any new felony made by act of parliament; therefore where several offences have been made felony since, care has been taken to provide for the wife's dower. 2 New Abr. 584. See 12 Vin. Abr. tit. Forfeiture. And see Attainder, and 2 Haw. tit. Treason.

Besides these forfeitures for crimes attended with corruption of blood, &c. There are forfeitures in lesser offences. Drawing a weapon upon a judge, or striking another in the King's Courts, incurs forfeiture of the profits of lands for life, and of goods: and it is the same forfeiture for rescuing a prisoner in, or before any of those courts, committed by the justices. 2 Cro. 367. 3 Inst. 141. If a woman after a rape, consent to the ravisher, she shall lose her dower after the death of her husband, &c. Stat. 6 R. 2. c. 6. And if any maiden or woman child above 12, and under 16 years of age, shall agree to be taken away and deflowered, or contract with any man for marriage against the will and without the consent of her father; or if he be dead, her mother or guardian appointed by her father's will, she shall forfeit her land of inheritance for her life. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8. Artificers going out of the kingdom, and teaching their trades to foreigners, are liable to forfeit their lands, &c. by stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 27. Forfeitures likewise are incurred by several penal statutes.

II. As to the time to which forfeitures shall relate.

The forfeiture in case of felony shall relate to the time mentioned in the indictment when the felony was committed, as to the avoiding of estates and charges after; but for the mean profits of the land, it shall relate only to the judgment. 1 Inst. 390. But it is otherwise, if he be attainted upon an appeal, by verdict or confession. Vide infra. So, if he be attainted by outlawry upon an indictment. Co. L. 390. b. 13. a. R. 30 H. 6. 5. a. So, if a man be convicted in a Præmunire. Dub. Cro. Car. 173. Jon. 217. So, if a man be a fugitive beyond sea, it relates to the time of his flight. R. 2 Cro. 82. So, if a man be felo de se, the forfeiture relates to the fact. 1 Lev. 8. And is vested in the King before inquisition found. R. 1 Lev. 8. R. 2 Cro. 82. But the forfeiture of goods and chattels relates to the time of the conviction. St. P. C. 192. a. Co. L. 391. So, upon presentment of the coroner, of a fugam fecit, the forfeiture relates to the day of the presentment. St. 192. a. So, if it be found by verdict that he fled, to the time of the verdict. St. 192. a. To the time of the indictment, or acquittal. 5 Co. 109. b. So the forfeiture, as to the mean profits of lands, relates only to the conviction. Co. L. 390. b. So the forfeiture by outlawry upon an appeal; for the time of the offence is not mentioned in the count. Co. L. 390. b. 13. a.

III. When forfeitures may be seized.

Goods or lands of one arrested for felony, shall not be seized before he is convicted or attaint of the felony; on pain of forfeiting double value. 1 R. 3. c. 3. Goods of a felon, &c. cannot be seized before forfeited; though they may be inventoried, and a charge made thereof before indictment. Wood's Inst. 659. In treason or felony, the delinquent may sell his goods, be they chattels real, or personal, bona fide, before conviction, for his maintenance in prison; for the King hath no interest in the forfeiture till conviction. And where goods of a felon are pawned before he is attainted, the King shall not have the forfeiture of the goods till the money is paid to him to whom they were pawned. 3 Inst. 17. 2 Nels. Abr. 874, 875.

After conviction by judgment, or outlawry, for high treason, &c. a commission goes to persons named by the King, or the Attorney General, to inquire, what lands and tenements the offender had at the time of the treason committed, and the value; and that they seize them into the King's hands. And the inquisition taken thereon shall be returned to the Court of Exchequer, and filed in the office of the King's remembrancer. Lut. 997. So after conviction for felony, a seire facias shall go against the vill, or any other, who has the goods in his custody. St. P. C. 194. But if any one has title to the goods or lands found by inquisition to be the goods or lands of the offender, he may make his claim, by pleading his title. Lut. 998.

To which the Attorney General shall demur, or reply. Vide Com. Dig. tit. Prærogative, (D. 83, 84.) A copyholder surrenders to the use of his will, the devisee is convicted of felony and hanged before admittance, the lands are not forfeited to the Lord but descend to the heir of the surrenderor. Wilson par. 2. fo. 13.

Forfeiture differs from confiscation, in that forfeiture is more general; whereas confiscation is particularly applied to such as are forfeit to the King's Exchequer, and confiscate goods are said to be such as no body doth claim. Staundf. P. C. 186.

There is a full forfeiture, plena forisfactura, otherwise called plena wita, which is a forfeiture of life and member, and all that man hath. Leg. H. 1. c. 88. And there is mention in some statutes, of forfeiture at the King's will, of body, lands, and goods, &c. 4 Inst. 66. See farther as to forfeiture, generally. Black. Com. 1 V. 299. 2 V. 153, 267. And as to forfeitures for crimes. Id. 4 V. 370, 374, 416, 417. Forfeiture of Copyholds. Id. 2 V. 284. Of goods and chattels. Id. 2 V. 420. 4 V. 379. Of lands. Id. 2 V. 267. 4 V. 374.

Forfeiture of Marriage, (Forisfactura maritagii.) Was a writ which lay against him, who, holding by knights-service, and being under age, and unmarried, refused used her whom the lord offered him without his disparagement, and married another: P. M. B. fol. 141. Rep. Orig. fol. 163.

Forfeited Estates. There are several statutes appointing commissioners of forfeited estates, on rebellions in this kingdom and Ireland: by 11. G. 2. c. 3. all lands and tenements, &c. of persons attainted or convicted of treason or rebellion in Ireland, were vested in several commissioners and trustees for sale thereof. The 1. Geo. 1. c. 10. appointed commissioners to inquire of forfeited estates in England and Scotland, on the rebellion at Friesen, &c. And the estates of persons attainted of treason were vested in his Majesty for publick uses; but afterwards in trustees, who were to sell for the use of the publick; and purchasers to be Presumpt. See 1. Geo. 1. c. 50. 4. Geo. 1. c. 2. 5. 7. 8. Geo. 1. c. 23.

Forgabul. (Forgabulum). A small reserved rent in money, or quit rent. — Ita quid ego Henricus M. ad Henricum de met. nihil juris de tenemento, &c. exceptis vel denar. de Forgabulo quantam percipientis ad Pascha pro omnibus servitiis. Ex Cartulat. Abbat. de Rading. MS. 4. 88.

Forge. (Forgia). A smith's Forge, to melt and work iron. — Marium Res concessit, &c. U nam Forgiam Patrum suorum liberam. Chart. Hen. 2.

Forgery. (From the Fr. Forger, i. e. accidere, fabricare, to beat on an anvil, forge or form). Is where a person fraudulently makes and publishes false writings, to the prejudice of another man's right; or it signifies the writ that lies against him who commits such an offence, the penalty whereof is declared in the Stat. 1. Eliz. c. 14. And forgery is either at Common Law, or by statute, punishable by indictment, information, &c. But there can be no forgery where none can be prejudiced by it but the person doing it. 1. Salk. 375. Forgery by the Common Law extends to a false and fraudulent making or altering of a deed or writing, whether it be matter of record, or any other writing, deed, or will. 3. Inst. 169. 1. Rol. Abr. 65. Not only where one makes a false deed; but where a fraudulent alteration is made of a true deed, in a material part of it, as by making a lease of the manor of Dale, and it appears to be a lease of the manor of Sale, by changing the letter D. into an S. or by altering a bond, &c. for 500 l. expressed in figures, to 5000 l. by adding a new cypher, these are forgery: for it is, if a man finding another's name at the bottom of a letter, at a considerable distance from the other writing, causes the letter to be cut off, and a general release to be written above the name, &c.

Also a writing may be said to be forged, where one being directed to draw up a will for a sick person, doth insert some legacies therein falsely of his own head; though there be no forgery of the hand or seal; for the crime of forgery consists as well in endeavouring to give an appearance of truth to a meer falsity, as in counterfeiting a man's hand, &c. 1. Hawk. P. C. 182, 183. 3. Inst. 170. But a person cannot regularly be guilty of forgery, by an act of omission; as by omitting a legacy out of a will, which he is directed to draw for another, though it has been held, that if the omission of a bequest to one cause a material alteration in the limitation of an estate to another, as if the testator directs a gift for life to one man, and the remainder to another in fee, and the writer omits the estate for life, so that he in remainder hath a present estate upon the death of the testator, not intended to pass, this is forgery. Rep. 118. Moor 760. Supposing it is fully done, and not by a mere mistake.

If one write a will without any direction, and bring it to the testator, who is not of perfect memory, and he sign it, this doth not amount to forgery. Ibid. If a feoffment be made of land, and livery and seisin is not interred when the deed is delivered, and afterwards on selling the land for a valuable consideration to another, livery is interred upon the first deed; this hath been adjudged forgery both in the feoffer and feoffee; because it was done to deceive an honest purchaser. Moor 665. And when a person knowingly falsifies the date of a second conveyance, which he had no power to make, in order to deceive a purchaser, &c. he is said to be guilty of forgery. 3. Inst. 169. 1. Hawk. 182.

It seems to be no way material, whether a forged instrument be made in such manner, that if it were in truth such as it is counterfeited for, it would be of validity or not. 1. Sid. 142. The counterfeiting writings of an inferior nature, as letters and such like, is not properly forgery; but the deceit is punishable. 1. Hawk. 184. By Stat. 1. H. 3. c. 3. a forger or publisher of false deeds, was to pay damages, fine and ransom. And by 5. Eliz. c. 14. If any person alone, or with others, shall falsly forge or make, or cause to be forged and made, or assent to the forging of any deed or writing sealed, court-roll or will in writing, to the intent that the freehold or inheritance of lands may be defeated or charged; or shall pronounce, publish, or shew forth in evidence any such forged writings, as true, knowing of the forgery; and shall be convicted thereof upon an action founded on this Statute, or otherwise by bill, &c. in the King's Bench or Exchequer, he shall pay double costs and damages to the party grieved, and be sat on the pillory; and have both his ears cut off, and his nostrils slit; and shall forfeit to the King the issues and profits of his lands and tenements during life, suffer perpetual imprisonment; &c. And if any one shall forge or falsly make any deed or writing, containing a lease for years of lands (not copyhold) or an annuity in fee, for life or years, or any obligation, acquittance, release, or other discharge of any debt or personal demand, or publish or give in evidence the same knowingly; he shall pay to the party injured double costs and damages, and shall be likewise set on the pillory, and lose one of his ears, and be imprisoned for a year. And if any person shall be guilty of a second offence, it shall be adjudged felony, without benefit of clergy. Stat. Ibid.

Where there is a penalty in an obligation; &c. the party grieved by a forged release thereof, shall recover double the penalty as damages, and not of the debt appearing in the condition. 3. Inst. 172. As to publishing a deed, knowing the same to be forged, it has been resolved, that if a person is informed by another that a deed is forged, if he afterwards publishes it as true, he is within the danger of the Statute. Ibid. 171. The King may pardon the corporal punishment of forgery which tends to common example; but the plaintiff cannot release it: if the plaintiff release or discharge the judgment or execution, &c. it shall only discharge the costs and damages; and the judges shall proceed to judgment upon the residue of the pains, and award execution upon the same. 5. Rep. 50. 5. Eliz. c. 12.

A person convicted of forgery, and adjudged to the pillory, &c. whereby he becomes infamous, is not allowed to be a witness; but it is a good exception to his evidence. Hawk. P. C. 433. And one convicted of this crime, may be challenged on a jury, so as to be incapable to serve as a juror; and it hath been holden, that exceptions to persons found guilty of perjury or forgery, as well as felony, &c. are not saved by a pardon. 1. Hawk. 417. The court of B. R. will not ordinarily at the prayer of the defendant, grant a certiorari for removal of an indictment of forgery, &c. 2. Ibid. 54.

By a late act, forging or counterfeiting any deed, will, bond, bill of exchange, note or acquittance for money, or any indorsement or assignment of a bill, &c. with intent to defraud any person, or publishing such false deed, &c. to be true, knowingly, the offenders shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death as felons; but not to work corruption of blood, &c. Stat. 2. Geo. 2. c. 25. Vide 7. Geo. 2. c. 22. As to forging of Exchequer and Bank Bills, Lottery Tickets, Letters of Attorney to transfer Stock, &c. But for the several species of this offence, See title Forgery under title Felonies in the table to the quarto edition of the Statutes. And Black. Com. 4. V. 245.

Forinsecum. Outward, or on the outside. Kennet's B. 5.

Forinsecum Quantum. The manor as to that part of it which lies without the town, and not included within the liberties of it. — Summa reddituum assignata Manerio Forinsecum Hanbury, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 351.

Forinsecum Servitium. The payment of extraordinary aid, opposed to intrinsicum servitium, which was the common and ordinary duties, within the Lord's court. Kennet's Gloss. See Foreign Service.

Forisbannitus. Signifies banished: Expulsus a Scotia, Forisbannitus ab Anglia, &c. Mat. Paris. Ann. 1245.

Forisfamiliari. When a son accepts of his father's part of lands, in the life-time of the father, and is contented with it; he is said to be forisfamiliari, and cannot claim any more. Blount.

Forland, (Forlandum) Lands extending further or lying before the rest; also a promontory. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. fol. 332.

Forstland. Was land in the bishoprick of Hereford granted or leased dum episcopus in episcopatu steterit, so as the successor might have the same for his present revenue: this custom has been long since disused, and the land thus formerly granted is now let by lease as other lands, tho' it still retains the name by which it was anciently known. Butterfield's Surv. 56.

Form, Is required in law proceedings, otherwise the law would be no art; but it ought not to be used to ensnare or intrap. Hob. 232. Matters of form in pleas that go to the action, may be helped on a general demurrer; as when a plea is only in abatement. 2 Ld. Raym. 1015. The formal part of the law or method of proceeding, cannot be altered but by parliament: for, if once those outlets were demolished, there would be an inlet to all manner of innovation in the body of the law itself. Black. Com. 1 V. 142.

Forma Pauperis. Is where any person has just cause of suit, and is so poor, that he cannot bear the usual charges of suing at law, or in equity: in this case, upon his making oath that he is not worth 5 l. except the matter in question, his debts being paid, and bringing a certificate from some lawyer that he hath cause of suit, the judge admits him to sue in forma pauperis, i. e. without paying any fees to counsellor, attorney or clerk: this had beginning from the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 12. by which it is enacted, that poor persons having cause of action or suits, shall have original writs, counsel and attornies, assigned them gratis.

On proceeding in Chancery, affidavit is first made that the plaintiff is not worth 5 l. in lands, tenements, goods or chattels, his wearing apparel, and the matters of the suit excepted; and then a petition is drawn up and presented to the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls, praying to be admitted in forma pauperis, and to have counsel, &c. assigned him, who are neither to take fees, nor make any contract or agreement for recompence, on pain of punishments; and no counsellor or attorney assigned shall refuse to proceed, without shewing good cause to the Lord Chancellor, &c. Pract. Sol. 24. If it be made appear, that any pauper has sold or contracted for the benefit of his suit, while depending in court, such cause shall be thenceforth wholly dismissed. And a man suing in forma pauperis is not to have a new trial granted him, but is to acquiesce in the justice of the court; nor shall paupers be admitted to remove causes out of inferior courts. 1 Mod. 268. If a cause goes against a pauper, or a plaintiff in forma pauperis be nonsuit; he shall not pay costs to the defendant, but shall suffer such punishment in his person as the court shall award. 23 H. 8. c. 15. 1 Lill. Abr. 634. 2 Sid. 261. Paupers using delays, to vex their adversaries; or being proved to be vexatious persons, and having many frivolous suits depending, will be dispaupered by the court; for the law doth not assist them to do injury to others. 1 Lill. 633. See Black. Com. 3 V. 400.

Formedon, (Breve de forma donationis) Is a writ that lieth for him who hath right to lands or tenements by virtue of any intail, growing from the stat. of Westm. 2. c. 2. It is a writ of right for recovery of land; and is of three kinds, viz. in descender, remainder and reverter: formedon in descender lieth where tenant in tail incoverts a stranger, or is disseised and dieth, the heir shall have this writ to recover the land. Formedon in remainder lies where one gives land in tail, and for default of issue the remainder to another in tail, &c. If the tenant in tail die without issue, and a stranger abates and enters into the land, he in remainder shall have this writ. Formedon in the reverter lieth where land is intailed to certain persons and their issue, with remainder over for want of issue, and on the remainders failing to revert to the donor and his heirs; now if tenant in tail dies without leaving any issue, and likewise he in remainder, then the donor or his heirs to whom the reversion comes, shall have this writ for recovery of the estate, in case it be aliened, &c. Reg. Orig. 238, 242. F. N. B. 111.

Formedon in descender is the highest writ a tenant in tail can have; and where tenant in tail aliens, or is disseised of his estate, or if a recovery is had against him by default, and he die, his heir shall have a formedon, it being the only remedy the heir may have for the possession of his ancestor; but if he be ousted of his own possession, as if he be seised, and put out, he shall have his writ of assise.

There is a writ of formedon in descender, where partition of lands held in tail, being made among parceners, &c. and one alieneth her part, her heir shall have this writ; and by the death of one sister without issue, the partition is made void, and the other shall have the whole land as heir in tail. New Nat. Br. 476, 477.

Also there is a writ of formedon in simul tenuit, that lies for a coparcener against a stranger upon the possession of the ancestor; which may be brought without naming the other coparcener who hath her part in possession. Ibid. 481. This writ may be likewise had by one heir in Gavelkind, &c. of lands intailed; and where the lands are held without partition,

A demandant in a writ of formedon, ought to make his descent by all who held the estate: otherwise the writ will abate; and the demandant should always be made cousin and heir, or son and heir to him who was last seised of the tail; but the surest way is to make every man named in the writ son and heir in the writ; and it is not material whether they were seised or not, altho' they are named heir. 8 E. 11 H. 6.

In a formedon in descender, the demandant is to set forth his pedigree in the declaration; in formedon in remainder, that the tenant in tail is dead without issue: but in a formedon in reverter the donor, &c. need not shew the pedigree of the issue, nor who was last seised, because he is supposed to be a stranger to them. 2 Nels. Abr. 880. Where a fee-simple is demanded in a formedon in reverter, the taking of the profits ought to be alledged in the donor, and donee: if an estate-tail is demanded, it must be alledged in the donee only. 1 Lutw. 96.

There are several pleas both in bar and in abatement, which the tenant may plead to this action; such as non-tenure, which is a plea in abatement, and by which the tenant shews, that he is not tenant of the freehold, or of some part thereof, at the time of the writ brought, or at any time since; which is called the pleading non-tenure generally. Booth 28.

Special non-tenure is where the tenant shews what interest and estate he hath in the land demanded, as that he is tenant for years, in ward, by statute-merchant, elegit, or the like; and therefore the plea of special non-tenure must always shew who is tenant. Booth 29. See 1 Brereton. 153.

At Common law, non-tenure of parcel of an intire thing, as a manor, &c. abated the whole writ; but now by the 25 E. 3. cap. 16. it is enacted, "That by the exception of non-tenure of parcel, no writ shall be abated, but only for that parcel whereof the non-tenure was alledged." Booth 29. 2 Mod. 181.

If the tenant pleads non-tenure of the whole, he need not shew who is tenant: but in a plea of non-tenure of parcel, he must shew who is tenant, and this even before the statute; for the Common law would not suffer a writ, good in part, to be wholly destroyed, except the tenant shewed the demandant how he might have a better. 1 Mod. 181. The tenant can't, after a general imparlance, plead non-tenure of part, tho' he may plead non-tenure of the whole. 3 Lev. 55.

The writ of formedon is now rarely brought, except in some special cases, where it cannot be avoided; and the trying titles by petitiones forme supplies its place, in an easier manner. See Booth of real actions. Black. Com. V. 191.

Fornella, A certain weight of about seventy pounds, mentioned in the Statutes of weights and measures, 51 H. 3.

Fornagium, Furnagium, (Fr. Fournage) Signifies the fee taken by a lord of his tenant, bound to bake in the lord's common oven, or for a permission to use their own; this was usual in the northern parts of England. Plac. Parl. 18 Ed. 1.

Fornication, (Fornicatio, from the Fornix in Rome, where lewd women prostituted themselves for money) Is whoredom, or the act of incontinency in single persons; for if either party is married, it is adultery. The Stat. H. 7. c. 4. mentions this crime, which by an act made anno 1650. during the times of usurpation, was punished with three months imprisonment for the first offence; and the second offence 'tis said was made felony. Scobell's Collect. The spiritual courts hath cognizance of this offence: And formerly courts-leet had power to inquire of and punish fornication and adultery; in which courts the King had a fine assessed on the offenders, as appears by the book of Domesday. 2 Inst. 428. See Black. Com. 4 V. 64.

Forprise, (Forprisum) An exception or reservation, in which sense it is used in the Stat. 14 Ed. 1. This word is frequently inserted in leases and conveyances, wherein accepted and forprised is an usual expression. In another signification it is taken for any exaction; according to Thorn. anno 1285.

Foßes, (Catadupa) Water-falls, so called in Westmoreland. Camb. Britan.

Foßspeaker, An attorney or advocate in a cause. Blount.

Fortia, Power, dominion or jurisdiction: And we read of infortiares Placitum, by judges assembled. Leg. H. 1. c. 29.

Fortiori, à fortiori or multo fortiori, Is an argument often used by Littleton, to this purpose: If it be so in a feoffment passing a new right, much more is it for the restitution of an ancient right, &c. Co. Litt. 253, 260.

Fortilice and Fortilitz, (Fortellecum) Signifies a fortified place, bulwark or castle; as it is said within the towns and fortilities of Barwick and Carlisle, anno 11 H. 7. c. 18.

Fortlet, (Fr.) A place or fort of some strength; or rather a little fort. Old Nat. Br. 45.

Fortes and Castles, The statute 13 Car. 2. c. 6. extends to forts and other places of strength within the realm; the sole prerogative as well of erecting, as manning, and governing of which belongs to the King, in his capacity of general of the kingdom. 2 Inst. 30. Black. Com. 1 V. 263.

Fortuna, Is that which is called in our law treasure trove, i. e. Tesaurum ductente fortuna inveniunt—Inveniendum est per 12 Juratos. pro Rege, &c. quod fideliter præsentabunt omnes fortunas, abjuraciones, &c.

Fortune-tellers, Persons pretending to tell fortunes &c. are to be punished with a year's imprisonment, and standing four times in the pillory. Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 5.

Fortunium, A tournament or fighting with spears; or an appeal to fortune therein. Mat. Paris. Anno 1241.

Forty-days-Court, The court of attachment or wandermoot, held before the verderors of the forest once in every forty days, to enquire concerning all offenders, against vert and venison. Black. Com. 3 V. 71. See Forest.

Fossa, A ditch full of water; wherein women committing felony were drowned: It has been likewise used for a grave, in ancient writings. See Furca.

Fossatum, (Lat.) Is a ditch or place fenced round with a ditch or trench; also it is taken for the obligations of citizens to repair the city ditches, Fossatura signifies the same with fossatum. And the work or service done by tenants, &c. for repairing and maintenance of ditches is called fossatum operatio; and the contribution for it fossagium. Knuton's Gloss.

Foßway, (From fossu, digged) Was anciently one of the four principal highways of England, leading through the kingdom, which had its name from its being supposed to be digged and made passable by the Romans, and having a ditch upon one side. Cowel.

Fosteritan, (Sax.) Nuptial gift, which we call a jointure or stipend for the maintenance of the wife.—Poston sciendum est tui fosterleian pertinent, vadit hoc brigdunia & Plegier amici sui.

Fother or Fodder, (From the Teuton Fudro) Is a weight of lead containing eight pigs, and every pig one and twenty stone and a half; so that it is about a tun or common cart load: Among the plumbers in London it is nineteen hundred and an half; and at the mines it is two and twenty hundred weight and a half. Skene.

Fovea, A place for burial of the dead. Statut. Eccl. Paulin. London. MS. 29.

Foundation, The founding and building of a college or hospital is called fundatio, quasi fundatio, or fundamentum locatio. Co. lib. 10. The King only can found a college; but there may be a college in reputation, founded by others. Dyer 267. If it cannot appear by inquisition, who it was that founded a church or college, it shall be intended it was the King; who has power to found a new church, &c. Moor 282. The King may found and erect an hospital, and give a name to the house, upon the inheritance of another, or license another person to do it upon his own lands; and the words, fundo, creso, &c. are not necessary in every foundation, either of a college or hospital made by the King; but it is sufficient if there be words equivalent: The incorporation of a college or hospital is the very foundation; but he who endows it with lands is the founder; and to the erection of an hospital nothing more is requisite but the incorporation and foundation. 10 Rep. Case of Sutton's Hosp. Persons seized of estates in fee-simple, may erect and found hospitals for the poor, by deed enrolled in Chancery, &c. which shall be incorporated, and subject to such visitors as the founder shall appoint, &c. Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. Where a corporation is named, it is said the name of the founder is parcel of the corporation. 2 Nels. 886. Though the foundation of a thing may alter the law, as to that particular thing; yet it shall not work a general prejudice. 1 Lill. Abr. 634. See College. 1 Black. Com. 1 V. 480.

Founder of Metal, (From the Fr. Fondre, to melt or pour) Is he that melts metal, and makes any thing of it by pouring or casting it into a mould. 17 R. 2. c. 1. Whence is bell-founder, a founder of letters, &c.

Fourcher, (Fr. Fourcher) Signifies a putting off, or delaying of an action; and has been compared to stammering, by which the speech is drawn out to a more than ordinary length of time, as by fourching a suit is prolonged, which might be brought to a determination in a shorter space: The device is commonly used when an action or suit is brought against two persons, who being jointly concerned, are not to answer till both parties appear; and is where the appearance or essoin of one will excuse the other's default, and they agree between themselves that one shall appear or be essoined one day, and for want of the other's appearing, have day over to make his appearance with the other party; and at that day allowed the other party doth appear, but he that appeared before doth not, in hopes to have another day by adjournment of the party who then made his appearance. Termes de Ley.

This is called fourcher; and in the statute of West. 1. c. 42. it is termed fourcher by essoin; where are words to this effect, vin. coparceners, jointenants, &c. may not fourch by essoin, to essoin severally; but shall have only one essoin, as one sole tenant. And anno 6 Ed. 3. c. 10. it is used in like manner: The defendants shall be put to answer without fourching, &c. 23 Hen. 6. c. 2. 2 Inst. 250. Fourcher in the Latin is writ furcari; because it is two-fold.

Fraction, The law makes no fraction of a day; if any offence be committed, in case of murder, &c. the year and day shall be computed from the beginning of the day on which the wound was given, &c. and not from the precise minute or hour. 2 Hawk. 163. See Co. Litt. 255.

As to murder, this relates to the question, whether the party died within a year and a day after the stroke, &c. But as to an appeal of death, it may be sued within a year and a day after the completion of the felony, by the death of the party. Stat. Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9. Black. Com. 4 V. 311.

An act of record will not admit any division of a day, but is to be said done the first instant of the day, Arg. and judgment accordingly. Pasch. 23 Eliz. Mo. 137.

Assumpsit, to pay 40*l.* by 5*s.* per month; where a man brings an action for breach, on the first day, it is best to count of the damages for the intire debt; for he cannot have a new action; but he must declare that the 40*l.* is not paid, nor any part of it; for the 40*l.* is not yet due. Cra. J. 505. Mich. 16 Jac. B. R.

In presumption of law, when a thing is to be done upon one day, all that day is allowed to do it in, for the avoiding of fractions in time, which the law admits not of, but in case of necessity. Per Roll. Ch. J. Sti. 119. Trin. 24 Car. B. R.

Insurance for H.'s life; H. died on the last day; per Helt Ch. J. the law makes no fraction in a day; yet, in this case, he dying after the commencement, and before the end of the last day, the insurer is liable, because the insurance is for a year, and the year is not complete till the day be over; yet, if A. be born on the 3d. day of September, and on the second day of September, 21 years afterwards he makes his will, this is a good will, for the law will make no fraction of a day, and by consequence he was of age. 2 Salk. 625. Trin. 11 W. 3. B. R. at Guildhall, per Helt, Ch. J. in Sir Robert Howard's case.

Fractitium, is made use of for arable land.—Pratum de Mura 3 tres Agr. terra de fractitio. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. 873.

Fractura navium, Wreck of shipping at sea.

Frampole fences, Are such fences as the tenants in the manor of Writtel in Essex, set up against the lord's demesne; and they are intituled to the wood growing on those fences, and as many poles as they can reach from the top of the ditch with the helve of an axe, towards the reparation of their fences. It is thought the word frampole comes from the Sax. frampul, profitable; or that it is a corruption of frampole, because the poles are free for the tenants to take: But Chief Justice Brampton, whilst he was steward of the court of the manor of Writtel, acknowledged that he could not find out the reason why those fences were called frampole; so that we are at a loss to know the truth of this name etymologically.

Franchitanus, (Fr. Franchi, i. e. free) A freeman—Sciatis me dedisse, cum villanis, & franchilano, & cum tenuis eorum, &c. Chart. H. 4. And we find Francus borne used for a freeman in Domesday.

Franchise, (Fr.) is taken for a privilege or exemption from ordinary jurisdiction; as for a corporation to hold pleas to such a value, &c. And sometimes it is an immunity from tribute, when it is either personal or real, that is belonging to a person immediately; or by means of this or that place whereof he is chief or a member. Crompt. Jurisd. 141. There is also a franchise royal; which seems to be that where the King's writ runs not 21 H. 6. c. 4. But franchise royal is said by some authors, to be where the King grants to one and his heir, that they shall be quit of toll, &c. Bract. lib. 2. c. 5. A franchise in general is a royal privilege in the hands of a subject; and may be vested in bodies politic or corporations, either aggregate or sole, or in many persons that are not corporations, (as in borough towns, &c.) or in a single person.

Franchises are of different kinds; such as the principality of Wales, Counties Palatine, Counties, Hundreds, Ports of the sea, &c. Then there is a franchise or liberty of having a leet, manor or lordship, as well as a liberty to make a corporation, and to have cognizance of pleas; and bailliwicks of liberties, the liberty of a forest, chafe, &c. Fairs and markets, felons goods, goods of fugitives, outlaws, deadlands, treasure trove, waifs, estrays, wrecks, &c. All these come under franchises and liberties. F. N. B. 330. 2 Inst. 221.

All franchises and liberties are derived from the crown, and some are held by charter; but some lie in prescription and usage, without the help of any charter. Finch 164. And usage may uphold franchises, which may be claimed by prescription, without record either of creation, allowance or confirmation; and wreck of the sea, waifs, strays, fairs and markets, and the like, are gained by usage, and may become due without any matter of record. 2 Inst. 281. 9 Rep. 27. But goods of felons and outlaws, and such like, grow due by charter; and cannot be claimed by usage, &c. Ibid. It hath been adjudged, that grants of franchises, made before the time of memory, ought to have allowance within the time of memory, in the King's Bench, or before the barons of the Exchequer, or by some confirmation on record; and it is said they are not records pleadable, if they have not the aid of some matter of record within time of memory; and such ancient grants, after such allowance, shall be confirmed as the law was when they were made, and not as it hath been since altered: But franchises granted within time of memory are pleadable without any allowance or confirmation; and if they have been allowed or confirmed as aforesaid, the franchises may be claimed by force thereof, without shewing the charter. 9 Rep. 27. 2 Inst. 281, 494.

There have been formerly several ancient prerogatives derived from the crown; besides the franchises aforementioned; as power to pardon felony, make justices of assize, and of the peace, &c. Though by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24. they were resumed and reunited to the crown; and the King cannot grant power to another to make strangers born, denizens here, because such power is by law inseparably annexed to his person. 7 Rep. 25. By several ancient statutes, the church shall have all her liberties and franchises inviolable: And the Lords Spiritual and temporal shall enjoy their liberties, &c. and the King may not deprive them of any of them. 9 H. 3. c. 1. 14 Ed. 3. 2 H. 4. c. 1.

By the statute of Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. c. 37. The franchises and liberties of the city of London, and all other cities, towns, &c. are confirmed. All writs, processses, &c. in franchises, are to be made in the King's name; and stewards, bailiffs, and other ministers of liberties, shall attend the justices of assize, and make due execution of process, &c. 27 H. 8. c. 24. Some franchises, as York, Bristol, &c. have return of writs, to whom mandates are directed from the courts above, to execute writs and process: And a mayor or bailiff of a town, may have liberty to keep courts, and hold pleas in a certain place, according to the course of the Common law; and power to draw causes out of the King's courts, by an exclusive jurisdiction: But the causes here may be removed to the superior courts. 1 Inst. 114. 4 Inst. 87, 224.

Sheriffs of counties, within which is any franchise, the lord whereof is intituled to a return of writs, shall on his request, appoint one or more deputies, to reside at some place near, there to receive all writs in the sheriff's name, and under his seal to issue warrants for their due execution; and the Lord Chancellor is to settle the charges to be paid any such deputy, &c. by 13 Geo. 2. c. 18.

A franchise hath no relation to the county wherein it lies, as has been generally held; for it is not necessary to set forth the county when any thing is shewed to be done within a liberty or franchise. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. If a franchise fails to administer justice within the same, the franchise shall not be allowed; but on any such failure, the court of B. R. may compel the owners of the franchise, &c. to do justice; for this court ought to see justice equally distributed to all persons. 1 Lill. Abr. 635. Franchises may be forfeited and seized where they are abused, for mis-user or non-user; and when there are many points, a mis-user of any one will make a forfeiture of the whole on a quo warranto brought. Kitch. 65. And where franchises come to the crown again from whence derived, by forfeiture, &c. they are extinguished; but in some cases it is said they are not. For contempt of the King's writ, in a county palatine, &c. the liberties may be seized, and the offenders fined; and the temporalities of a bishop, have been adjudged to be seized until he satisfied the King for such a contempt, on information exhibited, &c. On Car. 253. The bishop of Durham pretending he had such a franchise, that the King's writ was not to come there, and because one brought it thither he imprisoned him, this being proved upon an information brought against him, it was adjudged he should pay a fine to the King, and lose his liberties. 2 Shep. Abr. 250.

Wherever the King is party to a suit, as in all informations and indictments, the process ought to be executed by the sheriff, and not the bailiff of any franchise, whether it have the clause non omittas, &c. or not; for the King's prerogative shall be preferred to any franchise. 2 Harw. 284. A sheriff upon a non omittas, or on a capias utlagatum, or quo minus, may enter and make arrests in a franchise. 1 Lill. 635. An arrest by the sheriff within a franchise on a common writ, is said to be good, tho' the officer be subject to an action at the suit of the lord of the franchise, &c. If a person claims franchises which he ought not to have, it is an usurpation upon the King; and not shewing his title, the King shall take from him his franchise. Poph. 180. 1 Bull. 54. The King's Bench will not grant an information on private usurpation of franchises, but the proper remedy is to apply to the Attorney General; i. e. to proceed by quo warranto. Ibbatson's case. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annal. 261. See Quo Warranto.

Frangence, Was the general appellation of all foreigners. Vide Englecey.

Franklaine, Is used to denote a freeman or gentleman, in our ancient authors. Fortescue.

Frank, A French gold coin, worth about a French shilling; but in computation was twenty soli, which is a livre, and twenty pence in our money.

Frankalmoin, (Libera Elemosyna) Is a tenure by spiritual service, where an ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, holdeth land to them and their successors, of some lord and his heirs in free and perpetual alms: And perpetual supposes it to be a fee-simple; though it may pass without the word successors. Litt. 133. 1 Inst. 94. A lay person cannot hold in free alms: And when a grant is in frankalmoin, no mention is to be made of all manner of service; for it is free from any temporal service, and is of the highest nature, because it is a tenure by spiritual service. Litt. 137. None can hold in frankalmoin but by prescription, or by force of some grant made before the statutes of Mortmain, 7 Ed. 1. c. 36, and 18 Ed. 1. c. 1. so that the tenure cannot at this day be created, to hold of a founder and his heirs in free alms: But the King is not restrained by the statutes; nor a subject licensed or dispensed with by the King, to make such a grant, &c. 1 Inst. 98, 99. And if an ecclesiastical person holds lands by fealty and certain rent, the lord may at this time confirm his estate, to hold him and his successors in frankalmoin; for the former services are extinct, and nothing is reserved but that he should hold of him, which he did before; whereby this change and alteration is not within the Stat. 18 Ed. 1. of quia emptores terrarum. Litt. 540. 1 Inst. 99, 306.

Tenure in frankalmoin is incident to the inheritable blood of the donor or founder; except in case of the King, who may grant this tenure to hold of him and his successors. Litt. 135. And the reason why a grant in frankalmoin, since the Stat. 18 Ed. 1. is void, except in the case of the King, &c. is because none can hold land by this tenure, but of the donor; whereas the statute enjoins, that it be held of the Chief Lord, by the same service by which the feoffor held it; though the King may grant away any estate, and reserve the tenure to himself. 1 Inst. 99, 223. If any person that holds lands or tenements in frankalmoin, make any failure in doing such divine service as they ought, the lord may make complaint of it to the ordinary or visitor; which is the King, if he be founder; or a subject where he was appointed visitor upon the foundation; and the ordinary, &c. may punish the negligence, according to the ecclesiastical laws. Litt. 136. 1 Inst. 96. Also for neglect in performing divine service in certain, the lord may distrain: But frankalmoin is said to be held by service uncertain; and where the tenure is tied to certain services, as to read prayers every Friday, &c. this is not frankalmoin, but tenure by divine service; it is lands given in alms, but not in free alms. Britton, c. 66. The tenure by frankalmoin is an ancient tenure, chiefly to be met with in grants to religious houses, bishops, deans, colleges, &c. and is become out of use.

Frank-Chase, Is a liberty of free chase; by which all persons that have lands within the compass thereof, are prohibited to cut down any wood, &c. without the view of the forester, though it be in their own demesnes. Crompt. Juris. 187.

Franked-Letters. See the Stat. 4 Geo. 3. c. 24. Previous to that statute, the annual amount of franked letters gradually increased from 23,600 l. in the year 1715 to 170,700 l. in the year 1763. Com. Journ. 28 Mar. 1764. Black. Com. 1 V. 322.

Frank-fee, Is where freehold lands are held exempted from all services, but not from homage. In the register of writs, we find that is frank-free, which a man holds at the Common law, to him and his heirs; and not by such service, as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor; And that the lands in the hand of King Edward the Confessor, at the making of the book of Domesday, were ancient demesne, and all the rest frank-fee; wherewith Fitzherbert agrees. Reg. Orig. 12. F. N. B. 161. And the author of the Terms of the Law defines a free-fee to be a tenure pleadable at the Common law; and not in ancient demesne. Feudum Francum est, pro quo nullum servitium prestatum domino. Pachincus, lib. 7. c. 39.

Frank-ferm, Was when lands or tenements were changed in the nature of the fee by feoffment, &c. out of knight service, for certain yearly services. Britton, c. 66. See Fee farm.

Frank Law, (Libera Lex) Is applied to the benefit of the free and Common law of the land. You may find what it is by the contrary, from Crompton in his Justice of Peace; where he says, he that for any offence loseth his frank-law, falls into these mischiefs, viz. He may never be impannelled upon any jury or assize; or be permitted to give any testimony: If he hath any thing to do in the King's courts, he must not attend them in person, but appoint his attorney therein for him: And his lands shall be estranged, and his body committed to prison, &c. Crompt. Jurisd. 156. Lib. Ass. 59. See Conspiracy.

Frank-Marriage, (Librum Maritagium) Is where a man seised of land in fee-simple, gives it to another with his daughter, sister, &c. in marriage; to hold to them and their heirs: And it is a tenure in special tail, growing from these words in the gift, i. e. Sciatis, &c. me A. B. dedisse & concessisse, &c. T. B. filio meo & Annæ uxori ejus, filie, &c. in liberum maritagium unum messuagium, &c. Litt. 27. West. Symb. par. 1. lib. 2. feff. 303. The effect of which words is, That they shall have the land to them and the heirs of their bodies; and shall do no services to the donor, except fealty, until the fourth degree. Glanvil, lib. 7. c. 18. And Fleta gives this reason why the heirs do no service until the fourth degree: Ne donatorum vel eorum heredes per homagii receptionem a reversione repellantur. And why in the fourth descent and downward, they shall do services to the donor; quia in quarto gradu vehementer presumitur, quod terra est pro defuncti heredum donatorum reversione. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 11. All this appears in Bracton, lib. 2. c. 7. where it is said, that lands in frank-marriage are quæta & libera ab omni seculari servitio, &c. usque ad tertium heredem, & usque ad quartum gradum.

Also Bracton divides marriage into librum maritagium and maritagium servitio obligatum; which last was where lands were given in marriage, with a reservation of the services to the donor, which the donee and his heirs were bound to perform for ever; but neither he, or the next two heirs, were obliged to do homage, which was to be done when it came to the fourth degree, and then, and not before, were required to be performed both services and homage. Bract. lib. 2. Lands given by one man to another with a wife in frank-marriage, amounts by implication to a gift in tail; which in this case may be created without the words heirs or body. Litt. 17. Wood's Inst. 120. A gift in frank-marriage might be made as well after as before marriage: And such a gift was a fee-simple before the statute of W. 2. but since, it is usually usually a fee-tail: These gifts were common in former times, whereon questions in law did arise; but are now disused. 2 Nelf. Abr. 888.

Frank-pledge, (Franci plegium, from the French Franc, i. e. Liber, and pledge, sidejussor) Signifies a pledge or surety for the behaviour of freemen; it being the ancient custom of this kingdom, borrowed from the Lombards, that for the preservation of the publick peace, every free-born man at the age of fourteen, (religious persons, clerks, &c. excepted) should give security for his truth towards the King and his subjects, or be committed to prison; whereupon a certain number of neighbours, usually became bound one for another, to see each man of their pledge forth-coming at all times, or to answer the transgression done by any gone away: And whenever any one offended, it was forthwith inquired in what pledge he was, and then those of that pledge either produced the offender within one and thirty days, or satisfied for his offence. This was called frank-pledge; and this custom was so kept, that the sheriffs at every county-court, did from time to time take the oaths of young persons as they grew to fourteen years of age, and see that they were settled in one decennary or other; whereby this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franci plegii, or view of frank-pledge. At this day no man ordinarily giveth other security for the keeping of the peace, than his own oath; so that none answereth for the transgression of another, but every person for himself. 4 Inst. 78. Living under frank-pledge has been termed living under law, &c. See the statute of view of frank-pledge, 18 Ed. 2. And court-leet, decimer, &c. and Black. Com. 1 K. 113. 4 V. 249, 270.

Frank-Tenement, A possession of freehold lands and tenements. See Freehold.

Fraxinetum, A corruption of fraxinetum, is taken for a wood or woody ground, where albes grow. 1 Inst. 4.

Frateria, A fraternity, brotherhood or society of religious persons, who were bound to pray for the good health and life, &c. of their living brethren, and the souls of those that were dead: in the statutes of the cathedral church of St. Paul in London, collected by Ralph Baldock, Dean, 1295, there is one chapter de frateria beneficiorum ecclesie S. Pauli, &c.

Fraternities, Of places in respect to a trade or mystery. Vide Corporation.

Frater nutricius, Used in ancient deeds for a bastard brother. Malmsh.

Fratres conjurati, Are sworn brothers or companions; sometimes those were so called who were sworn to defend the King against his enemies. Hoveden, p. 445. Leg. W. 1. — Præcipimus ut omnes liberi homines sint fratres conjurati ad monarchiam nostram ad regnum nostrum contra inimicos pro posse suo defendendum. Leg. Ed. 1. c. 35.

Fratres pyes, Were certain friers, wearing black and white garments; of whom mention is made by Walsingham, p. 124.

Fratriagium, Is a younger brother's inheritance; and whatever the sons or brothers possess of the estate of the father, they enjoy it rations fratriagii, and are to do homage to the elder brother for it, who is bound to do homage for the whole to the Superior lord. Brass. lib. 2. c. 35.

Fraud, (Fraus) Is deceit in grants and conveyances of lands, and bargains and sales of goods, &c. to the damage of another person. N. N. B. 98. Under this head may be considered,

I. What acts are fraudulent at Common law, and in equity.

II. What acts are fraudulent by statute.

I. What acts are fraudulent at Common law, and in equity.

It may be laid down as a general rule, that without the express provision of any act of parliament, all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are condemned by the Common law, and punishable according to the heinousness of the offence. Co. Litt. 3. b. Dyer 295. Such as causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading of it over to him in words different from those in which it was written, &c. 1 Sid. 312, 431.

Also it is a rule, that a wrongful manner of executing a thing shall avoid a matter that might have been executed lawfully. Co. Litt. 35. 41 Aff. 28. 44 Aff. 29. 1 Rel. Abr. 420, 549. Co. Lit. 357. Popb. 64, 100.

As to frauds in contracts and dealings, the Common law subjects the wrong-doer, in several instances, to an action on the case; as a person having the possession of goods sells them to another, affirming them to be his own, when in truth they are another's, an action on the case lies. 1 Rel. Abr. 90. Cra. Jac. 474. But if A. possessed of term for years, offers to sell it to B. and says, that a stranger would have given him twenty pounds for this term, by which means B. buys it, tho' in truth A. was never offered twenty pounds, an action on the case lies, tho' B. is hereby deceived in the value. 1 Rel. Abr. 91, 101. 1 Sid. 146. Tylr. 20. S. P.

Contra, if on a treaty for the purchase of a house, the defendant affirms the rent to be more than it is, whereby the plaintiff is induced to give more than the house is worth. 1 Salk. 211. 1 Lev. 102. 1 Sid. 146. 1 Keb. 510, 518, 522. S. P. adjudged. And see Kel. 24, 81. 1 Shrw. 50, 51.

All frauds and deceits, for which there is no remedy by the ordinary course of law, are properly cognisable in equity; and it is admitted, that the matters of fraud were one of the chief branches to which the jurisdiction of Chancery was originally confined. 4 Inst. 84. It would be endless to enumerate the several cases, wherein relief has been given against frauds: but the following instances are too material to be omitted.

A. being tenant in tail, remainder to his brother B. in tail, A. not knowing of the intail, makes a settlement on his wife for life for her jointure, without levying a fine, or suffering a recovery, which B. who knew of the intail ingrosses, but does not mention any thing of the intail, because, as he confessed in his answer, if he had spoke any thing of it, his brother, by a recovery, might have cut off the remainder, and barred him; and altho' after A.'s death, B. recovered in ejectment against the widow by force of the intail; yet she was relieved in Chancery, and a perpetual injunction granted for this fraud in B. in concealing the intail, which if it had been disclosed, the settlement might have been made good by a recovery. Preced. Chanc. 35. Raw v. Potts. 2 Vern. 239. S. C. and affirmed in the House of Lords.

So where a mother being absolute owner of a term, the same being limited to her in tail, is present at a treaty for her son's marriage, and hears her son declare, that the term was to come to him at his mother's death, and is a witness to the deed, whereby the reversion of the term is settled on the issue of the marriage after the mother's death, and she was compelled in equity to make good the settlement. 2 Vern. 150.

If A. has a prior incumbrance on an estate, and is a witness to a subsequent mortgage, but does not disclose his own incumbrance; this is such a fraud in him, for which his incumbrance shall be postponed. 2 Vern. 151. Clare and Earl of Bedford, cited to have been decreed. And see 2 Vern. 554. Ibbotson v. Rhodes.

So if A. having a mortgage on a leasehold estate, lends the mortgagee deed to the mortgagor, with an intent to borrow more money; that is such a fraud in the mortgagee, for which his mortgage shall be postponed to the subsequent incumbrance. 2 Vern. 726. Peter and Russell. Abr. Bq. 321. S. C.

If a copyholder, by his will intending to give the greatest part of his estate to his godson, and the other part to his wife, is persuaded by the wife to nominate her to the whole, on a promise that she would give the godson the part designed for him; it will be decreed against the wife on the point of fraud, though there was no memorandum thereof in writing pursuant to the statute of frauds and perjuries. Preced. Chanc. 3. Devonish and Baines. And see similar case as to father, elder son, and younger children, Preced. Chanc. 4. Chamberlain's case.

So where the defendant, on a treaty of marriage for his daughter with the plaintiff, signed a writing comprising the terms of the agreement, and afterward designing to elude the force thereof, and get loose from his agreement, ordered his daughter to put on a good humour, and get the plaintiff to deliver up that writing, and then marry him, which she accordingly did, and the defendant stood by at a corner of a street to see them go by to be married; and the plaintiff was relieved on the point of fraud. Abr. Eq. 20. Halpeny and Mallet. 2 Vern. 373. S. C.

If a security be obtained from a person by fraud and practice, upon a pretence of a demand that is fictitious, it will be relieved against in equity: 2 Vern. 123.

Where an agreement for a purchase was obtained from a woman of ninety years of age, and several suspicious circumstances appearing, the court would neither decree it to be carried into execution against the heir at law, nor to be delivered in a cross bill for that purpose, but left the parties their remedy at law. 2 Vern. 632. Green v. Wood.

There are likewise several instances, where a parol agreement intended to be reduced into writing, but prevented by fraud, has been decreed in equity, notwithstanding the statute of frauds and perjuries; as where upon a marriage treaty, instructions were given by the husband to draw a settlement, which he privately countermanded, and afterwards drew in the woman by persuasions and assurances of such settlement to marry him; and it was decreed, that he should make good the settlement. Abr. Eq. 19. and see tit. Agreement.

So where a parol agreement was concerning the lending of money on a mortgage, and the covenants proposed were an absolute deed from the mortgagor, and a deed of defeasance from the mortgagee, and after the mortgagee had got the deed of conveyance, he refused to execute the defeasance; and it was decreed against him on the point of fraud. Abr. Eq. 20. See Action on the Case, Deceit.

II. As to frauds by statute.

Fraudulent assurances of lands or goods to deceive creditors, shall be void; and the creditors shall have execution thereof. 50 E. 3. c. 6. By the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. All fraudulent conveyances made of lands, goods or chattels, to set aside or avoid debts, as to creditors, shall be void; and by 27 Eliz. c. 4. Conveyances and assurances of land made to defraud purchasers, as to such purchasers they are declared void: and persons justifying or putting such grants, &c. in use as good, and bona fide made, shall forfeit a year's value of the lands, and the whole value of goods and chattels, and be also imprisoned: where lands are conveyed with clause of revocation, &c. and afterwards sold for valuable consideration, the first conveyance shall be void against the purchaser; but this is not to extend to mortgages made bona fide.

If a man seised of land in fee, make a feoffment of it to divers uses, with remainders over, &c. and with power of revocation by writing under hand and seal; here if he for good consideration doth enter into a recognisance, the land shall be charged with the same: so if A. reserves to himself power to revoke by the assent of B. and then bargains to another. Bridg. 22. Lane 22. And where one hath made an estate with the power of revocation; and after with intent to deceive a purchaser he makes a feoffment, &c. to a stranger to extinguish the power, and then sells the land for a valuable consideration; in this case both the conveyances shall be fraudulent as to the purchaser. 2 Rep. 83.

The statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. requires that contracts and agreements, leases and devises of lands, &c. shall be put in writing. And devises of lands, rents, &c. are deemed fraudulent and void, against creditors upon bonds, or other specialties. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14. Also judgments against purchasers of lands for a valuable consideration, shall be deemed judgments only from the signing, &c. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. The Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. makes a fraudulent deed or grant of goods, &c. void against creditors, but not against the party himself, his executors or administrators, for against them it remains good: and a conveyance, if made of lands by fraud, is not void by the statute against all persons; but only against those who afterwards come to the land upon valuable consideration. Cro. El. 445. Cro. Jac. 271.

Grants and conveyances are to be on good consideration, and bona fide, or they will be fraudulent; and a grant bona fide is made without any trust, &c. A grant upon good consideration, except it be also bona fide, is not within the proviso of the act 13 Eliz. c. 5. 3 Rep. 81. A valuable consideration is money, marriage, &c. and not natural affection, &c. A man made a lease for twenty-one years, in trust for his daughter till marriage; and if she married with his consent, then to her during the term; this till marriage, has been held fraudulent as to a purchaser: but after marriage it is good, because marriage is an advancement to the daughter, and taking effect made it upon valuable consideration, which a marriage is always taken to be, and the husband was drawn in by this conveyance to marry her. 1 Sid. 133.

It has been adjudged, that if a father makes a feoffment to another, for the advancement of daughters, or his younger sons, or for payment of his debts; and afterwards incoffs his eldest son or heir, that is not fraud or collusion within the statute, for he is bound in law to make provision for his children: but where there is a grandfather, father, and two sons, and the grandfather (living the father) conveys his land to either of the sons, this is out of the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 1. because it is not a common thing so to do, and the father ought to have the immediate care of his children; though if he is dead, then it belongeth to the grandfather. 6 Rep. 76. If a man levy a fine to the use of himself for life, remainder to his son in tail, and after sells the fee-simple to another, he as a purchaser shall avoid this conveyance upon the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4. because it was voluntary, and therefore fraudulent; so it had been if he had settled the remainder on his wife, unless there had been a consideration on precedent marriage. Sid. 133. 3 Salk. 174.

But it was ruled by Hale Chief Justice, that a deed may be voluntary, and not fraudulent; as where a father having an extravagant son, settles his land so that he may not spend all; this is good, if there is no consideration of money. 1 Mod. 119. Although every voluntary conveyance is prima facie deemed fraudulent against purchasers, yet some circumstances may alter the case: an infant promised, on his marriage, to settle his estate when he came of age, upon himself and his issue; and this was held a sufficient consideration, though an infant by law is not compellable to fulfil such promise. 2 Lev. 147. A person, in consideration that his son is to marry the daughter of A. B. covenants to stand seised of lands to the use of his son for life; and after to other sons in reversion or remainder: the uses thus limited in remainder, shall be fraudulent as to any purchaser of the land, though the first be upon good consideration. And although the consideration of marriage is good; if there be a power to revoke annexed to the deed, it will be void as to purchasers. Lane 22.

If a man after marriage, make a voluntary conveyance of land for a jointure, or maintenance of his wife, and afterwards sell the land for money, to one that hath no notice of it; in this case the conveyance, made to the use of the wife, shall be said to be fraudulent: and yet if a person upon a marriage, before the marriage, and in consideration thereof, or after marriage, in consideration of a portion given, or money paid, convey his land to the use of his wife, &c. it will not be a fraudulent deed. 2 Cro. 158. A feme covert joins with her husband in the alienation of her jointure, and hath a new deed of settlement of other lands dated the same day in lieu thereof, without articles or agreement precedent to this second settlement; this is not fraudulent against a purchaser, though the lands in the new settlement are more in value than those in the first; for the old settlement being destroyed, and a new one made on the same day, it shall be presumed that there was an agreement for it. 2 Lev. 70, 71.

The husband who married a wife an inheritrix, promised, that if she would join with him in a sale of her land, and let him have the money to pay his debts, that he would leave her 400*l.* at his death; about six months after the lands were sold, he gave bond to a stranger to leave his wife the 400*l.* And it was adjudged, that this was not fraudulent quoad creditors, but good against them 2 Lev. 148. A person makes a voluntary conveyance, and then mortgages the same land, and the first deed is upon a trial found fraudulent; then he to whom the deed was made exhibited his bill in equity to redeem the mortgage; and it was held, that though the first deed was fraudulent quoad the mortgage money, yet it was good to pass the equity of redemption. Chanc. Rep. 59.

Where a lease is made with a proviso that if the lessor pays 10*s.* the lease shall be void; because 10*s.* is not the value of the lease and land, but only limited as a power of revocation, it is fraudulent as to a purchaser. Cro. Jac. 455. And if a man makes an assignment of his lease, and yet keeps possession of the lands, the deed of assignment will be judged fraudulent. In Chancery it has been decreed, that if a man conveys his land to friends in trust, to the use of his children, &c. to defraud a purchaser, the trust shall go in equity to the purchaser; also it shall be liable for debts, to satisfy the same. Tatbil. 43, 44. A husband assigned a term of his wife's, in trust for his wife; and it was held fraudulent against purchasers. Chan. Rep. 325.

By the Common law, an estate made by fraud, shall be avoided only by him who hath a former right, title, interest, debt or demand. 3 Rep. 83. If one indebted do really sell lands, though to avoid payment of debts; if the vendee be not privy to the intent, the sale to him is good: for as to the vendee, there is no fraud in the case. Micb. 24 Car. B. R. A man gives his goods to his son, they are nevertheless liable as to his creditors; but if he gives them to one of his creditors, without any trust or covin, it shall not be fraudulent to make him liable to other creditors. 3 Salk. 174.

If a man is indicted; and give away his goods to prevent a forfeiture, the King shall have them upon an attainder or conviction; though 'tis otherwise if he sell them for a good consideration to one who had no notice of the indictment. Ibid. If tenant for life commit a forfeiture, and he in the reversion enters, this shall be as a fraudulent conveyance with respect to creditors. Vent. 257. Fraudulent gifts, or grants of goods to defraud the lord of his heriot, shall be void; and the value of the goods forfeited. 13 Elix. 5. Gifts made in secret are liable to suspicion of fraud: a general gift of all a man's goods may be reasonably suspected to be fraudulent, even tho' there be a true debt owing to the party to whom made. 3 Rep. 80, 81. And the several marks or badges of fraud, in a gift or grant of goods are, if it be general, without exception of some things of necessity; if the donor still possesses and uses the goods; if the deed be secretly made, if there be a trust between the parties; or if it be made pending the action. 3 Rep. 80, &c.

And where a person is party to a fraud, all that follows by reason of that fraud shall be said to be done by him. Cro. Jac. 469. But when fraud is not expressly averred, it shall not be presumed; nor shall the court adjudge it to be so, till the matter is found by jury. 10 Rep. 56. A poor man was drawn in to sell an estate, at a great under-value; but no fraud appearing, tho' the purchase was not a fair bargain, the seller could not be relieved in equity, to set it aside. Preced. Canc. 206. The Chancery may decree a conveyance to be fraudulent, merely for being voluntary, and without any trial at law; yet it has been insisted, that fraud or not, was triable only by a jury. Ibid. 14, 15.

A will, as well as a deed, shall be set aside in Chancery for fraud and circumvention. Ibid. 123. Fraudulent conveyances to multiply votes at election of knights of the shire, shall be taken against the persons making them as free and absolute; and all securities for redeeming and restoring, &c. to be void. Stat. 10 Ann. c. 23. A presentation to a benefice; or administration of goods, obtained by fraud, are void; and so is sale of goods by fraud, altho' in open market, &c. Where a fraudulent deed or conveyance is assigned upon a valuable consideration, the fraud is purged thereby. 1 Ld. Raym. 88.

Gross frauds are punishable by way of indictment or information; such as playing with false dice, causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, levying a fine in another's name, &c. and that for these and such like offences the party may be punished not only with fine and imprisonment, but also with such farther infamous punishment, as the judges in their discretion shall think proper. Cro. Jac. 497. 2 Rel. Abr. 78. 2 Rel. Rep. 107. 1 Keb. 849. 6 Mod. 42. 1 Sid. 312, 431. Noy 99, 103. Moor 630. Cro. Eliz. 531. 1 Mod. 46. 2 Jen. 64. 6 Mod. 105. 1 Salk. 379.

By the 33 H. 8. cap. 1. it is enacted, "That if any person or persons shall falsely and deceitfully obtain or get into his or their hands or possession, any money, goods, chattels, jewels, or other things of any other person or persons, by colour and means of any privy false token, or counterfeit letter, made in another man's name, to a special friend or acquaintance, for the obtaining of money, &c. from such person, and shall be thereof convicted; every such offender shall suffer such punishment by imprisonment, setting upon the pillory, or otherwise, as shall be appointed by those before whom he shall be so convicted". And by 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. (commonly called the statute of false pretences) the obtaining goods, &c. by false pretences, may be punished with transportation.

Frauds and Perjuries. See the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. and Wilson, par. 1. 118, 227, 305, 313, 320. par. 2. 26, 94. See farther as to civil fraud, where cognizable, Black. Com. 3 V. 431, 437, 439. As to criminal, id. 4 V. 158. And as to the statute of frauds and perjuries, c. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. Black. Com. 3 V. 157. 4 V. 432. As to fraudulent devises, id. 2 V. 378.

Fraus Legis. If a person having no manner of title to a house, procure an affidavit of the service of a declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment; and by virtue of a writ of hab. fac. possessionem turns the owner out of possession of the house, and seizes and converts the goods therein to his own use, he may be punished as a felon; because he used the process of the law with a felonious purpose, in fraudem legis. Raym. 276. Sid. 254.

Fraxinetum, A wood of ash trees. Domesday.

Fredum, Was a composition made by a criminal, to be freed from prosecution, of which the third part was paid into the Exchequer. This is fully explained in Robertson's Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 300, &c. Formerly compositions were paid for crimes in general, particularly for murder. The magistrate was to determine the composition, and protect the offender against the violence of resentment. For that protection the offender paid a sum of money, which was called fredum. See Montesquieu de l'Esprit des Loix, l. 30. c. 20, &c. See Dilatatura.

Fredumit, A liberty to hold courts, and take up amerancements, &c. Cowel.

Free-Bench, (francus bancus, i. e. sedes libera) Is that estate in copyhold lands which the wife hath on the death of her husband for her dower, according to the custom of the manor: but it is said the wife ought to be espoused a virgin; and is to hold the land only so long as the lives sole and continent. Kitch. 102. Of this free-bench several manors have several customs; and Fitzherbert calls it a custom, whereby in certain cities the wife shall have the whole lands of the husband for her dower, &c. F. N. B. 150. In the manors of East and West Eubourne in the county of Berks, and the manor of Torre in Devonshire, and other parts of the West of England, there is a custom, that when a copyhold tenant dies, his widow shall have her free-bench in all his customary lands, dum sola & casta fuerit; but if she commits incontinency, she forfeits her estate: yet nevertheless, on her coming into the court of the manor, riding backwards on a black ram, with his tail in her hand, and saying the words following, the steward is bound by the custom to re-admit her to her free-bench; the words are these, .

Here I am,
Riding upon a black ram,
Like a whore as I am:

*And for my crincum crancum,
I have lost my bincum bancum;
And for my tail's game,
Have done this worldly frame;
Therefore pray, Mr. Steward, let me have my land again.*
Cowel.

This is a kind of penance among jocular tenures and customs, to purge the offence. See Black Com. 2 V. 122.

Free-booster. Signifies a person who fights without pay, in hopes of getting some booty.

Freehold, (francherdom) Is ground claimed in some places more or less, beyond, or without the fence: it is said to contain two foot and a half, in Man. Aug. Tm. 2. 2. 141.

Free-borough-men. Were such great men as did not engage like the frank-pledge men for their decennium. See Friburgh.

Free-Chapel, (libera capella) A chapel so called, because it is exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan. Those chapels are properly free chapels which are of the King's foundation, and by him exempted from the ordinary's visitation: also chapels founded within a parish for the service of God, by the devotion and liberality of pious men, over and above the mother-church, and endowed with maintenance by the founders, which were free for the inhabitants of the parish to come to, were therefore called free-chapels. Reg. Orig. 40, 41. The free-chapel of St. Martin la Grand is mentioned in the Stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. 4. as are others likewise by ancient statutes: but these chapels were given to the King, with the chantries, &c. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14.

Freehold, (liberum tenementum) Is that land or tenement which a man holds in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life. Bract. lib. 2. c. 9. And is described to be of two sorts: freehold in deed, and freehold in law; the first being the real possession of lands, &c. in fee, or for life; the other, the right a person hath to such lands or tenements, before his entry or seizure. Freehold is also extended to offices, which a man holds either in fee, or during life: and in the Register of Writs it is said, that he who holds land upon an execution of a statute merchant until he is satisfied the debt, tenet ut liberum tenementum sibi et assignatis suis, and the same of a tenant by eligit; but such tenants are not freeholders, only as freeholders for their time, till they have received the profits of the land to the value of their debt. Reg. Judic. 68, 73. A lease for ninety-nine years, &c. determinable upon a life or lives, is not a lease for life to make a freehold, but a lease for years, or chattel determinable upon life or lives; and an estate for one thousand years is not a freehold, or of so high a nature as an estate for life. Co. Lit. 6. He that hath an estate for the term of his own life, or the life of another, hath a freehold, and no other of a less estate; tho' they of a greater estate have a freehold, as tenant in fee, &c. Litt. 57.

When a man pleads liberum tenementum generally, it shall be intended that he hath an estate in fee; and not a base estate for life. Cro. Eliz. 87. An estate of freehold cannot by the Common law commence in futuro; but it may take presently in possession, reversion, or remainder. 5 Rep. 92. See Black Com. 2 V. 144, 165. A man made a deed of gift to his son and his heirs, of lands after his death, and no livery was made; now if there had been livery, it had been void, because a freehold cannot commence in futuro; and it has been held, that it shall not enure as a covenant to stand seised, by reason of the word give, by which was intended a transmutation of the estate, and not to pass it by way of use. March Rep. 50, 51. Whatsoever is part of, or fixed to the freehold goes to the heir; and glass windows, washbasin, &c. affixed to the house are parcel of the house, and cannot be removed by tenants. 4 Rep. 61, 64. But it hath been adjudged, that if things for trade, &c. are fixed to the freehold by the lessee, he may take them down and remove them, so as he do it before the end of the term, and he do not thereby injure the freehold. 1 Salk. 368.

Any thing fixed to the freehold may not be taken in distress for rent or in execution, &c. But it is not felony at Common law, only trespass, to steal or take any thing annexed to the freehold; such as lead on a church, or house, corn or grass growing on the ground, apples on a tree, &c. Though if they are severed from the freehold, whether by the owner or a thief; if he sever them at one time, and take them away at another, it is larceny to take them. 12 Aff. 32. 1 Hawk. 93. And to steal lead on houses, &c. is made felony, by a late statute. 4 Geo. 2. c. 32.

The statute of Magna Chart. c. 29. ordains, "that no person shall be disseised of his freehold, &c. but by judgment of his peers, or according to the law of the land;" which doth not only relate to common disseisins, but the King may not otherwise seize into his hands the freehold of the subject. Wood's Inst. 614. None shall distrain any freeholders to answer for their freeholds, or any thing touching the same, without the King's writ. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 22. Nor shall any person be compelled to answer for his freehold, before any lord of a manor, &c. 15 R. 2. c. 12. Freehold estates, of certain values, are required by statutes to qualify jurors; electors of knights of the shire in parliament, &c.

Freeholders. Are such as hold any freehold estate. By the ancient laws of Scotland, freeholders were called militar; and freehold, in this kingdom, hath been sometimes taken in opposition to villanage, it being lands in the hands of the gentry and better sort of tenants, by certain tenure, who were always freeholders, contrary to what was in the possession of the inferior people, held at the will of the lord. Lambard.

Freeman, (liber homo) Is one distinguished from a slave, that is born or made free; and these have divers privileges beyond others. The distinction of a freeman from a vassal under the feudal policy liber homo was commonly opposed to vassus or vassallus; the former denoting an allodial proprietor; the latter, one who held of a superior. These free men were under an obligation to serve the state, and this duty was considered so sacred, that freemen were prohibited from entering into holy orders, unless they had obtained the consent of the sovereign. Robert. Hist. Emp. G. V. 2 V. 216. See London.

Freight, (Fr. fra) Signifies the money paid for carriage of goods by sea; or in a larger sense, it is taken for the cargo, or burthen of the ship. Ships are freighted either by the ton, or by the great; and in respect of time, the freight is agreed for, at so much per month, or at a certain sum for the whole voyage. If a ship freighted by the great, happens to be cast away, the freight is lost; but if a merchant agrees by the ton, or at so much for every piece of commodities, and by any accident the ship is cast away, if part of the goods is saved, it is said she ought to be answered her freight pro rata; and when a ship is insured and such a misfortune happens, the insured commonly transfer those goods over to the assurers, towards a satisfaction of what they make good. Lex Mercat. or Merchant's Companion. 79.

If freight is agreed for the lading and unlading of cattle at such a port, and some die before the ship arrives there, the whole freight shall be paid for the living and the dead; but if the agreement be for transporting them, freight shall be only paid for the living: it is the same of slaves. Ibid. 85. The lading of a ship, in construction of law, is bound for the freight; the freight being in point of payment preferred before any other debts to which the goods so laden are liable, tho' such debts as to time were precedent to the freight; and actions touching the same are construed favourably for the ship and owners; for if four part-owners of a ship, belonging to a ship, settle their accounts with the freighters, and receive their due, yet the fifth man may sue singly by himself without joining with the rest, by the Common law, and the Law Marine. Hill. 27 Car. 2. B. R. If part of the lading be on ship-board, and through some misfortune happening to the merchant, he has not his full lading aboard at the time agreed, the master shall have freight by way of damage, for the time those goods were on board; and is at his liberty to contract with another, lest he lose his season and voyage; and where a ship is not ready to take in or the merchant not ready to lade his goods aboard, the parties are not only in at liberty, but the person damaged may bring an action against the other and recover his damages sustained. Lex Rep.

If the freightor of a ship shall lade on board prohibited goods, or unlawful merchandise, whereby the ship is detained, tained, or the voyage impeded; he shall answer the freight agreed for. Style 220. And when goods are laden aboard and the ship hath broke ground, the merchant may not afterwards unlade them; for if he then changes his mind, and resolves not to venture, but will unlade again, by the marine law the freight becomes due. If a master freights out his ship, and afterwards secretly takes in good unknown to the first laders, by the law marine he forfeits his freight: and if a master of a ship shall put into any other port than what the ship was freighted to, he shall answer damages to the merchant; unless he is forced in by storm, enemies, or pirates; and in that case he is obliged to sail to the port agreed at his own expence. Leg. Oleron. A ship is freighted out and in, there shall be no freight due till the voyage is performed; so that if the ship be cast away, coming home, the freight outwards as well as inwards, are both gone. 1 Brownl. 21. See Charter-party.

French. King William I. called The Conqueror, being a native of Normandy in France, caused the laws of this realm, in his time, to be written and pleaded in the French language. 3 Rep. 17. But by the Stat. 37 Ed. 3. 15. All pleas that are pleaded in any of the King's courts shall be pleaded in the English tongue; tho' appeals were still to be arraigned, and the plea of the defendant read in French in the same manner as anciently. 2 Hawk. P. C. 308. See vide Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26.

Frenchman. Heretofore a term for every stranger or outlandishman. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 15. See Francigena.

Friendship. Comes from the Sax. freond, i. e. amicus, & wise multa, and is a mulel exacted of him who harboured his outlawed friend: Blount. But see Fleta, lib. 1. c. 7.

Fresca. Fresh water, or rain, and land floods. Chart. Antiq. in Sumner of Gavelkind, p. 132.

Fresh Distress. (frisca diffissina, from the Fr. frain, i. e. recens & diffissir, viz. possessione ejicere) Signifies that diffissin, which a man might formerly seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without resorting to the King, or the law; as where it was not above fifteen days old, or of some other short continuance. Briston, c. 5. Of this, Bracton writes at large, concluding it to be arbitrary. Lib. 4. c. 5.

Fresh Fine. Is that which was levied within a year past: it is mentioned in the statute of Wesim. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 45.

Fresh Force. (frisca fortia) Is a force newly done in any city, borough, &c. And if a person be disseised of any lands or tenements within such a city, or borough, he who hath a right to the land, by the usage and custom of the said city, &c. may bring his assise, or bill of fresh force, within forty days after the force committed; and recover the lands. F. N. B. 7. Old Nat. Br. 4. This remedy may be also had where any man is deformed of any lands after the death of his ancestor, to whom he is heir; or after the death of tenant for life, or in tail, in dower, &c. within forty days after the title accrued; and in a bill of fresh force, the plaintiff or demandant shall make protestation to sue in the nature of what writ he will, as assise of mortdancester, of novel diffissin, intrusion, &c. New Nat. Br. 15. The assise or bill of fresh force is sued out without any writ from the Chancery; but after the forty days, there is to be a writ out of Chancery, directed to the mayor, &c. But ejectments are now in use for recovering the possession of lands, &c.

Fresh Suit, or Pursuit. (Recens insecutio) Is such a present and earnest following of an offender, where a robbery is committed, as never ceases from the time of the offence done or discovered, until he be apprehended. Vide post. And the benefit of a pursuit of a felon is, that the party pursuing shall have his goods restored to him; which otherwise are forfeited to the King. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. c. 10. and 12. When an offender is thus apprehended, and indicted, upon which he is convicted, the party robbed shall have restitution of his goods; and tho' the party robbed do not apprehend the thief presently, but that it be some time after the robbery, if the party did what in him lay to take the offender; and notwithstanding in such case he happen to be apprehended by some other person, it shall be adjudged fresh pursuit. Terms de Ley.

It has been anciently holden, that to make a fresh suit, the party ought to make hue and cry with all convenient speed, and to have taken the offender himself, &c. But at this day, if the party hath been guilty of no gross negligence, but hath used all reasonable care in inquiring after, pursuing, and apprehending the felon, he shall be allowed to have made sufficient fresh suit. 2 Hawk. P. C. 169. Also it is said, that the judging of fresh suit is in the discretion of the court, tho' it ought to be found by the jury; and the justices may, if they think fit, award restitution without making any inquisition concerning the same. Ibid. 169, 171. Where a gaoler immediately pursues a felon, or other prisoner, escaping from prison, it is fresh suit, to excuse the gaoler: and if a lord follow his disseisin into another's ground, on its being driven off the premises, this is called fresh suit; so where a tenant pursues his cattle, that escape or stray into another man's lands, &c. Fresh suit may be either within the view, or without; as to which, the law makes some difference: and it has been said that fresh suit may continue for seven years. 3 Rep. S. P. C.

Fretum Britannicum. Is used in our ancient writings for the Straits between Dover and Calais.

Fretum and Fretum. The freight of a ship, or freight money. — Acquietari facietis fretum navium, &c. Clauſ. 17 Joh. m. 16.

Friburgh. alias Fritsburgh, (frideburgum, from the Sax. frid, i. e. pax, & berge, fidejussor) Is the same with frank pledge; the one being in the time of the Saxons, and the other since the Conquest: of these friburghs, Bracton treats, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 10. And they are particularly described in the laws of King Edward, set out by Lambard, fol. 143. Fleta likewise writes on this subject, lib. 1. cap. 47. And Spelman makes a difference between friborg and fritsburgh; saying the first signifies libera securitas, and the other pacis securitas. Altho' friburghs or fritsburghs were anciently required as principal pledges or sureties for their neighbours, for the keeping of the peace; yet as to great persons, they were a sufficient assurance for themselves, and their menial servants. Skene.

Fristoll and Fritstoll. (Sax. frid, pax, & stol, sedes) A seat, chair, or place of peace. In the charter of immunities granted to the church of St. Peter in York by Hen. 1. and confirmed anno 5 H. 7. Fristoll is expounded cathedra pacis & quietudinis, &c. And there were many such in England; but the most famous was at Beverley, which had this inscription: hec sedes lapidea fridstoll dicitur, i. e. pacis cathedra, ad quam reus fugiendo pervenit, omnimodam habet securitatem. Camd.

Friendless Man. Was the old Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw; and it is for this reason, because he was, upon his expulsion from the King's protection, denied all help of friends, after certain days: nam forsisset amicos. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 12. See Friendawite.

Friar. (Lat. frater, Fr. frere) The name of an order of religious persons, of which there were four principal branches, viz. 1. Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans. 2. Augustines. 3. Dominicans, or Black Friars. 4. White Friars, or Carmelites; of which the rest descend. 4 H. 7. cap. 17. Lyndewood de Relig. Dominis, c. 1.

Friar-observant. (frater observans) A branch of the Franciscan friars, who are minors, as well the Observants as the Conventuals and Capuchins. And they are called Observants, because they are not combined together in any cloister, convent, or corporation, as the Conventuals are; but tie themselves to observe the rules of their order more strictly than the Conventuals, and upon a singularity of zeal separate themselves from them, living in certain places of their own choosing. Zach. de Rep. Eccles. de Regular. c. 12. They are mentioned in the Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 12.

Fritling. (From the Sax. Frith, Liber & Ling, rogenies) Signifies a man that is free.

Frier. (Fr. Fripter, i. p. Interpolator) One that seours and surbishes up old clothes to sell again; a kind of broker. 1 Jac. 1. c. 21.

Fritous. Is taken for uncultivated ground. — Et de communia pastura in Frisia & dominicis suis. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. p. 56.

Friste,

Fist. A term among merchants for selling goods upon credit.

Fith. (Sax.) A wood, from Frid, i. e. Pax; for the English Saxons held woods to be sacred, and therefore made them sanctuaries. Sir Edward Coke expounds it a plain between woods, or a lawn. Co. Litt. 5. Camden in his Britan. useth it for an arm of the sea, or a freight, between two lands, from the word Fretum.

Frithbrech. (Pacis Violatio) The breaking of the peace. LL. Eibfred. c. 6. See Grithbrech.

Frithgear. (From the Sax. Frith or Frid, Pax, & Gear, Annus) The year of jubilee, or of meeting for peace and friendship. Soma.

Frithgild. Is the same which we now call a Guild-Hall; or a company or fraternity.

Frithman. One belonging to such fraternity or company. Blount.

Frithmote. Is mentioned in the records of the county palatine of Chester: Per Frithmote J. Stanley. Ar. clamas capere annuatim de villa de Olton, quæ est infra feodum & manerium de, &c. 10 sol. quos comites cestræ ante consecutionem chartæ præd. solabant capere. Pl. in itin. apud Cestriam. 14 Hen. 7.

Frithske. Frithsoken. Signifies surety of defence; or according to Fleta, libertatis habendi franci plegii; seu immunitatis locus.

Frodmortel. requis. Frodmortel. (From the Sax. Fro, free, and Mortel, Homicidium) An immunity for committing manslaughter.—Et concedo eis curiam suam de omnibus querelis, Et judicium suum pro Frodmortel, &c. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. p. 173.

Fruit. (Stealing of.) To rob orchards or gardens of fruit growing therein, is made felony, liable to transportation for seven years by 4 Geo. 2. c. 32.

Frumgild. (Sax.) Is the first payment made to the kindred of a person slain, towards the recompence of his murder.—Prima capitis estimationis pensio vel solutio. LL. Edmund.

Frumstol. The chief seat or mansion-house; which is called by some the Homesal. Leg. Inæ. c. 38.

Frustra terra. Waste and desert lands. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. p. 327.

Frustra. (From the Fr. Frustrare) A breaking down; also a ploughing or breaking up: Frustra domorum is house breaking: and Frustra terre, new broke land. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. p. 394.

Frustrum terre. Is a small piece or parcel of land, residuum quiddam præter acras numeratas vel campum mensuratum.—Frustrum terre accipitur pro amplâ portione forsum a campo villæ, manerio jacenti. Domesday.

Frustrum. A place where shrubs, or tall herbs do grow. Mon. Ang. Tom. 3. p. 22.

Fuage. In the reign of King Edward III. the Black Prince having Acquiescent granted him, laid an imposition of fuage upon the subjects of that dukedom, i. e. 12 d. for every firr. Rot. Parl. 25 Ed. 3. And it is probable, that the hearth-money imposed Anno 16 Car. 2. took its original from hence. See Fumage.

Fuel. By an ancient statute, if any person shall sell billet-wood or faggots for fuel under the assise, &c. on presentment thereof upon oath by six persons sworn by a justice of peace, the party may be set on the pillory in the next market town, with a faggot, &c. bound to some part of his body. For the assise of fuel, Stat. 3 Ed. 6. c. 7. and 43 Eliz. c. 14. None are to buy fuel but such as will burn it, or retail it to those who do; on pain to forfeit the treble value; also no person may alter any mark or assise of fuel, or the like forfeiture. Stat. Ibid. See Billet.

Fuer. (Fr. Fuir. Lat. Lagere) Is used substantively, tho' it be a verb; and is twofold, fuer in fait, or in facto, when a man doth apparently and corporally fly; and fuer in ley, in lege, when being called in the county court he appeareth not, which is fugit in the interpretation of the law. Statut. Pl. Car. lib. 3. c. 22.

Fuga Cællorum. A drove of cattle; fugatorum carucarum, waggoners who drive oxen, without beating or goading. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 78.

Fugacia. Signifies a chase, being all one with chasea; and fugatis, hunting, or the privilege to hunt. Blount.

Fugam fecit. Is where it is found by inquisition, that a person fled for felony, &c. And if fugit and felony be found on an indictment for felony, or before the coroner, where a murder is committed, the offender shall forfeit all his goods, and the issues of his lands, till he is acquitted or pardoned: and it is held, that when one indicted of any capital crime, before justices of Oyer, &c. is acquitted at his trial, but found to have fled, he shall notwithstanding his acquittal, forfeit his goods: but not the issues of his lands, because by acquittal the land is discharged, and consequently the issues. 3 Inst. 218. Hawk. P. C. 27. 2 Hawk. P. C. 450. The party may in all cases, except that of the coroner's inquest, traverse the finding of a fugam fecit; and the particulars of the goods found to be forfeited, may be always traversed: also whenever the indictment against a man is insufficient, the finding of a fugam fecit will not hurt him. 2 Hawk. 451. Making default in appearance on indictment, &c. whereby outlawry is awarded, is a fugit in law. See Exigent.

Fugitives Goods. (Bona Fugitivorum) Are the proper goods of him that flies upon felony, which after the flight lawfully found on record, do belong to the King or Lord of the manor. 5 Rep. 109.

Fugitives over Sea. To depart this realm over the sea, without the King's licence, except it be great men and merchants, and the King's soldiers, incurs forfeiture of goods: and masters of ships, &c. carrying such persons beyond sea, shall forfeit their vessels; also if any searcher of any port, negligently suffer any persons to pass, he shall be imprisoned, &c. Stat. 9 Ed. 3. 10. 5 R. 2. c. 2.

Fugitio. Pro Fuga.—Condonavit omnes felonias & Fugitones. Knighton, Anno 1537.

Full-age. The ages of male and female are different, for different purposes. A male at 12 may take the oath of allegiance; at 14 may consent, or disagree, to marriage, may choose his guardian, and, if his discretion be actually proved, may make a testament of his personal estate; at 17 may be an executor; and at 21 is at his own disposal, and may alien his lands, goods and chattels: a female at 7 may be betrothed or given in marriage; at 9 is entitled to dower; at 12 is at years of maturity, and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage, and, if proved to have sufficient discretion, may bequeath her personal estate; at 14 is at years of legal discretion, and may choose a guardian; at 17 may be executrix; and at 21 may dispose of herself and her lands. Black. Com. 1 V. 463.

Fulium Aqua. A steam or stream of water, such as comes from a mill.

Fumage. (Fumagium) Dung for soil, or a manuring of land with dung.—Et sunt quieti de Fumagio & marcio cariando, &c. Chart. R. 2. Pat. 5 Ed. 4. And this word has been sometimes used for smoke-money, a customary payment for every house that had a chimney. Domesday. Black. Com. 1 V. 323.

Fumatores. Are pilchards garbaged and salted, then hung in the smoke, and pressed; so called in Spain and Italy, whether they are exported in great abundance. 14 Car. 2. c. 31.

Funditores. Is used for pioneers, in Pat. 10 Ed. 2. m. 1.

Funds. The publick funds, of any account, are three; the aggregate fund, the general fund, so called from the union, and addition of several, and the South-Sea fund. Black. Com. 1 V. 328, 9. Which vide, as well worthy of perusal. The surplus of these three funds are carried to the sinking fund.

Funeral charges. A person died in debt, and 600 l. was laid out in his funeral; decreed the same should be a debt, payable out of a trust estate, charged with payment of debts, he being a man of great estate and reputation in his country, and buried there; but had he been buried elsewhere, it seemed his funeral might have been more private, and the court would not have allowed so much. Trin. 1691. Ch. Prec. 27. Offley v. Offley.

Where a citizen of London devised 700 l. for mourning, the question was, if it should come out of the whole estate, or out of the legatory part only; it was insisted, that there had been no direction by the will, or if the will had directed, that the expences of the funeral should not exceed such a sum, there the deduction must have been been out of the whole estate. Per cur. Mourning devised by the will, must come out of the legatory part, and not to lessen the orpanage and customary part. Mich. 1691. 2 Vern. 240. Deakin v. Buckley.

Executor is not liable to pay for funeral expences, unless he contracts for it; per Holt Ch. J. 12 Mod. 256. Mich. 10 W. 3. Anon.

Settlements for separate maintenance of the wife shall never extend to funeral charges, and tho' she made a will, (according to a power given her) and an executor, and gave several legacies, but there was no residuum for the executor, the husband's estate in the hands of a devisee subject to the payment of debts, was made liable to the funeral charges of the wife. 9 Mod. 31. Trin. 9 Geo. at the rolls, Bertie v. Lord Chesterfield.

In strictness no funeral expences are allowable against a creditor, except for the coffin, ringing the bell, parson, clerk, and bearers fees; but not for pall or ornaments; per Holt. 1 Salk. 296. Trin. 5 W. & M. B. R. Shelley's case. Ten pounds is enough to be allowed for the funeral of one in debt; per Holt. Baron Powell in his circuit would allow but 11 s. 6 d. as all the necessary charge. Comb. 342. Trin. 7 W. B. R. Anon. Quere If 40 s. is not now the usual sum, in case of an insolvent? See Salk. 196. Godolph. p. 2. c. 26. f. 2.

Furca & fossa, (i. e. the gallows and the pit) In ancient privileges granted by our Kings, it signified a jurisdiction of punishing felons; that is, men by hanging, and women with drowning. And Sir Edw. Coke says, fossa is taken away, but that furca remains. 3 Inst. 58. Skene treating of these words, saith — Ereclio Furcarum est veri imperii & alter justitie, & significat dominium acris, quia suspensi pendent in arboribus. Et merum imperium consistit in quatuor, sicut sunt quatuor elementa; in aere, ut hii qui suspenduntur; in igne, quando quis comburitur propter malefictum; in aqua, quando quis ponitur in culio & in mare projicitur, ut parricida, vel in amnem immergitur, ut femina furti damnata; in terra, cum quis decapitatur & in terram prosteritur. Skene.

Furcare ad tassum, To pitch corn with a fork in loading a waggon, or in making a rick or mow. Tenentes debent falcare, spargere, vertere, cunilare, coriare in manerium domini, & ad tassum furcare unam acram prati. — Cowel.

Furcam & flagellum, The meanest of all servile tenures, when the bondman was at the disposal of his Lord for life and limb. — Iste tenet in Villenagio ad furcam & flagellum de domino suo, &c. Placit. Term. Mich. 2 Joh. Rot. 7.

Furigelbium, A mulct paid for theft: by the laws of King Ethelred, it is allowed, that they shall be witnesses qui nunquam furigeldum reddiderunt, i. e. who never were accused of theft.

Furlong, is a quantity of ground containing generally forty poles or perches in length, every pole being fifteen foot and a half; eight of which furlongs make a mile: it is otherwise the eighth part of an acre of land in quantity. Stat. 35 Ed. 1. c. 6. In the former acceptation, the Romans call it Stadium; and in the latter Fugerum. Also the word Furlong hath been sometimes used for a piece of land of more or less acres.

Furnage, (Furnagium) Est tributum quod domino Furni a scitatoribus penditur ob usum Furni; Et multis enim in locis tenentur vassalli ad coquendum panes suos in Furno domini. Est etiam lucrum seu emolumentum quod piscatori conceditur in pisciculis sumptus & mercedem, & tunc potest piscator de quolibet quarterio frumenti lucrare 4 denar. & furfur, & duos panes ad Furnagium. Assisa panis & cervisie, 51 H. 3. Sec Formagium.

Furnarius, Is used for a baker, who keeps an oven; and furniare signifies to bake or put any thing in the oven. Mait. Paris. Anno 1258.

Furr, (Furrua) From the Fr. Fouter, i. e. Pelluculare Is the coat or covering of a beast. The stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. mentions divers kinds of it, viz. Sables; which are a rich furr, of colour between black and brown, the skin of a beast called a Sable, of bigness between a pole cat and an ordinary cat, bred in Russia and Tartary. Lucerns, the skin of a beast of that name, near the size of a wolf, in colour neither red nor brown, but between both, and mingled with black spots; which are bred in Muscovy; and is a very rich furr. Genets, a beast's skin so called, in bigness between a cat and a weezle, nailed like a cat, and of that nature, and of two kinds, black and grey, the black most precious which hath black spots upon it hardly to be seen; this beast is the product of Spain: Foins are of fashion like the sable, the top of the furr is black, and the ground whitish; bred for the most part in France. Marten is a beast very like the Sable, the skin something coarser, produced in England and Ireland, and all countries not too cold; but the best are in Ireland. Besides these, there are the Fitch or Pole-cat; the Calabar, a little beast, in bigness near a Squirrel: Miniver being the beelies of Squirrels; and Shanks, or what is called Budge, &c. all of them Furrs of foreign countries, some whereof make a large branch of their inland traffick.

Furst & Fondong, (Sax.) Time to advise, or to take counsel. — De quibuscunque implacitetur aliquis Furst & Fondong habeat. Leg. H. 1. c. 46.

Furtum, Theft, or robbery of any kind. Litt. Dig.

Fustians. No persons shall dress fustians with any other instrument than the broad sheers, under the penalty of 20 s. And the master and wardens of the company of Clothworkers in London, &c. have power to search the workmanship of sheermen, as well for fustian, as cloth. 11 H. 7. c. 27. 39 Elix. c. 13.

Fustica, Wood brought from Barbadoes, Jamaica, &c. used by dyers, mentioned in the 12 Car. 2. c. 18.

Fyrdinga, (From the Sax. Firdung, i. e. Expeditionis apparatus) A going out to war, or a military expedition at the King's command; not going upon which, when summoned, was punished by fine at the King's pleasure. Leg. H. 1. c. 10. Blount calls it an expedition; or a fault or trespass for not going upon the same.

Fything or fyding, A military expedition.

G.

Gabble, (Blatere, Garrio) To babble and talk idly to no purpose, whence comes gabbler and babler. Plant.

Gabel, (Gabella, Gablum, Gablagium) In French Gabelle, i. e. Vedigal, hath the same signification among our ancient writers, as gabells hath in France: it is a tax; but hath been variously used; as for a rent, custom, service, &c. And where it was a payment of rent, those who paid it were termed gabellatores. Domesday. Co. Litt. 213. It is by some authors distinguished from tribute; Gabella est vedigal quod solvitur pro bonis mobilibus; & Tributum est propriis quod fisco vel principi solvitur pro rebus immobilibus. When the word Gabel was formerly mentioned, without any addition to it, it signified the tax on salt, tho' afterwards it was applied to all other taxes.

Gable-end, (Gabulum) The head or extrem part of a house or building. — Quia domus sita est inter Gabuluna tenementi mei & Gabulum tenementi Laurentii K. Paroch. Durig. 286.

Gabulus Denetioquum, Rent paid in money. Selden on Titul. p. 321.

Gaboldrigu, (Sax.) Is the payment of tribute or custom; it sometimes denotes usury.

Gabold-land, or Gabul-land, (Terra censuali) Land liable to taxes; and rented or let for rent. Sax. Dig.

Gage, (Fr. Lat. Vadium) Signifies as much as to pawn or pledge. Glawb. lib. 10. c. 6. And gage deliverance is where he that hath taken a distress being sued, hath not delivered the cattle, &c. that were distrained; then he shall not only avow the distress; but gage deliverance, i. e. put in surety or pledges that he will deliver them. F. N. B. 67. 94. This gage deliverance is had on suing out replevin, upon the plaintiff's praying the same: and it is said the parties are to be at issue, or there is to be a demurrer in law, before gage deliverance is allowed; and if a man claim any property in the goods, or the beasts are dead in the pound, the plaintiff shall not gage, &c. Kitsh. 145.

Gager del Ecy, In old writings. See Wage and Wager of Law.

Gainage, (Gainagium, i. e. Plaustr' apparatus, Fr. Guignage, viz. Lucrum) The gain or profit of tilled or planted land, raised by cultivating it; and the draught, plough, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage, by the baser kind of sok-men or villains. Gainage was only applied to arable land, when they that had it in occupation, had nothing thereof but the profit raised by it from their own labour, towards their sustenance, nor any other title but at the Lord's will: and gainer is used for a sok-man, that hath such land in occupation. Bract. lib. 1. c. 9. Old Nat. Br. 117. The word gain is mentioned by West. Symb. par. 2. sect. 3. Where he says land in demesne, but not in gain; &c. And in the stat. 51 H. 3. there are these words, "no man shall be distrained by his beasts, that gain the land." By the statute of Magna Charta, c. 14. Gainage is meant no more than the plough-tackle, or implements of husbandry, without any respect to gain or profit; where it is said of the knight and freeholder, he shall be amerced salvo contentamento suo; the merchant or trader, salvo merchandisa sua; and the villeins or countrymen, salvo gainagio suo, &c. In which cases it was, that the merchant and husbandman should not be hindered, to the detriment of the publick, or be undone by arbitrary fines; and the villein had his vainage, to the end that the plow might not stand still; for which reason the husbandmen at this day are allowed a like privilege by law, that their beasts of the plough are not in many cases liable to distress. See Wainage.

Gainery, (Fr. Gaignerie) Tillage, or the profit arising from it, or of the beasts employed therein. Stat. West. 1. c. 6 & 17.

Galea, A gallery, or swift sailing ship. Hoved. p. 682, 692.

Galleti, According to Somner were viri Galeati; but Knighton says they were Welchmen.—In quorum prima acie fuit dominus Galfridus, cum multis Galletis, &c. Knight.

Galligashins, Wide hose or breeches, having their name from their use by the Gascigns.

Galliballpent, A kind of coin, which with faskins and dothkins, were forbidden by the stat. 3 H. 5. 1. It is said they were brought into this kingdom by the Genoese merchants, who trading hither in galley, lived commonly in a lane near Tower-street, and were called Galley-men, landing their goods at Galley-Key, and trading with their own small silver coin termed Galley Half-pence. Stow's Survey of London 137.

Gallinawtry, Signifies a meal of coarse victuals, given to Galley Slaves.

Gallivolatium, (From Gallus, a cock) A cock shoot of cock-glade.

Galoches, (Fr.) Signify a kind of shoe, worn by the Gauls in dirty weather; mentioned in the stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 9.

Gamba, Gamberia, Gambria, (Fr. Jambiere) Military boots or defence for the legs.

Gambeyson, (Gambesonum) A horseman's coat used in war, which covered the legs: or rather a quilted coat, coste, vestimentum ex coactili lana confectum, to put under the armour, to make it sit easy. Flora, lib. 1. c. 24.

Game, (Aurupia, from Auceps, Aucupis, i. e. Avium captio) Birds or prey got by fowling and hunting: and destroying the game is an offence by statute. The Common law allows the hunting of foxes, and other ravenous beasts of prey, in the ground of another person; tho' a man may not dig and break the ground to unearth them, without licence; if he doth, the owner of the ground may maintain an action of trespass for it. 2 Roll. 538. Cro. Jac. 321. An action was brought against a person for entering another man's warren; the defendant pleaded that there was a pheasant on his land, and his hawk pursued it into the plaintiff's ground; it was resolved that this doth not amount to a sufficient justification, for in this case he can only follow his hawk, and not take the game. Popb. 162. Tho' it is said to be otherwise where the soil of the plaintiff is not a warren. 2 Roll. Abr. 567. If a man in hunting starts a hare upon his own ground, and follows and kills it on the ground of another, yet still the hare is his own, because of the fresh suit; but if a man starts a hare upon another person's ground, and hunts and kills it there, he is subject to an action, tho' it is seldom brought, being frivolous. Cro. Car. 553.

By the Common law, a property in those living creatures, which by reason of their swiftness or fierceness were not naturally under the power of man, was gained by the mere caption or seizure of them; but as by this toleration persons of quality and distinction were deprived of their recreations and amusements, it was thought necessary to make laws for preserving the game from idle and indigent people, who by their loss of time and pains in such pursuits were much impoverished. 2 New. Abr. 615.

Upon this subject we shall make some extracts from a very judicious and learned author, viz. Blackstone. The qualifications for killing game, as they are usually called, or more properly the exemptions from the penalties inflicted by the statute law, are, 1. The having a freehold estate of 100 l. per Annum; there being fifty times the property required to enable a man to kill a partridge, as to vote for a knight of the shire: 2. A leasehold for ninety-nine years of 150 l. per Annum: 3. Being the son and heir apparent of an esquire, (a very loose and vague description) or person of superior degree: 4. Being the owner or keeper of a forest, park, chase, or warren. For unqualified persons transgressing these laws, by killing game, keeping engines for that purpose, or even having game in their custody, or for persons (however qualified) that kill game or have it in possession, at unreasonable times of the year, there are various penalties assigned, corporal and pecuniary, by different statutes; on any of which, but only on one at a time, the justices may convict in a summary way, or prosecutions may be carried on at the assizes. By stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 12. No person however qualified to kill, may make merchandize of this valuable privilege, by selling, or exposing to sale any game, on pain of like forfeiture as if he had no qualification. Com. 4 V. 175.

The same author (id. 408, 409.) treating of the alterations in our laws, and mentioning franchises granted of chase and free warren, as well to preserve the breed of animals, as to indulge the subject; adds—From a similar principle to which, though the forest laws are now mitigated, and by degrees grown intirely obsolete, yet from this root has sprung a bastard ship, known by the name of the Game Law, now arrived to, and wantoning in its highest vigour: both founded upon the same unreasonable notion of permanent property in wild creatures; and both productive of the same tyranny to the Commons: but with this difference; that the forest laws established only one mighty hunter throughout the land, the game laws have raised a little Nimrod in every manor. And in one respect the ancient law was much less unreasonable than the modern; for the King's grantee of a chase or free-warren might kill game in every part of his franchise; but now, though a freeholder of less than 100 l. a year is forbidden to kill partridge upon his own estate, yet nobody else (not even the Lord of the manor, unless he hath a grant of free-warren) can do it without committing "a trespass, and subjecting himself to an action."

The several statutes concerning the game.

No person shall take pheasants or partridges with engines in another man's ground, without licence, on pain of 10 l. stat. 11 H. 7. c. 13. If any person shall take or kill any pheasants or partridges, with any net in the night-time, they shall forfeit 20 s. for every pheasant, and 10 s. for every partridge taken; and hunting with spaniels in standing corn, incurs a forfeiture of 40 s. 23 Eliz. c. 10. Those who kill any pheasant, partridge, duck, heron, hare, or other game, are liable to a forfeiture of 20 s. for every fowl and hare; and selling, or buying to sell again, any hare, pheasant, &c. the forfeiture is 10 s. for each hare, &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17. Also pheasants or partridges, are not to be taken between the first of July and the last of August, on pain of imprisonment for a month, unless the offenders pay 20 s. for every pheasant, &c. killed; and constables, having a justice of peace's warrant, may search for game and nets, in the possession of persons not qualified by law to kill game, or to keep such nets. 7 Jac. 1. c. 11. Constables, by warrant of a justice of peace, are to search houses of suspected persons for game: and if any game be found upon them, and they do not give a good account how they came by the same, they shall forfeit for every hare, pheasant, or partridge, not under 5 s., nor exceeding 20 s. And inferior tradesmen, hunting, &c. are subject to the penalties of the act, and may likewise be sued for trespass: if officers of the army or soldiers kill game without leave, they forfeit 5 l. an officer, and 10 s. a soldier. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. higlers, chapmen, carriers, inn-keepers, victuallers, &c. having in their custody, hare, pheasant, partridge, heath-game, &c. (except sent by some person qualified to kill game) shall forfeit for every hare and fowl 5 l. to be levied by distress and sale of their goods, being proved by one witness, before a justice; and for want of distress shall be committed to the house of correction for three months: one moiety of the forfeiture to the informer, and the other to the poor. And selling game, or offering the same to sale, incurs the like penalty; wherein hare, and other game found in a shop, &c. is adjudged an exposing to sale: killing hares in the night is liable to the same penalties: and if any persons shall drive wild fowls with nets, between the first day of July and the first of September, they shall forfeit 5 s. for every fowl. 5 Ann. c. 14. 9 Ann. c. 25. And penalties for killing and destroying game, are recoverable not only before justices of peace by the several statutes; but also by action of debt, bill, plaint or information, in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster; and the plaintiff, if he recovers, shall likewise have double costs. 8 G. 1. c. 19. Persons qualified to keep guns, dogs, &c. to kill game, are such as have a free-warren, or are Lords of manors, or have 100 l. per Annum inheritance or for life, or lease for ninety-nine years of 150 l. per Annum. (and by the exception of the act, the eldest sons and heirs of esquires, or other persons of higher degree.) And if any person shall keep a gun not so qualified, he shall forfeit 10 l. And persons being qualified may take guns from those that are not, and break them. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. 33 H. 8. c. 6. One justice of peace, upon examination and proof of the offence, may commit the offender till he hath paid the forfeiture of 10 l. And persons not qualified by law, keeping dogs, nets, or other engines to kill game, being convicted thereof before a justice of peace, shall forfeit 5 l. or be sent to the house of correction for three months; and the dogs, game, &c. shall be taken from them, by the stat. 5 Ann. No certiorari shall be allowed to remove any conviction or other proceeding on the stat. 5 Ann. &c. into any court at Westminster, unless the party convicted become bound to the party prosecuting with sufficient sureties, in the sum of 50 l. to pay the prosecutor his costs and charges, &c. after the conviction confirmed, or a procedendo granted. Ibid. In convictions for keeping of guns, the peace is not concerned, but only the qualifications of the persons that use them; so that it hath been adjudged the justices of peace have no general power to punish the offenders, for want of jurisdiction. 4 Mod. 49. But where a person was brought before a justice of peace for shooting with hail-shot in a hand-gun, the justice committed him to prison until he should pay 10 l. &c. and having made a record of his conviction, it was certified upon the return of an habeas corpus; and it was held, that if the justice of peace had pursued the statute, no court could discharge the defendant. W. Jones 170. On a certiorari to remove a conviction before a justice, &c. for carrying a gun, not being qualified; it appeared upon the return to be taken before a certain justice of peace, without adding neque ad diversas felonias & transgressiones audiend. assign. &c. and it was ruled that this was a good exception upon a certiorari to remove an indictment taken at the sessions; but not upon a conviction of this nature, because the court can take notice that the statutes give the justices authority in these cases. 1 Vent. 33. Sid. 419. A person was convicted before a justice of peace upon the statute, for keeping a gun, not having 100 l. per Annum, and the conviction being removed into B. R. was quashed, for not saying when the defendant had not 100 l. a year; for it might be he had such estate at the time when he kept the gun, tho' not at the conviction, and the offence and time ought to be certainly alledged. 3 Mod. 280. The defendant not having 100 l. per Annum did shoot in a gun in February, and was brought before a justice of peace in March following, and then by him convicted; and it was held, that as by the statute no time was limited when the offender should be carried before a justice to be examined, it therefore ought to be Instantur; which not being done, the conviction was quashed. 4 Mod. 147. A man was indicted for shooting of game; but it was omitted shewing that he was not worth 100 l. a year; and it was ordered by the court, that the party should shew he was worth so much to discharge him. 2 Keb. 582. If a person hunt upon the the ground of another, such other person cannot justify killing of his dogs, as appears by 2 Roll. Abr. 567. But it was otherwise adjudged Mitch. 33 Car. 2. in C. & 2 Cro. 44. and see 3 Lrv. 28. In action of debt, qui tam, &c. by a common informer on the stat. 5 Ann. for 15 l. wherein the plaintiff declared on two several counts, one for 10 l. for killing two partridges, the other for 5 l. for keeping an engine to destroy the game, not being qualified, &c. The plaintiff had a verdict for 5 l. only: this action was brought by virtue of the stat. 8 Geo. 1. Mod. Caf. in Law and Eq. 238. See stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. See likewise 24 Geo. 2. c. 34. for the better preservation of the game in Scotland. By the stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 2. All suits and actions brought by virtue of stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. — for the recovery of any pecuniary penalty, or sum of money, for offences committed against any law for the better preservation of the game, shall be brought before the end of the second term after the offence committed.

By 28 Geo. 2. c. 12. persons selling, or exposing to sale, any game, are liable to the penalties inflicted by 5 Ann. c. 14. on higlers, &c. offering game to sale: and game found in the house or possession of a poulterer, salesman, fishmonger, cook, or pastrycook, is deemed exposing thereof to sale.

By 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. After the 1 June 1762, no person may take, kill, buy or sell, or have in his custody, any partridge, between 12 February and 1 September, or pheasant, between 1 February and 1 October, or heath fowl, between 1 January and 20 August, or grouse, between 1 December and 25 July, in any year; pheasants taken in their proper season, and kept in mews, or breeding places, excepted: and persons offending in any of the cases aforesaid, forfeit 5 l. per bird, to the prosecutor, to be recovered, with full costs, in any of the courts at Westminster. By this act, likewise the whole of the pecuniary penalties under the 8 Geo. 1. c. 19. may be sued for, and recovered to the sole use of the prosecutor with double costs; and no part thereof to go to the use of the poor of the parish.

By 2 Geo. 3. c. 29. After 24 June 1762, any person who shall wilfully shoot at, or destroy any house-doves or pigeons belonging to other persons, shall forfeit on conviction, 20 s. to the prosecutor; and if not forthwith paid, he may be committed, and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three, nor less than one month, unless the forfeiture be sooner paid: the owners of dovecotes, or other places built for the preservation or breeding of pigeons, and those appointed by them, excepted. Offender is liable only to one conviction for the same offence; and prosecutions are to be commenced, and carried on with effect, within two months after the offence; and where persons suffer imprisonment, they are not liable afterwards to pay the penalty.

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 14. After the 1 June 1765, persons convicted, within six months after the offence, of stealing or destroying fish in fish-ponds, &c. or aiding or assisting therein; or knowingly receiving or buying such fish; are to be transported for seven years. Any offender making a discovery of, and convicting his accomplices, is intitled to pardon. Persons convicted of taking or destroying, &c. Fish in rivers or other waters, forfeit to the owner of the fishery 5 l. On complaint of the offence, justice to issue his warrant for apprehending the offender; and the penalty to be paid down upon conviction; otherwise the offender to be committed to the house of correction for six months; or an action may be brought for the penalty in any of the courts at Westminster, within within six months after the offence. None liable to forfeit for taking fish in any river, &c. wherein they have a right. Persons convicted of entering warrens, in the night-time, and taking or killing conies there, or aiding or assisting therein, may be punished by transportation, or by whipping, fine, or imprisonment. Persons convicted on this act, not liable to be convicted under any former act. This act does not extend to the destroying conies in the day-time, on the sea and river banks in the county of Lincoln; &c. No satisfaction to be made for damages occasioned by entry, unless they exceed 1 s.—It may not be improper to mention an act lately made and not yet repealed, viz. 10 Geo. 3. c. 19. for preservation of the game, which shews the importance of the object. 'Tis thereby enacted, that if any person kill any hare, &c. between sun-setting and sun-rising, or use any gun, &c. for destroying game, shall for the first offence be imprisoned for any time not exceeding six, nor less than three months. If guilty of a second offence, after conviction of a first, to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding twelve months, nor less than six, and shall also within three days from the time of his commitment either for the first, or for any other offence, be once publicly whipped.

Offenders on a Sunday using a gun or engine for destroying game to forfeit on conviction twenty pounds. For want of distress the offender to be committed for any time not exceeding six, nor less than three calendar months.

Persons thinking themselves aggrieved may appeal to the quarter sessions, and the determinations of the justices there to be final. See farther Burn's Justice, title Game.

Game-keepers. Are those who have the care of keeping and preserving of the game, being appointed thereto by Lords of manors, &c. Lords of manors, or other royalties, not under the degree of an esquire, may by writing under hand and seal, authorise one or more game-keepers; who may seize guns, dogs, nets, and other engines, made use of to kill the game by such persons as are prohibited, for the use of the Lord of the manor, or otherwise destroy them. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. Any Lord or Lady of a manor or lordship, may empower his or her game-keeper within their respective royalties, to kill hare, pheasant, partridge, &c. But if the game-keeper under colour of the said power, shall kill, and afterwards sell or dispose thereof to any person whatsoever, without the consent of the Lord or Lady of such manor, upon conviction thereof, he shall be committed to the house of correction for three months, there to be kept to hard labour. 5 Ann. c. 14. By the stat. 9 Ann. no Lord or Lady of a manor shall make, constitute or appoint, above one person to be game-keeper within any one manor; with power to kill game; the name of which game-keeper so appointed, is to be entered with the clerk of the peace of the county wherein the manor lies; and if any other game-keeper shall presume to kill any hare, pheasant, partridge, &c. Or if any game-keeper shall sell any hare, pheasant, &c. he shall for every offence incur such forfeitures as are inflicted by the act 5 Ann. And by 3 Geo. 1. c. 11. no Lord of a manor is to make or appoint any person to be a game-keeper, with power to take and kill hare, pheasant, partridge, or other game, unless such person be qualified by law so to do, or be truly and properly a servant to the said Lord, or immediately employed to take and kill game for the sole use or benefit of the said Lord: and any person not qualified, or not employed as aforesaid, who under pretence of any qualification from any Lord of a manor, shall take or kill any hare, &c. or keep or use any dogs to kill and destroy the game, shall for every such offence incur such forfeitures, pains, and penalties, as are inflicted by the acts 5 & 9 Ann. By this last statute, no game-keeper can qualify any person to kill game, or to keep guns, dogs, &c. Where game-keepers ought to have a justice of peace's warrant, to take away guns from unqualified persons, see Comberb. 305.

Appointment of a game-keeper by a Lord of a manor.

TO all people to whom these presents shall come, I T. Lord A. Lord of the manor of B. in the county of, &c. have (by virtue of several acts of parliament lately made for the preservation of the game) nominated, authorised and appointed, and by these presents do nominate, authorise and appoint E. D. of, &c. to be my game-keeper of and within my manor, &c. in the county of, &c. aforesaid, with full power and authority, according to the direction of the statutes in that case made, to kill game for my use; and to take and seize all such guns, greyhounds, setting dogs, and other dogs, ferrets, trammels, hays, or other nets, snares or engines, for the taking, killing or destroying of hares, pheasants, partridges, or other game, as within the said manor of, &c. and the precincts thereof, shall be kept or used by any person or persons not legally qualified to do the same: and further to act and do all and every thing and things which belong to the office of a game-keeper, pursuant to the direction of the said acts of parliament, during my will and pleasure; for which this shall be his sufficient warrant. Given under my hand and seal, &c.

Gaming, or Games unlawful, (Ludos vanos) The playing at tables, dice, cards, &c. King Ed. 3. in the 39th year of his reign, enjoined the exercise of shooting and of artillery, and forbad the casting of the bar, the hand and foot balls, cock-fighting, & alios ludos vanos; but no effect did follow from it, till they were, some of them forbidden by act of parliament. 11 Rep. 87. Anno 28 H. 8. Proclamation was made against all unlawful games, and commissions awarded into all the counties of England, for the execution thereof; so that in all places, tables, dice, cards and bowls, were taken and burnt. Stow's Annals 527. And by the statute 33 H. 8. c. 9. Justices of peace, and head officers in corporations, are empowered to enter houses suspected of unlawful games; and to arrest and imprison the gamesters, till they give security not to play for the future: also the persons keeping unlawful gaming houses, may be committed by a justice, until they find sureties not to keep such houses; who shall forfeit 40 s. and the gamesters 6 s. 8 d. a time: and if the King license the keeping of gaming-houses, it is against law, and void.

No artificer, apprentice, labourer, or servant, shall play at tables, tennis, dice, cards, bowls, &c. out of Christmas time, on pain of 20 s. for every offence; and at Christmas, they are to play in their master's house, or presence: but any nobleman, or gentleman, having 100 l. per Annum estate, may license his servants or family to play within the precincts of his house, or garden, at cards, dice, tables, or other games, as well among themselves, as others repairing thither. Stat. ibid. This act is to be proclaimed once a quarter, in every market-town, by the respective mayors, &c. and at every assizes and sessions. A person was convicted of keeping a cock-pit; and the court resolved it to be an unlawful game, within the statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. and fined him 40 s. a day. Rep. 510. But to play at dice, &c. is not unlawful in itself, though prohibited by statutes to certain persons, and to be used in certain places. 2 Vent. 175. If any person of what degree soever, shall by fraud, deceit, or unlawful device, in playing at cards, dice, tables, bowls, cock-fighting, horse-races, foot-races, or other games or pastimes, or bearing a share in the stakes, betting, &c. win any money or valuable thing, he shall forfeit treble the value, one moiety to the crown, and the other to the party grieved, prosecution being in six months; in default whereof, the last mentioned moiety is to go to such other person as will prosecute within one year, &c. 16 Car. 2. cap. 7. See the stat.

By the statute of 9 Ann. cap. 14. all notes, bills, bonds judgments, mortgages, or other securities, given for money won by playing at cards, dice, tables, tennis, bowls, or other games; or by betting on the sides of such as play at any of those games, or for repayment of any money knowingly lent for such gaming or betting, shall be void: And where lands are granted by such mortgages or securities, rities, they shall go to the next person, who ought to have the same as if the grantor were actually dead, and the grants had been made to the person so intitled after the death of the person so incumbering the same. If any person playing at cards, dice, or other game, or betting, shall lose the value of 10*l.* at one time, to one or more persons, and shall pay the money, he may recover the money lost by action of debt, within three months afterwards; and if the loser do not sue, any other person may do it, and recover the same, and treble the value with costs, one moiety to the prosecutor, and the other to the poor: And the person prosecuted shall answer upon oath, on preferring a bill to discover what sums he hath won. Persons by fraud or ill practice, in playing at cards, dice, or by bearing a share in the stakes, &c. or by betting, winning any sum above 10*l.* shall forfeit five times the value of the thing won, and suffer such infamy and corporal punishment, as in cases of wilful perjury, being convicted thereof on indictment or information; and the penalty shall be recovered by action, by such person as will sue for the same. And if any one shall assault and beat, or challenge to fight, any other person, on account of money won by gaming, upon conviction thereof, he shall forfeit all his goods, and suffer imprisonment for two years. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 14.

Also by this statute, any two or more justices of peace, may cause such persons to be brought before them as they suspect to have no visible estates, &c. to maintain them; and if they do not make it appear that the principal part of their expences is got by other means than gaming, the justices shall require securities for their good behaviour for a twelvemonth; and in default of such security, commit them to prison until they find it: And playing or betting during the time, to the value of 20*s.* shall be deemed a breach of good behaviour, and a forfeiture of their recognisances. Ibid.

Where it shall be proved before any justice of peace, that any person hath used unlawful games contrary to the Statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. the justice may commit such offender to prison, till he enter into a recognisance that he shall not from thenceforth at any time to come, play at any unlawful game. Statute 2 Geo. 2. cap. 28. For better preventing excessive and deceitful gaming; the ace of hearts, faron, basset, and hazard, are declared to be lotteries by cards or dice; and persons setting up these games are liable to the penalty of 200*l.* And every person who shall be an adventurer, or play or stake therein, forfeits 50*l.* Likewise the sale of any house, plate, &c. in the way of lottery, by cards, &c. is adjudged void, and the things to be forfeited to any person that will sue for the same. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 28. The game of passage, and all other games with one or more dice, or any thing in that nature, having figures or numbers thereon, (bagammon and games now played with those tables only excepted) shall be deemed games or lotteries by dice, within the 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. And such as keep any office or table for the said game, &c. or play thereat, are subject to the penalties in that act. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 19.

By the Statute 18 Geo. 2. cap. 34. Playing at, or keeping any house or place for playing at the game of roulette, otherwise roly poly, or any other game with cards or dice already prohibited, incurs the penalties in Statute 12 Geo. 2. cap. 28. Persons losing 10*l.* and paying the same, may sue the winner, and recover the same with costs: And on a bill in equity the court may decree the same to be paid. The persons who have jurisdiction to determine informations on the statutes against gaming, may summon witnesses, who, on refusing to appear and give evidence, shall forfeit 50*l.* No privilege of parliament shall be allowed on prosecution for keeping a gaming house. Persons losing 10*l.* at one time, or 20*l.* in twenty-four hours, may be indicted and fined five times the value. See the 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. concerning the manner of prosecuting persons for keeping gaming-houses, &c. See 1 Salk. 344-5. 5 Mod. 13. Mod. Caf. 128. Common gaming-houses are a common nuisance in the eye of the law; not only because they are great temptations to idleness, but as they draw together great numbers of disorderly persons to the disturbance of the neighbourhood. 1 Hawkt. P. C. 198. Noy had a writ on the Statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. to remove bowling-alleys, &c. which were pulled down, as common nuisances. 3 Keb. 465.

Cricket adjudged a game within the 9th of Ann. c. 14. Wilson, par. 1. 220. So as to a foot race, but it must appear that a person was playing at such a game, or else a wager laid on his side, is not abetting within the statute. Ibid. par. 2. 36. A horse race is a game within the Stat. 1b. 309.

Gang-days. (Dies Lustrationis) And gang-weeks are mentioned in the laws of King Atthelstan. See Rogation Week.

Gaol, (Gaola, Fr. Geole, i. e. Cavocula, a cage for birds) Is used metaphorically for a prison. It is a strong place or house for keeping of debtors, &c. and wherein a man is restrained of his liberty to answer an offence done against the laws: And every county hath two gaols, one for debtors, which may be any house where the sheriff pleases; the other for the peace and matters of the crown, which is the county gaol. Mod. Just. 230.

Under this head we may consider according to the division in the New Abr.

- I. By what authority gaols may be erected, and at whose charge they are to be repaired.
- II. To what place, and at whose charge offenders are to be committed, and how they are to be maintained.
- III. Of the offence of breaking gaol.

- I. By what authority gaols may be erected, and at whose charge they are to be repaired.

Gaols are of such universal concern to the publick, that none can be erected by any less authority than an act of parliament. 2 Inst. 705. All prisons and gaols belong to the King, altho' the subject may have the custody or keeping of them. 2 Inst. 100. It is said, that none can claim a prison as a franchise, unless they have also a gaol-delivery; and that therefore the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, tho' they have the custody of the Gatehouse prison, yet as they have no gaol-delivery, they must send a calendar of the prisoners to Newgate. 1 Salk. 343. Farest. 31. per Holt Ch. J.

By the 14 Ed. 3. cap. 10. it is enacted, That the sheriffs shall have the custody of the gaols as before, and shall put in under-keepers for whom they will answer. This statute is confirmed by 19 Hen. 7. cap. 10.

Altho' divers lords of liberties have the custody of prisons, and some in fee, yet the prison itself is the King's pro bono publico, and therefore it is to be repaired at the common charge. 2 Inst. 589. If a gaol be out of repair, insufficient, &c. the justices of peace in the Quarter-sessions may agree with workmen for rebuilding or repairing it; and by warrant under their hands and seals, order the sum agreed upon to be levied upon the several hundreds and divisions in the county, by a proportionate rate. 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 19. See 12 Geo. 2. c. 19.

- II. To what place, and at whose charge offenders are to be committed, and how they are to be maintained.

Justices of peace may not commit felons, and other criminals to the counters in London, or other prisons but the common gaols, for legally they cannot imprison any where but in the common gaol. Co. Litt. 9. 119. But the house of correction, and the counters of the sheriffs of London, are the common prisons for offenders for the breach of the peace, &c.

By the 5 H. 4. cap. 10. it is enacted, "That none shall be imprisoned by any justice of the peace, but only in the common gaol, saving to lords and others, who have gaols, their franchise in this case".—This stat. is only declaratory at the Common law. 2 Inst. 43.

But the court of King's Bench may commit to any prison in the kingdom which they shall think most proper, and the offender so committed or condemned to imprisonment can't be removed or bailed by any other court. Moor 666. pl. 913. 1 Sid. 145.

But by 31 Car. 2. 2. sec. 12. No subject shall be sent to foreign prisons.

And as prisoners ought to be committed at first to the proper prison, so ought they not to be removed from thence, except in some special cases.

To which purpose, by the said stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. sess. 2. it is enacted, "That if any subject of this realm shall be committed to any prison, or in custody of any officer, for any criminal or supposed criminal matter, he shall not be removed into the custody of any other, unless it be by a habeas corpus, or other legal writ; or where the prisoner is delivered to the constable, &c. to be carried to some common gaol; or where any person is sent by order of any judge of assize, or justice of the peace, to any common work-house, or house of correction; or where the prisoner is removed from one prison to another within the same county, in order to a trial or discharge by due course of law; or in case of sudden fire or infection, or other necessity; upon pain that he who makes out, signs, or countersigns, or obeys, or executes such warrant, shall forfeit to the party grieved one hundred pounds for the first offence, two hundred pounds for the second, &c." See 19 Car. 2. cap. 4. for empowering justices of the peace to remove prisoners in case of infection.

By 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 10. All murderers and felons shall be imprisoned in the common gaol, and the sheriffs shall have the keeping of the gaol.

As to the charge of conveying prisoners.

Offenders committed to prison, are to bear the charges of their conveying to gaol; or on refusal, their goods shall be sold for that purpose, by virtue of a justice of peace's warrant; and if they have no goods, a tax is to be made by constables, &c. on the inhabitants of the parish where the offenders were apprehended. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 10. And by 27 Geo. 2. c. 3. The expence of conveying poor offenders to gaol, or the house of correction, shall be paid by the treasurer of the county, except in Middlesex.

For the relief of prisoners in gaols, justices of peace in sessions have power to tax every parish in the county, not exceeding 8 d. per week, leviable by constables, and distributed by collectors, &c. 14 Eliz. cap. 5.

Also by 19 Car. 2. c. 4. Further provisions are made for the relief of poor prisoners, and setting them to work. And by 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20. It is enacted, "That all sheriffs, gaolers, &c. shall permit their prisoners to send for necessary food where they please; nor demand any greater fee for their commitment or discharge than what is allowable." Also it is thereby directed, that an inquiry be made into all charities given for the benefit of poor prisoners. Lastly, by 2 Geo. 2. c. 22. Chief justices, &c. are to examine into gifts for prisoners: And tables of such gifts are to be hung up in the gaols, and registered by the clerks of the peace.

III. As to breaking of prison.

This offence, by the Common law, was no less than felony; and this whether the party were committed in a criminal, or civil case, or whether he were actually within the walls of the prison, or only in the stocks, or in the custody of any person who had lawfully arrested him, or whether he were in the King's prison, or one belonging to a lord, or franchise. 2 Inst. 589. Staundf. P. C. 31. Cro. Car. 210.

But now by the statute 1 Ed. 2. ff. 2. "None from henceforth that breaketh prison shall have judgment of life, or member, for breaking of prison only, except the cause for which he was taken and imprisoned did require such judgment, if he had been convicted thereupon according to the law and custom of the realm; albeit in times past it hath been used otherwise."

Any place whatsoever, wherein a person under a lawful arrest for a supposed capital offence is restrained from his liberty, whether in the stocks or street, or in the common gaol, or the house of a constable, or private person, or the prison of the ordinary, is a prison within the statute. 2 Inst. 589. Dyir 99. pl. 60. Crom. 38. Cro. Car. 210. Hale's P. C. 107.

That there must be an actual breaking, for the words felonice fregit prisonam, which are necessary in every indictment for this offence, cannot be satisfied without some actual force or violence; and therefore if the prisoner, without the use of any violent means, go out of the prison doors, which he finds open by the negligence or consent of the gaoler, or if he escape thro' a breach made by others without his privity, he is guilty of a misdemeanor only, and not of felony. 2 Inst. 589. Hale's P. C. 108. Staundf. P. C. 31.

Nor will the breaking of prison, which is necessitated by any accident, happening without any default of the prisoner, as where the prison is fired by lightning, or otherwise, without his privity, and breaks out to save his life, come within the statute. Plow. 136. 2 Inst. 590. Hale's P. C. 108. Nor is it felony to break a prison, unless the prisoner escape. Keilw. 87. a.

If the imprisonment be for any offence made capital by a subsequent statute, the breach of prison is as much within the act of 1 Ed. 2. Stat. 2. as if the offence had always been felony; but if the offence, for which a man is committed, were but a trespass at the time when he breaks the prison, and afterwards become felony by a subsequent matter; as where one committed for having dangerously wounded a man, who afterwards dies, breaks the prison before he dies, the fiction of law, (which to many purposes makes the offence a felony ab initio) shall not be carried so far as to make the prison-breach also a felony, which at the time when it was committed, was but a misdemeanor. Hale's P. C. 108. 2 Inst. 591. Plow. 258.

Also it seems the better opinion, that if the offence, for which the party was committed, be in truth but a trespass, the calling it felony in the mittimus, will not make the breaking of the gaol amount to felony; and that on the other side, if the offence were in truth a capital one, the calling it a trespass in the mittimus will not bring it within the statute; for the cause of imprisonment is what the statute regards, and that is the offence, which can neither be lessened, nor increased by a mistake in the mittimus. But for this see 2 Hawk. P. C. 126-7.

The offence of breaking prison is but felony, whatsoever the crime were for which the party was committed, unless his intent were to favour the escape of others who were committed for treason, for that will make him a principal in the treason. 2 Hawk. P. C. 127.

He that breaks prison may be proceeded against for such crime before he be convicted of the crime for which he is committed, because the breach of prison is a distinct independant offence; but the sheriff's return of a breach of prison is not a sufficient ground to arraign a man without an indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 127-8.

It is not sufficient to indict a man generally, for having feloniously broken prison; but the case must be set forth specially, that it may appear he was lawfully in prison, and for a capital offence. Hale's P. C. 109. 2 Inst. 591. See Prison, Marshallee.

Gaoler. Is the master of a prison; one that hath the custody of the place where prisoners are kept. Sheriffs must make such gaolers for which they will answer: But if there is a default in the gaoler, action lies against him for an escape, &c. 2 Inst. 592. In common cases, the sheriff, or gaoler are chargeable at the discretion of the party; though the sheriff is most usually charged. Wood's Inst. 76. He who hath the custody of the gaol wrongfully, or of right, shall be charged with the escape of prisoners; and if he that hath the actual possession be not sufficient, respondeat superior. Ibid. A gaoler kills an unruly prisoner, it is no felony; but if it be by hard usage, it is felony and murder. 3 Inst. 52. And if a gaoler barbarously misuse prisoners, he may be fined and discharged. Raym. 216.

By the 14 Ed. 3. cap. 10. "If any keeper of a prison or under-keeper, by too great dures of imprisonment, and by pain, make any prisoner that he hath in his ward to become an appellor against his will, he is guilty of felony."

By the 4 Ed. 3. c. 10. It is enacted, That the sheriffs and gaolers shall receive, and safely keep in prison, from henceforth such thieves and felons, by the delivery of the constables and townships, without taking any thing for the receipt; and the justices to deliver the gaol, shall have power to hear their complaints, that will complain against the sheriffs and gaolers in such case, and moreover to punish the sheriffs and gaolers, if they be found guilty. By the 23 H. 6. cap. 10. a gaoler upon commitment may take 4 d.

By the 3 H. 7. c. 3. The sheriff and every other person, having authority or power of keeping of gaol, or of prisoners for felony, shall certify the names of all prisoners in his custody to the justices of gaol-delivery. And by Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20. It is enacted, That the rates of fees, and government of prisons be signed by the Lord, Chief Justices, &c. and hung up in every gaol, fairly written. And farther, that felons and prisoners for debt, shall not be lodged together. No fees shall be taken by gaolers of prisoners, but such as are allowed by law, and the judges, &c. are to settle the same; also the judges may determine petitions against extortions of gaolers, bailiffs. Statute 2 Geo. 2. cap. 22. Sec 28 Geo. 2. c. 13. If any person assault a gaoler, for keeping a prisoner in safe custody, he may be fined and imprisoned. 1 Hawk. 58, 59. Where a gaol is broken by thieves, the gaoler is answerable; not if it be broken by enemies. 3 Inst. 52.

It seems clearly agreed, that a gaoler by suffering voluntary escapes, by abusing his prisoners, by extorting unreasonable fees from them, or by detaining them in gaol, after they have been legally discharged, and paid their just fees, forfeits his office; for that in the grant of every office it is implied, that the grantee execute it faithfully and diligently. Co. Litt. 233. 9 Co. 5. 3 Mod. 143.

By 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. Marshal and warden taking any reward to connive at prisoners escape, forfeits 500*l.* and his said office, and be forever after incapable of executing any such office.

It hath been resolved, that a forfeiture by a gaoler who hath but a particular interest, as of him who hath custody of a gaol for life, or years, does not affect him in remainder, or reversion, who hath the inheritance, but that upon such forfeiture his title shall accrue, and not go to the King. Poph. 119. 2 Lev. 71. Raym. 216. 3 Lev. 288.

But by the 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. It is enacted, That the office of marshal of the King's Bench, and warden of the Fleet, shall be executed by those who have the inheritance of the said prisons, or their deputies, &c.

By the 3 Geo. 1. cap. 15. None shall purchase the office of gaoler, or any other office pertaining to the high sheriff, under pain of 500*l.* And a gaoler in fact, is as much punishable for a misdemeanor in his office, as if he were a rightful gaoler. 2 Hawk. 134.

Gaol-delivery. The administration of justice being originally in the crown, in former times our Kings in person rode thro' the realm once in seven years, to judge of, and determine crimes and offences; afterwards justices in eyre were appointed; and since justices of assize and gaol-delivery, &c. A commission of a gaol-delivery is a patent in nature of a letter from the King to certain persons, appointing them his justices, or two, or three, of them, and authorising them to deliver his gaol, at such a place, of the prisoners in it; for which purpose, it commands them to meet at such a place, at the time they themselves shall appoint; and inform them, that for the same purpose the King hath commanded his sheriff of the same county to bring all the prisoners of the gaol, and their attachments before them, at the day appointed. Crompt. Jurisd. 125. 4 Inst. 168.

Justices of gaol-delivery are empowered by the Common law to proceed upon indictments of felony, trespass, &c. and to order execution or reprieve: And they have power to discharge such prisoners, as upon their trials shall be acquitted; also all such against whom, upon proclamation made, no evidence appears to indict them; which justices of oyer and terminer, &c. may not do. 2 Hawk. 24, 25. But these justices have nothing to do with any person not in custody of the prison, except in some special cases; as if some of the accomplices to a felony be in such prison, and some of them out of it, the justices may receive an appeal against those who are out of the prison, as well as those who are in it; which appeal after the trial of such prisoners, shall be removed into B. R. and process issue from thence against the rest. Fitz. Coron. 77. S. P. C. 64. Such justices have no more to do with one let to mainprize, than if he were at large; for such person cannot be said to be a prisoner, since it is not in the power of his sureties to detain him in their custody: And where any person is bailed, that he is in the custody of his sureties, they may detain him where they please. 2 H. P. C. 25. Though per Hale C. J. If a person be let to bail, yet he is in law in prison, and his bail are his keepers; and therefore the justices of gaol-delivery may take an indictment against him, as well as if he was actually in gaol. And they may take indictments not only of felony, but also of high treason, if the offenders are in prison, and try and give judgment upon them, like unto commissioners of oyer and terminer; tho' it has been formerly held otherwise. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 35.

Justices of gaol-delivery may punish those who unduly bail prisoners; as being guilty of a negligent escape. S. P. C. 77. 25 Ed. 3. 39. They are also to punish sheriffs and gaolers, refusing to take felons into their custody from constables, &c. 4 Ed. 3. 10. and have authority to punish many particular offences by statute.

The granting a new commission of gaol-delivery, or of the peace, in a town corporate, shall not avoid the former commission, 2 & 3 Ph. & Mar. c. 18. Justices of gaol-delivery may act in their countries. 12 Geo. 2. c. 27.

Garb, (Carba, from the Fr. Garbe, alias Gerbe, i. e. fascis) Signifies a bundle or sheaf of corn. Chart. Forest. cap. 7. And in some places it is taken for an handful, viz. Garba accris fit ex triginta pectis. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 12. Garba sagittarum is a sheaf of arrows containing twenty-four. Skene.

Garble, Is to sever the dross and dust from spice, drugs, &c. Garbling is the purifying and cleaning the good from the bad; and may come from the Italian Garbo, i. e. Finery or neatness; and thence probably we say, when we see a man in a neat habit, that he is in a handsome Garb. Cowel.

Garbler of Spices, An officer of antiquity in the city of London, who may enter into any shop, warehouse, &c. to view and search drugs and spices, and garble, and make clean the same, or see that it be done. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 19. And all drugs, &c. are to be cleansed and garbled before sold, on pain of forfeiture, or the value. Stat. Ibid. But see Statute 6 Ann. cap. 16.

Garcio, (Fr. Garçon) A groom or servant. Pla. Cor. 21 Ed. 1. Garcio stola, groom of the stole to the King: And in the Irish language, (according to Toland) garçon is an appellative for any menial servant. Kennet's Gloss.

Garciones, Are those servants who follow the camp. — Habeat garcionem suo servitio semper attendantem. Ingulph. 886. And the word garciones hath been applied to the baggage of an army; so called a garcionibus suis militum famulis. Walsing. 242. See Dict. de Trevoux.

Garb, Gardian, &c. See Guard and Guardian.

Gardebache, (Fr. Gardebrache) An armour or vambrace for the arm. Chart. K. Hen. 5.

Gardens. Rubbing of gardens of fruit growing therein, punishable criminally by whipping, small fines, imprisonment, and satisfaction to the party wronged, according to the nature of the offence. See 43 Eliz. c. 7. 15 Car. 2. c. 2. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. 31 Geo. 2. c. 35. and 6 Geo. 3. c. 36, 48.

Garderobe, (Garderocha) A closet or small apartment, for hanging up clothes, being the same with wardrobe. See 2 Inst. 255.

Gardia, Is a word used by the feudists for custodia. Lib. Feud. 1.

Gare, A coarse wool, full of staring hairs, such as grow about the shanks of sheep. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 8.

Garlanda, A chaplet, coronet, or garland. Matt. Paris.

Garnestura, Viſtials, arms, and other implements of war, necessary for the defence of a town or castle. Matt. Paris. Ann. 1250.

Garnish, To garnish the heir, signifies in law to warn the heir. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3.

Garnishment, (Fr. Garnement, from Garnir, i. e. instruere) In a legal sense intends a warning given to one for his appearance, for the better furnishing of the cause and court. For example; one is sued for the detinue of certain writings delivered; and the defendant alleging that they were delivered to him by the plaintiff, and another person, upon condition, prays that the other person may be warned to plead with the plaintiff, whether the condition be performed or not; in this petition he is said to pray garnishment; which may be interpreted either a warning of that other, or a furnishing the court with all parties parties to the action, whereby it may thoroughly determine the cause; and until he appears and joins, the defendant is as it were out of the court. Crompt. Juris. 211. F. N. B. 106. A writ of scire facias is to go forth against the other person to appear and plead with the plaintiff; and when he comes and thus pleads, it is called enterpleader. If the garnishee be returned scire feci, and make default, judgment will be had to recover the writings, and for their delivery, against the defendant; and if the garnishee appears and pleads, if the plaintiff recovers, he shall have damages. Rast. 213. 1 Brownl. 147. Garnishment is generally used for a warning; as garnisher le court is to warn the court; and reasonable garnishment, is where a person hath reasonable warning. Kitch. 6. In the statute 27 Eliz. cap. 3. we read, upon a garnishment or two nibils returned, &c. And further, some contracts are naked, sans garnement, and some furnished, &c.

Garnishee, Is a third person or party in whose hands money is attached within the liberties of the city of London, by process out of the sheriff's court; so called, because he hath had garnishment or warning, not to pay the money to the defendant, but to appear and answer to the plaintiff creditor's suit. Vide Attachment.

Garniture, A furnishing or providing. Pat. 17 Ed. 3. Vide Garneitura.

Garsummure, Gersuma, or Gersoma, A fine or amer-ciament. Domesday, Spelm. Gloss.

Garter. (Carterium, Fr. Jartier, i. e. Periculis, Fascia poplitaria) Signifies in divers statutes and elsewhere, a special garter, being the ensign of a noble order of knight instituted by King Ed. 3. anno dom. 1344. called Knights of the Garter: It is also taken for the principal King at Arms, among our English heralds, attending upon the Knights thereof; created by King Hen. 5. and mentioned in the statute 14 Car. 2. cap. 33.

The first dignity after that of nobility, is that of a Knight of the Order of Saint George, or of the Garter. Indeed many sovereign Princes have been proud of the order, and considered themselves as highly honoured by our Sovereign's conferring it on them.

Garth, A little backside or close in the North of England; being an ancient British word, as gardd in that language is garden, and pronounced and writ garth; also a dam or wear, &c.

Garthman. As there are fishgarths or weirs for catching of fish, so there are garthmen; for by statute it is ordained, that no fisher nor garthman shall use any nets or engines to destroy the fry of fish, &c. 17 R. 2. cap. 9. And this word is supposed to be derived from the Scottish gart, which signifieth enforced, or compelled; and fish are forced by the wear to pass in at a loop where they are taken.

Gastaldus, A governor of the country, whose office was only temporary, and who had jurisdiction over the common people. Blount.

Gate, At the end of the names of places, signifies a way or path, from the Sax. geat, i. e. porta. The custody of the gates of the city of London, is granted to the Lord Mayor, &c. by Chart. King Hen. 4.

Gabel, (Sax. gafel) Tribute, toll, custom or yearly revenue; of which we had in old time several kinds. See Gabel.

Gavellet, (gaveletum) Is an antient and special kind of cessavit used in Kent, where the custom of gavelkind continues, whereby a tenant, if he with-holds his rents and services due to the lord, shall forfeit his land: it was intended where no distress could be found on the premises, so that the lord might seize the land itself in the nature of a distress, and keep it a year and a day; within which time, if the tenant came and paid his rent, he was admitted to his tenement to hold it as before; but if not, the lord might enter and enjoy the same. 10 H. 3. 10 Ed. 2. The lord was to seek by the award of his court, from three weeks to three weeks, to find some distress upon the land or tenement, until the fourth court; and if in that time he could find none, at the fourth court it was awarded that the tenement should be seized as a distress, and kept in the lord's hands a year and a day without manuring; and if the tenant did not in that time redeem it, by paying the rent and making amends to the lord, the lord having pronounced his process by witnesses at the next county court, was awarded by his court to enter and manure the tenement as his own: and if the tenant would afterwards have it again, he was to make agreement with the lord. Fitz. Cess. 60. Terms de Ley. Gaveletum is as much as to say to cease, or to let to pay the rent; and consuetudo de gavelet was not a rent or service, but a rent or service with-held, denied or detained, causing the forfeiture of the tenement.

Gavellet in London, (breve de gaveleto in London, pro redditu ibidem, quia tenementa fuerunt indistringibilia) Is a writ used in the bustings of London; and the statute of gavelet, 10 Ed. 2. gives this writ to lords of rents in the city of London, as well as in Kent: here the parties, tenant and demandant, appear by scire facias, to shew cause why the one should not have his tenement again on payment of his rent, or the other recover the lands, on default thereof. Practic. Solic. 419.

Gavelgeld, Is applied to the payment of tribute or toll. Mon. Ang. tom. 3.

Gavelkind, Is said by Lambard to be compounded of three Saxon words, gyfe, eal, kyn, omnibus cognatione proximi's data. Wessagan calls it gavelkind, quasi gywe all kind, that is to each child his part: and Taylor in his history of gavelkind, derives it from the British gavel, i. e. a hold or tenure, and cenned, generatio out familia; and so gavelcenned might signify tenura generationis. But whatever is the etymology, it signifies a tenure or custom, annexed and belonging to lands in Kent, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons; or the land of the brother among all the brethren, if he have no issue of his own. Litt. 210. In the time of our Saxon ancestors, the inheritance of lands did not descend to the eldest son as now, but to all alike; from whence came the custom of gavelkind: and the reason why this custom was retained in Kent, is, according to some, because the Kentishmen were not conquered by the Normans in the time of William I. For Stigand, then Archbishop of Canterbury, who commanded the forces in the country, ordered every every man to march with boughs in their hands, and meeting William, they acquainted him with their resolution of standing or falling in defence of the laws of their country, and he imagining himself to be encompassed in a wood, granted that they and their posterity should enjoy their rights, liberties and laws; some of which, particularly this of gavelkind, continues to this day. Blount.

All the lands in England were of the nature of gavelkind before the Conquest, and descended to all the issue equally; but after the Conquest (as it is called) when knight-service was introduced, the descent was restrained to the eldest son, for the preservation of the tenure. Lamb. 167. 3 Salk. 129. In the reign of Hen. 6. there were not above thirty or forty persons in all Kent that held by any other tenure than this of gavelkind; which was afterwards altered upon the petition of divers Kentish gentlemen, in much of the land of that county, so as to be descendible to the eldest son, according to the course of the Common law, by the Statute 31 H. 8. cap. 3. Though the custom to devise gavelkind land, and the other qualities and customs remain. 1 Inst. 140. By the Statute 34 & 35 Hen. 8. cap. 26. sect. 128. All gavelkind lands in Wales were made descendible to the heir, according to the Common law; whereby it appears, that the tenure of gavelkind was likewise in that principality.

By the customary tenure called gavelkind, which is an ancient socage tenure, the lands are dividable between the heirs male who shall inherit as sisters do at Common law; and when one brother dies without issue, all the other brothers are to inherit. 1 Inst. 140. But a father having gavelkind lands, had three sons, one of whom died in the life-time of his father, leaving issue a daughter; and it was held that the daughter shall inherit the part of her father jure representationis, and yet she is not within the words of the custom of dividing the land between the heirs male, for she is the daughter of a male, and heir by representation. 1 Salk. 243. The heir at the age of fifteen years, it is said, may give and sell his lands in gavelkind, and shall inherit. Co. Litt. 111. The custom of gavelkind is not altered, though a fine be levied of the lands at Common law; because 'tis a custom that runs with the land. 6 Ed. 6.

Land in gavelkind was devised to the husband and wife for life, remainder to the next heir male of their bodies, &c. They had three sons, and it was adjudged that the eldest son should not have the whole. Dyer 133. A donee in tail, of gavelkind lands, had issue four sons; and it was held, that all should inherit: but if a lease for life is made of gavelkind, remainder to the right heirs of A. B. who hath issue four sons, in this case the eldest son shall inherit the remainder, because in case of purchase, there can be but one right heir. 1 Rep. 103. If gavelkind lands come to the crown, and are regranted to hold in capite, &c. the land shall descend to all the heirs male as gavelkind. 4 & 5 Mar. 2. Nels. Abr. 895.

A wife shall be endowed of gavelkind land, of a moiety of the land whereof her husband died seised, during her widowhood. 1 Inst. 111. And it has been adjudged, that the widow cannot have election to demand her thirds or dower at Common law, so as to avoid the custom, and marry a second husband, by which she shall lose her dower. Moor 260. But see 1 Leon. 62.

The husband shall be tenant by the curtesy of half the gavelkind lands of the wife, during the time he continues unmarried, without having any issue by his wife; but if he marry, he shall forfeit his tenancy by the curtesy. 1 Inst. 111. If the husband had issue by his wife, and she die, he shall be tenant by the curtesy of the whole land; and though he marry, he shall not forfeit his tenancy. Mich. 21 Car. B. R. 1 Lill. Abr. 649.

Although a father be attainted of treason or felony, and hanged, the heir of gavelkind land shall inherit; for the custom is, The father to the bough and the son to the plough. Doct. & Student, cap. 10. A rent in fee granted out of gavelkind lands, shall descend in gavelkind to all the heirs male, as the lands would have done; it being of the same nature with the land itself. 2 Lev. 138. 1 Mod. 97.

All lands in Kent shall be taken to be gavelkind, except those which are disgavelled by particular statutes. 1 Mod. 98.

If lands are alleged to be in Kent, it shall be intended that they are gavelkind; if the contrary doth not appear. 2 Sid. 153. By Hale Chief Justice, gavelkind law, is the law of Kent, and is never pleaded, but presumed: and it has been held, that the superior courts may take notice of gavelkind generally without pleading; tho' not of the special custom of devising it, &c. which ought to be pleaded specially. But it appears by some of our books, that the court cannot judicially take notice of the custom of gavelkind, without pleading the same; and that it ought to be set forth in the declaration, &c. 1 Mod. 98. Cro. Car. 465. Lutw. 236, 754.

Gabelman, Is a tenant liable to tribute.—Villani de &c. qui vocantur gavelmanni. Somner of Gavelkind, pag. 33. And hence gavelkind has been thought to be land in its nature taxable. Blount.

Gabelmed, The duty or work of mowing grafs, or cutting of meadow land, required by the lord from his customary tenants, consuetudo falcandi quæ vocatur gabelmed. Somn.

Gabelcester, (Sax.) Sextarius Vestigalis, Is a certain measure of rent-ale: and among the articles to be charged on the stewards and bailiffs of the manors belonging to the church of Canterbury in Kent, according to which they were to be accountable, this of old was one; de gabelcester cujuslibet braciini braciati infra libertatem maneriorum, viz. unam lagenam & dimidiam cervisie. This duty elsewhere occurs under the name of tolsester; in lieu whereof the Abbot of Abbingdon was wont of custom to receive the penny mentioned by Selden in his Dissertation annexed to Fleta, cap. 8. Nor doth it differ from what is called oak-gavel in the Glossary at the end of Hen. 1. Laws. Sax. DiA.

Gabel-werk, (Sax.) Was either manu opera, by the hands and person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Philips of Parvey.

Gaugetum, A gauge or gauging, done by the gauger; and the true Englifo gauge is mentioned. Rot. Parl. 35 Ed. 1.

Gauger, (gaueator, Fr. ganchir, i. e. in gyrum torquere) Signifies an officer appointed by the King, to examine all tuns, pipes, hogsheds, barrels and tercians of wine, oil, honey, &c. and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure, before they are sold in any place: and because his mark is a circle made with an iron instrument for that purpose, it seems to have its name from thence. Of this officer and his office, we may have many statutes; as by 27 Ed. 3. cap. 8. all wines, &c. imported, are to be gauged by the King's gaugers, or their deputies. By 31 Ed. 3. c. 5. Selling wine, before gauged, incurs forfeiture of the value. And by 23 Hen. 6. cap. 16. The gauge-penny is to be paid gaugers, on gauging wines. The 31 Eliz. c. 8. ordains, that beer, &c. imported, shall be gauged by the Master and Wardens of the Cooper's Company. See 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

Vessels brought from beyond sea, and used for utterance of ale and beer, shall be gauged, 31 Eliz. c. 8. The wardens of the coopers, shall attend to gauge vessels upon request, 23 Hen. 8. c. 4. 31 Eliz. c. 8. s. 3. Gaugers may take samples not exceeding half a pint, 32 Geo. 2. c. 29. Vide Excise.

Geatpæcia. In a charter of the privileges of Newcastle upon Tyne, renewed anno 30 Eliz. we find sturgiones, porpæcias, i. e. (porpoises) delphinos, geatpæcias, (viz. gram-pois, &c.

Geburfcip, (geburfcipa) Neighbourhood, or adjoining district. Leg. Edw. Confess. cap. 1.

Geburus, A country inhabitant of the same gebureship, or village; from the Sax. gebure, a carl, ploughman, or farmer. Corwel.

Geld (geldum) Mulcta, compensatio delicti & pretium rei. Hence, in our antient laws, werfeld was used for the value or price of a man slain; and orfeld of a beast: likewise money or tribute; for it is said, Et sint quæti de geldis, danegeldis, borngeldis, blodwita, &c. Chart. Rich. 2. Priorat. de H. in Devon. Pat. 5 Ed. 4. Angeld is the single value of a thing, twigeld, double value, &c.

Geldable, (geldabilis) That is liable to pay tax or tribute. Camden, dividing Suffolk into three parts, calls the first geldable, because subject to taxes; from which the other two parts were exempt, as being ecclesiæ donatæ. The word is mentioned in the Statute 27 Hen. 8. cap. 26. But in an old MS. it is expounded to be that land, or lordship, which is sub districtione curiæ vicecom. 2 Inst. 701.

Gemote, (Sax. i. e. conventus) An assembly. Omnis homo pacem habeat eundo ad gemotum & rediens de gemoto, nisi probatus fur fuerit. Leg. Edw. Conf. cap. 35. See Alderman, Ealdorman, Folc-mote, Mote, Wittena-gemote.

Geneath, Villanus, as Regis Geneath, is the King's Villain. LL. Inæ, MS. cap. 19.

General Issue, Is a plea to the fact of Not Guilty, in criminal cases, in order to trial, by the country, or by peers, &c. H. P. C. 254. In civil suits, there are various pleas, which are general issues, according to the species of the action, as in trespass, Not Guilty, in case on promises, non assumpsit, &c.

Generatio. When an old abbey, or religious house, had spread itself into many colonies, or depending cells, that issue or offspring of the mother monastery was called generatio, quasi proles & suboles matricis domus. Annual. Waverl. 1232.

Generale. The single commons, or ordinary provision of the religious, were termed generale, as their general allowance, distinguished from their pictantia, or pittances; which on extraordinary occasions were thrown in as over commons. In the observances of the Cluniac monks, they are described thus: Generale appellamus quod singulis in singulis datur scutellis: pictantia quod in una scutella duobus. They are also described amongst other customs. Cartular. Glasfow. MS. fol. 10.

Generals of Orders, Chiefs of the several orders of monks, friars, and other religious Societies.

Geneva, A famous strong water or spirit. Vide Distillers.

Gentleman, (generosus) Is compounded of two languages, from the Fr. gentil, i. e. benignus, vel honesto loco natus, and the Sax. mon, a man; as if you would say a man man well born. The Italians call those gentil homini whom we style gentlemen; the French likewise distinguish such by the name of gentilhomme; and the Spaniards keep up to the meaning of the word, calling him hidalgo or bijo d'alga, who is the son of a man of account; so that gentlemen are such whom their blood or race doth make known. Under the denomination of gentlemen, are comprised all above yeomen; whereby noblemen are truly called gentlemen. Smith de Rep. Angl. lib. 1. cap. 20, 21. A gentleman is generally defined to be one, who, without any title, bears a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen; and by the coat that a gentleman giveth, he is known to be, or not to be descended from those of his name, that lived many hundred years since. Cicero, in his Topicks, speaks thus of this subject; gentiles sunt, qui inter se eodem sunt nomine ab ingenuis oriundi, quorum majorum nemo servitutem servavit, qui capite non sunt diminuti. There is said to be a gentleman by office, and in reputation, as well as those that are born such. 2 Inst. 668. And we read that J. Kingston was made a gentleman by King R. 2. Pat. 13 R. 2. par. 1. Gentilis homo for a gentleman, was adjudged a good addition. Hill. 27 Ed. 3. But the addition of esquire, or gentleman, was rare before 1 Hen. 5. tho' that of knight is very ancient. 2 Inst. 595, 667.

Gentlewoman, (generosa) Is a good addition for the estate and degree of a woman, as generosus is for that of a man; and if a gentlewoman be named spinster in any original writ, appeal, &c. it hath been held that she may abate and quash the same. 2 Inst. 668. Sed qu. If spinster is not a good addition, for an unmarried woman, supposed to be a virgin, as single woman is, for one who being unmarried hath a bastard?

Gentility, (gentilitas) Is lost by attainder of treason, or felony, by which persons become base and ignoble, &c.

Genu, Is a generation.—Successe Ethelbaldo. Offa quinto Genu. Malmsb. lib. 1. c. 4.

Genus, (Lat.) The general stock, extraction, &c. as the word office in law is the genus, or general; but the sheriff, &c. is the species of it, or particular. 2 Lill. Abr. 528.

Genus, among metaphysicians and logicians, denotes a number of beings, which agree in certain general properties, common to them all; so that a genus is, in fact, only an abstract idea, expressed by some general name or term; or rather a general name or term, to signify what is called an abstract idea.

Gewinnesa, The giving of evidence. Leg. Ethel. cap. 1. apud Brompton.

Gift, (donum) Is a conveyance, which passeth either lands or goods. And a gift is of a larger extent than a grant, being applied to things moveable and immoveable; yet as to things immoveable, when strictly taken, it is applicable only to lands and tenements given in tail; but gifts and grants are said to be alike in nature and often confounded. Wood's Inst. 260. A gift may be by deed, in word, or in law: all goods and chattels personal may be given without deed, except in some special cases; and a free gift is good without a consideration. Perk. 57. But a general gift of all one's goods, without any exception, though by deed, is liable to suspicion as fraudulent, to deceive creditors; for by giving all a man's goods, there seems to be a secret trust and confidence implied, that the donee shall deal favourably with the donor, in respect to his circumstances. 3 Rep. 80. Therefore whenever any gift shall be made, in satisfaction of a debt, it is good to make it in a publick manner before neighbours, that the goods and chattels be appraised to the full value, and the gift expressly made in satisfaction of the debt; and that on the gift, the donee take possession of them, &c. Hob. 230. If a man intending to give a jewel to another, say to him, Here I give you my ring, with the ruby in it, &c. and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift; notwithstanding the ring bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself, to the person to whom given. Bac. Max. 87. And if a person give a horse to another, being present, and bid him take the horse, though he call the man by a wrong name, it will be a good gift; but it would be otherwise if the horse were delivered for the use of another person, being absent: there a mistake of the name would alter the case. Ibid. A gift must be certain; therefore to give, or grant another his horses or cows, that may be spared, will be void; though if one give to A. B. his horse, or his cow, he may take which he will. Bro. Dont. 90. If I give all my money in my purse to another, without saying how much it is, this is a void gift, and no action will lie for the same. Plowd. 273.

By the Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. "No leases, estates or interests either of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copyhold or customary interest, of, in, to or out of, any messuages, manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments, shall at any time be assigned, granted or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed by the party so assigning, granting or surrendering the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, or by act and operation of law."

As to gifts in law, when a man is married to a woman, all her goods and chattels by gift in law become the husband's; but then he is liable for her debts: so if a man is made executor, the law gives him all the goods and chattels of the testator, subject to his debts: And if a person make a suit of clothes for another, and put it upon him to use and wear, this will be a gift or grant in law of the apparel made. 1 Inst. 351. A man by deed did give and grant, bargain and sell, alien, enfeoff and confirm to his daughter certain lands: but no consideration of money was mentioned, nor was the deed inrolled; there was likewise no consideration of natural affection expressed, (other than what was implied in naming the grantee his daughter) and there was no livery indorced, or any found to have been made; nor was the daughter in possession at the time of the deed made; and in B. R. it was adjudged by the court that the deed was good, and carried the estate to the daughter by way of covenant to stand seised, &c. 1 Mod. Rep. 157.

The words give and grant, in deeds of gift, &c. of things which lie in grant, will amount unto a grant, a feoffment, a gift, release, confirmation or surrender, at the election of the party, and may be pleaded as a gift, or grant, release, &c. at his election. 1 Inst. 301. And words shall be marshalled so in gifts and grants, that where they cannot take effect according to the letter, the law will make such construction as the gift by possibility may take effect: benigne sunt interpretationes chartarum propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut rei, &c. Co. Lit. 183. If a person gives or grants land, and does not say in what parish or county it lies; yet if there be any other thing to describe it, as lately belonging to such a person, &c. or other circumstantial matter, it may be averred where the land lieth, and so the gift be good. Bro. Grant 53. 9 Rep. 47. All corporeal and immoveable things that lie in livery, such as manors, messuages, cottages, lands, woods, and the like, may be given and granted in fee, for life, or years at first; and be assignable over after, from man to man in infinitum. 1 Roll. Abr. 44. And where a man gives and grants wood to another on his lands, or so. for it to be received out of the same lands, &c. here the wood passes by the gift presently, with power to choose to have the money. Roll. Abr. 47. A deed of gift of lands or goods may be made upon condition; and on a gift or sale of goods, the delivery of 6d. or a spoon, &c.

Et, is a good seisin of the whole. Wood's Inst. 234.

Glebe, (gleba) Is church-land; Dos vel terra ad ec- clesiam pertinens. Lyndewood says, Gleba, est terra in qua consistit dos ecclesie; generaliter tamen sumitur pro solo vel pro terra culta: we most commonly take it for the land belonging to a parish church, besides the tithes. If any parson, vicar, Et. hath caused any of his glebe lands to be manured and sown at his own costs, with any corn or grain, the incumbents may devise all the profits and corn growing upon the said glebe by will. Statute 28 Hen. 8.
cap. 11. And if a parson sows his glebe and dies, the executors shall have the corn sown by the testator. But if the glebe be in the hands of a tenant, and the parson dies after severance of the corn, and before his rent due; it is aid, neither the parson's executors, or the successor, can claim the rent, but the tenant may retain it, and also the crop, unless there be a special covenant for the payment to the parson's executors proportionably, Et. Wood's Inst.

163. Sed quod If this case would not come within the equity of 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. f. 15. which gives right of action to the representative of tenant for life, for any portion of rent in arrear at the time of his death?

A parson exchanges his glebe land and dies; the successor enters into the exchanged land, and takes the profits; yet the successor is bound for his time; Et adjournatur.
'Tis clear the exchange shall not have been good, if it had been made after the 13 of E. But the exchange in this case was before. Noy 5. Thurter's case.

Prohibition was moved for to a parson for digging new coal-mines in his glebe, and also for felling trees; for 'tis waste and prohibitable by the statute de non proferendis arboribus, Et. The court held, it lay not for the mines; for then no mines in glebe could ever be opened. Lev.

God and Religion, Offences against. Apostacy is an offence against God and religion. 'Twas formerly the object only of the Ecclesiastical courts, which corrected the offender pro salute animæ. But now, by Stat. 9 & 10
W. 3. c. 32. If any person educated in, or having made profession of the Christian religion, shall by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking, deny the Christian religion to be true, or the Holy Scriptures to be of divine authority, he shall upon the first offence be rendered incapable to hold any office or place of trust; and for the second, be rendered incapable of bringing any action, being guardian, executor, legatee, or purchaser of lands, and shall suffer three years imprisonment without bail. To give room however for repentance, if within four months after the first conviction, the delinquent will in open court publicly renounce his error, he is discharged for that once, from all disabilities.

Heresy is another offence. See Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1. The offender subject only to ecclesiastical censure, by 29 Car. 2. c. 9. See *Black. Gold and Silver Lace and Thread, Persons that sell orrize lace, mixed with other metal or materials than gold, silver, silk and vellum, shall forfeit 2 s. 6 d. for every ounce: and there shall be allowed at least six ounces of gold and silver prepared and reduced into plate, to cover four ounces of silk, except large twist, frize, &c. And laying the same on greater proportions of the silk, or in any other manner than directed, incurs the like forfeiture of 2 s. 6 d. the ounce. Copper, and lace inferior to silver, is to be spun upon thread, yarn or iccle, and not on silk; but this does not extend to Tinsel apparel, used in theatres. No gold or silver lace, thread, fringe or wire, &c. may be imported, on pain of being forfeited and burnt, and 100 l. penalty. Statute 15 Geo. 2. c. 20.

Importation and making up of gold and silver lace, embroidery, brocade, &c. prohibited, 22 Geo. 3. c. 36. See Wire Drawers, Embroidery.

Goldsmiths, Gold and silver manufactures are to be assayed by the warden of the Goldsmiths company in London, and marked; and gold is to be of a certain touch. 28 Ed. 1. cap. 20. Goldsmiths must have their own marks on plate, after the surveyors have made their assay; and false metal shall be seized and forfeited to the King. 37 E. 3. 7. Work of silver made by Goldsmiths, &c. is to be as fine as Sterling, except the folder necessary; and marking other Work, incurs a forfeiture of double value. 2 H. 6. c. 14. Goldsmiths shall not take above 1 s. the ounce of gold, beside the fashion, more than the buyer may be allowed for it at the King's exchange: and if the work of any goldsmith be marked and allowed by the master and wardens of the mystery, and afterwards found faulty; the wardens and corporation shall forfeit the value of the thing so sold or exchanged. 18 Eliz. c. 5. Molten silver is not to be transported by goldsmiths before it is marked at Goldsmiths Hall, and a certificate made thereof on oath; and officers of the customs may seize silver shipped otherwise. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17. The cities of York, Exeter, Bristol, Chester, Norwich, and town of Newcastle, are appointed places for assaying and marking wrought plate of goldsmiths, &c. 12 W. 3. 4. 1 Ann. c. 9. A duty is granted on silver plate of 6 d. per ounce; and goldsmiths are to make entries thereof with the weight, on pain of 100 l. &c. And goldsmiths must work their plate according to the old standard; which is to be touched, assayed and marked before exposed to sale. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 11. Gold of silver, in every pound, y forfeit 10 s. And no goldsmith shall sell any such plate, until marked with the first letters of the maker's christian and surname, the mark of the city of London, being the leopard's head, lion passant, &c. and those made use of by the assayers at York, Exeter, &c. All persons making plate, are to enter their marks, names and places of abode in the assay-office; they are likewise to send with the plate required to be marked, a particular account thereof, in order to be entered, &c. or forfeit 5 l. The Assayers determine what folder is necessary about plate, and judge of the workmanship, and for good cause may refuse to assay it; and if any parcel be discovered of a coarser alloy than the standard, it may be broke and defaced; also the fees for assaying and marking are particularly limited, &c. 12 Geo. 2. c. 26.

Goldwite, or Goldwits, Perhaps a golden mulct; in the records of the Tower, there is mention of confutudo aurata Goldwits vel Goldwits.

Goltarius, Is a jester or buffoon, mentioned in Mart. Paris. 1229.

Good Bearing, (Bonus Gestus) Signifies an exact carriage or behaviour of a subject towards the King and the people; whereunto some persons upon their misbehaviour are bound; and he that is bound to this, is said to be more strictly bound than to the peace; because where the peace is not broken, the surety de bono gestu may be forfeited by the number of a man's company, or by their weapons. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. c. 2. 34 Ed. 3. c. 1.

Good Behaviour, Surety for the good behaviour is surety for the peace, and differs very little from good abearing. A justice of peace may demand it ex officio, according to his discretion, when he sees cause; or at the request of any other under the King's protection: his warrant also is to be issued when he is commanded to do it by writ of supplicavit out of Chancery or B. R.

But a justice of peace may not bind any person to his good behaviour, upon a general accusation made against the party. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R. He that demands security for the peace, must make oath before the justice of blows given, or that he stands in fear of his life, or some bodily hurt; or that he fears the party will burn his house, &c. and that he doth not demand the peace of him for any malice or revenge, but for his own safety; whereupon the justice grants his warrant to bring the party before him, and then security is to be given by recognisance for the good behaviour; or on default thereof, the party shall be committed to gaol. 1 Inst. 293. 4 Inst. 180.

It may be granted against any persons whatsoever, under the degree of nobility, against whom complaint is to be made in the Court of Chancery, or in B. R. and they may be bound there to keep the peace. Dalt 267, 268. The warrant of the justice to keep the peace, is to be granted against infants, and feme-coverts, who ought to find security by their friends, and not be bound themselves; it may be had against the husband, at the request of the wife, and against the wife, at the request of the husband; against a lunatick, that hath sometimes lucid intervals; (but not a non compos, or against, or for one attainted of felony, &c.) against any person affronting a judge, justice of the peace, &c. and in a word against all persons that are suspected to break the peace, or that do break it by affrays, assaults, battery, wounding, fighting, quarreling, threatening to beat another, or to burn his house, rioters, &c. and in all cases, where there is a future danger. Dalt. 263, 264. 4 Inst. 180. Also one may be bound to his good behaviour for a scandalous way of living, for keeping bawdy-houses, or haunting them, gaming-houses, &c. and so may common drunkards, whoremongers, and common whores, night-walkers, and those that live idly, cheats, libellers, &c. Dalt. 292, 293. A woman who is a common scold may be bound to the good behaviour.

Surety for the good behaviour may be required of scandalous, turbulent, suspicious persons, as of forcible entries, or obscene writers, or recusants, but not in respect of bare words; unless they tend to a breach of the peace, or scandal of the government. Hawth. Pl. C. c. 61. 9. See Pl. 1, 2, 3, 4.

The statute 34 Ed. 3. c. 1. relates only to misbehaviours against the publick peace, so that it ought not to be demanded for private defamation of another, but for words only, which tend to the breach of the peace, or terrifying others, or unto sedition, &c. 4 Inst. 181. 1 Lill. Abr. 650, 651.

Sureties of good behaviour may be required of persons convicted of disturbing divine service, 1 M. 2. c. 3. 12 Ed. 6. Or offending against game laws, 5 El. c. 21. 12 Ed. 3. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. 12 Ed. 4. Or entertaining outlaws and felons, 43 Eliz. c. 13. 12 Ed. 5. Or persons infected with the plague going abroad, tho' no sore on them, 1 Jac. 1. c. 51. 12 Ed. 7. Or unlawfully hunting in parks, 3 Jac. 1. c. 13. 12 Ed. 2. Or convicted a second time of drunkenness, 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. 12 Ed. 3. 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. 12 Ed. 3. Or refusing to take the oaths of supremacy and allegiance, 1 W. & M. 2. c. 8. 12 Ed. 9. Or of felons after pardon, 5 W. & M. c. 13. 12 Ed. 2. Or persons unlawfully gaming, 9 Ann. c. 14. 12 Ed. 6.

Or committing disorders in dock-yards, 1 Geo. 1. c. 25. sect. 2. Or destroying timber, 1 Geo. 1. c. 48. sect. 3. Or forcing through turnpikes, 8 Geo. 2. c. 20. sect. 11. Or pretending to witchcraft, 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. sect. 4. Or assisting in running goods, 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. sect. 19.

When security for the peace is given to the King by recognizance in the penal sum, if the peace is afterwards broken by any act of the party, or by his procuring another to break it, &c. it is a forfeiture of the recognizance, which being brought to the next sessions of the peace by the justice, the justices in sessions are to certify the recognizance, with the cause of forfeiture, into B. R. or the Exchequer, &c. from whence process shall go out against the offender. Dalt. 277, 296.

Such a recognizance shall not only be forfeited for such actual breaches of the peace, for which a recognizance for the peace may be forfeited; but also for some others, for which such a recognizance cannot be forfeited, as for going armed with great numbers to the terror of the people, or speaking words tending to sedition. And also for all such actual misbehaviour, which are intended to be prevented by such a recognizance, but not for barely giving cause of suspicion of what perhaps may never actually happen. Hawt. Pl. C. c. 62. pl. 6.

The surety for the peace or good behaviour may be released by the justice that took it, and the party upon whose complaint it was granted. Dalt. 296. But it is said such a recognizance may not be discharged by release of the party himself; because the cognisor is bound to the King, and to keep the peace in general; though by the death of the King, or of the principal cognisor, (not of the sureties) it is discharged of course. Roll. Rep. 199.

Note; The King cannot discharge recognizance taken for surety of the peace, but after it is broken he may. Hill. 1 & 2 W. & M. C. B. 2 Vent. 131. cites 11 H. 7. 12. and in Marg. 1 Inst. 238. Faugh. 334.

Justices of peace, under colour of their authority, use to require the good behaviour of every one at their pleasure; and if they refused, then to commit them to prison: But if they have not good cause to require sureties for good behaviour, and the party refusing to give it is committed to prison, false imprisonment lies; for the statute which gives the justices that authority, is principally against vagabonds. 1 Lill. 651. See Black. Com. 4 V. 248, 253.

Good Consideration. A good consideration is such as that of blood, or of natural love and affection, when a man grants an estate to a near relation; being founded in motives of generosity, prudence and natural duty: a valuable consideration is such as money, marriage or the like, which the law esteems an equivalent given for the grant; (3 Rep. 83.) and is therefore founded in motives of justice. Deeds made upon good consideration only, are considered as merely voluntary, and are frequently set aside in favour of creditors, and bona fide purchasers. Black. Com. 2 V. 297.

Goods and Chattels, (Bona & catalla) Personal, &c. See Chattels.

Goule, (Fr. Goulet) A breach in a sea bank or wall; or a passage worn by the flux and reflux of the sea. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11.

Goyce, (From the Fr. Gort.) A wear: by stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 4. it is ordained, that all Gorces, mills, wears, &c. levied and set up, whereby the King's ships and boats are disturbed and cannot pass in any river, shall be utterly pulled down, without being renewed. Sir Edward Coke derives this word from Gorges, a deep pit of water, and calls it a Gors, or Gulf; but this seems to be a mistake, for in Domesday it is called Gourt and Gort, the French word for a wear. Co. Litt. 5.

Goyt, A narrow slip of ground. Paroch. Antiq. 393.

Gote, (Sax. Geotan, i. e. Fundera) A ditch, sluice or gutter, mentioned in the 23 H. 8. c. 5.

Government. According to the great Montesquieu (as well as most other writers) there are three kinds of government; 1. The Republican, 2. The Monarchical, 3. The Despotic. The first is that where the people in a body, or only a part of the people have the sovereign power: The second where one alone governs, but by fixed and established laws. But in the despotic one alone, without law, and without rule, directs every thing by his own will and caprice. L'Esprit des Loix, Liv. 2. c. 1. fo. 10. Quarto Edition 1767. On the subject of government see that excellent author, also Locke on the same subject, 2 V. 139, &c. Quarto Edition 1768. Sidney on government, Sir *Thomas Smith's de Repub. With respect to the feudal policy, how it limited government, See Robertson's Hist. Emp. Cba. V. 1 V. 16, &c. &c. So far as to generals.—In the first year of King William and Queen Mary, an act was made for empowering his Majesty to apprehend and detain such persons as he should find just cause to suspect were conspiring against the government: by virtue of which, those who were suspected of treasonable practices, were taken up and imprisoned, without bail or mainprize, for six months, &c. Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 2. A like act of parliament, to continue a short time, passed in the reign of Queen Anne, 6 Ann. c. 15. And his Majesty King George the first was empowered by statute, to secure and detain suspected persons, in the time of the late rebellion; and all actions, suits and prosecutions, by reason of any thing done to suppress the same, and for the service of the government, were made void. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 8, 39. and others. Vide Indisment. Montesquieu, speaking of liberty, and alluding to the English, says, I must own, that the practice of the freest nation that ever existed, induces me to think that there are cases in which a veil should be drawn for a moment over liberty, as it was customary to veil the statues of the Gods. L'Esprit des Loix, Liv. 12. c. 19. 1 V. 273. Quarto Edition 1767.

Governors of the Chest at Chatham, Are officers appointed to take care of, and relieve the poor and maimed seaman belonging to the Royal Navy.

Grace. Acts of parliament for a general and free pardon, are called Acts of Grace. 7 Geo. 1. cap. 29, &c.

Graduates, (Graduati) Are scholars who have taken degrees in an university. 1 Hen. 6. c. 3.

Gratter, (Fr. Greffier, i. e. Scriba) A notary or scrivener, used in the stat. 5 H. 8. c. 1.

Ang. lib.* 3. It is sometimes taken for a mass-book, or part of it, instituted by Pope Celestine, Anno 430. See Stat. 37 H. 6. c. 32.

Grain, is the twenty-fourth part of a penny weight. Merch. Dic. Also grain signifies any corn sown on ground; and there is what is so called in the top of the ear, less than corn. Lit. Allyn's Rep. 80.

Grand Writte, A writ in real action to determine the right of property in lands. See Magna Assisa.

Grand Cape, Is a writ on a plea of land, where the tenant makes default in appearance at the day given, for the King to take the land into his hands, &c. Reg. Jud. 1. Vide Cape Magnum.

Grand Days, Are those days in the Terms which are solemnly kept in the House of Court and Chancery, i. e. Candlemas Day in Hilary term, Ascension Day in Easter term, St. John the Baptist Day in Trinity term, and All Saints Day in Michaelmas term; which days are Dies non Juridici, or no days in court.

Grand Distress, Is a writ so called, not for the quantity of it, for it is very short, but for its quality; for the extent thereof is very great, being to all the goods and chattels of the party distrained within the county; it lies in in two cases, either when the tenant or defendant is attached, and appears not, but makes default; or where the tenant hath once appeared, and after makes default, then this writ is had by the Common Law in lieu of a Petit Cape. Stat. Westm. 1. cap. 44. 52 H. 3. cap. 9.

Grand Jury, Is the jury that find bills of indictment before justices of peace, and gaol delivery, or of Oyer and Terminer, &c. They ought only to hear witnesses for the King; and to find a bill on probable evidence; because it is but an accusation, and the party is to be put upon his trial afterwards. But if the bill be against A. for murder, and the grand jury on the evidence before them, be satisfied it was se defendendo, &c. and so return it specially; the court may remand them to consider better thereof, or hear the evidence at the bar, and accordingly direct the grand jury. 2 Half's Hist. P. C. 157, 158. But see 2 Hawk. 210. Where a grand jury refuses to present things, within their charge, &c. a new grand inquest may be impanelled, to inquire of the concealment of the former; on whose defaults presented, they shall be amerced. Ibid. 155. A grand juror disclosing to any one indicted, the evidence that appeared against him, is guilty of a high misprision, and liable to be fined and imprisoned. 1 Hawk. P. C. 59. Black. Com. 4 V. 126, 299. Vide Indictment and Jury.

Grand Serjeanty, An ancient tenure, by military service. See Chivalry.

Grange, (grangia) A house or farm where corn is laid up in barns, granaries, &c. and provided with stables for horses, stalls for oxen, and other things necessary for husbandry.

Grangarius, Is the person who has the care of such a place, for corn and husbandry: and there was anciently a granger, or grange-keeper belonging to religious houses, who was to look after their granges, or farms in their own hands. Flota, lib. 2. cap. 8. Cartular. St. Edmund. MS. 323.

Grant, (Concessio) Signifies in the Common law a conveyance in writing of incorporeal things not lying in livery, and which cannot pass by word only; as of reversions, advowsons in gross, tithes, rents, services, common in gross, &c. It has also been taken generally, for every gift and grant of any thing whatsoever. 1 Inst. 172. 3 Rep. 63. And grants are made by such persons as cannot give but by deed: he that granteth is termed the grantor, he to whom the grant is made is the grantee: West. Symb. See 234.

Under this head may be considered,

- I. What things and interests may be granted, by what description, and how grants shall be construed.
- II. Who may make grants, and who may take by grant

- I. What things and interests may be granted, by what description, and how grants shall be construed.

A man cannot grant that which he hath not, or more than he hath: though he may covenant to purchase an estate, and levy a fine to uses, which will be good. Bac. Max. 58. A person may grant a reversion, as well as a possession; but the law will not allow grants of titles only, or imperfect interests, or of such interests, as are merely future. Ibid. A bare possibility of an interest, which is uncertain; a right of entry, or thing in action, cause of suit, &c. may not be granted over to a stranger. Perk. Sect. 65. 2 Inst. 214. 4 Rep. 66. It was formerly held, that by a grant of all a man's goods and chattels, bonds would pass; now 'tis held the contrary, that the words Goods and Chattels do not extend to bonds, deeds or specialties, being things in action, unless in special cases. 8 Rep. 33. 1 Inst. 152. See 2 Grb. 2 cap. 25. In grants there must be a foundation of interest, or they will not be binding: If a person grants a rent-charge out of lands, when he hath nothing in the land, the grant will be void. Perk. 15. Though it is said, if a man grant an annual rent out of land, wherein he hath no kind of interest, yet it may be good to charge the person of the grantor. Owen Rep. 3. A man may grant an annuity for him, and his heirs, to commence after his death, and it shall charge the heir. Bac. Max.

58. And after the grant of an annuity, &c. is determined, debt lies for the arrears; and the person of the tertenant will be charged. 7 Rep. 39. If a common person grants a rent, or other thing that lies in grant, without limitation of any estate, by the delivery of the deed, a freehold passes: but if the King make such a grant of a rent, &c. it is void for uncertainty. Dow. Rep. 45. a.

A grant to a man, with a blank for his christian name, is void, except to an officer known by his office, when it must be averred: and it is the same where the grantee's christian name is mistaken. Cro. Eliz. 328. And grants may be void by uncertainty, impossibility, being against law, on a wrong title, to defraud creditors, &c. 1 Inst. 183. Such things as lie in grant, may not be granted, or held without deed: and if any thing not grantable, is granted with other things, the grant will be void for all. 2 Shep. Abr. 269, 271, 273. Trusts and confidences are personal things, and may not be granted over to others in most cases; as offices of trust, and the like: but all kinds of chattels real and personal, are grantable. Perk. Sect. 99. Plowd. 141, 379.

If one grant any thing that lies in livery, or grant, and that is in esse at the time of the grant, in fee, or for life, and the estate is to begin at a day to come; this for the most part will be void: but a lease or grant for years, may be good in futuro; and may be to one for term of years, or years determinable on lives, and after to another, to begin at the end of that estate. 5 Rep. 1. Dyer 58. Where a man hath a reversion after an estate for life of land, and he grants a rent out of it; the grant is good, and will fasten upon the land after the estate of the tenant for life is ended: and if a person grant rents, &c. and a stranger take them at that time; in this case the grant will be good, for one may not be out of possession of these things but at his pleasure. Perk. 92, 98. If a man grants that to one, that he hath granted before to another, for the like term, &c. the second grant will be void. Dyer 23. Perk. Sect. 102. Grants are usually made by these words, viz. Have Given, Granted and Confirmed, &c. And words in Grants shall be construed according to a reasonable sense, and not be strained to what is unlikely. Hob. 304. Also it hath been adjudged, that grants shall be expounded according to the substance of the deed, not the strict grammatical sense; and agreeable to the intention of the parties. 1 Inst. 146, 313.

To every good grant the following things are requisite: 1. That there be a person able to grant. 2. A person capable of the thing granted. 3. That there be a thing grantable. 4. That it be granted in such manner as the law requires. 5. That there be an agreement to, and acceptance of the thing granted, by him to whom made. And 6. There ought to be an attornment where needful. 1 Inst. 73. But grants and conveyances are good, without attornment of tenants, notice being given them of the grants, by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 9. Grants are taken most strongly against the grantor in favour of the grantee: the grantee himself is to take by the grant immediately, and not a stranger, or any in futuro; and if a grant be made to a man and his heirs, he may assign at his pleasure, though the word Assigns be not expressed. Litt. 1. Saund. 322. The use of any thing being granted, all is granted necessary to enjoy such use: and in the grant of a thing, what is requisite for the obtaining thereof is included. 1 Inst. 56. So that if timber trees are granted, the grantee may come upon the grantor's ground to cut and carry them away. 2 Inst. 309. Plowd. 15.

Where the principal thing is granted, the incident shall pass; but the principal will not pass by the grant of the incident. 1 Inst. 152. A Lord of a manor cannot grant the same, and reserve the Court Baron, it being inseparably incident. Ibid. 313. A grant of a manor, without the word cum pertinentiis, will pass all things belonging to the manor: the grant of a farm will also pass all lands belonging to it; but a grant of a messuage passes only the house, outhouses and gardens. Owen's Rep. 51. Tit. il. maner de A. may be taken in the singular, or plural number; and dashes and abbreviations in grants shall be so taken that the grant be not void. 9 Rep. 48. When lands are granted by deed, the houses which stand thereon will pass; houses and mills pass by the grant of all lands, because that is the most durable thing on which they are built. 4 Rep. 86. 2 And. 123. By grant of all the lands, the woods will pass: and if a man grant all his trees in a certain place, this passeth the soil; tho' an exception of wood extends to the trees only, not the soil. 1 Roll. Rep. 33. Dyer 19. 5 Rep. 11.

Trees in boxes will not pass by the grant of the land, &c. as they are separate from the freehold. Mod. Cases 170. A man grants all his wood that shall grow in time to come; it is a void grant, not being in esse. 3 Leon. 37. A grant de vestura terre passeth not the freehold; therefore, the grantee hath no authority to dig in it by virtue of such a grant. Ow. 37. By the grant of lands in the possession of another, it is good if such other be in possession, let the possession be by right, or wrong. 1 Roll. Rep. 23. If a grant is general, and the lands granted restrained to a certain Vill, the grantee shall have no lands out of the Vill. 2 Rep. 33. If I grant all my lands in D. which I had by the grant of A. B. this is a good grant of all my lands in D. whether I had them of A. B. or any other. Mich. 2. Jac. 2. It has been held, that where a grant is made of lands and tenements in D. copyhold lands will not pass; for they cannot pass otherwise than by surrender. Owen 37.

Where lands are certainly described in a grant, with a recital as granted to A. B. &c. though they were not thus granted, it has been adjudged that the grant was good. 10 Rep. 110. If a first description of lands in a grant is false, notwithstanding the second be true, nothing will pass by it; though if the first be true, and the second false, the grant may be good. 3 Rep. 10. The word grant, where it is placed among other words of demise, &c. shall not enure to pass a property in the thing demised; but the grantee shall have it by way of demise. Dyer 56.

Of grants some charge the grantor with something he was not charged with before; others discharge the grantee of something wherewith he was before charged, or chargeable. If a man grant to me a rent-charge; and after I grant to him, that he shall not be sued for this rent; this is good to bar me of bringing an action, tho' I may still distrain for the rent: And if one grants to his lessee for life or years, that he shall not be impeached for waste; it will be a good discharge, and may be pleaded. 7 H. 6. 43. Bro. Grant 175. Kelw. 88. See 1 Rep. 147. 10 Rep. 48. and tit. Condition.

II. Who may make grants, and who may take by grant.

Any natural person, or corporate body, (not prohibited by law, as infants, feme coverts, monks, &c.) may make a grant of lands, and be a grantor; and an infant, or woman covert, may be a grantee. Perk. 3, 4, 43. &c. Though the infant at his full age may disagree to the grant, and the husband disagree to the grant to his wife. Ibid.

But herein the law distinguishes between such grants as are void, and only voidable; the first of which are all such gifts, grants or deeds, made by an infant, which do not take effect by delivery of his hand; as if an infant give a horse, and no delivery of the horse with his hand, and the donee take the horse by force of the gift, the infant shall have an action of trespass, for the grant was merely void. Perk. fca. 12, 19. But if an infant enters into an obligation, makes a feoffment, levies a fine, or suffers a recovery, these are not void, only voidable. Perk. fca. 12, 13.

A grant by a feme covert is void, for no act of her's can transfer that interest which the intermarriage has vested in the husband. See 2 New Abr. 548. Perk. fca. 6. See Infant and Baron and Feme.

Grants made by persons non sane memorie, are good against themselves; but they are voidable by their heirs, &c. A man that is born dumb, or dumb and deaf, if he have understanding, by making signs, he may grant his land to another; not one who is born deaf, dumb and blind also. 1 Co. Inst. 2. A person attainted of treason, or felony, may make a deed of gift, or grant, and be good against all persons, except the King, and the lord of whom the lands are held; and for relief in prison, they may be good against them likewise. 1 Inst. 2. Perk. fca. 26, 31. See Capacity.

The grants of persons under duress are void, that is, if they were made under an apprehension of some bodily hurt, or if the grantor were imprisoned without cause, and the grantee refused to release or discharge him, unless he made such grant. 2 Inst. 483. See Dress.

But menacing to burn houses, or spoil, or carry away the party's goods, are not sufficient to avoid the grant; for if he should suffer what he is threatened, he may sue and recover damages in proportion to the injury done him. 4 Inst. 485. Perk. fca. 18.

If there be father and son of the same name, and the father grants an annuity by his name, without any addition, it shall be intended the grant of the father; and if the son being of the same name with his father grant an annuity without any addition; yet the grant is good, for he cannot deny his deed. Perk. fca. 37.

There are but few (if any) persons excluded from being grantees, therefore a man attainted of felony, murder, or treason, may be a grantee; so of the King's villein, an alien, one outlawed in a personal action, or a bastard, may be grantees. Perk. fca. 48. A bastard, who is known to be the son of such a one, may purchase, or be a grantee by such reputed name; for all surnames were originally acquired by reputation. Co. Lit. 3. 2 Rel. Abr. 43, 4.

A feme covert may be a grantee, therefore if a rent-charge be granted to a feme covert, and the deed is delivered to her without the privacy of her husband, and the husband dies before any disagreement made by him, and before any day of payment, the grant is good, and shall not be avoided, by saying, that the husband did not agree, &c. but the disagreement of the husband ought to be shown. Perk. fca. 43.

Altho' aggregate corporations are invisible and exist only in supposition of law, yet they are capable of taking by grant, for the benefit of the members of the corporation. Co. Lit. 9. 1 Saund. 344.

Grants of the King. The King's grant is good for himself and successors, though his successors are not named. Yelv. 13. Before the statute de prerogativa Regis, dowers, advowsons, and other things, have passed by the general grant of the King; but by that statute they are to be granted in express words. 1 Rep. 50. The King may not grant away an estate tail in the crown, &c. And the law takes care to preserve the inheritance of the King for the benefit of the successor. 2 And. 154. Style 263. See Jenk. Cent. 307. A grant may not be made by the King which tends to a monopoly, against the liberty of the subject: Nor can the King make a grant non obstante any statute made, or to be made; if he doth, any subsequent statute prohibiting what is granted, will be a revocation of the grant. 11 Rep. 87. Dyer 52. Where the King is restrained by the Common law to make a grant, if he makes a grant non obstante the Common law, it will not make the grant good; but when he may lawfully make a grant, and the law requires he should be fully apprised of what he grants, and not be deceived, a non obstante supplies it, and makes the grant good; if the words are not sufficient to pass the thing granted, a non obstante will not help. 4 Rep. 35. Nels. Abr. 904.

If a grant is made by the King, and a former grant is in being of the same thing, if it be not recited, the grant will be void: And reciting a void grant, when there is another good, may make the King's grant void.

77. Cro. Car. 143. But there may be a non obstante to a former grant. If the King is deceived in his grant, as where it contains more than was intended to be granted; or if there be any deceit in the consideration, &c. such grant of the King is void. 5 Rep. 94. Moor 293. And the King's grants may be void, by reason of uncertainty; as if debts and duties are granted, without saying in particular what duties, &c. 12 Rep. 46. But where there is a particular certainty preceding, they shall not be destroyed by any uncertainty or mistake which follows: And there is a distinction where a mistake of title is prejudicial to the King, and when it is in some description of the thing which is supplemental only, and not material or issuable. 1 Mod. 195. The King grants the manor of D. which he has by the attainder of a certain person, &c. and in fact the King hath it not so; this grant is void. 10 Rep. 109.

If the King grants a messuage of the value of 5 l. a year to A. B. and it be of the yearly value of 10 l. the value being in the same sentence with the grant, will make it void: Though if it be mentioned in another sentence it may be good. Jenk. Cent. 261. The grant of the King to a corporation, that they shall not be impleaded for lands, nor for any cause arising there, elsewhere than before themselves, &c. This doth not bind the King where he is party: And the King by his grant cannot exclude himself from prosecuting pleas of the crown; for it concerns the publick government. Kelw. 88. Dyer 376. Jenk. Cent. 190.

Vide Garcio.

Groom-Porter, An officer or superintendant over the royal gaming tables; and in Latin is writ Aulæ Regiæ janitor Primarius.

Gross, (Grossus) In gross, absolute, intire, not depending on another; as anciently a villein in gross was such a servile person as was not appendant or annexed to the lord or manor, and to go along with the tenure as appurtenant to it; but was like the other personal goods and chattels of his lord, at his lord's pleasure and disposal: so also advowson in gross differs from advowson appendant, being distinct from the manor. Co. Litt. 120. See Black. Com. 2 V. 22.

Grosse bois, (Fr. Gros bois, i. e. great wood) Signifies such wood as by the Common law or custom is reputed timber. 2 Inst. 642.

Gross, (common in, or Common at large), is such as is neither appendant nor appurtenant, to land, but is annexed to a man's person; being granted to him and his heirs by deed: or it may be claimed by prescriptive right, as by parson of a church, or the like corporation sole. This is a separate inheritance, entirely distinct from any landed property. Black. Com. 2 V. 34.

Gross-weight, The whole weight of goods or merchandise, dust and dross mixed with them, and of the chest, bag, &c. out of which tare and tret are allowed. MERCHANT'S DICTIONARY.

Guard, (Fr. Garde, Lat. Custodia) A custody or care of defence. And sometimes it is used for those that attend upon the safety of the Prince, called the life guard, &c. sometimes such as have the education and guardianship of infants; sometimes for a writ touching wardship, as droit de gard, ejection de gard, and ravishment de gard. F. N. B. 139.

Guardian, (Fr. Gardein, Lat. Custos, Guardianus) Signifies him who hath the charge or custody of any person or thing; but commonly he who hath the custody and education of such persons as are not of sufficient discretion to guide themselves and their own affairs, as children and idiots, (usually the former) being as largely extended in the Common law as tutor and curator among the civilians. Blount.

Under this head we may consider,

- I. The several kinds of guardians, and how they are appointed.
- II. Who may be guardian, and of the guardians interest in the body and lands of the ward, and what he may lawfully do, so as to bind the infant.
- III. Of the infant's remedy against the guardian, and of obliging him to account, &c.

- I. Of the several kinds of guardians, and how they are appointed.

A guardian is either legitimus, testamentarius, datus, or custumarius: he that is a legitimate or lawful guardian is to jure communi, or jure naturali; the first as guardian in chivalry, in fact, or in right; the other de jure naturali, as father or mother: A testamentary guardian was by the Common law; for the body of the minor was to remain with him who was appointed, till the age of fourteen; and as for his goods it might be longer, or as long as the testator appointed; but as to this matter there are several statutes: Guardianus datus was by the father in his life time, or by the Lord Chancellor after the death of the father; and where there is a guardianship by the Common law, the Lord Chancellor can order and intermeddle; but where by statute, he cannot remove either the child, or the guardianship by custom, is of orphans by the custom of London, and other cities and boroughs; and in copyhold manors, by the custom it may belong to the lord of the manor to be guardian himself, or to appoint one. 3 Salk. Rep. 176, 177. The guardianships by the Common law, are guardians in chivalry; (taken away by statute) guardians by nature, such as the father or mother; guardians in socage, who are the next of blood, to whom the inheritance cannot descend, if the father does not order it otherwise; and guardian because of nurture, when the father by will appoints one to be guardian of his child. 1 Inst. 18. 2 Inst. 305. 3 Rep. 37.

The first statute, that gave the father a power of appointing, was the 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 8. which provides under severe penalties, such as fine and imprisonment for years, "That nobody shall take away any maid or woman child unmarried, being within the age of sixteen years, out of or from the possession, custody or governance, and against the will of the father of such maid or woman child, or of such person or persons to whom the father of such maid or woman child, by his last will and testament, or by any other act in his lifetime, hath or shall appoint, assign, bequeath, give or grant the order, keeping, education and governance of such maid or woman child." 1 Sid. 362.

Guardianship by statute, is by the 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. by which it is enacted, "That a father by deed in his lifetime, or by will, may dispose of the custody of his child under twenty-one years of age, and not married at the time of his death, and whether then born, or in ventre sa mere, during the minority, to any persons, not Popish recusants; who may maintain action of trespass, &c. against unlawful takers away of such children, and take into custody their lands, &c." And by this statute the father may appoint a guardian to his heir, for any time till he is twenty-one years old; and such guardian shall have the like remedy for his ward, as the guardian in socage had at Common law. 2 Nelf. Abr. 511. But the father appoint no guardian to his child, the ordinary or spiritual court may appoint one for the personal estate until the age of fourteen: And as to his lands, there shall be a guardian in socage, &c. as heretofore. 2 Lev. 262.

If a bishop appoints a guardian of goods and lands, it will be void; for it may be only of goods and chattels: and guardianship is a thing cognizable by the temporal courts, where a devise is made of it, which courts are to judge whether the devise be pursuant to the Statute. 1 Vent. 207. A copyhold tenant is not within the Statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24. to dispose of the custody of his children; for for it belongs to the lord or others, according to the custom of the manor: But the lord of a manor hath no power by the Common law, without some particular custom, to grant the guardianship of an infant copyholder. 3 Lev. 395. Lutw. 1190. Guardianships are not only by the Common law, by Statute law, and by particular custom; but are also distinguished into guardian in socage, guardian appointed by the father, and guardian assigned by the court. 1 Lill. Abr. 655. And a father or mother, without assignment, are guardians of women, children, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. cap. 8. A female infant may be brought into court, and asked whether she be willing to stay with her guardian.

The husband of a woman under age cannot disavow a guardian made by the court for his wife. 1 Vent. 185. An infant, 'tis said, cannot revoke the authority of the guardian: but the court may discharge one guardian, and assign another at their discretion; and the justices of Nisi prius, &c. may assign a new guardian. Palm. 252. Style 456. Noy 49. 1 Danv. Abr. 604. The court will assign a guardian to an infant to sue, or defend actions, if the infant comes into court and desires it: or a judge at his chambers, at the desire of the infant, may assign a person named by him to be his guardian; but this last is no record until entered and filed by the clerk of the rules: the heir must be in person in court, for the appointment of a guardian for his appearance. 1 Lill. 656. 2 Leon. 238.

II. Who may be guardian, and of the guardian's interest in the body and lands of the ward, and what he may lawfully do, so as to bind the infant.

Where land descends of the part of the father, there the next of kin on the part of the mother shall have the guardianship; and so on the other side, and not such a kinsman as may have any benefit by his death. 1 Cro. 825. Moor. cap. 872. The eldest son of the half blood shall be guardian in socage, to a son by a second venter; and the guardianship in socage continues till the minor attains the age of fourteen years, and then he may chuse his guardian before a judge, at his chambers, or in court, or in the Chancery: also after the minor is come to the age of fourteen, he may sue his guardian in socage to account as bailiff, &c. Cro. Jac. 219. Though a father is guardian by nature, yet a man may be guardian to an infant against his father, for prevention of waste; which is a forfeiture of guardianship. Hard. 96.

If a woman hath issue a son by a former husband, and marries a second husband, seized of socage lands, by whom she has issue another son, and the husband and wife die, leaving the said son under fourteen, his brother of the half blood shall be guardian in socage, as next of kin, to whom the inheritance can't descend. Cro. Eliz. 825. 2 And. 171. Moor 635. 2 Jon. 17.

An infant, idiot, lunatick, non compos, one blind and dumb, deaf and dumb, or leper removed, can't be guardian in socage. Co. Lit. 88. b.

It is clearly agreed, That the King as pater patrie, is universal guardian of all infants, idiots and lunaticks, who can't take care of themselves; and as this case can't be exercised otherwise than by appointing them proper curators or committees; it seems also agreed, that the King may, as he has done, delegate the authority to his Chancellor; therefore at this day, the court of Chancery is the only proper court, which hath jurisdiction in appointing and removing guardians, and in preventing them and others from abusing their persons or estates. 2 Inst. 14. 4 Co. 126. Beverley's case, and in Staudf. Prae. 374.

And as the court of Chancery is now invested with this authority, hence in every day's practice we find that court determining, as to the right of guardianship, who is the next of kin, and who the most proper guardian; as also orders are made by that court on petition, or motion for the provision of infants during any dispute herein; as likewise guardians removed or compelled to give security; they and others punished for abuses committed on infants, and effectual care taken to prevent any abuses intended them in their persons or estates; all such wrongs and injuries being reckoned a contempt of that court, that hath by an established jurisdiction the protection of all persons under natural disabilities. 2 Mod. 177.

Guardian in socage shall make no waste, nor sale of the inheritance, but keep it safely for the heir: and where there hath been some doubt of the sufficiency of a guardian in socage, the Chancery hath obliged him to give security. 2 Mod. 177. Also a guardian may be ordered to enter into security by recognisance, not to suffer a female infant to marry whilst in his custody; and to permit other relations to visit her, &c. 2 Lev. 128. And the court of Chancery will make such guardian give security not to marry the infant without the court is first acquainted with it. 2 Chan. Rep. 237. Before the act of 12 Car. 2. c. 24. Tenant in socage might have disposed of his land, in trust for the benefit of the heir; but it is said he could not devise or dispose of the guardianship or custody of the heir from the next of kin to whom the land could not descend, because the law gave the guardianship to such next of kin. Kelw. 186. But now tenant in socage may nominate whom he pleases to have the custody of the heir; and the land shall follow the guardianship, as an incident given by law to attend the custody; and such special guardian cannot assign the custody by any act, the trust being personal; nor shall it go to the executor or administrator of the guardian, but determines by his death. Vaugh. 180. Dyer 189.

As the law hath invested guardians not with a bare authority only, but also with an interest till the guardianship ceases; so it hath provided several remedies for guardians against those who violate that interest; therefore at Common law there were remedies both droit and possessory, to recover the guardianship. 2 Inst. 90. 9 Co. 72.

A guardianship of a minor is an interest in the body and lands, &c. of one within age. Guardians to infants, appointed by the court to sue, may acknowledge satisfaction upon the record, for a debt recovered at law for the infant. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. A guardian in socage may keep courts, in the infant's manors, in his own name, grant copies, &c. He is dominus pro tempore, and hath an interest in the lands. Cro. Jac. 91. Such guardian may let the land for years, and avow in his own name and right; and his lessee for years may maintain ejectment: but he cannot present to an advowson, for which he may not lawfully account; and the infant must present of whatsoever age. Cro. Jac. 98, 99. Though it is said, if the infant be within the age of discretion, his guardian may present. 8 E. 2. 10. A guardian for nurture of the minor appointed by will, hath power to make leases at will only. Cro. Eliz. 678, 734. Guardians are to take the profits of the minor's lands, &c. to the use of the minor, and account for the same: they ought to sell all moveables in a reasonable time, and turn them into land or money, except the minor is near of age, and may want such goods himself: and they shall pay interest for money in their hands, which might have been put out at interest; in which case it shall be presumed the guardians made use of it themselves. 3 Salk. 177.

III. Of the infant's remedy against the guardian, and of obliging him to account, &c.

At Common law, both a prohibition of waste, and an action of waste, lay against a guardian in chivalry and a guardian in socage, for a voluntary, but not for permissive waste, or waste done by a stranger. 2 Inst. 305. By the Common law, guardians in socage are accountable to the infant, either when he comes to the age of fourteen years, or at any time after, as he thinks fit. Co. Lit. 87. But the guardian, on his account, shall have allowance of all reasonable expences; and if he is robbed of the rents and profits of the land without his default or negligence, he shall be discharged thereof upon his account; for he is in the nature of a bailiff or servant to the infant, and undertakes no otherwise than for his diligence and fidelity. Co. Lit. 89. a.

If a guardian takes a bond for the arrears of rent, he thereby makes it his own debt, and shall be charged with it. 2 Chan. Rep. 97. Wall and Buckley. If a man during a person's infancy receives the profits of an infant's estate, and continues to do so for several years after the infant comes comes of age, before any entry is made on him; yet he shall account for the profits throughout, and not during the infancy only. Abr. Eq. 280. Tallop and Halsworthy. A receiver to the guardian of an infant, who has had his account allowed him by the guardian, shall not be obliged to account over again to the infant when he comes of age. Preced. Chan. 535.

A guardian shall answer for what is lost by his fraud, negligence or omission; but not for any casual events, as where the thing had been well but for such an accident. Litt. 123. On accounting of guardians, they shall have allowance of costs and expences; and if they are robbed, &c. without any default or negligence, they shall be discharged thereof. 1 Inst. 89. In guardianships of great estates, the guardians generally pass their accounts yearly in the Chancery, for their better justification when the minor calls them to a general account at his full age. By statute, guardians are to retain the lands till the heir comes of age, and then restore the same as fully stocked, &c. as received. 9 H. 3. cap. 3. They shall sustain the land, without destruction of any thing. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 21. And persons, who as guardians hold over, without the consent of the person next intitled, shall be adjudged trespassers, and be accountable for profits, &c. Stat. 6 Ann. cap. 18. Action of account may be brought against the executors or administrators of a guardian, &c. Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16.

An election of a guardian by a minor.

K NOW all men by these presents, That I A. B. son and heir of, &c. deceased, being now about the age of eighteen years, have elected and chosen, and by these presents do elect and chuse C. D. of, &c. to be guardian of my person and estate, until I shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and I do hereby promise to be ruled and governed by him in all things touching my welfare; and I do authorize and empower the said C. D. to enter upon and take possession of all and every my messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments and premises whatsoever, situate, lying and being in, &c. in the county of, &c. or elsewhere, whereunto I have or may have any right or title, and to let and set the same, and receive and take the rents, issues and profits thereof, for my use and benefit, during the term aforesaid; giving and hereby granting unto the said C. D. my full power in the said premises; and whatsoever he shall lawfully do or cause to be done in the premises, by virtue hereof, I do hereby promise to ratify and confirm. In witness, &c.

Guardian de l'Œmery, Is the guardian or warden of the Stannaries, or mines in the county of Cornwall, &c. 17 Car. 1. cap. 15.

Guardians de l'Eglis, Churchwardens, who are officers chosen in every parish to have the care and custody of the church goods; and they may have an action for such goods, and have divers powers for the benefit of the church. Stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 2.

Guardians of the Peace, Are those that have the keeping of the peace; wardens or conservators thereof. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. cap. 3.

Guardian of the Cinque Ports, Is a magistrate that hath the jurisdiction of the ports or havens, which are commonly called the Cinque Ports, who has there all the authority and jurisdiction the Admiral of England has in places not exempt: and Camden believes this Warden of the Cinque Ports was first erected among us in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea-coasts against enemies, &c. Camb. Br. 238.

Guardian of the Spiritualities. The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see, is called by this name. 25 H. 8. cap. 21. The archbishop is guardian of the spiritualities on the vacancy of any see within his province; but when the archiepiscopal see is vacant, the dean and chapter of the archbishop's diocese are guardians of the spiritualities, viz. the spiritual jurisdiction of his province and diocese is committed to them. 2 Roll. Abr. 223. The guardian of the spiritualities it is said may be either guardian in law, jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese in his province; or guardian by delegation, being he whom the archbishop or vicar general doth for the time appoint. 13 Eliz. cap. 12. And the guardian of the spiritualities hath all manner of ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the courts, power of granting licences and dispensations, probate of wills, &c. during the vacancy, and of admitting and instituting clerks presented; but such guardians cannot, as such, consecrate or ordain, or present to any benefices. Wood's Inst. 25, 27.

Guest, (Sax. Gest. Fr. Gist, a stage of rest in a journey) A lodger or stranger in an inn, &c. A guest who hath a piece of plate set before him in an inn, may be guilty of felony in fraudulently taking away the same. 1 Hawk. P. C. 90. And a guest having taken off the sheets from bed, with intent to steal them, carried them into another room, and was apprehended before he could get away; this was adjudged larceny. Ibid. 92. Action lies against an innkeeper, refusing a guest lodging, &c. See Inn.

Guidage, (Guidagium) Is an old legal word, signifying that which is given for safe conduct through a strange land, or unknown country. Est guidagium quod datur alicui, ut tuto conducatur per terram alterius. Consuetud. Burgund. p. 119. 2 Inst. 526.

Guild, (from the Sax. Gildan, to pay) Signifies a fraternity or company, because every one was gildare, i. e. to pay something toward the charge and support of the company. The original of these guilds and fraternities is said to be from the old Saxon law, by which neighbours entered into an association, and became bound for each other, to bring forth him who committed any crime, or make satisfaction to the party injured, for which purpose they raised a sum of money among themselves, and put into a common stock, whereout a pecuniary compensation was made according to the quality of the offence committed. From hence came our fraternities and guilds; and they were in use in this kingdom long before any formal licences were granted for them: though at this day they are a company combined together, with orders and laws made by themselves, by the prince's licence.

Camd. Guildam Mercatoriam, or the Merchant's Guild, is a liberty or privilege granted to merchants, whereby they are enabled to hold certain pleas of land, &c. within their own precinct. 37 Ed. 3. 15 R. 2. And Guild-halls are the halls of those societies, where they meet and make laws, &c. for their better government. King Ed. 3. in the 14th year of his reign, granted licence to the men of Coventry to erect a Merchant's Guild, and also a fraternity of brethren and sisters, with a master or warden, and that they might make chantries, bestow alms, do other works of piety, and constitute ordinances touching the same, &c. And King Hen. 4. in the 4th year of his reign, gave licence to found a Guild of the Holy Cro, at Stratford upon Avon. Antiq. Warwicksh. 119, 522. Guild, or Gild, is also used for a tribute, or tax, an amercement, &c. 27 Ed. 3. 11 H. 6. 15 Car. 2. See Gilda Mercatoria.

Guildhall, Or the chief hall of the city of London, for the meeting of the Lord Mayor and Commonalty of the city, making laws and ordinances, holding of courts, &c. — Gildarta nomine continentur non solum minores fraternitates, sed ipsæ etiam civitatum communitates. Spelm. It also signifies the chief hall of other cities and corporate towns.

Guildhalda Tenentorum. The fraternity of East-ling merchants in London, called the Still-yard. 22 Hen. 8. cap. 8.

Guild-Rents, Are rents payable to the town, by any guild or fraternity; or such rents as formerly belonged to religious Guilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of monasteries, being ordered to be sold by the Stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 6.

Guilder, Foreign coin: the German guilder is 3 s. 8 d. and the golden one in some parts of Germany 4 s. 9 d. In Portugal it passes for 5 s. but the Poland and Holland guilder is but 2 s. In Holland merchants keep their accounts in guilders, &c.

Gule of August, (Gula Augusti, alias Goule de August) Is the day of St. Peter ad Vincula, which is celebrated on the 1st of August, and called the Gule of August, from the Lat. Gala a throat, for this reason, (as pretended) that one

Quirinus,

Quirinus, a tribune, having a daughter that had a disease in her throat, went to Pope Alexander, (the sixth from St. Peter,) and desired of him to see the chains that St. Peter was chained with under Nero, which request being granted, she the said daughter kissing the chains, was cured of her disease; whereupon the Pope instituted this feast in honour of St. Peter; and, as before, this day was termed only the calends of August, it was on this occasion called indifferently either St. Peter's Day ad Vincula, from what wrought the miracle, or the Gule of August, from that part of the virgin whereon it was wrought. Durand's Rationale Divinorum, lib. 7. cap. 19. It is mentioned F. N. B. 62. Plowd. 316. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 30 27 Ed. 3.

Guns. None may shoot in, or keep in his house any gun, hand-gun, &c. who hath not lands to the value of 100*l.* a year, on pain of 10*l.* Nor shall any person shoot in such guns, under the length of one yard, or three quarters of a yard, under the like penalty: if any do so, one that hath 100*l.* per ann. land, may seize the guns unlawfully kept and used; but then he must break them within 20 days, or shall forfeit 40*s.* In forests, parks and chases, those who have power from the King to take away guns, may retain the same. Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 6.

Gunpowder. It is lawful for all persons, as well strangers as natural-born subjects, to import any quantities of gunpowder, or salt-petre, brimstone, and other materials for the making thereof, and to make and sell gunpowder, &c. Stat. 16 Car. 1. cap. 21. But no person shall keep more than 600*lb.* weight of gunpowder, in any places in the cities of London and Westminster, or the suburbs, &c. And persons keeping more, not removing it on order of justices of peace, shall forfeit 20*s.* for every hundred weight: gunpowder is to be carried in covered carriages, the barrels close jointed, or in cases, bags of leather, &c. 5 Geo. 1. cap. 27.

By a subsequent act, it is unlawful for any person to keep in London, &c. above 200*lb.* weight of gunpowder at one time, beyond the space of twenty-four hours, which incurs a forfeiture of the powder, or the value: and two justices may cause searches to be made, and the same to be seized and removed. &c. Persons obstructing the search, incur the penalty of 5*l.* Also none shall use iron or steel hammers, where gunpowder is, on pain of 20*s.* 11 Geo. 1. cap. 23. Persons who are no dealers therein are not to keep above 50*lb.* of gunpowder in London and Westminster, or if they deal in it, not more than 200 weight longer than twenty-four hours, though under different roofs; or on the Thames, except in ships plying or detained, on pain of forfeiting all such gunpowder, &c.

Justices of peace may issue his warrant to search for dangerous quantities of powder, and break open any place, if there be occasion, to seize the same; which may be removed out of the limits aforesaid, and kept till determined in one of the courts, whether it be forfeited, &c. And if any persons permit others to have gunpowder in places not belonging to the owners, they shall forfeit 1*0s.* for every pound. Stat. 15 Geo. 2. cap. 32. No gunpowder shall be put on board ships, above Whitehall in the river Thames, under 5*l.* penalty for every 50*lb.* weight, &c. by 5 Geo. 2. cap. 20. By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. cap. 38. No person shall keep gunpowder for more than twenty-four hours, at one time, in greater quantities than 400 weight, in any house, &c. in or within 100 yards of any city, the suburbs thereof, or any market town; or within two miles of any of the King's palaces, or one mile of any of his magazines for powder, or more than 300 weight, in any other place whatsoever.

Upon information two justices may grant search warrants, and if more found, it shall be forfeited; no greater quantity shall be carried at one time than 2500 weight in any land-carriage, and 5000 weight in any open vessel; carriages to be covered, and barrels closely hooped. Any person employed in any storehouse where gunpowder is kept, or in conveying gunpowder from one place to another, wilfully committing any act whereby the gunpowder shall be in danger of taking fire, shall forfeit 5*s.* for every 100 weight in such storehouse; and in default of payment be committed for not exceeding six months.

No penalty shall be incurred for keeping above 300 weight of gunpowder, in any warehouse already built for that purpose, unless the same be deemed dangerous. To obtain an exclusive patent for the sole making or importation of gunpowder or arms, or to hinder others from importing them, is a præmunire by 16 Car. 1. c. 21. 1 Jac. 2. c. 8.

Gunpowder, &c. shipped after prohibition, forfeited, 29 Geo. 2. c. 16. sect. 2. Allowance on exportation of gunpowder continued to 29th of September 1771, 4 Geo. 3. c. 11.

Gurgites, Is used as a Latin word for wearers: trēs gurgites in aqua de Mosew attachiantur per homines de grēf-faments. Black Book Hereford, f. 20. See Gores.

Guti and Gotti, Engl. Goths, called sometimes Juts, and by the Romans Geta, is derived from the old word Jut, which signifies a Giant: they were one of those three nations or people who left Germany, and came to inhabit this island. Leg. Edw. Confess. cap. 35.

Guttera, A gutter or spout to convey the water from the leads and roofs of houses: and there are gutter tiles, especially to be laid in such gutters, &c. mentioned in the Stat. 17 Ed. 4.

Ginaputched, Is a British word which signifies a payment or fine, made to the lords of some manors, upon the marriage of their tenants daughters; or otherwise on their committing incontinency. See Marchant.

Gwalstow, (Sax.) A place of execution: omnia gwalstowa, i. e. occidendorum loca, totaliter regis sunt in joca sua. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 11.

Gylmste, A compensation or amends for trespass, &c. Malicia pro transgressione. LL. Edgar. Regis, Anno 964.

Gypsies. Formerly there were foreign persons, calling themselves Egyptians, or Gypsies, a strange kind of commonwealth among themselves of wandering impostors and jugglers. 'Tis said that when Sultan Selim conquered Egypt in the year 1517, several of the natives refused to submit to the Turkish yoke, and dispersed in small parties all over the world, where their supposed skill in the black art gave them an universal reception, in that age of superstition and credulity. There are various laws against persons pretending to be gypsies, and wandering about, &c. See 22 H. 8. c. 10. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4. 5 El. c. 20. And see Black Com. 4 P. 165, 6, 7.

Gyrobags, Wandering monks, who pretending great piety left their own cloisters, and visited others. Matt. Paris. p. 490.

Habeas Corpus, Is a writ for the bringing up a jury, or so many of them as refuse to appear upon the venire facias, for the trial of any cause brought to issue. Old Nat. Br. 157. And the habeas corpus juratorum in the court of C. B. serves for the same purpose as the distingas jurator in B. R. It commands the sheriff to have the jurors before the judges at such a day, to pass on the trial of certain parties, in such a cause, &c. Practif. Solic. 308, 309.

Habeas Corpus, The great writ of English liberty, lies where one is indicted for any crime or trespass before justices of peace, or in a court of any franchise, and being imprisoned for the same, hath offered sufficient bail, but it is refused where bailable; he may then have this writ out of the King's Bench to remove himself thither, and answer the cause there. F. N. B. 250. But see infra. This writ is also used to bring the body of a person into court, who is committed to any gaol, either in criminal or civil cause; and a habeas corpus will remove a person and cause from one court and prison to another. See the Stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. There are several kinds of this writ.

1. The habeas corpus ad subjiciendum is that which issues in criminal cases, and is deemed a prerogative writ, which the King may issue to any place, as he has a right to be informed of the state and condition of the prisoner, and for what reasons he is confined. It is also in regard to the subject, deemed his writ of right; that is, such a one as he is intitled to ex debito iustitiæ, and is in nature of a writ of error to examine the legality of the commitment; therefore commands the day, the caption, and cause of detention to be returned. 2 Inst. 55. 4 Inst. 182. Cro. Jac. 543. 2 Roll. Abr. 69.

2. The habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum issues only in civil cases, and lies where a person is sued, and in gaol, in some inferior jurisdiction, and is willing to have the cause determined in some superior court, which hath jurisdiction over the matter; in this case the body is to be removed by habeas corpus, but the proceedings by certiorari. 3 Bac. Abr. 2.

3. There is likewise a writ of habeas corpus ad respondendum, where a person is confined in gaol for a cause of action accruing within some inferior court; and a third person hath also a cause of action against him; in which case he may have this writ in order to charge him in such superior court; for inferior courts being tied down to causes arising within their own jurisdiction, the party would be without remedy, unless allowed to sue him in another court; but it seems, that regularly a person confined in B. R. cannot be removed to the C. B. by this writ, nor vice versa; for in these cases there can be no defect of justice, as these courts have consue as well of local, as transitory actions. Dyer 197. a. 249. pl. 84, 296, 307. 1 Mod. 235. Styl. Praët. Registr. 330.

4. There are also, besides these, other writs of habeas corpus, as a habeas corpus ad deliberandum & recipiendum, which lies to remove a person to the proper place or county, where he committed some criminal offence. 3 New. Abr. 2, 3.

5. There is also a writ of habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum after a judgment; and on this writ the attorney for the plaintiff must indorse the number roll of the judgment on the back of the writ. Styl. Registr. 331.

6. Habeas corpus upon a cepi, where the party is taken in execution in the court below.—So upon an attachment out of Chancery, and a cepi corpus returned by the sheriff, the next step is a habeas corpus; for the sheriff having executed the command of the writ of attachment by taking the body, he cannot carry him out of the county without the King's writ.

7. There is also a writ of habeas corpus ad testificand', which is to remove a person in confinement, in order to give his testimony in some court of justice; for which vide Styl. 119, 126, 230. 3 Keb. 51. Comb. 17, 48. Of these several writs the most usual in practice are—

The habeas corpus ad subjiciendum:—and

The habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum.

With respect to the first it is to be considered,

1. By whom and in what cases it is grantable.
2. What shall be a proper return of such writ.
3. Of bailing, discharging, or remanding the prisoner.

1. By whom, and in what cases, an habeas corpus is grantable.

The writ of habeas corpus was originally ordained by the Common law of the land, as a remedy for such as were unjustly imprisoned, to procure their liberty; and it is a mistaken notion that this writ is of a modern date, and introduced with the reign of King Charles II. But before the Stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. 'tis true it was difficult to be obtained, because the judges, who had authority to issue it, pretended to have power either to grant or deny it; and the sheriffs and gaolers, to whom the writ was directed, frequently put poor prisoners to the charges of a second, and third habeas corpus, before they would yield obedience to the first; which being grievous to the people, the Stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. was enacted to prevent abuses of this nature, and further our laws for the benefit of the liberty of the subject. Laws of Liberty, pag. 44, 45.

By the Stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. A person in prison may have an habeas corpus from any judge, on complaint made and view of the copy of the warrant of commitment, (unless he be committed for treason or felony, especially expressed in the warrant, or other offences or matters not bailable) which habeas corpus shall be returnable immediately; and upon certificate of the cause of commitment, the prisoner shall be discharged on bail to appear in the court of B. R. the next term, or at the next assizes, &c. where the offence is cognisable: and persons committed for treason or felony, (especially expressed in the warrant) on prayer in open court, the first week of the term, or day of sessions, &c. are to be brought to trial; and if not indicted the next term, or sessions after commitment, upon motion the last day of the term, &c. they shall be let out upon bail; except it appears upon oath, that the King's witnesses are not ready; and if on prayer they are not indicted or tried the second term after commitment, they shall be discharged. No persons who shall be delivered upon an habeas corpus, shall be committed again for the same offence, other than by legal order and process of such court where they shall be bound to appear, or other court having jurisdiction of the cause; on pain of 500 l.

And if any person be in prison, or any officer's custody, for any criminal matter, he shall not be removed by him into the custody of any other officer but by habeas corpus, upon pain of incurring the penalty of 100 l. for the first offence, and 200 l. for the second offence, and being disabled to execute his office.

No person shall be sent prisoner to Ireland, Scotland, or any place beyond the seas in the King's dominions; which will be false imprisonment, on which the prisoner may recover treble costs, and not less than 500 l. damages, &c. and the party committing, or detaining him, also shall incur the penalty of a præmunire.

Judges denying a habeas corpus shall forfeit 500 l. And the officer refusing to obey it, or to deliver a true copy of the commitment warrant, is liable to a forfeiture of 100 l. for the first offence, &c. Stat. ibid. This is the substance of the habeas corpus act; which hath been suspended several times in late reigns, on rebellions, &c.

It is clear, that both by the Common law, as also by the statute, the courts of Chancery and King's Bench have jurisdiction of awarding this writ of habeas corpus, and that without any privilege in the person for whom it is awarded; but it seems, that by the Common law the court of King's Bench could only have awarded it in term-time, but that the Chancery might have done it as well out of, as in term, because that court is always open. 2 Inst. 55. 4 Inst. 290. 2 And. 297. 2 Jon. 13, 14, 17. Any of the courts at Westminster may award it. See Vaugh. 155.

If the habeas corpus issues out of Chancery, and on the return thereof the Lord Chancellor finds that the party was illegally restrained of his liberty, he may discharge him, or if he finds it doubtful, he may bail him; but then it must be to appear in the court of King's Bench; for the Chancellor hath no power in criminal causes; or the Chancellor may commit the party to the Fleet, and in term-time may proprio manibus deliver the record into the King's Bench, together with the body; and thereupon the court of King's Bench may proceed to bail, discharge, or commit the prisoner. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 147. 2 Hart. P. C. 114-15.

We apprehend every subject imprisoned, is intitled to his habeas corpus, that the cause of his imprisonment may be inquired into, whether he is, or is not, intitled to be bailed. See the case of Mr. Wilkes, in Wilf. Rep. par. 2. 154.

If a party be imprisoned against law, tho' he is intitled to a habeas corpus, yet he may have an action of false imprisonment, in which he shall recover damages in proportion to the injury done him. Fitz. Corpus cum Causa 2. 9 H. 6. 44. a. 2 Inst. 55. 10 H. 7. 17. 5 Co. 64. 11 Co. 98, 99.

If a husband confine his wife, she may have a habeas corpus; but the judges on the return of it, cannot remove the wife from her husband. 2 Lev. 128.

If a person be in custody, and also indicted for some offence in the inferior court, there must, besides the habeas corpus to remove the body, be a certiorari to remove the record; for as the certiorari alone removes not the body, so the habeas corpus alone removes not the record itself, but only the prisoner with the cause of his commitment;

mitment; therefore, although upon the habeas corpus, and the return thereof, the court can judge of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the return and commitment, and bail or discharge, or remand the prisoner, as the case appears upon the return; yet they cannot upon the bare return of the habeas corpus give any judgment, without the record itself be removed by certiorari: but the same stands in the same force it did, though the return should be adjudged insufficient, and the party discharged thereupon of his imprisonment; and the court below may issue new process upon the indictment. 2 Hal. Hist. 210, 211. 1 Salk. 352. Comb. 2.

If the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, commit one to the marshal by his warrant, he ought not to be brought to the bar by rule, but by habeas corpus. 1 Salk. 349.

Also by the habeas corpus act, (31 Car. 2. cap. 2. par. 11.) it is enacted, and declared, "That an habeas corpus, according to the intent and true meaning of the act, may be directed and run into, any county palatine, the cinque ports, or other privileged places within the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick upon Tweed, and the isles of Jersey or Guernsey; any law, &c."

2. What shall be a proper return of an habeas corpus.

In extrajudicial commitments, the warrant of commitment ought to be returned in bac versa on a habeas corpus: but when a man is committed by a court of record, it is in the nature of an execution for a contempt, and in such case the warrant is never returned. 5 Mod. 156. The cause of imprisonment must be particularly set forth in the return of the habeas corpus, or it will not be good; for by this the court may judge of it, and with a paratum habeo, that they may either discharge, bail, or remand the prisoner. 2 Nell. Abr. 915. 2 Cro. 543. If a commitment is without cause, or no cause is shown, a prisoner may be delivered by habeas corpus. 1 Salk. 348. But on a habeas corpus granted by the court of B. R. a difference was made as to a return; that where a prisoner is committed by one of the privy council, there the cause of his commitment is to be returned particularly; but when he is committed by the whole council, no cause need be alleged. 1 Leon. 79, 71.

And it has been adjudged, that on a commitment by the house of commons, of persons for contempt and breach of privilege, no court can deliver on a habeas corpus: but Holt Ch. Just. was of a contrary opinion. 2 Salk. 503, 504. A writ of error may be allowed by the King in such case, &c. and it is not to be denied ex debito iustitie; though it has been a doubt, whether any writ of error lay upon a judgment given on a habeas corpus. Ibid. A man may not be delivered from the commitment of a court of Oyer and Terminer, by habeas corpus, without writ of error: and where there appears to be good cause, and a defect only in the form of the commitment, he ought not to be discharged. 1 Salk. 348.

The method to compel the return of a habeas corpus is by taking out an alias and pluries, which if disobeyed, an attachment issues of course; also the court may take a rule on the officer to return his writ, and if disobeyed, the court may proceed against such disobedience in the same manner as they usually do against the disobedience of any other rule. F. N. B. 68. 11 H. 4. 86. 1 Mod. 195. 2 Leon. 128, 9. 5 Mod. 21.

And by the 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. sect. 2: it is enacted, "That if any officer, &c. shall neglect, or refuse to make returns, as by the act is directed, or to bring the body of the prisoner, according to the command of the writ, or shall not within six hours after demand, deliver a true copy of the commitment, &c. he shall forfeit for the first offence 100 l. for the second offence 200 l. and be made incapable to hold his office."

For a false return there is regularly no other remedy against the officer, than an action on the case at the suit of the party grieved, and an information or indictment at the suit of the King. 6 Mod. 90. 1 Salk. 349. But no action lies until the return be filed. 1 Salk. 352.

As upon the return of the writ the court is to judge, whether the cause of the commitment and detainer be according to law, or against it; so the officer or party in whose custody the prisoner is, must, according to the command of the writ, certify on the return thereof, the day, cause of caption and detainer. Vaugh. 137.

It seems to be agreed, that no one can in any case controvert the truth of the return to a habeas corpus, or plead or suggest any matter repugnant to it; yet it hath been holden, that a man may confess and avoid such a return by admitting the truth of the matters contained in it, and suggesting others not repugnant, which take off the effect of them. Cro. Eliz. 821. 5 Co. 71. b. 2 Barw. P. C. 113.

It seems that, before the return filed, any defect in form, or the want of an averment of a matter of fact, may be amended; but this must be at the peril of the officer, in the same manner as if the return were originally what it is after the amendment. 1 Mod. 102, 103.

But after the return is filed, it becomes a record of the court, and cannot be amended. 1 Mod. 102, 103.

3. Of bailing, discharging, or remanding the prisoner brought up by habeas corpus.

Upon the return of the habeas corpus the prisoner is regularly to be discharged, bailed or remanded; but if it be doubtful which the court ought to do, it is said that the prisoner may be bailed to appear de die in diem till the matter is determined. 5 Mod. 22. Styl. 16.

By the petition of right, (or 17 Car. 1. cap. 10.) the court must within three days after the return of the habeas corpus, either discharge, bail or remand the prisoner. But it seems that a commitment by the court of King's Bench to the Marshalsea, is a remanding, being an imprisonment within the statute. 5 Mod. 22. 3 New. Abr. 14.

Also it hath been ruled, that the court of King's Bench may, after the return of the habeas corpus is filed, remand the prisoner to the same gaol from whence he came, and order him to be brought up from time to time, till they shall have determined whether it is proper to bail, discharge, or remand him absolutely. 1 Vent. 330.

And tho' in doubtful cases the court is to bail, or discharge the party on the return of the habeas corpus; yet if a person be convicted, and the conviction on the return of the habeas corpus appears only defective in point of form, it is at the election of the court either to discharge the party, or oblige him to bring his writ of error. 1 Salk. 348. 5 Mod. 19, 20.

If a person be committed by the admiralty in execution, he is not removeable by habeas corpus into B. R. to answer an action brought against him there; but it might be otherwise if an action had been before depending. 1 Salk. 351. Where there is a precedent action in B. R. to the King's suit, on which the party is out on bail, habeas corpus may be brought by the bail, &c. and the prisoner turned over; tho' this was greatly opposed in favour of the King's execution. Ibid. 353.

It remains now to treat of the habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum, the nature of which hath been already explained, and it is farther to be observed, That—No writ of habeas corpus, or other writ to remove a cause out of an inferior court, shall be allowed, except delivered to the judge of the court, before the jury to try the cause have appeared, and before any of them are sworn. 43 Eliz. cap. 5. And writs to remove suits commenced in an inferior court of record, shall not be obeyed, unless delivered to the Barrow of the court before issue or demurrer joined, &c. And a suit shall never be removed again, after a procedendo allowed. 23 Ed. 1. 23. Nor shall any suit be removed where the demand doth not exceed 5 l. or where the freehold, inheritance, title of land, &c. are concerned. And judges are to proceed in suits in inferior courts laid not to exceed the sum of 5 l. although there may be actions against the defendant, wherein the plaintiff's demands may exceed that sum, by stat. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 29.

If the Barrow of an inferior court, proceeds after an habeas corpus delivered and allowed, the proceedings are void; and the court of B. R. will award a superfedeas; and and grant an attachment against the steward for the contempt. Cro. Car. 79, 296. A habeas corpus suspends the power of the court below, so that if they proceed, it is void, and coram non iudice. And on a habeas corpus, if the record be filed, no procedendo can go to the court below; but where a record below is not filed, or not returned, it may be granted. 1 Salk. 352.

A habeas corpus cum causa removes the body of the party for whom granted, and all the causes depending against him; and if upon the return thereof the officer doth not return all the causes, &c. it is an escape in him. 2 Lill. Abr. 2. A judge will not grant a habeas corpus in the vacation, for a prisoner to follow his suits; but the court may grant a special habeas corpus for a prisoner to be at his trial in the vacation-time. Ibid. 3. And court may grant a habeas corpus to bring a prisoner, not in prison on execution, out of prison, to be a witness at a trial; though it is at the peril of the party suing out the writ, that the prisoner do not escape. Syde 119. Trin. 1640. But no person ought to take out a habeas corpus for any one in prison, without his consent; except it be to turn him over to B. R. or charge him with an action in court. 2 Lill. A man brought into B. R. by habeas corpus, shall not be removed thence till he has answered there; he shall be detained until then, and after he may be removed. 1 Salk. 359.

A person is in custody upon a criminal, and also on a civil matter, if he would move himself by habeas corpus, there ought to be but one habeas corpus of the crown side or plea side, and both causes are to be returned. Mod. Caf. 133. If there be judgment against a defendant in the court of B. R. and another in C. B. on which he is in execution in the Plac., he may have an habeas corpus to remove himself into B. R. where he shall be in custody of the marshal for both debts. Dyer 132.

Where an action is founded on the custom of London, for a thing actionable there, and not elsewhere; if it be removed by habeas corpus, a procedendo shall be granted: but the declaration itself ought to be returned upon the habeas corpus, and then the court will see what was the cause, &c. For the special matter and all the proceedings are to be in the return in this case; as well as in an action on a by-law, to take notice thereof. Carth. 75, 76. Before a procedendo is granted and filed, it may be amended; but not afterwards.

2. A habeas corpus is grantable, without motion, to remove a person upon an arrest; but not where committed for a crime. 1 Lev. 1. In suing out these writs in B. R. to remove a cause, &c. they are first to be carried to the other court to be allowed; and some few days after the delivery, the return must be called for, and special bail put in at a judge's chamber; which being done, within four days in term, and six days in the vacation, the cause is removed to the superior court. Practif. Solit. 262. And if the defendant be actually a prisoner, he shall not be delivered from prison till the bail on the habeas corpus be accepted, or justified. Ibid.

If a defendant arrested cannot find bail, and would be removed to the King's Bench or Fleet prison, a habeas corpus is to be sued out; and then a return is to be made, and send an officer with the defendant to a keeper, and there a commitment is made, and the judge's tipstaff takes the prisoner in custody, and brings him to prison; and he may agree with the warden, for the liberty of the rules, &c. Practif. Edit. 1. p. 124. When the defendant is committed to bailiff, or in any other prison, and would be turned over to the King's Bench, the practice is the same; the habeas corpus directed to the sheriff of London and Middlesex is to be delivered, and he, after search in his office for what writs he hath against the defendant, will make return of them, and then the bailiff or keeper of the other prison, who hath the defendant in custody, is to carry him to a judge's chamber, where he will be turned over, as supra. Ibid.

Habendum. In every deed or conveyance there are two principal parts, the premisses, and the habendum; the office of the first is to express the name of the grantor and grantee, and the thing granted: and the habendum is to limit the estate, by which the general implication in the premisses may be qualified: as in a lease or grant to two persons, if the habendum be to one for life, and the remainder to the other for life, this alters the general implication of the jointtenancy, which would pass by the premisses, if the habendum were not. 2 Rep. 55. And where things which lie in grant are conveyed to take effect, hardly on delivery of the deed of grant without other ceremony; in such case, if the habendum be for a less estate than in the premisses, or be repugnant to it, the habendum is void: but when a ceremony is requisite to the perfection of an estate granted, and not a bare delivery only of the deed; and to the estate limited by the habendum, nothing is required to perfect it; there though the habendum is of a less estate than the premisses, the habendum shall stand good, and qualify the estate granted in the premisses. 2 Rep. 23. 2 Nell. 920. An habendum may not only qualify what is granted in the premisses; but it may also enlarge what is thus granted, or explain the premisses: though the habendum shall never introduce one who is a stranger to the premisses. 1 Jones 4. 3 Lees 68. If a bargain and sale be made without expressing to whom, although it were habendum to A. B. who is a party to the deed, it is not good; because the habendum is only to limit an estate, and not to give any thing. Cro. Eliz. 585, 909. 2 Lill. 8. If one thing be granted in the premisses of a deed, habendum with another thing, which is not appendant, &c. this other thing shall not pass. Hob. 161, 172. None can take by any deed, who is not named in the premisses: but though an estate limited by the habendum to a man that is no party, is void by way of estate; it may be good in remainder. Hob. 313. Godb. 51. 'Tis said, that an habendum from the day of the date, with respect to a freehold is void, because in future. Denn on the demise of Warren v. Faarnside. Wilf. Rep. par. 1. fo. 176. See Deed.

Habentis. Signifies riches: In some ancient charters, habentes homines is taken for rich men; and we read, Nec Rex suum patrum requirat, vel habentes homines quos nos dicimus feasting men. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 100.

Haberdashers. If any persons work bats with foreign wool, and not having served an apprenticeship to the trade, &c. they shall forfeit the goods and 5 l. And no person may dye any caps with bark, &c. but only with copperas and gall, or woad and madder. Stat. 8 Eliz. cap. 7. None shall make bats or felts, that hath not served seven years in felt-making; nor retain any but journeymen who have lawfully served; or have above two apprentices at once, and those not for less than seven years time, &c. on pain of 5 l. a month: but hatterers may employ their own children in the trade. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 17. And the masters and wardens of Haberdashers in London, calling to them one of the company of Coppers, and another of the Hatterers, and mayors, &c. of towns and corporations, may search all batters, and punish them that offend, by Stat. Ibid. To prevent the exportation abroad, which may be seized, and liable to 100 l. penalty; and for regulating Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 6.

Habere

lies of ejusdem genus, to into N. B. 167. And one may have a new writ, if a well executed; but where execution is made, and the writ returned, the court will never grant a new habeas facias, &c. Ibid. 21 Car. 1. B. R. A sheriff delivered virtue of an habeas facias was been carried out immediately by his officers where there, an against the defendant; for this had been a disturbance in contempt of the execution; it being several hours after the plaintiff was in possession of the court docket, but agreed to grant a new writ, &c. 1 Salk. 321. 2 Nell. 779. If the sheriff delivers possession of more than is contained in the writ of habeas facias possidendum, an action of the case will will lie against him, or an assise for the lands. Style 238. The sheriff cannot return upon this writ, that another is tenant of the land by right, but must execute the writ, for that will not come in issue between the demandant and him. 6 Rep. 52. See Ejectment.

Habere facias seisinam. Is a writ directed to the sheriff, to give seisin of a freehold estate recovered in the King's courts, by ejectio firme, or other action. Old Nat. Br. 154. The sheriff may raise the posse comitatus in his assistance, to execute these writs: and where a house is recovered in a real action, or by ejectment, the sheriff may break open the doors to deliver possession and seisin thereof; but he ought to signify the cause of his coming, and request that the doors may be opened. 5 Rep. 91. This writ also issues sometimes out of the records of a fine, to give the cognate seisin of the land whereof the fine is levied. West. Sym. par. 2. And there is a writ called Habere facias seisinam, ubi Rex habuit annum, diem & westm. for the delivery of lands to the Lord of the fee, after the King hath had the year, day, and waste in the lands of a perjuror convicted of felony. Reg. Orig. 156.

Habere facias Missum. A writ that lies in divers cases in real actions, as in formosa, &c. where a view is required to be taken of the lands in controversy. Reg. Ind. 46, 28, &c. P. N. B.

Hallamshire, Is a part of the county of York, in which the town of Sheffield stands. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23.

Hallmote or Halmote, (Sax. Heall, i. e. Aula, & Gemote, Conventus) Was that court among the Saxons, which we now call a court baron; and the etymology is from the meeting of the tenants of one hall or manor. The name is still kept up in several places in Herefordshire, and in the records of Hereford, this court is entered as follows, viz. Hereford Palatium, ad Hallmote ibidem tenet, 11 Dic. Octob. anno Regni Regis Hen. 6. &c. It hath been sometimes taken for a convention of citizens in their public hall, where they held their courts, which was also called Folkmete and Halmote: But the word Hallmote is rather the lord's court held within the manor, in which the differences between the tenants were determined. — Omnis causa terminetur vel hundreda, vel comitatus, vel hallmote, sive halmotium, vel dominorum curia. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 10.

Halmote, Is properly a holy or ecclesiastical court; but there is a court in London, formerly held on the Sunday next before St. Thomas's day, called the Halmote or holy court, (Curia Sanctimonialium) for regulating the bakers of the city, &c.

Halywerthfolk, Halywerthfolk, or people who enjoyed lands by the service of repairing or defending a church or sepulchre; for which pious labours they were exempt from all feudal and military services. It did signify such of the province of Durham in particular, as held their lands to defend the corpse of St. Cuthbert; and who claimed the privilege not to be forced to go out of the bishoprick, either by the King, or Bishop. Hist. Dunelm. apud War-toni Ang. Sac. par. 1. p. 749.

Halm, Is a Saxon word, used for a place of dwelling; a village or town; hence the termination of some of our towns, as Nottingham, Buckingham, &c. Also a home close, or little narrow meadow is called halm.

Hambling, or Hambeling of Dogs, Is the ancient term used by foresters for expediting, Manwood.

Hamefechen, Burglary or nocturnal house-breaking, was by our antient law called hamefechen, as it is in Scotland to this day. Black. Com. 4 P. 223.

Hamlet, and Hamel or Hamplet, (From the Sax. Ham, i. e. Domus, and Germ. Let, Membrum) Signify a little village, or part of a village or parish; of which three words, hamlet is now only used; though Kitchen mentions the other two, hamel and Hampfel. By Spelman there is a difference between villam integram, villam dimidiam, and hamletam; and Stow expounds it to be the seat of a freeholder. Several country towns have hamlets, as there may be several hamlets in a parish; and some particular places may be out of a town or hamlet, though not out of the county. Wood 3.

Hamfare, Breach of the peace in a house. Brompton in Legibus H. 1. c. 80.

Hamtohen, (Sax. Hamtohen) Is the liberty or privilege of a man's own house; also a franchise granted to lords of manors, whereby they hold pleas, and take cognizance of the breach and violation of that immunity. And likewise significant quietantiam misericordie intrationis in aliam domum vi & iniuste. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 47. In Scotland violations of this kind are equally punishable with ravishing a woman. Skene. And our old records express burglary under the word hamtohen.

Hamper Office, One of the offices so called, belonging to the Court of Chancery. Writs relating to the business of the subject and their returns, were, according to the simplicity of antient times, originally kept in a hamper, in hamperio; and the others, relating to such matters wherein the crown is immediately, or mediately concerned, were preserved in a little sack or bag, in parva boga; and thence hath arisen the distinction, of the Hamper Office, and parva bag office, which both belong to the Common law Court in Chancery. Black. Com. 3 P. 49. and vide Gillb. Chanc. p. 10.

Hambrohm, A surety or manual pledge, i. e. an inferior undertaker; for headbrom is the superior or chief. Spelm.

Hambrohm, (From the Sax. Hond, manus, and Gritb, Pax) Peace or protection given by the King, with his own hand. — Hec mittunt hominem in misericordia Regis, in-fractis seu violatis partibus quam per manum suam dabit alicui. Leg. Hen. 1.

Hambrohm, An engine to destroy game. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. See Gun.

Hambrohm, A kind of cloth. Stat. 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 5.

Hambrohm, A term for customary labour to be done and performed. Man. Ang. Tom. 2. p. 264.

Hambrohm alias Hanguite, (From the Sax. Hangan, i. e. suspendere, & wit, multa) Is a liberty granted to a person, whereby he is quit of a felon or thief hanged without judgment; or escaped out of custody. Rassal. We read it interpreted to be quit de laron pendu sans serjeants le Roy, i. e. without legal trial: And elsewhere, multa pro latrone prout ipse innocentiam suspensio vel elapso. And it may signify a liberty, whereby a lord challenges the forfeiture for him who hangs himself within the lord's soc. Domesday.

Hanger or Hanaper, (Hanaperium) The Hanager of the Chancery; it seems to be the same as fiscus originally in the Latin. 20 R. 2. c. 1.

Hanse, (An old Gothick word) Signifies a society of merchants, for the good usage and safe passage of merchandise from one kingdom to another. The hanse or mercatorum societas, was and in part yet is endowed with many large privileges by Princes within their territories; and had four principal seats or staples, where the Almain, or German and Dutch merchants, being the founders of this society, had an especial house; one of which was here in London, called the Steel-Yard. Ortelius's Index ad Theatr. verbo Affatici.

Hans Towns, In Germany, &c. so named, either because they lay near the sea, or from the Gothick Anf, which is taken for those who were the richest of the people; and from thence it is inferred, that these towns were the chiefest for trade or riches: or it may come from the German Hansa, i. e. Societas; a company of merchants excelling others in trade. There were at first seven towns distinguished by this name; afterwards they were seventy in number.

We shall give an abstract of Dr. Robertson's account, which is much more perfect. Towards the middle of the thirteenth century, the nations around the Baltick were extremely barbarous, and infested that sea with their piracies; this obliged the cities of Luback and Hamburg soon after they began to open some trade with these people, to enter into a league of mutual defence. They derived such advantages from this union, that other towns acceded to their confederacy, and in a short time eight of the most considerable cities scattered through those valleys which stretch from the bottom of the Baltick, to Gologne on the Rhine, joined in the famous Hanseatic league, which became so formidable, that its alliance was courted, and its enmity dreaded by the greatest monarchs. The members of this powerful association formed the first systematic plan of commerce known in the middle ages, and conducted it by common laws enacted in their general assemblies. Hist. Emp. Char. V. 1 P. 79, 80 See Id. p. 330.

Hantelast, An arrest from the Germ. Hant, an hand and last, i. e. land; manus inmissio: As arrefts are made by laying hold on the debtor, &c.

Hap, (Fr. Happer, i. e. Repere, to catch) Is of the same signification with us as in the French; as to hap the rent is where partition being made between two partners, an moi more land, allowed to one than the other, the last has most of the land charges it to the other, and she has the rent, whereon assise is brought, &c. This word is used by Lichsten, where a person happeth the possession of a deed poss. Litt. f. 8.

Haque. A little hand gun, prohibited to be used by statute 33 H. 8. c. 6. and 2 E. 3 Ed. 6. cap. 14. There is the half-haque or deny-haque, within the field acts.

Haquebut. A bigger sort of hand-gun than the haque, from the Teuton. hauck bayle; it is otherwise called an haquebut, vulgarly a bagbut. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 14. and 4 & 5 Ph. and Mar. c. 2.

Harbinger. An officer of the King's house, &c. See Harbinger.

Harbours and Havens. There are many acts of parliament for repairing and improving the harbours and havens of this kingdom; such as the 23 Hen. 8. cap. 7. and 28 H. 8. relating to the havens and ports of Plymouth, Portsmouth, Falmouth, &c. in Devonshire and Cornwall; and none shall labour in tin works, near rivers of those havens, but shall prevent the fall of stones and gravel therein. Casting and unlading ballast, rubbish, &c. in any harbour, haven, or road, incurs the penalty of 5 l. by stat. 34 Hen. 8. cap. 9. The 27 of Eliz. cap. 1. was made for repairing Orford haven in Suffolk; and 13 E. 14 Car. 2. and 4 Geo. 1. c. 13, &c. for the reparation of Dover harbour, &c. And duties are granted by these statutes, towards effecting thereof. Vide the Statutes. By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 22. If any master of a ship shall cast out of any ship, riding in any haven, &c. any ballast, &c. but only on land, where the tide never flows or runs, he may be fined by the justices, not more than 5 l. nor less than 50 s. As soon as any ship shall be sunk, stranded, or run on shore in any harbour, &c. or be brought or drove in, or be there in a ruinous condition, and there suffered to remain, and the owner shall begin to carry away the rigging; on summons of the owner, or commander, a justice may seize the ship, &c. and by sale thereof raise money to clear the harbour. Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 14. was made for opening Southwold haven in Suffolk. Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 18. was made for improving Sunderland harbour in Durham. See Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 8. for improving and enlarging the harbour of Lith.

Harbottle. Mentioned in Domesday, and by Speham. See Herdwick.

Harcis. The penalty of taking and killing them, by statute 1 J. 1. &c. Vide Game.

Harlots. If any victimer, alehouse-keeper, &c. in London, shall permit any harlots, or common women of their bodies, to come into their houses to eat, or drink, or otherwise to be conversant or abide there; they shall be liable to imprisonment, and also the women and harlots. Artic. Wardmote 23.

Harnes. (Fr. Harnois.) Signifies all warlike instruments. Hoved. p. 725. Matt. Paris. The tackle or furniture of a ship, was also called harnes or harnesum. Pl. Parl. 22 Ed. 1.

Hars. Harsum. An outcry after felons and malefactors; and the original of this clameur de hars comes from the Normans. Custom. de Normand. Vol. 1. p. 104.

Harp. Harp. Iron instruments for the striking and killing of fish. And those that strike the fish with them are called Harpigiers, or Harpioners. Merch. Dic.

Hartens. (Hartell cant.) Small hounds, for hunting the hare. Notably several persons held lands of the King, by the tenure and service of keeping packs of henges and hartens. Cart. 12 Ed. 1.

Hart. Is a stag, or male deer of the forest five years old complete; and if the King or Queen do hunt any such, and he escape alive, then he is called an Hart Royal. And where by the hunting he is chased out of the forest, proclamation is usually made in the adjacent places, that in regard of the diversion the beast hath afforded the King or Queen, none shall hurt or hinder him from returning to the forest; and then he is called a Hart Royal proclaimed. Manwood's Forest Laws, par. 2. cap. 4.

Hartest Workmen. May be licensed by justices of peace to go into other counties to work, &c. Stat. 13 E. 14 Car. 2. c. 12.

Hatch. Hatch. A shield of brawn — Johannes de Moulgrave tenuit terras in B. de homino rege per servitium deferendi domini regi unam hacham porci, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 450.

Hatches. Are certain dams made of clay and earth, to prevent the water issuing from the works and its washes in Cornwall, from running into the fresh rivers: And the tenants of several manors there, are bound to do certain days work ad le hatches, or hatches. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 23. And from a hatch, gate, or door, some houses situate on the highway, near a common gate, are called Hatches.

Hats and Caps. A title in the statute law. See Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 7. Haberdashers.

Haur. (From the Fr. Haïr.) Is used for hatred. Leg. W. 1. c. 16.

Hawthor. (Homo Loricatus) A man armed with a coat of mail. — Et faciendo servitium de Hawthor, quantum pertinet ad villam, &c. Charta Galfridi de Dutton, temp. H. 3.

Haw. A small parcel of land so called in Kent; as a Hampshire or Brighthelm, lying near the house, and inclosed for those uses. Sax. Dic. But Sir Edward Coke, in an ancient plea concerning Proverham in Kent, says Hawes are houses. Co. Litt. 5. See Haga.

Hawth. or Hawth. Signifies a green plot in a valley, as they used it in the North of England. Camb.

Hawberk alias Hobberk, (Fr. l.e. Loric.) He who holds lands in France by finding a coat or shirt of mail, and to be ready with it when he shall be called, is said to have hawberticum studium, Plef. de Haubert: And Hawberk, with our ancestors, had the same signification, and so it seems to be used in the stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 6.

Hawks. The stealing of an hawk, or concealing it, after proclamation made by the sheriff, is felony with clergy: But this extends only to long-winged hawks, of the kind of falcon; and not to goshawks, or sparrow hawks. 34 Ed. 3. 37 Ed. 3. cap. 19. 3 Inst. 97. None shall kill, or take away, any hawks from the coverts where they use to breed, on pain of 10 l. to be recovered before justices of peace, and divided between the King and prosecutor. Stat. 11 Hen. 7. cap. 17. A hawk taken up, must be delivered to the sheriff, if taken up by a mean person, to be proclaimed in the towns of the county, &c. An action of trover and conversion lies for an hawk reclaimed, and which may be known by her vervels, bells, &c. Hawking for game, see Game.

Hawkers. Those deceitful fellows who went from place to place, buying and selling brass, pewter, and other goods and merchandize, which ought to be utter'd in open market, were of old so called; and the appellation seems to grow from their uncertain wandering, like persons that with hawks seek their game where they can find it. They are mentioned Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 6. and 33 Hen. 8. cap. 4. Hawkers and pedlars, &c. going from town to town, or house to house, are now to pay a fine or duty the King. If they travel with an horse, ass, &c. the same is 2 l. and if on foot, 4 l. and to be licensed by commissioners appointed for that purpose, or be liable to certain penalties; and any person may seize a hawker, &c. till he produce his licence: travelling without licence, shall forfeit 12 l. and refusing to shew their licences 5 l. There is also a forfeiture for lending a licence to hire; and it shall be void. 2 E. 9 W. 3. cap. 21. But traders in the linen and woollen manufactures, lending their goods to markets and fairs, and selling them by wholesale; makers of goods, selling those of their own making; and makers and sellers of hose or bone-lace, going from house to house, &c. are excepted out of the acts, and not to be taken as hawkers. 1 E. 4 Ann. 4. c. 4. If hawkers and pedlars, offer any tea, &c. to sale, tho' they have permits, the same may be seized as forfeited, &c. by the late act against raising uncustomed goods. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. We now call those persons hawkers, who go up and down the streets of London, crying news books and papers, and selling them by retail, and the women and others who sell them by wholesale from the press, are called mercuries. See Gen. 2. c. 26.

Hays, Fr. Hays, A hedge, or inclosure; also a net to take game. See Hain.

Hedge, Is a liberty to take thorns and other wood, to make and repair hedges, gates, fences, &c. either by tenant for life or years; it is also said to be wood, for the making of rakes and forks, with which men in Summer make hay. See Co. Litt. 41. Black. Com. 2 V. 35.

Hay-market. Carts of hay, which stand to be sold in the hay-market, are to pay 3 d. per load towards the paving and amending the street; and shall not stand laden with hay after three o'clock in the afternoon, &c. on pain of forfeiting 5 s. Hay sold in London, &c. between the first of June and the last of August, being new hay is to weigh 60 pounds a truss; and old hay the rest of the year 56 pounds, under the penalty of 2 s. 6 d. for every truss offered to sale, &c. Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 6. 8 & 9 W. 4. See Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 40.

Hayward, (from the Fr. Hays, i. e. sepes, & Garde, Custodia) Is one who keeps a common herd of cattle of a town; and the reason of his being called Hayward may be, because one part of his office is to see that they neither break nor crop the hedges of inclosed grounds, or for that he keeps the grafs from hurt and destruction. He is an officer appointed in the Lord's Court: And is to look to the fields, and impound cattle that do trespass therein; to inspect that no pound breaches be made, and if any be, to prevent them at the leet, &c. Kitch. 46. There may be a custom in a manor, to have a surveyor of the fields or hayward, and for him to distrain cattle damage-feasant; but he must avow in the name of him who hath the freehold. 2 Cro. 430. See Agellarius.

Hazard, Is an unlawful game at dice; and those who play at it are called hazarders: And we read, Hazardor communis ludens ad falsos talos adjudicatur, quod per sex dies in diversis locis ponatur super colliatrigium. Int. Plac. Trin. 2 Hen. 4. Suffex. 10.

Headborough, or Headborough, (from the Sax. Head, caput, & Borge, sive jurissor) Signifies him who is head of the frank-pledge in boroughs; and who had a principal government within his own pledge; as he was called headborough, so he was also stiled boroughhead, borsholder, thirdborough, tithingman, &c. according to the usage and diversity of speech in several places. Lamb. These headboroughs were the chief of the ten pledges; the other nine being denominated handboroughs, or inferior pledges. Headboroughs are now a kind of constables.

Headland, Is the upper part of ground left for the turning of the plough; whence the headway. Paroch. Antiq. 587.

Head-pence, Was an exaction of a certain sum heretofore collected by the sheriff of Northumberland of the inhabitants of that county, without any account therefore to be made to the King; which was abolished by Stat. 23 H 6. c. 7.

Head-silver, Paid to lords of leets. See Common Fin.

Healfang or Hulsfang, Is compounded of two Saxon words Heals, i. e. Collum, and Fang, capere, and signifies that punishment, qua alius collum stringatur, (colliatrigium). Sometime it is taken for a pecuniary mulct, to commute for standing in the pillory; payable to the King or Chief Lord. Leg. H. 1. cap. 11.

Health (Injuria 10.) Injuries affecting a man's health, are where by any unwholesome practices of another a man sustains any apparent damage in his vigour or constitution. As by selling him bad provisions or wine; (1 Roll. Abr. 90.) by the exercise of a noisome trade, which infects the air in his neighbourhood; (9 Rep. 57. Hist. 135.) or by the neglect, or unskilful management, of his physician, surgeon or apothecary. For it hath been solemnly resolved, that mala praxis is a great misdemeanor and offence at Common law, whether it be for curiosity and experiment, or by neglect; because it breaks the trust which the party had placed in his physician, and tends to his destruction. Ld. Raym. 214. These are wrongs or injuries unaccompanied by force, for which there is a remedy in damages, by special action of trespass, in the case. Black. Com. 3 V. 122. As to offences against the public health of the nation, there are various provisions, as with respect to the plague. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31. 26 Geo. 2. c. 6. 29 Geo. 2. c. 8. As to unwholesome provisions. 51 Hen. 3. Stat. 6. Ord. Provisors 5, 7, 12 Car. c. 25, sect. 11.

Heath-money, A tax formerly levied, but now abolished. Vide Chimney-Money.

Hebber-men, Fishermen, or poachers below London Bridge, who fish for whiting, smelts, &c. commonly at ebbing water; mentioned in one of the articles of the Thames jury, at the court of the conservator of the river Thames, printed anno 1632. And these persons are punishable by statute 4 H. 7. c. 15.

Hebbling-wears, Are wears or engines made or laid at ebbing water. 23 H. 8. c. 5.

Hebdomas, (Lat.) A week. See Week.

Hebdomadus, The week's man, canon or prebendary in the cathedral church, who hath the care of the choir, and the officers belonging to it, for his own week. Reg. Epis. Hereford. MS. See Ebdomary.

Heck, Is the name of an engine to take fish in the river Ouse. 23 H. 8. c. 18.

Heccagium, Is supposed to be rent paid to the lord of the fee for liberty to use the engines called Hecks.

Heed, A small haven, wharf, or landing place. Domesd. See Hub.

Heccagium, Toll or customary duties paid at the bish or wharf, for the landing goods, &c. from which exemption was granted by the King to some particular persons and societies. Cartular. Abbat. de Radings. MS. f. 7.

Hedge-bote, Is necessary stuff to make hedges, which the lessee for years, &c. may of common right take in his ground leased. See Hay-bote.

Hedge-breakers. By the statute 43 Eliz. cap. 7. Hedge-breakers, &c. shall pay such damages as a justice of peace shall think fit; and if not able to pay the damages, shall be committed to the constable to be whipped. And constables, and others, may apprehend persons suspected of hedge-stealing, and carry them before a justice; where not giving a good account how they came by wood, &c. they are not only to make such recompence as the justice of peace shall adjudge, but pay a sum not exceeding 10 s. for the use of the poor, or be sent to the house of correction for a month, by 15 Car. 2. c. 2. Persons convicted of buying stolen wood, shall forfeit treble value to him from whom taken. Ibid.

Heir, (Herus, ab Hereditate) Is he ex justis hereditatibus procreatus, who succeeds by descent to lands, tenements and hereditaments, being an estate of inheritance. The estate must be fee, because nothing passeth jure hereditatis but fee; and by the Common law a man cannot be heir to goods and chattels: But the civilians will him heredem, qui ex testamento succedit in universum bonorum.

Under this head may be considered,

I. The several kinds of heirs.

II. Who may be heirs, what persons are excluded from being heirs, and where the word heirs is used to create an inheritance.

III. Where the heir shall take advantage of the conditions, covenants, &c. of his ancestor, which shall go to him, &c. and where the heir shall be bound to the debts and contracts of the ancestor.

I. The several kinds of heirs.

Some writers have made a distinction of heredes sanguinis, & heredes testamenti; a man may be heres sanguinis his father or ancestor, and yet upon displeasure, be debarred of his inheritance: And there is an ultimus heres, being he to whom lands come by escheat, for want of lawful heirs, &c. The lord of whom the lands are held, or the King. Bract. lib. 7. cap. 17. But the most usual division is, that of heir apparent, heir general, heir special, heir by custom, and heir by devise, called heredes factus.

Heir apparent, Is one during the life-time of his ancestor; till the ancestor's death he is only heir apparent, or or at law. 1 Inst. 8. Bonds and bargains with such an heir, to have double or treble the money lent, after his father's death, &c. are set aside in equity; but it is by paying what was lent bona fide, with interest, if the obligor applies for relief; tho' in case the obligee sues, he shall not recover what was really lent; for that would be to assist fraud. 1 Vern. 359. 1 Vern. 141. Where young heirs enter into any bond, Chancery relieves against it, without evidence of actual imposition; because there is a supposition of duress, and presumption of a liability to be imposed on. Barnardist. 481.

Heir general. The heir general or heir at Common law is he who after his father or ancestor's death hath a right to, and is introduced into, all his lands, tenements and hereditaments. But he must be of the whole blood, not a bastard, alien, &c.

None, but the heir general, according to the course of the Common law, can be heir to a warranty, or sue an appeal of the death of his ancestor. Co. Lit. 14. a. Cro. Jac. 217, 218.

If a condition be annexed to Borough English or Gavel-kind lands, and the condition is broken, the heir at Common law shall enter; for the condition is a thing of new creation, and collateral to the land: But when the eldest son enters, the heir or heirs by custom, shall enjoy the land; for by breach of the condition they are restored to their ancient estates. Cro. Eliz. 204. Plow. 28. Co. Lit. 11, 12.

Special heir. Is the issue in tail claiming per formam doni, and as the Statute de donis preserves the estate to him, his ancestor cannot grant or alien, nor make any rightful estate of freehold to another, but for term of his own life. Lit. jess. 613.

Heir by custom. A custom in particular places varying the rules of descent at Common law is good; such as the custom of Gavel-kind, by which all the sons shall inherit, and make but one heir to their ancestor; but the general custom of Gavel-kind lands extends to sons only, but a special custom, that if one brother dies without issue, all his brothers may inherit, is good. Co. Lit. 140.

Heir by devise, or heres factus. is only a devisee of lands, being made, so by the will of the testator, and has no other right or interest than the will gives him. 3 Co. 42.

It has been held in Chancery, that such an heir shall have the aid of the personal estate in discharging the debts of the testator. 1 Vern. 36, 7.

But this must be understood of an heres factus of the whole estate, who shall have the benefit of the personal estate, but a devisee of particular lands shall not. Preced. Chanc. 3.

Likewise there is a limbal heir, as the son of a person; and a collateral heir, as brother, &c. Yet a man can have no right heir, to take lands during his life. Dyer 99.

II. Who may be heir, what persons are excluded from being heirs, and where the word heirs is necessary to create an inheritance.

The eldest son, after the death of his father, is his heir. 1 Inst. 20. And if he be grandfather, father, and son, and the father die before the grandfather, and after the grandfather, the land shall go to the son or daughter of the father, and not to any other children of the grandfather. 1 Inst. 20. And this heir is called heres factus, because he doth represent his father's person: But if in this case, the father die without any child, his next eldest brother shall have the land as heir, or the want of a brother, it descends to the sisters of the father. 1 Inst. 20. A man having issue only a daughter, dies, leaving his wife with child of a son, which is afterwards born; here the son after his birth is heir to the land, but till then the daughter is to have it. 9 H. 6. 23. Per. 251.

There are some persons who may not be heirs; as a bastard born out of lawful wedlock; an alien, born out of the King's allegiance, tho' in wedlock; a man attainted of treason or felony, whose blood is corrupted; these last may not be heirs, propter defectum; and an alien cannot be heir, propter defectum subjectionis; nor may one made alien by letters patent; tho' in otherwise of a person naturalized by act of parliament. Co. Lit. 2. a. Dyer. Abr. 152. A bastard by continuance, may be heir against a stranger; and an hermaphrodite may be heir, and take according to that sex which is most prevalent; but a monster, who hath not human shape cannot be heir, although a person deform'd may. Co. Lit. 7. a. Dyer. 553. Idiots and lunatics, persons excommunicate, attainted in premunire, out-laws in debt, &c. may be heirs. Ibid.

The word heir is not a good description of a person in the life time of the ancestor; and an eldest son shall not take by the name of heir in the life-time of his father. 1 Leon. 70. A man cannot take a fee-simple estate to his right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a purchase, by conveyance or otherwise; but in such case the heir shall be in by descent: Fortius est potestas ut dispositio legis, quam hominis. Hob. 30. 2 Lill. Abr. 12. By the law of England, no person can take to himself an inheritance in fee-simple by deed, without the word heirs; but he may by devise; tho' in cases where the word heir is wanting, it has been adjudged that if there were other words equivalent, and the interest in the thing granted passeth by the consideration only, without any further ceremony in the law, an estate in fee may pass. 2 Nelf. Abr. 928. In a devise by will, or exchange, &c. the word heirs is not necessary; but estates of inheritance which are otherwise conveyed, require it. Jenk. Cent. 196. The word heir is verbum collectivum, and extends unto all heirs: And under heirs, the heirs of heirs are comprehended in infinitum; if lands are given to a man and his heirs, all his heirs are so totally in him, that he may give his lands to whom he will. Trin. 23 Jac. 1. Noy 56.

The heir is favoured by the Common law; and the ancestor could not give away his lands by will from his heir at law, without the consent of the heir, till the Statute 32 H. 8. c. 1. 2 Lill. 11. Hill. 23 Car. B. R. Dubious words in a will shall be construed for the benefit of the heir; and not to disinherit him: And the heir at law is preferred in Chancery in a doubtful case. Noy 185. Chanc. Rep. 7. Where lands were devised to the heirs of J. S. then living; it was held, that his eldest son should have them, though in strictness he was not heir during his father's life, but heir apparent: But this was by reason of the words then living, which made it a description of the person. Preced. Chanc. 57.

III. Where the heir shall take advantage of the conditions, covenants, &c. of his ancestor, what shall go to him, &c. and where the heir shall be liable to the debts and contracts of the ancestor.

Conditions and covenants real, or such as are annexed to estates, shall descend to the heir, and he alone shall take advantage of them. 43 Ed. 3. c. 4. 1 And. 55.

And this is not only where there are express words, but also where there are none; for the law by implication reserves the condition to the heir of the feoffor, &c. for being prejudiced by the disposition, it is but reasonable that he should take the same advantage that his ancestor whom he represents might. 1 Hol. Abr. 407, 472.

If a man seized of lands in right of his wife, makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and dies, and after the condition is broken, the heir of the husband shall enter; for though no right descended to him, yet the title of entry by force of the condition which was created upon the feoffment, and reserved to the feoffor and his heirs, descended. 8 Co. 43. Co. Lit. 202. a. 336. b.

The heir shall take advantage of a nomine pance, for being incident to the rent, it shall descend to the heir, being a security or penalty to engage the payment of the rent; therefore whoever has a right to the rent, ought in reason to have the penalty, which is to oblige the tenant to pay it. Co. Lit. 162. b.

If a man leases for years, and the lessee covenants with the lessor, his executors and administrators, to repair and leave it in good repair at the end of the term, and the lessor dies, &c. his heir may have an action upon this covenant, for this is a covenant which runs with the land, and shall go to the heir, tho' he is not named; and it appears, appears that it was intended to continue after the death of the lessor, inasmuch as his executors, &c. are named. 3 Lev. 92. Lougher ver. Williams. Skin. 305. S. C. cited.

If A. infeoff B. upon condition, that if the heir of A. pays to B. ℥. 20*s.* then he and his heirs may re-enter; this is a good condition, of which the heir of A. may take advantage, and yet A. himself never can. Co. Lit. 214. 6.

Not only land, but rent not due at the death of the ancestor lessor, shall go to the heir; so corn sown by a tenant for years, where his term expires before the corn is ripe; every thing fastened to the freehold, timber-trees, deeds belonging to the inheritance; deer, conies, pigeons, fish, &c. 2 Nell. Abr. 927. An heir shall enforce the administrator to pay debts with personal estate, to preserve the inheritance. Chanc. Rep. 280, 293. If an executor hath assets, he is compellable in equity to redeem a mortgage, for the benefit of the heir; and it is the same where the heir is charged in debt. Hard. 511. And when the heir is sued for the debt of his ancestor, and pays it, he shall be reimbursed by the executor of the obligor, who hath personal assets. 1 Chanc. Rep. 74. But in action of debt brought upon a bond against an heir, 'tis no good plea for the heir to say, that the executors have assets in their hands. Dyer 204. For a creditor may sue either heir or executor, and heirs and executors are both chargeable upon specialties. If an heir hath assets, and the executor also, it is at the election of the obligee to have action of debt against the one, or the other; but he shall not charge them doubly. 2 Plowd. 433. If an heir hath made over lands fallen to him by descent, execution shall be had against him to the value of the land, &c. if it be not sold bona fide before the action brought, in which case there is a saving by the Statute 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 14. And whether the heir hath lands by descent, shall be tried and enquired of, with the value, by a jury, to make the heir answerable. 5 Mod. 122.

Where bound, &c.

As the heir at law is the proper and only person, who can take advantage of conditions, &c. annexed to the real estate; so he shall be bound by all such conditions, &c. which run with the land, whether such conditions were annexed to the estate by the original feoffor, grantor, or immediate ancestor. 1 Rel. Abr. 421.

If a gift be made in tail on condition, that the donee should not discontinue, and the donee hath issue two daughters, and one of them discontinues, the donor shall enter and evict them both, because it was the original condition annexed to the whole estate, that no part of it should be discontinued. Co. Lit. 165.

But note, that neither tenant in tail, nor his issue can be restrained from aliening by fine and recovery, tho' they may be restrained from aliening by feoffment, or other tortious act, which amounts to a discontinuance.

So where one devised lands to A. and the heirs male of his body, provided, that if he does attempt to alien, that then immediately his estate shall cease, and B. shall enter, and A. makes a feoffment in fee, and thereupon B. enters; and it was adjudged against B. and that the condition was void, because non constat what shall be adjudged an attempt, and how it should be tried. 1 Fent. 521. 3 Kebl. 787. Piers and Winn.

Also where a condition is annexed to the estate given to the heir, and which goes in abridgment and restraint thereof, the same shall in some cases be construed a limitation; for if it were a condition, nobody could take advantage of it but the heir. Dyer 316. 10 Co. 41. 1 Fent. 199.

As if a copyholder in Borough English surrenders to the use of his will, and after devises to his wife for life, remainder to his eldest son, paying 40*s.* to each of his brothers and sisters within two years after the death of his wife, &c. this is a limitation, and not a condition; for if it should be a condition, it would extinguish in the heir, and there would be no remedy for the money. Cro. Eliz. 204. Willott and Hammond. 3 Cro. 20-1. 2 Lein.

114. S. C. Visd farther as to the doctrine of the heir being bound, &c. Faugh. 271. 2 Mod. 26. S. C. Cro. Eliz. 833, 919. Moor 644. pl. 891. May 51.

But wherever the ancestor makes a conveyance or disposition on condition, which goes in restraint and abridgment of the estate of the heir, he must have notice of it; for having a good title by descent, he is not obliged to take notice of such condition at his peril, as others must do. 8 Co. France's case.

If the person of the ancestor be bound in respect of his land, which descends to the heir, he shall be charged: as, if by a subsidy to be assessed upon every one having 20*s.* per annum, A. be charged and die; his heir shall pay it, for it runs with the land. R. Mo. 17.

Heir is non collectum; and therefore, if a condition be, that if his heir does not pay such a rent charge, the estate shall go to B. if the heir of the heir does not pay, the condition is broken. R. 2 Cro. 145.

It has been held, that the heir is never chargeable without an express lien and assets; and even then, no longer than he hath assets, for he is not obliged to keep them till he is charged: But if he hath assets, he ought to plead truly, and confess them; otherwise judgment shall be given against him de terris propriis, for 'tis then his debt. Joan. 88. 1 Salk. 179.

When a man recovers against an heir, by default or verdict, on pleading riens per descent, a special judgment de terris defensis, may be entered against the heir, and the plaintiff shall have all the lands by descent in execution; tho' if the judgment be general against the heir, without praying such special judgment, he can only have a moiety of the lands by elegit. Plowd. 439. 2 Lein. 16. Here the plaintiff may surmise, that the heir hath such land by descent, and pray to have execution of all his land. Dyer 149. Roll. 72. The judgment and execution shall be general, unless the heir acknowledge the action, and shews that he hath so much by descent; but if he will not shew what he hath by descent, he loses the benefit of the law. Mich. 1 W. & M. B. R. Cro. Eliz. 692.

If the heir, in case where the ancestor hath bound himself and his heirs, have never so much land come to him by gift in tail, or conveyance of the father, and an ex defect, he is not chargeable at all: and so it is for any estate but what is in fee simple; as where lands are granted to J. S. and his heirs during the life of another, &c. the heir shall not be charged for this, no more than for the land entail'd. 10 Rep. 98. No lands can be charged hæc fee-simple; therefore in a suit against the heir, the judgment is only for the land descended, and not for other lands, &c. but where it is by his own fault, as by a false plea, or the like. 1 Inst. 102, 376.

A man binds himself and his heirs in an obligation, and hath lands and heirs on the part of the father, and the part of the mother; the heirs and lands of both, and not of one alone, must be charged in debt: and the plaintiff shall have several actions; and execution shall stay, till it may be had against both of them. 2 Rep. 25. Hob. 25.

Also if one bind himself and his heirs, and leave land at Common law, and lands in gavelkind; the obligee must sue all the heirs. Hob. 25. An heir sued on a specialty, shall have his age; and if one of the heirs be within age, the parcel shall be stay'd for all. Moor. cap. 203. A collateral heir is chargeable for the debt of his ancestor; but the declaration must be special, and he is to be charged as collateral heir, not as immediate heir; and if a son happens between, who dies, he shall be heir unto and heir of the son, who was heir of the debtor, &c. Co. Car. 151. And a child born, though he lives but an hour, has the fee of lands vested in him as heir. Hecl. 132.

In a writ a man need not shew how he is heir; but he must in a declaration, &c. tho' it is only for form to set forth how a person is heir, because it is not traversable; and heir, or no heir, is issuable. Moor 885. If an heir sought to confess the debt on action brought against him, and the debt be not denied, it must be admitted. 1 Lein. 442.

Debt against the heir, upon the bond of his ancestor, is to be brought in the debet and solvo, because the heir himself is bound; and not in the decies only, tho' that is cured by verdict. Sid. 342. 1 Lev. 224. An heir heir is not bound by the bond of the ancestor, unless he is expressly bound: and if in a bond a man bind his heirs; but not himself, the bond is void. 2 Samsd. 135. Cro. Jac. 570. Also a man shall never bind his heir to warranty, where he himself was not bound: if he make a feoffment in fee, and binds his heirs only to warranty, the feoffment is void, for the heir shall be bound to warranty in such cases only, where the ancestor was bound, without which it cannot descend upon him. 1 Inf. 386. And warranties and covenants shall descend upon the heir general, and not upon any special heir, &c. So that if a man convey land with warranty against him and his heirs, his heir on the mother's part shall not be vouched by this, so long as there is an heir on the father's part. Cr. H. 24.

A grant of an annuity, must be for a man and his heirs, to bind the heir, altho' there be assets; and when he is named, the heir shall not be bound except there be assets. 1 Inf. 144. Where a person covenants with another to perform any act, if his heir be not named, he is not bound by it: but in covenants of others, that concern the inheritance, the heir shall have the benefit of them, tho' not named. 3 Rep. 8. 1 Rel. Abr. 210. An heir may enter for a condition broken, when the condition is annexed to lands, and take advantage of it, because if there had been no condition, the land would have descended to him. And an heir may perform a condition, to save the land. 2 Nels. Abr. 249.

The heir shall not have money due on mortgages in fee, if he be not particularly named, but the executor; and if the day be past, although the heir be named, the executor shall have it. 1 Inf. 210. 2 Year. 348.

As to suing and being sued.

It is clear, that the heir may bring any real action quasi, in right of his ancestor, but cannot regularly bring any personal action, because he has nothing to do with the assets, or personal contracts of his ancestor. Co. Litt. 164. If an erroneous judgment be given against the ancestor, by which he loses the lands, the heir may bring a writ of error. 1 Rel. Abr. 747. Dyer 90. Godb. 337. And if one hath lands on the part of his mother, and loses by erroneous judgment, and dies, the heir of the part of the mother shall have the writ of error. 1 Leach. 261. 2 Str. 56. So the younger son, when entitled to the land by the custom of Borough English, shall bring the writ of error, and not the heir at Common law, for this remedy descends with the land. Covent. 68. 1 Leach. 261. 4 Leach. 5. adjudged; and see Bridg. 71. So if there be an erroneous judgment against tenant in tail female, the issue female, and not the son, shall bring a writ of error. Dyer 90. 1 Leach. 261. 1 Rel. Abr. 747.

So if a man settles land to the use of himself and the heirs of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs, and dies, leaving issue only a daughter, who leaves a son, and dies without issue, and J. S. brings a writ of error as cousin and collateral heir to the daughter, yet he shall never reverse the fine, for there could no right descend to him from the daughter, because she had but an estate tail, which determined by her death without issue; and it does not appear that the remainder in fee was in the daughter as right heir; wherefore J. S. shall not reverse the fine, quia in hoc apparetur quod non existit remanens in fee, especially in a court of judicature, where the judges can take notice of nothing that does not come judicially before them, and appear in the pleading. Dyer 13. Cro. Eliz. 200. 1 Leach. 16.

If J. S. dies seised of land, and his heir, in a bond, and thereupon judgment is obtained against J. S. and J. S. makes his will, and his heir at law succeeds, and dies, leaving lands which descended to his heir; yet he shall not have a writ of error as heir, for he is not party to the judgment; and when an execution is made upon him, it is as tenant, but when the lands are taken in execution, he may have a writ of error. Dyer 24. 10. 10. Rel.

The heir at law may, in right of his ancestor, maintain an action of debt for rent reserved on a lease, made by his ancestor, for the rent is part of the lands, and incident to the reversion; but for arrears of rent incurred in the life-time of the ancestor, neither the heir, nor the executor, could by the Common law maintain an action: for as to the heir, they were considered as part of the personal estate, and as to the executor, he could not represent his testator as to any contracts relating to the freehold and inheritance. 11 H. 6. 15. 19 H. 6. 41. Co. Litt. 262. a. But now by the 32 H. 8. cap. 37. An executor may maintain an action of debt for such arrears; for which see ut Dicit.

If a nobleman, knight, squire, &c. be buried in a church, and have his coat of arms, and pennons with his arms, and such other ensigns of honour as belongs to his degree, set up in the church, or if a grave-stone, or tomb be laid or made, &c. for a monument of him; in that case, about the freehold of the church be in the parson, and that church be annexed to the freehold, yet cannot the parson, or any, take them, or deface them, but he is subject to the heir, and his heirs, in the honour and memory of whose ancestor they were set up. Co. Litt. 18. b. For this see 1 Rel. Abr. 62. Nels. 104. Godb. 200. Cro. Jac. 167. 2 Bull. 151.

Where the ancestor binds himself, and his heirs, in an obligation, the obligee may sue the heir, or executor, or the administrator of the executor, at his election, and may have execution of the land descended to the heir; for the Common law having allowed illustration of debt against the heir, he could have no benefit by the action, unless he were permitted to have execution of the lands which descended to the heir. Plow. 241. 3 Co. 12. a. Cro. Jac. 210. 1 And. 7.

But the body of the heir is protected, for it would be most unreasonable to subject the heir to the payment of his ancestor's debts, any farther than to the value of the assets descended. Dyer 21. 11. Co. 207. 11. 15. Minor 11. 207. Co. Litt. 103. 290.

Also the heir must be expressly named, otherwise he is not chargeable, and the reason why the heir is not chargeable in this case, as the executor in case of a bond entered into by the testator, without being named, is this; by the Common law only the goods and chattels of the debtor, and the annual profits of the land as they arose, and not the land itself, were liable to execution for debt or damages, because these being the security the creditor depended upon, they were liable in the hands of his representative or executor, as well as in the hands of the debtor himself; hence it was, that the executor was bound by the debt of the testator, so far as he had chattels or assets, tho' he was not named in the contract; but the land was not liable to execution, because it was preserved from the personal contracts and engagements of the tenant, that he might be the better able to answer the feudal duties to the lord, which were the life and support of government; therefore the land not being originally liable to the demand in the hands of the obligor, must be much less liable in the hands of the heir, who was not comprehended in the contract. 2 Bull. 19. Plowd. 440. Hob. 60.

But if J. S. had granted, for him and his heirs, to B. and his heirs, such a rent out of his lands; in this case, the heir, being comprehended in the contract, are bound to make good the grant, so far as they have assets by descent from the grantor; and this was allowed at Common law, because the grantee of the rent had the land originally in view for his security; and by the grant itself having it in his power to distrain the land for the rent, it was equal to the heir, whether the land answer the rent by distress, or by an execution upon a judgment in a writ of annuity. 1 Rel. Abr. 228. Popple 87. Hob. 58. Dyer 344. b. Co. Litt. 114. a.

If the ancestor bind himself in a statute, recognizance, &c. the heir is liable, not only as tenant, but also as heir, otherwise he could not have his age; and cannot charge a purchaser, whether for valuable consideration, or without, to contribute, but one heir may oblige another to contribute, as if a man seized of two acres, the one tenant, according to the course of the Common law, the other in Borough English, acknowledge a statute, &c. the heir at law shall oblige the Borough English as contributor; so one coparcener shall oblige the other to contribute; or if the conxor had lands, some descendible descendible to the heirs of the father, and some descendible on the heirs of the mother, the heir on the part of the father shall compel the heir on the part of the mother to contribute; Et sic vice versa. 3 Co. 12. Sir William Herbert's case.

By the Common law, if the heir before an action brought against him had aliened the assets, the obligor was without any remedy; but if he only aliened, hanging the writ, the lands, which he had by descent at the time of the original purchased, had been liable. Co. Lit. 102.

In consequence of this doctrine, that the lien shall have relation to the time of the original purchased, it hath been adjudged, that if there had been two creditors to J. S. whose heir is bound, viz. A. and B. and A. files an original in C. B. and hath judgment thereon, Trin. Term. 2 Jac. 2. by default, and thereupon a general elegit issues against all the lands of the heir, and a moiety thereof is delivered to A. B. on a bill filed in B. R. 1 & 2 Jac. 2. has a special judgment against the assets confess'd by the heir, Trin. Term. 3 Jac. 2. tho' B.'s judgment be subsequent to A.'s, yet it appearing that his bill or original was filed before A.'s, the judgment shall have relation thereto, therefore he must be first satisfied. Carth. 245.

So it seems in the above case, that tho' A.'s judgment had been on an original actually filed before B.'s, that B. must have been preferred, because his judgment was general against the heir, and the execution a general and common execution by elegit, and not against the assets only by way of extent; therefore such a general judgment will not operate by way of relation to the original, but binds only, as in common cases, from the time of the judgment given. Carth. 246. Per Cur'.

But now, in relief of creditors against the alienation of lands descended, &c. by the 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 14. it is enacted, "That in all cases, where any heir at law shall be liable to pay the debt of his ancestor, in regard of any lands, tenements or hereditaments descending to him, and shall sell, alien, or make over the same, before any action brought or process sued out against him, that such heir at law shall be answerable for such debt or debts, in an action or actions of debt to the value of the said land so by him sold, aliened, or made over; in which cases all creditors shall be preferred, as in actions against executors and administrators, and such execution shall be taken out upon any judgment or judgments so obtained against such heir to the value of the said land; as if the same were his own proper debt or debts; saving that the lands, tenements and hereditaments bona fide aliened before the action brought, shall not be liable to such execution."

But it is by the act provided, That where any action of debt upon any specialty is brought against any heir, he may plead riens per descent at the time of the original writ brought, or the bill filed against him. And the plaintiff in such action may reply, that he had lands, tenements or hereditaments from his ancestor before the original writ brought, or the bill filed: and if, upon issue joined thereupon, it be found for the plaintiff, the jury shall inquire of the value of the lands, tenements or hereditaments, so descended, and thereupon judgment shall be given, and execution shall be awarded as aforesaid: but if judgment be given against such heir, by confession of the action without confessing the assets descended, or upon demurrer, or nihil dicit, it shall be for the debt and damages, without any writ to inquire of the lands, tenements or hereditaments so descended.

It is not improper to observe, that, before this act, if the ancestor had devised away the lands, a creditor by specialty had no remedy either against the heir, or devisee. Abr. Eg. 149.

But now, to provide against that mischief, it is, by the same statute enacted; "That all wills and testaments, limitations, dispositions, or appointments, of or concerning any manors, messuages, lands, tenements or hereditaments, or of any rent, profit, term, or charge out of the same, whereof any person or persons at the time of his, her, or their decease shall be seized in fee-simple, possession, reversion or remainder, or have power to dispose of the same by his, her, or their last wills or testaments, shall be deemed and taken (only as against such creditor or creditors as aforesaid, his, her, and their heirs, successors, executors, administrators and assigns, and every of them,) to be fraudulent, and clearly, absolutely, and utterly void, frustrate, and of none effect; (any pretence, colour, feigned or presumed consideration, or any other matter or thing to the contrary notwithstanding.)"

And that such creditors may be enabled to recover their debts, it is further enacted, "That in the cases before mentioned, every such creditor, shall and may have and maintain his, her, and their action and actions of debt upon his, her, and their said bonds and specialties, against the heir and heirs at law of such obligor or obligors, and such devisee or devisees jointly, by virtue of this act; and such devisee or devisees shall be liable and chargeable for a false plea by him or them pleaded, in the same manner as any heir should have been for false plea by him pleaded, or for not confessing the lands or tenements to him descended."

It is however, by this act further provided, That where there hath been, or shall be, any limitation or appointment, devise or disposition of, or concerning, any manors, messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments for the raising or payment of any real or just debt or debts, or any portion or portions, sum or sums of money, for any child or children of any person, other than the heir at law, according to, or in pursuance of any marriage contract, or agreement in writing bona fide made, before such marriage, the same, and every of them, shall be in full force, and the same manors, messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, shall and may be holden and enjoyed by every such person or persons, his, her, and their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for whom the said limitation, appointment, devise, or disposition was made, and by his, her, and their trustee or trustees, his, her, and their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for such estate or interest, as shall be so limited, or appointed, devised or disposed, until such debt or debts, portion or portions shall be raised, paid and satisfied."

And it is further enacted, "That all and every devisee and devisees, made liable by that act, shall be liable and chargeable in the same manner as the heir at law, by force of the act, notwithstanding the lands, tenements and hereditaments to him or them devised, shall be aliened before the action brought."

In the construction of this statute it hath been holden, that tho' a man is prevented thereby from defeating his creditors by will, that yet any settlement or disposition he shall make in his life time of his lands, whether voluntary or not, will be good against bond creditors; for that was not provided against by the statute, which only took care to secure such creditors from any imposition, which might be supposed in a man's last sickness; but if he gave away his estate in his life-time, this prevented the descent of so much to the heir, consequently took away their remedy against him, who was only liable in respect of the lands descended; and as a bond is no lien whatsoever on lands in the hands of the obligor, much less can it be so, when they are given away to a stranger. Abr. Eg. 149.

As to the manner of pleading and replying under this statute, vide the case of Kelshew and Hightor, Carth. 35. and 5 Mod. 122. S. C.

It seems that neither before, nor since, this statute, the executor or administrator of the deft. are liable, for the person of the deft. is not chargeable, but with respect to the land; and if before the statute, the heir had aliened before action brought, he should not be charged for the profits he received; which is evident from the plea of riens per descent the day of the writ purchased: much less could his executor, nor can he yet, unless some statute make him so: for an executor is but in nature of a trustee for the personally, and not at all privy to the inheritance. Trin. 31 Car. 2. In C. B. adjudged. 3 Nemo Abr. 28.

If there be judgment in debt against two, and one dies, a fi. fac. lies against the other alone, reciting the death, and he cannot plead that the deft. of him who is dead has assets by descent, and demand judgment if he ought to be charged alone: for at Common law, the charge upon a judgment being personal survived, and the statute of W. 2. that gives the elegit, does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at Common law, therefore the party may take out his execution which way he pleases; for the words of the statute are fit in electionibus: but if he should, after the allowance of the writ, and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by suggestion, or else by audita querela. 1 Lev. 30. Raym. 26. 1 Keb. 92. 8. C.

As to a sequestration, and to shew that a decree shall have the same authority to bind the personal assets, as a judgment at law, and therefore shall go pari passu to be paid off and discharged, Vide 1 Vern. 143. 3 Lev. 355. 2 Kerr. 37. 89-9.

With respect to assets, &c.

Where the ancestor binds himself and his heirs, all his lands of freehold, and which descend in fee-simple, are assets by descent, and shall be liable, as far as they extend, to answer the ancestor's obligations. See Bra. tit. Assets, Fit. tit. Assets. 1 Rol. Abr. 269. tit. Assets. A reversion after a lease for years made by the ancestor is present assets, so that the heir cannot plead rems. per dissent in delay of execution of the rent and reversion, tho' the plaintiff cannot have benefit of the reversion till the lease be determined. 1 Salk 354-5. Forsk. 44. 2 Mod. 50-51. Horn's Plead. 320.

So a reversion expectant upon the determination of an estate for life is quasi assets, and ought to be pleaded specially by the heir, and the plaintiff in such case may take judgment of it cum acciderit. Carth. 129. per Holt. But a reversion in fee expectant upon an estate-tail is not assets, because it lies in the will of the tenant in tail to dock and bar it at his pleasure. 6 Co. 58. 1 Rol. Abr. 269.

If A. hath issue B.; and C. and conveys lands to the use of himself for life, the remainder to B. in tail male, the remainder to his own right heirs, and A. dies, and the reversion descend to B. his son, and B. dies seised, and the reversion descends to his son, who dies without issue, so that the tail is spent, and C. enters, these lands shall be assets to answer the debt of his father. Carth. 127. 3 Lev. 286. 3 Mod. 253. S. C.

The lands, (as hath been observed,) must descend to the heir; and therefore it was formerly held, that if he took by purchase, as if the testator devised them to him, paying so much, or if he devised lands to one of the two, and his heirs at law jointly, that those lands were not assets; but if he devised one part to A. another to B. and another to his heir at law, this third part was assets. Cro. Elin. 431. 2 Mod. 286.

By the statute of frauds and perjuries (29 Car. 2. c. 3.) it is enacted, That if lands come to the heir by reason of a special occupancy, they shall be chargeable in his hands as assets by descent, as in cases of lands in fee-simple, and in case there be no special occupancy thereof, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and shall be assets in their hands. Also by the said statute, par. 10. & 11, where lands are settled in trust, and descend in fee to the heir of testator que trust, the same shall be assets in the same manner as lands in possession, but he shall not, by reason of any plea or other matter, be chargeable to pay the condemnation out of his own estate. Vide 2 Vern. 143.

An equity of redemption of an inheritance is assets, for the heir having a right in equity, that ought in equity to be liable to satisfy a bond debt. 1 Comm. 64. 148. Tenant in tail suffers a recovery to let in a mortgage of 500 years, then surrenders the land to the old uses, and makes his will, and devises all his lands for the payment of his debts; the redemption was limited to him, his heirs and assigns; and the court thought that the equity of redemption of this mortgage, should be assets to satisfy creditors, as a subsequent grantee of an annuity. Preced. Chan. 39. 40. 41. and 42. A right without any estate in possession, reversion or remainder is not assets till it be recovered and reduced into possession. 6 Co. 58. For more learning on this subject, see 14 Vin. Abr. and 2 New Abr. tit. Heir.

Heir-loom, (From the Sax. Heir, i. e. Heris, & Loome, Membrum) Comprehends divers implements of household, such as the first best bed and other things, which by the custom of some countries have belonged to a house certain descents, and are never inventoried after the decease of the owner as chattels, nor do they go to the executor, but accrue to the heir with the house itself by custom, and not by the Common law: these are not devisable by testament; for the law prefers the custom before a devise, which takes not effect till after the death of the testator, and then they are vested in the heir by the custom. Co. Litt. 18, 185. But sale in a man's life-time might make it otherwise. The ancient jewels of the crown are heir-looms, and shall descend to the next successor; and are not devisable by will. Ibid. 185. And heir-loom is general are said to extend to all large household implements; of which Spelman says thus: Omnia utensilia robustius quod ab antibus non facile revellitur, ideoque ex more quorundam locorum ad heredem transit, tanquam membrum hereditatis. And Sir Edw. Coke says, Conjecturae hundredi de Stratford in com. Oxon est, quod Heredes testamentorum post mortem antecessorum suorum habebunt, &c. principalium, Anglice an Heir-loom, viz. de quodam genere catallorum, utagrum, &c. Optimum plaustrum, optimam carucam, optimum cithum, &c. Co. Litt. 18.

It is said, that the word by time hath a more general signification than at first it did bear, comprehending all implements of household, as tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscot, and such like: which, by the custom of some countries, having belonged to a house during certain descents, as before mentioned.

Herbage, (herbagium) Is the green pasture and fruit of the earth, provided by nature for the bite or food of cattle: it is also used for a liberty that a person hath to feed his cattle in the ground of another person; or in the forest, &c. Crompt. Jurisd. 197.

He that hath herbage of a forest by patent may have trespass for the grass, but not for trees or the fruit of them; and he may take beasts damage-ferant, and have quare clausum fregit, and by such grant may inclose the forest. D. 285. b. pl. 40. Grantee of herbage may inclose, and may have action of trespass quare clausum fregit. Arg. Trin. 21 Jac. B. R. 2 Roll. R. 356 cites D. 285. But tho' he that hath herbage may inclose, yet he that hath reasonable herbage cannot. Ibid.

Grantee of herbage of a park cannot dispark it. Arg. Godb. 419. A lease was made of a manor with all gardens, orchards, yards, &c. and with all the profits of a wood, excepting to lessor 40 acres, to take at his pleasure; per Dyer. The wood is not comprized within the lease, but the lessee shall only have the profits, as pagnage, herbage, &c. 21 Elin. in C. B. 4 Lr. 8.

fol. 760. Habet Rex, &c. unum jugum de ora & unum jugum de herce.

Herca, The same with herce; it signifies also a candlestick set up in churches, made in the form of an harrow, in which many candles were placed. Die sepulture & die mensis, & pro corpore s^{an}cto, i. e. Conceptionis, ann hercia, i. e. Candelabre in hercia modum confecta, which was filled with candles, and placed ad caput cenotaphii.

Herclage, (from the French hercer, to harrow) Achant & herciabant ad cariam Domini, i. e. they did plough and harrow at the manor of the Lord. 4 Inst. fol. 270.

Herdelich, or Herdelwic, (Herdelwyche.) A grange or place for cattle and husbandry. Et unum herdelwytham apud Helbecum in Pace, &c. Mon. Angl. 3 part.

Herdelich, Herdelich, Herdsman's work, or customary labours done by the shepherds, herdsman, and other inferior tenants at the will of their lord. Cocwell, edit. 1727. Regist. Eccles. Christi Cant. MS.

Herdbannum, (Sax. Heru, exercitus, & Ban edictum, mulda) A mulct, for not going armed into the field, when called forth. Spelm. Under the feudal policy, every free man, was under an obligation to serve the state. If upon being summoned into the field, any free-man refused to obey, a full herdbannum, i. e. A fine of sixty crowns, was to be exacted from him, according to the law of the Franks. This fine was levied with such rigor, that if any person was insolvent, he was reduced to servitude, and continued in that state until such time as his labour should amount to the value of the herdbannum. The Emperor Lotharius rendered the penalty more severe, by confiscating the goods of the person refusing, and banishing him. Robertson's Hist. Emp. Char. V. 1 P. 216, 217.

Herdbott, (From the Sax. Heru, and Bode a messenger) The King's edict commanding his subjects into the field from the Saxon heru, exercitus, and bode, a messenger. Cocwell.

Hereditaments, (Hereditamenta) Signify all such immovable things, whether corporeal or incorporeal, which a man may have to him and his heirs by way of inheritance; and which, if they are not otherwise devised, descend to him that is next heir, and fall not to the executor as chattels do. 32 Hien. 8. cap. 2. It is a word of very great extent, comprehending whatever may be inherited or come to the heir; be it real, personal or mixed, and tho' it is not holden, or lieth not in tenure. Co. Lit. 6. 16. And by the grant of hereditaments in conveyances, manors, houses, and lands of all sorts, rent, services, advowsons, &c. pass. Ibid. Hereditamentum est omne quod jure hereditario ad heredem transit. Coke.

Hereditamenta corporea (according to judge Doderidge.) are revenues local, and of annual value. Hist. of Wales, fol. 90.

A condition is without question an hereditament. 3 Rep. 2. b. Trin. 25 Elin. in the Marquis of Winchester's case. Writ of error is an hereditament, but by the Common law cannot be forfeited or escheat. 3 Rep. 2. b. C.

Uses were hereditaments; for this shall be passisse jureis; but condition or use were not forfeitable at Common law. 3 Rep. 2. b. in the Marquis of Winchester's case. See farther 2 Black. Com. 17.

Hereditary right. According to Blackstone, the grand fundamental maxim upon which the jur coronæ, or right of succession to the throne of these kingdoms, depends; he takes to be this, "That the crown is, by Common law, and constitutional custom, hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself; but that the right of inheritance may from time to time be changed or limited by act of parliament; under which limitations the crown still continues hereditary." See the Commentaries. 1 P. 191, &c.

Herellus, or Herella, or Herellus. Denotes a hired soldier, that departs without licence, derived from the Saxon here, exercitus, and stien, to depart, according to C. 4 Inst. fol. 128.

Heresy. (Haeresis.) Among Protestants, is said to be a false opinion repugnant to some point of doctrine clearly revealed in scripture, and either absolutely essential to the Christian faith, or at least of most high importance. 1 Hawk. P. C. 3.

Anciently, under the general name of heresy there have been comprehended three sorts of crimes; 1. Apostasy, when a Christian apostatizes to Paganism. 2. Witchcraft. 3. Formal heresy, which seems to be an apostasy from the established religion; for which, and the several ways of determining, punishing, and the difference between the Civil and Imperial laws, Popish canons, and the laws of England concerning heresy, see a large account in 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 383 to 410.

It seems difficult precisely to determine what error shall amount to heresy, and what not; but the statute 1 Eliz. cap. 1. which erected the high commission court, having restrained it to such as are either determined by scripture, or by one of the 4 first general councils, or by some other council, by express words of scripture, or by parliament, with the assent of the convocation; these rules are at present generally thought the best directions concerning this matter. 1 Hawk. P. C. 3. 4.

By the Common law with us, the convocation of the clergy or provincial synod, might and frequently did proceed to the sentencing of hereticks, and when convicted, left them to the secular power, whereupon the writ of haeretico comburendo might issue. Bro. tit. Heresy. 2 Roll. Abr. 226.

It is also agreed, that every bishop may convict persons of heresy within his own diocese, and proceed by church censures against those who shall be convicted; but it is said, that no spiritual judge, who is not a bishop, hath this power; and it has been questioned, whether a conviction before the ordinary were a sufficient foundation whereon to ground the writ of haeretico comburendo, as it is agreed that a conviction before the convocation was. F. N. B. 269. 12 Co. 56, 57. 3 Inst. 40. Glaf. Ceder 401. 1 Hawk. P. C. 4. State Trials, Vol. 2. 275.

Lord Ch. Jus. Hale seems to be of opinion, that if the diocesan convict a man of heresy, and either upon his refusal to abjure, or upon a relapse, decree him to be delivered over to the secular power; and this being signified under the seal of the ordinary into Chancery, the King might thereupon by special warrant command a writ of haeretico comburendo to issue, tho' this were a matter that lay in his discretion to grant, suspend, or refuse, as the case might be circumstantiated. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 392.

But it seems agreed, that regularly the temporal courts have no consueance of heresy, either to determine what it is, or to punish the heretick as such, but only as a disturber of the publick peace; that therefore, if a man be proceeded against as an heretick in the spiritual court, pro salute anime, and think himself aggrieved, the proper remedy is to bring his appeal to a higher ecclesiastical court, and not to move for a prohibition, from a temporal one. 27 H. 2. 14. 5. 5 Co. 58. Hob. 216.

Yet a temporal judge may incidentally take knowledge whether a tenet be heretical or not; as where one was committed by Juries of a H. 4. cap. 5. for saying, that he was not bound by the law of God to pay tithes to the curate; another for saying, that tho' he was excommunicated before men, yet he was not so before God; the temporal courts on an habeas corpus in the 6th case, and an action of false imprisonment in the other, adjudged neither of the points to be heresy within that statute, for the King's courts will examine all things which are ordained by statute. 3 Inst. 42. 1 Roll. Rep. 110. 2 Bull. 300.

Also in quare impedit, if the bishop plead that he refused the clerk for heresy, it seems that he must set forth the particular point, that it may appear to be heretical to the court wherein the action is brought. 5 Co. 58. 1 And. 191. 3 Leon. 199. 3 Lev. 314.

By the Common law, one convicted of heresy, and refusing to abjure it, or falling into it again after he abjured it, might be burnt by force of the writ of haeretico comburendo, which issued out of Chancery upon a certificate of such conviction; but he forfeited neither lands nor goods, because the proceedings against him were only pro salute anime. F. N. B. 269. 3 Inst. 43. Doctor and Student, lib. 2. cap. 29. 1 Hawk. P. C. 4. 5.

But at this day the said writ of haeretico comburendo is abolished by 29 Car. 2. cap. 9. and all old statutes, that gave a power to arrest or imprison persons for heresy, or introduced any forfeiture on that account, are repealed; yet by the Common law, an obstinate heretick being excommunicate is still liable to be imprisoned by force of the writ of excommunicato capiende, till he make satisfaction to the church. 12 Co. 44. 1 Hawk. P. C. 5.

By the 9 & 10 W. 3. cap. 32. If any person having been educated in, or made profession of the Christian religion within this realm, shall be convicted of denying any of the persons in the Holy Trinity, &c. or of denying the truth of the Christian religion, &c. he shall for the first offence be adjudged incapable of any office; for the second disabled to sue any action, or to be a guardian, executor or administrator, or to take by any legacy or deed of gift, or to bear any office civil or military, or benefice ecclesiastical, for ever, and shall also suffer imprisonment for three years, without bail or mainprize. Vide ex libet subject, 14 Vin. Abr. and 3 New Abr. tit. Heresy. See tit. Haeretico comburendo, and Black. Com. 4 P. 44.

Heretick. (Haereticus.) is one that adheres to, and is convicted of heresy, or that maintains any opinions or principles contrary to the Christian religion; And a person is not an heretick by doing a thing condemned or forbidden by the gospel; but by an obstinate adherence to an opinion, opposite to some article of the Christian faith. Heretum. A sort of garment is called, Cowell.

Heretum. (Haereticus.) is in the Sax. language, hollum, apud, derivat from here, &c. exercitus, an army, and egen, gaus, fusi, & effusi, quasi fuerit quid in curritum erigatum; and signified originally a tribute given to the lord of a manor for his better preparation for war. By the laws of Canutus, at the death of the great men of this realm, so many horses and arms, were to be paid as they were in their respective life-times, obliged to keep for the King's service. Spelm. Sir Edw. Coke makes heriot, or herogas, (from heras lord) the lord's beast: And it is now taken with us for the best beast, whether it be horse, ox, or cow, that the tenant dies possessed of, due and payable to the lord of the manor; and in some manors, the best goods, piece of plate, &c. Kitch. 133. According to Blackstone, heriots are agreed to be a Danish custom. Com. 2. V. 97. and for ib. 422. See Post.

We must observe, that there is

Heriot Service, and Heriot Custom.

Heriot-service is payable on the death of tenant in fee simple; and heriot-custom upon the death of tenant for life: when a tenant holds by service to pay a heriot at the time of his death, which service is expressed, and especially reserved in the deed of feoffment, this is heriot-service; and where heriots have been customarily paid time out of mind, after the death of tenant for life, this is heriot-custom. Co. Litt. 185.

Heriots for custom are commonly paid for copyhold estates; and if an heriot is reserved upon a lease, it is heriot-service, and incident to the reversion. Lanes. 1366. 1367. For a heriot goes with the reversion, as well as rent; and the grantee of the reversion shall have it. a Saund. 166.

Although an heriot reserved upon a lease is called an heriot service; yet it is not like the case where a man holds land by the service of paying an heriot, &c. because where a heriot is reserved on lease, the proper remedy is either a distress, or action of covenant grounded on the contract; for the lessor cannot seize, as the lord of a manor may do, the best of his tenant who holds of him by heriot-service. Kitch. 82, 84. See Post.

There may be a covenant in leases for lives, &c. to render the best beast, or so much money for an heriot, at the election of the lessor; in which case the lessor must give notice which he will accept, before action may be brought for it, or a distress taken, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 19. For heriot-service, the lord may distress any beast belonging to the tenant on the land: After it has been held, that the lord may distress any man's beasts which are upon the land; and retain them until an heriot is satisfied. 1 Inst. 185. Lev. Rep. 38. And if the tenant devest away all his goods, &c. yet the lord shall have his heriot on the death of the tenant. Stat. 13 Elix. cap. 5. For heriot-custom, the lord is to seize, not distress; and he may seize the best beast, &c. though out of the manor, or in the King's highway, because he claims it as his proper goods, by the death of the tenant, which he may find in any place where he finds it. Kitch. 267. 2 Inst. 132. 2 Nels. Abr. 931. See Black. Com. 37. 15.

The lord may properly seize for heriot custom, and take a distress for heriot-service: And for heriot custom, he may seize any where; but for heriot-service, on the land only: though it has been adjudged, that a heriot custom or service, may be seized any where; but one cannot distress for them out of the manor. Plowd. 66. Kitch. 84. 1 Salk. 396. Where a woman marries and dies, the lord shall have no heriot custom, because a feme covert can have no goods to pay as a heriot. 2 Lam. 239. And when a heriot is to be paid by a woman life of his own goods, an assignee is not liable to pay the heriot; his goods not being the goods of such life. Co. Car. 313. 2 Nels. 934. If the lord purchase part of the tenancy, heriot custom is extinguished; but it is not so of heriot-service. 3 Nels. 100. There is this difference between heriot and relief; heriot has been generally a personal, and relief always a real service.

It appears not only from Spelman's conjectures, but likewise from the laws themselves of King Canutus, that the Danes were the first inventors of heriots; and that it was a political institution of theirs, whereby the Danish tenants were to hold by military service; and their arms and horses at their deaths to revert to the publick; and by that means putting the whole strength and defence of the kingdom into their hands, committing only the affairs of agriculture, and the improvement of the nation to the English, though they thereby enjoyed greater freedom and immunities in their tenures than the Danish tenants. Spelm. 287.

As to the several kinds of heriots, some are due by custom, some by tenure, and some by reservation on deeds executed within time of memory; those due by custom, are the most frequent, and arose by the contract or agreement of the lord and tenant, in consideration of some benefit or advantage accruing to the tenant, and for which an heriot as the best beast, best piece of household furniture, &c. became due, and belonged to the lord either on the death or alienation of the tenant, and which the lord may seize either within the manor or without at his election. Dyer. 199. b. Bro. tit. Heriot 2, 3.

It seems to have been always agreed, that for an heriot custom the lord might seize the best beast of the tenant, or what ever else was due as an heriot, wherever he could find it. Bro. tit. Heriot 2, 3. Kitch. 84.

It hath been solemnly adjudged, that for an heriot-service, or for a heriot reserved by way of tenure, the lord may either seize or distress; for when the tenant agrees that the lord shall on his death have the best beast, &c. the lord hath his election which beast he will take, and by seizing thereof reduces that to his possession, wherein he had a property at the death of the tenant, without the concurring act of any other person; and it is not like the case where the lessor reserves heriot 20 s. or a robe, for there the lessee has his election which he will pay, and being to do the first act, the lord cannot seize, but must distress. Plowd. 66. adjudged. Cro. Eliz. 209.

Altho' though the lord may either seize or distress for an heriot-service, yet he can only seize the proper beasts of the tenant; but he may distress any man's beasts which are upon the land, and retain them until the heriot be paid. Cro. Car. 269.

So it hath been ruled, that for a heriot custom or service the lord may seize as well as the manor as one; but if he distress, it must be in the manor. 1 Salk. 396. per cur. 1 Show. 84. S. P. 3 Mod. 231. S. P. arguendo.

But it is said, that this liberty must be understood to be annexed to ancient tenures, on which the lords had many privileges, and not to be extended to those which are created within time of memory, upon particular reservations. *Wile 1 Show. 81. 3 Mod. 231. Hexam and Hexamshire, Anciently bagasland, was a county of itself, and likewise a bishoprick, endowed with great privileges: but by the Stat. 14 Elin. c. 13. it is enacted, that Hexam and Hexamshire, shall be within and accounted part of the county of Northumberland. 4 Inst. 22.

Hidage, (hydageum) Was an extraordinary tax, payable to the King for every hide of land. Bracton writes of it thus: Sunt etiam quedam communis possessiones, quas servitia non dicuntur, nec de consuetudine veniant, nisi cum necessitas interveniat, vel cum Rex venerit; sicut sunt Hida-gia, Coragia, & Carvagia, &c. consensu communi totius regni introducta &c. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 6. This taxation was levied not only in money, but provision of armour, &c. And when the Danes landed at Sandwich, in the year 994. King Ethelred taxed all his lands by hides, so that every 310 hides found one ship furnished; and every 8 hides found one jack and one saddle, to arm for the defence of the kingdom, &c. Sometimes the word hidage was used for the being quit of that tax; which was also called hidgild, and interpreted from the Saxo, a price or ransom paid to save one's skin or hide from beating. *Sax. Others call it Mansum, Manentem, Calatam, Carucratam, Sulhagam, &c. Crompton, in his Jurisdicc. f. 222, says, a hide of land contains one hundred acres, and eight hides make a knight's fee. Hidum autem Anglice vocatur terra unius aratri cultura sufficiens per annum. On Litt. fol. 69. The distribution of England by hides of land is very ancient; for there is mention of them in the laws of King Ina, cap. 14. Henricus 1. maritanda filia sua erat imperatori, cepit ab unaquaque hida Anglie tres fol. Spelman. Higway, (Via Regia) is a passage for the King's people, for which reason it is called the King's Higway. Under this head we shall treat,

I. Of the various sorts of higways, &c.

II. Of the right to, the claiming, and changing of ways.

III. Of repairs.

IV. Of the assessment for those purposes, and of day work.

V. Of offences, of various sorts.

VI. Of prosecuting persons, guilty of offences, relative to the highways, and of the general doctrine as to indictments, &c.

VII. Of turnpike roads.

I. Of the various sorts of higways, &c.

It seems that anciently there were but four higways in England, which were free and common to all the King's subjects, and thro' which they might pass without any toll, unless there was a particular consideration tion for it; all others, which we have at this day, are supposed to have been made thro' the grounds of private persons, &c. a writ of ad quod damnum, &c. which being an injury to the owner of the soil, it is said that they may prescribe for toll without any special consideration. 3 New Abr. 54. 1 Mod. 231. 2 Mod. 143.

There are, (says Lord Coke,) three kinds of ways: 1. A foot-way, called in Latin iter. 2. A pack and prime-way, which is both a horse and foot-way, called in Latin actus. 3. A cart-way, called in Latin vias or actus, which contains the other two, and also a cart-way, and is called vias regia, if it be common all men; and communis strata, if it belong only to some town or private person. Co. Lit. 56. n.

But notwithstanding these distinctions, it seems that any of the said ways which is common to all the King's subjects, whether it lead directly to a market-town or only from town to town, may properly be called a highway; that any such cart-way may be called the King's highway; that a river common to all men may also be called a highway; and that nuisances in any of the said ways are punishable by indictment; otherwise they would not be punished at all: for they are not actionable unless they cause a special damage to some particular person; because if such action would lie, a multiplicity of suits would ensue. But it seems, that a way to a parish-church, or to the common fields of a town, or to a village, which terminate there, may be called a private way, because it belongs not to all the King's subjects, but only to the particular inhabitants of such parish, house or village, each of which, as it seems, may have an action for a nuisance therein. Palm. 389. Cro. Eliz. 63, 664. 1 Vent. 189, 208. 3 Keb. 28. Co. Lit. 56. 6 Mod. 255. 1 Hawk. P. C. 201.

If passengers have used time out of mind, when the roads are bad, to go by outlets on the land adjoining to a highway in an open field, such outlets are parcel of the highway; and therefore if they are sown with corn, and the tract foundrous, the King's subjects may go upon the corn. 1 Roll. Abr. 390. Cro. Car. 366. S. C.

Tho' every highway is said to be the King's, yet this must be understood so as that in every highway the King and his subjects may pass and repass at their pleasure. But the freehold, and all the profits, as trees, &c. belong to the lord of the soil, or to the owner of the lands on both sides of the way. Also the lord or owner of the soil shall have an action of trespass for digging the ground. But the lord of a rape, within which there are ten hundreds, may prescribe to have all the trees growing within an highway within this rape, tho' the manor or soil adjoining belongs to another; for usage to take the trees is a good mark of ownership. 1 Roll. Abr. 392. 1 Brownl. 42. Kebw. 141.

II. Of the right to, claiming, and changing of highways, &c.

A man may have a way either by prescription or grant, by reservation, by implication, or by owelty of partition, and shall not in a cur. claudend. be obliged to shew which way he claims it; but it will be sufficient for him to alledge debit & filer, &c. but in a bar or replication he must shew his title precisely. 1 Vent. 274. 1 Low. 148. 3 Keb. 528, 531. St. John v. Moody. But he who prescribes for a way, must shew in certain whether it is a foot, horse, or cart-way. Pol. 163. adjudged upon demurrer.

But it seems, that if a man hath a way for carriages from D. to Blackacre over my close, and after he purchases land adjoining to Blackacre, he cannot use the said way with carriages to the land adjoining, for then it may be very prejudicial to my close; but it seems, if I will help myself, I must shew the special matter, and that he used it for the land adjoining. 1 Roll. Abr. 391.

A way must not be claimed as appendant or appurtenant to a house, because it is only an easement, and no interest. Yelv. 159. But it may be quasi appendant thereto, and as such pass by grant thereof. Cro. Jac. 190.

A man may prescribe for a way from his house thro' a certain close, &c. to church, though he himself has lands next adjoining to his said house, through which of necessity he must first pass; for the general prescription shall be applied only to the lands of others. Palm. 387, 388. 2 Roll. Rep. 397.

An ancient highway cannot be changed without an acquisition found on a writ of ad quod damnum, that such change will be no prejudice to the publick; and it is said, that if one change a highway without such authority, he may stop the new way whenever he please; neither can the King's subjects in an action brought against them for going over such new way, justify generally as in a common highway, but ought to shew specially, by way of excuse, how the old way was obstructed, and a new one set out; neither are the inhabitants bound to keep watch in such new way, or repair it, or to make amends for a robbery committed in it. Cro. Car. 266. Yanb. 341. Yelv. 141. 1 Hawk. P. C. 201-2.

But it hath been holden, that if a water, which hath been an ancient highway, by degrees changes its course, and goes over different ground from that whereon it used to run, yet the highway continues in the new channel in the same manner as in the old. 24 Aff. 93. 1 Roll. Abr. 390.

III. Of repairs.

By Common law, also by reason of the inclosure, tenure, or prescription. And, by Statute law.

Of Common right, the general charge of repairing highways lies on the occupiers of lands in the parish wherein they lie; but it is said, that the tenants of the lands adjoining are bound to scour their ditches. 1 Roll. Abr. 39. March 26. 1 Vent. 90, 183. 8 Hon. 7. 5.

Also if a parish is part in one county, and part in another, and the highways in one county are out of repair, the whole parish shall contribute to the repair; but there may be an agreement between the inhabitants, that the one shall repair one part, and the other the other; and such agreement is good between themselves, and for breach, the one may have an action upon the case against the other; but in an indictment they shall take no advantage of these agreements, for as to the King they are equally liable. 1 Mod. 112. 1 Vent. 256. 3 Keb. 301. Also vide 1 Vent. 256. 1 Mod. 112. 3 Keb. 301.

A highway lying within a parish, the whole parish is of common right bound to repair it; except it appear that it ought to be repaired by some particular person either rations tenuræ, or by prescription. 1 Ventr. 183. Style 163.

But though the parish be obliged of common right to repair the highways in it, yet it is certain, that particular persons may be bound to repair the highway, by reason of inclosure or prescription; as where the owner of lands not inclosed, next adjoining to the highway, incloses his lands on both sides of it; in which case he is bound to make a perfect good way, and shall not be excused by making it as good as it was before the inclosure, if it were then any way defective, because by the inclosure he takes from the people the liberty of going over the lands adjoining to the common track. 1 Roll. Abr. 390. Cro. Car. 366. 1 Sid. 464.

Also it is said, that if one inclose land on one side, which hath anciently been inclosed on the other side, he ought to repair all the way; but that if there be no such ancient inclosure on the other side, he ought to repair but half the way. 1 Sid. 464.

Therefore, if there be an old hedge time out of mind belonging to A. on the one side of the way, and B. having land lying on the other side, makes a new hedge, there B. shall be charged with the whole repair. 1 Sid. 464. 2 Keb. 565. 3 Saund. 157. But if A. makes a hedge on the one side of the way, and B. on the other, they shall be chargeable by moieties. 1 Sid. 464. 2 Keb. 565. But it seems clear, that wherever a person makes himself liable to repair a highway by reason of inclosure, that by throwing of it open again, he thereby frees himself of the burthen of any future reparation. 2 Saund. 160.

Particular persons may be bound to repair a highway by prescription; and it is said, that a corporation aggregate may be charged by a general prescription, that it ought and hath used to do it, without shewing any consideration in respect whereof they had used to do it, because such a corporation never dies, neither is it any plea, that they have done it out of charity; but it is said, that such a general prescription is not sufficient to charge a private person, because no man is bound to do a thing which his ancestors have done, unless it be for some special reason; as having lands descended to him holden by such service, &c. but it seems, that an indictment charging a tenant of lands in fee with having used of right to repair such a way ratione tenuræ terræ suæ, without adding that his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, have so done, is sufficient, for 'tis implied. 27 Aff. 8. 27 Ed. 4. 38. Bro. Prescription 49. 70. Keilw. 52. a. Litch. 206. 1 Howk. P. G. 202—3.

And it seems certain in all those cases, whether a private person be bound to repair a highway by inclosure or prescription, that the parish cannot take advantage of it on the general issue, but must plead in speciali; that therefore, if to an indictment against the parish, for not repairing a highway, they plead Not guilty, this shall be intended only that the ways are in repair, but does not go to the right of reparation. 1 Mod. 112. 3 Keb. 301. 1 Fent. 256.

At Common law it is said, that all the country ought to make good the reparations of a highway, where no particular persons are bound to do it; by reason the whole country have their ease and passage by the said way. Co. Rep. 13. By the ancient Common law, villages are to repair their highways, and may be punished for their decay; and if any do injure, or straighten the highway, he is punishable in the King's Bench, or before justices of the peace in the Court Leet, &c. 27 Aff. 63. Crump. Jurisd. 76.

By Statute law various provisions are made, viz. the 7th of Geo. 3. c. 42. (made to reduce into one act all the laws relative to the highways,) directs, that annual lists be made in September, of a certain number of persons qualified to serve as surveyors of the highways, to be returned to the justices, at their special sessions in October, who are to nominate such a number to be surveyors, as they shall judge necessary, who are to hold the office for one year. On refusal they forfeit 5*l.* and others to be nominated.

The surveyor is to take a view of the highways at proper times, in respect of nuisances, &c. and give notice to the parties concerned to remove the same, who, if they do not, surveyor to employ his men to do it, the defaulters forfeiting according to direction of the act.

The surveyor is to make new ditches, drains, &c. where the old are insufficient, and keep the same secured, &c. with proper trunks, tunnels, platts, bridges or arches over the same, making satisfaction to the owners of lands, &c. where any damage is done. The surveyor is also to make cart-ways leading to market towns twenty feet wide at least, and the horse cart-ways three feet, and to keep the same in repair.

Two or more justices of peace, upon view, may order narrow roads to be widened to a sufficient breadth, in which cases the surveyor is to agree with the owner of the soil as to recompence; in default of such agreement, the same to be assessed by a jury.

The surveyor is to make report of such defective highways, bridges, &c. as ought to be repaired by particular persons, to the justices, or two, or more, and notice to be given to the occupier. If not repaired in due time, the justices are to present the highways, in due of repair, together with the person or persons, whether publick or corporate, liable to repair, at the next general quarter sessions.

The act also empowers justices of assize, and justices of peace, to make presentments to the assizes, or sessions, of defective highways, caseways or bridges, or of any other defaults or offences against the act, and to assess such fines as they shall think fit, saving to the persons assessed their lawful traverse to such presentments.

The justices at their special sessions may order those roads to be first repaired that most want it. If the surveyor neglect their duty, two justices may hear complaint, and make such order as they think fit.

The justices are to order proper direction posts to be set up where several highways meet, and at the approaches to such parts as are subject to deep or dangerous floods, and where necessary for guiding travellers in the best and safest tract; surveyor subject to a penalty for neglect of duty in this particular.

The surveyor is empowered to take materials for repair of the highways, from any neighbouring quarries, commons, wastes, grounds, rivers, or brooks. And where sufficient can't be had from such places, then from private grounds, making such satisfaction to the owners, as shall be agreed upon, or otherwise as the justices shall direct.

By stat. 22. of the act, particular directions are given for filling up, and stopping of holes made in digging for materials, under certain penalties on the surveyor.

By stat. 32. The surveyor is to collect and pay over to the justices all rates, forfeitures, penalties, and compositions.

IV. Of the assessment for repairs, and of day-work.

By 7 Geo. 3. c. 42. s. 12. Where there is not sufficient money in the hands of the surveyor, to pay owners of soil for damage done, in widening of roads, two justices, or quarter sessions, may order an assessment, upon every occupier of lands and tenements, in the respective parishes, &c. where the highways lie, if assessment not paid in ten days; after demand, it may be levied by distress and sale of the goods of the persons assessed: provided that no such assessment be made in any one year to exceed the rate of 6*d.* in the pound of the yearly value of the lands, &c. assessed.

By stat. 21. The expences incurred by the surveyors, in doing various things, directed by the statute, are to be reimbursed by a rate on the inhabitants, according to the rules prescribed in the 43d of Edw. intituled, "An Act for the Relief of the Poor."

By stat. 23. Statute work in general is regulated. Every person keeping a team, draught, or plough, shall six days in the year furnish a wain, cart or carriage, and other necessities, and two able men with each. Those occupying of lands, &c. of 50*l.* yearly value, the like. So for every 50*l.* per annum respectively, and one labourer for every 10*l.* over such 50*l.* and less than 100*l.* &c. of the yearly value of 10*l.* and not of 50*l.* Not keeping a team, &c. one labourer, for every 10*l.* Under 10*l.* and not keeping a team, 40 qd. in person, or find a labourer. Power is also given to change carriages for oxen, where thought needful by the surveyor; or a certain sum to be paid in lieu. Men sent to furnish their own tools.

The surveyors are to give due notice to persons liable to statute work.

By stat. 25. Persons liable to perform statute work may compound at such rates as the justices shall appoint, not exceeding 6*d.* nor less than 3*d.* for each day; and other particular specifications.

Stat. 26. Regulates the duty of the surveyor in giving notice of time and place of admitting persons to compound, and regulates the changes, in the occupation of land, &c. or new inhabitants.

By stat. 27. It is provided, that persons occupying lands, &c. not above 50*l.* per annum are not obliged to find or compound for more than one carriage; and a team or plough kept part of the year in one parish, and part in another, the duty to be performed where the person actually resides.

Stat. 28. Where composition made, a proportion is to be paid to the township surveyor, if part of such duty is to be performed on the common roads.

If the justices at sessions are satisfied that money raised by preceding rates, &c. is not sufficient, then, by stat. 29. they are to make an assessment upon every occupier, to be levied by distress and sale.

But, by stat. 30. it is provided it do not exceed 6*d.* in the pound in any one year.

All fines and forfeitures for not repairing the highways, or not appearing to indictments, are to be applied in repair of the highways.

V. Of nuisances, viz. by stopping highways, and other nuisances in Common law.—Of hedges, &c. near the highways.—Of drawing carriages with a greater number of cattle than allowed.—Of leaving empty carriages in the road, &c.

It is clearly agreed to be a nuisance to dig a ditch, or make a hedge over-thwart the highway, or to erect a new gate, or to lay logs of timber in it, or generally to do any other act, which will render it less commodious. Kitchin 34. 1 Hawk. P. C. 212. Also it is a nuisance for an owner (and for which he may be indicted,) to contrive an incroachment, or other nuisance to a highway begun by his ancestor, because such continuance thereof amounts, in the judgment of law, to a new nuisance. 1 Hawk. P. C. 214. Also it is agreed, that it is no excuse for him who lays logs in the highway, that he laid them only here and there, so that the people might have a passage through them by windings and turnings. 2 Roll. Abr. 137. 1 Hawk. P. C. 212.

It is a nuisance to suffer the highway to be incumbered by reason of the faulness, &c. of the adjoining ditches, or by boughs of trees hanging over it, &c. And it is said, that the owner of land next adjoining to the highway, ought of common right to keep his ditches, but that the owner of land next adjoining to such land, is not bound by the Common law to do without a special prescription; also it is said, that the owner of trees hanging over a highway, to the annoyance of travellers, is bound by the Common law to lop them, and it is clear that any other person may lop them, so far as to avoid the nuisance. 8 H. 7. 5. 4. Kitch. 34. Dalt. cap. 26. 1 Hawk. P. C. 212, 213.

But it is no nuisance for an inhabitant of a town to enlade billets, &c. in the street before his house, by reason of the necessity of the case, unless he suffer them to continue there an unreasonable time. 2 Roll. Abr. 137.

Any one may justify pulling down, or otherwise destroying a common nuisance, as a new gate or house erected in a highway; and it hath been of late holden, that there is no need, in pleading such justification, to shew that as little damage was done as might be. 2 Roll. Abr. 144. Cas. Car. 184. 1 Jon. 231. 2 Salk. 458.

Also besides that all nuisances are punishable by indictment with fine and imprisonment, it is said, that one convicted of a nuisance to the highway, may be commanded by the judgment to remove it at his own costs. 2 Roll. Abr. 84. 1 Hawk. P. C. 200.

A gate erected in a highway is a common nuisance, because it interrupts the people in that free and open passage, which they before enjoyed and were lawfully entitled to; but where such a gate has continued time out of mind, it shall be intended that it was set up at first by consent, as a composition with the owner of the land on the laying out the road, in which case the people had never any right to a freer passage, than what they still enjoy. 1 Hawk. 190.

By the Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 42. which we have before mentioned, viz. Stat. 5. No tree or bush is to be allowed to grow, or stand within 12 feet of the center of the highway, on forfeiture of 10s. by the owner. By Stat. 4. The possessor of land next adjoining to the highway are to keep their ditches, ditches, drains, water-courses, trunks, tunnels, pipes and bridges, in proper order. And so as to support or adjoining grounds, through which the water hath used to pass from the highway, on forfeiture of 10s.

By Stat. 5. The owner or other matter is to be laid in the highway, or out of the highway, so the obstruction or prejudice thereof, on forfeiture of 10s.

By Stat. 6. Where any thing (not intended by the act,) shall be laid within 12 feet of the center, the owner of the adjacent lands may remove and dispose of the same to his own use.

Stat. 7. If the highway is wilfully obstructed by carriages, or implements of husbandry, the person offending shall forfeit 10s.

By Stat. 11. No waggon, the fellics of whose wheels are less than nine inches, shall be drawn with more than six horses; no car, less than nine inches, to be drawn with more than four; waggons of nine inches, with no more than eight horses; cart of nine, with no more than six; on forfeiture of all horses above the number, with the accoutrements, to the person seizing.

Stat. 30. Waggons fitted with narrow tire, or set with one-headed nails, are to be drawn by more than three horses, on forfeiture of the supernumerary.

Stat. 30. Except carriages drawing one stone or block of marble, or piece of metal or timber, ammunition or artillery for his Majesty's service.

By Stat. 42. Owners of carriages to have the owner's real name and place of abode painted on some conspicuous part, in large letters, on penalty of 20s.

By Stat. 43. The driver of any cart or dray, riding thereon in any street or highway, without having some person on foot, or on horseback to guide the same (except carriages drawn by one horse, or two horses abreast, and conducted by some person holding the reins), and the driver of any carriage, who by negligence or misbehaviour, shall damage or obstruct persons, or carriages in passing, or who shall not make way for loaded carriages, forfeits, if not the owner, any sum not exceeding 10s. if the owner, any sum not exceeding 20s. or may be committed to the house of correction for any time not exceeding one month.

So far as to the act, on this subject, it is proper to inform the reader, that this Statute does not restrain the subject, who receives any injury by a driver, &c. of any carriage, from suing the owner thereof at Common law, or from punishing the driver for wilful offences, by indictment, as the nature of the case may require. But that the party prosecuting must waive the benefit of proceeding under this Statute, in the summary way thereby prescribed.

VI. Of preventing persons guilty of offences relative to the highways.

A variety of punishments, with various modes of proceeding, have been inflicted and directed by several Statutes, but the 9th of Geo. 3. having reduced the laws in general into one code, it is unnecessary to take any farther notice of the preceding Statutes.—As to the doctrine of indictments on this subject, it may be of use to refer the reader to 1 Hawk. P. C. 218, 219, 220, and Strat. 349, 300.

We now proceed to the substance of 7 Geo. 3. c. 42. on this subject.

By Stat. 34. The pulling up, removing, or destroying, &c. the posts, blocks, banks, &c. set up for security of horse and foot pathways, or the parapets or battlements of bridges, mile-stones, or direction-posts, incurs a penalty not exceeding 5l. nor less than 5s. on conviction by a justice of peace, or a commitment to the house of correction, to be whipped, and kept to hard labour, for any time not exceeding one month, nor less than seven days.

By Stat. 35. The surveyor, or neglect of duty in instances not otherwise provided for by the act, forfeits a sum not exceeding 5l. nor less than 10s.

By Stat. 36. Justices of the peace are empowered to put in execution every part of the act.

By Stat. 40. Persons wilfully opposing the execution of the act, or obstructing or making a nuisance or distress, or refusing cattle or other goods, and constables not duly executing the warrant or precept of any justice, forfeits a sum, not exceeding 10l. nor less than 40s. and on non-payment, may be committed for three months.

By Stat. 43. All penalties and forfeitures, and all costs and charges, when not otherwise directed, are to be levied by distress and sale, by warrant of a justice; one half to the use of the informer, the other to the roads; and in want of distress, the party to be committed.

By sec. 48: Penalties or forfeitures may be sued for, by the prosecutor or informant, either as before directed, or by action of debt, where the penalty is a pecuniary one, (declaring in a very general manner, as directed by the act), or by action of trover, where the penalty or forfeiture is an article, or other goods, and recovering, shall have double costs.

[It may not be improper to observe, that there are very good opinions, against the general method of declaring in debt, directed by the act, and that a declaration, thus framed, could not be supported, as damages; for, the act creating a variety of offences, where the forfeiture is a pecuniary one, the defendant can't be prepared to defend the charge, not knowing what may be given in evidence on the trial, i. e. what kind of offence may then be alleged against him.]

By sec. 49. No conviction is to be had but upon confession of the party, or oath of a witness. And inhabitants deemed competent witnesses.

By ss. 51. Distress for money is not to be deemed unlawful, for default of form, in the proceedings; nor the party making it, to be deemed a trespasser, ab initio, on account of any subsequent irregularity.

By sec. 52. The plaintiff in any action for irregularity, &c. not to recover, where tender of amends has been made, before the action brought. And by this section the defendant is allowed to put money into court before issue joined.

By §§. 53. Persons arrested, where there is not any other method of relief afforded, or injured by the inclosure any common highway, may appeal to the general quarter-sessions; which court is to proceed in a summary way, award proper costs, and the determination to be final.

The general doctrine of re-indulgents, &c. upon this subject Mr. Sergeant Hawkins has laid down the following

That it is safe to every such indictment to show the place from which, and also the place to which the way supposed to be out of repair both lead, yet essential for want of such certainty, have sometimes been disallowed; however it seems certain, That there is no necessity to show that a highway leads to a market town, because every highway leads from town to town. 1 Hawk. P. C. 219.

ably, That it is necessary in every such indictment expressly to shew in what place the nuisance complained of was done; for which cause an indictment for stopping a way at D. leading from D. to C. is not good; for it is impossible that a way leading from D. should be in D. and no other place is alleged. 1 Havel. P. C. 219.

July, That every such indictment ought also certainly to shew to what part of the highway the nuisance did extend, as by shewing how many feet in length, and how many feet in breadth it contained, or otherwise the defendant will neither know of the certainty of the charge, against which he is to make his defence, neither will the court be able from the record to judge of the greatness of the offence, in order to assign a fine answerable thereto; and upon this ground it hath been adjudged, that an indictment for stopping a certain part of the King's highway at K. is naught, for the uncertainty thereof. Also it hath been resolved, that the same offence, such a nuisance is alledged, is not sufficiently averred in such an indictment, by shewing that it contained so many feet in length, and so many in breadth, by glosses.

Hovatt. 210, 220.

4thly, That every such indictment shew, that it be any wherein a nuisance is alleged, is a common highway; for which cause it hath been resolved, That an indictment for a nuisance to a highway, without adding that it was a highway, is naught; and upon the same ground it seemeth also, That an indictment for a nuisance to a common footway to the church of D. for all the parishioners of D. is not good; yet it seems, that if those last words, and for all the parishioners of D. had been omitted, such an indictment might be maintained.
Hewit. 120.

5thly, That it is not left in an indictment against a common person for not repairing a highway, which is ought to have done in respect of the tenure of certain lands, barely to say that he was bound to repair it ratione tenure tenet, without adding fecit. Also it is said, that in an indictment against a tenant, Et. per non repairing a highway, in respect of certain lands, it ought to be shewn in what capacity he ought to repair it, because otherwise it cannot be known, to what capacity the process is to be awarded against him. See. Howl. 20.

6thly. That in every such indictment the fact alleged against the defendant must be expressed in full proper terms, that it may clearly appear to the court to have been a nuisance; and for this cause it hath been resolved, That a prohibition for diverting a highway is not good, because a highway cannot be diverted, but must always continue in the same place where it was, notwithstanding it be obstructed, and a new way made in another place. 1 How. P. C. 110.

But it hath been resolved, That an indictment against a man for stopping a highway in his own land, is good, without laying the offence done in & contra. Also it is said, That a presentment that a highway in such a place is decayed by the default of the inhabitants of such a town, is good, without naming any person in certainty. But it hath been adjudged, that an indictment against particular persons must specially charge them every one; for which cause it hath been resolved, that an indictment against several for not repairing their streets, that they, & eorum executores, did not repair them, is not good. 1 Howell. P. C. 227.

Upon an indictment for not repairing a highway, if the defendant produces a certificate before trial, that the way is repaired, he shall be admitted to a fine; but after verdict, the certificate is too late, for then he must have a certificate to the sheriff, who ought to return that the way is repaired, because the verdict, which is a record, shall be animated by a record. Rayn. 215. And where the defendants, indicted for not repairing a common foot-way, confessed the indictment, and submitted to a fine; it was held, that the matter was not ended by their being fined, but that writs of assumpsit shall be awarded in infinitum, till the court of B. R. is satisfied that the way is repaired, as it was when it was at best; but the defendants are not bound to put it in better repair than it has been since out of mind. 1 Salk. 258. If a defendant hath made a highway, as good as it is capable of being made, it was said in an extraordinary case, this shall not discharge him, on an information against him; though it may be mitigation of his fine. 1 Salk. 181. Altho it is no excuse for the inhabitants of a parish indicted at Common law, for not repairing the highways, that they have done the work required by statute; for the statutes are made in aid of the Common law, and when the statutory work is not sufficient, rates and assessments are to be made. Dart. c. 26.

It is said, that if the right or title to repair such ways come in question, upon suggestion and affidavit made thereon, a ~~complaint~~ may be had to remove the incumbrance into B. P.

A person may be charged for not repairing a loose landing upon a highway, which originally, and due to fall down, to the danger of travelers, wherever he has tenent, which in such case is not married. Call.

If there be a commandment way through a close by prescription, and the owner of the close ploughs up the way, and burns it, and lays stones in the face of it, passengers may go over another foot-way in the same state, without being trespassers. 2 Inst. 120. And if a highway is not sufficient, any passenger may break down the inclosure of it, and go over the land, and justify it till a sufficient way is made. 3 Inst. 134.

Drawing a gate with a gongwan, that was locked, but cracking and lifting a plank, it thrust a nui-sack, for it is a sack, and call it a pillow, as if there had been no gate, and the usual way of cursing meanness of this kind, is by tsichien-sai, for every person may remove the meanness, by cursing or throwing it down, if there be occasion to do so; and it hath been held, that the there are many gates tsouk tsouk, they must be anciently let up, and it shall be removed by labour from the King upon the next great demand. Cap. Cart. 234.

Form of an indictment for not repairing a highway.

THE jurors, &c. That the common King's highway leading from, &c. in the parish of St. in the county of St. the day and year, &c. was, and still is in great decay, for default of due repair and maintenance thereof, so that the subjects of our Lord the King, passing or travelling through or along this way, cannot without danger pass through the same, as the great damage and trouble now done by all the large subjects of our said Lord the King passing through that way, and the small inhabitants of the town of, &c. of right and by ancient custom ought to repair, and amend the said highway, whereunto it shall be necessary against the peace, &c.

Homage, (Homagium) is a French word derived from homo, because when the tenant does his service to the Lord, he says, I become your man. Co. Lit. 64. In the original grants of lands and tenements by way of fee, the Lord did not only oblige his tenants to certain services; but also took a submission with promise and oath, to be true to him as their Lord and benefactor; and this submission, which is the most honourable, being from a freehold tenant, is called homage. Stat. 17 Ed. 2. The Lord of the fee for which homage is due, takes homage of every tenant, as he comes to the land or fee: but women perform not homage but by their husbands, as homage especially relates to service in war; and a corporation cannot do homage, which is personal, and they cannot appear but by attorney; also a bishop, or religious man, may not do homage only fealty; but the archbishop of Canterbury does homage on his knees to our King at their coronation; and it is said the bishop of the Isle of Man does homage to the Earl of Derby; the Fulder reconciles this, when he says that a religious man may do homage, but may not say to his Lord, Ego sumus tuus vassor, I become your man, because he has professed himself to be God's man, but he may say, I do unto you homage, and to you shall be faithful and loyal. Britton, cap. 68.

There is homage by liganee.

Homage by reason of tenure.

And, homage ancestral.

Homage by liganee is inherent and inseparable to every subject. Homage by tenure is a service made by tenants to their Lords according to the statute; and homage ancestral is where a man and his ancestors have time out of mind held their land of the Lord by homage, and such service draws to it warranty from the Lord, and acquittal of all other services to other Lords, &c. Bract. lib. 3. f. 14. c. 260. Lit. Sect. 3. But according to Sir Edw. Coke, there must be a double prescription for homage ancestral, both in the blood of the Lord, and of the tenant; so that the same tenant, and his ancestors, whose heir he is, is to hold the same land of the same Lord and his ancestors, whose heir the Lord is, time out of memory, by homage, &c. and therefore there is but little land holden by homage ancestral. Co. L. 100. b. Tho' in the manor of Whitney in Hertfordshire, there was one West who holds lands by this tenure. Homage tenure is incident to a freehold, and none shall do or receive homage, but such as have estates in fee-simple, or fee-tail, in their own right or right of another. Kitch. 131. Seisin of homage is seisin of fealty, and inferior services, &c. And the Lord only shall take homage, and not the steward, whose power extends but to fealty. 4 Rep. 8. When a tenant makes his homage to the Lord, he is to be ungirt, and his head uncovered, and his Lord shall sit, and he shall kneel, and hold his hands together between his Lord's hands, and say, I become your man from this day forward, for life, for member, and for worldly honour, and unto you shall be true and faithful, and bear you faith for the lands that I hold of you, (saying the faith that I owe to our Sovereign Lord the King.) And the Lord so sitting shall kiss the tenant, &c. 17 Ed. 3. Litt. Sect. 85. See Black. Com. 1. p. 357. 379. 2. p. 53, 91, 300. 4. p. 414.

Homage jury, Is a jury in a Cour-Bare, consisting of tenants that do homage to the Lord of the fee; and these by the Feudist, are called pari curia: they enquire and make presentment of defaults and deaths of tenants, admittances, and surrenders, in the Lord's court, &c. Kitch.

Homager, Is one that does or is bound to do homage to another.

Homage respite, Was a writ to the escheator, commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the King's tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done. F. N. B. 269. And the heir at full age was to do homage to the King, or agree with him for respiteing the same. New Nat. Br. 162.

Homagium redditum, To renounce homage, when the vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord, for which, there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudatary laws. — Item reddere poterit domino suo homagium suum, simul cum tenemento, propter capitales inimicitias, ut liberius persequatur appellum suum, &c. sic dissolvitur homagium. Bracton, lib. 2. cap. 35. s. 35. This is the meaning of that passage in Richardus Hufildunus de Bellis Standard, p. 321. Itaque Re-fortius reddito homagio quod ei fecerat—ad suos socios revertitur &c. And of Matt. Paris sub anno 1188. tunc Rex Anglorum Regi Francorum fecit homagium, quia in principibus huius generis homagium suum reddiderat Regi Francorum. Concil. lib. 2. c. 27.

Homocidus, Homocidus, or Hamociden, and Hamocida, (from the Sax. homo a man, habitation, and foens, libertas immunitas, &c. Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 23. thus defined. Homocidus dicitur invadere domum contra pacem Domini Regis, et in eadem facere in domo extra pacem Domini. It appears by Bracton, that in ancient times some men had an immunity to do this. Si quis hamociden violenter, iure Regium Regis emendat 5 libr. LL. Canuti, cap. 39. Hamociden est quis prior tenebit placita in curia sua de his qui in eadem domum vel curiam aliqujus ad liganam, vel servitium, vel quicquid apportandum, vel aliquid ad tenebatur, contra voluntatem illius qui debet domum servitium, &c. Reg. Priora de Cokerford. See Hamociden.

Hamociden, Is also the privilege or freedom which every man hath in his house; and he who invades that freedom is properly said facere hamociden. This we take to be what we now call burglary, which is a crime of a very heinous nature, because 'tis not only a breach of the King's peace, but a breach of that liberty which a man hath in his his house, which, (as we commonly say,) should be his castle, and therefore ought not to be invaded. Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 23. Du Cange.

It is also taken for an impunity to those who commit this crime, viz. Homociden, hoc est, quietus esse de homicidii pro ingressu hospitii violento & sine licentia, & contra pacem Regis, & quod tentatis placita de hujusmodi transgressionibus in curia vestra. W. Thorn. p. 2030.

Homestall, is taken for a mansion-house. Vide Frumstol.

Homicide, (Homicidium), is the killing of a man, and is divided into voluntary and casual: Homicide voluntary is that which is deliberate, and committed of a set purpose to kill; casual is done by chance, without any intention to kill. Homicide voluntary is either with precedent malice, or without. The former is murder, and is a felonious killing through malice prepensed of any person living in this realm, under the King's protection. West. par. 2. Symbol. tit. Indictments, sect. 37. &c. usque 51. where you may see divers subdivisions of this matter. See also Glanvil, lib. 14. cap. 3. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 4. 15 & 17. Britton, cap. 5, 6, 7. Co. Litt. 3. c. 8.

Offences against the life of a man come under the general name of homicide, which in our laws signifies the killing of a man, by a man. 1 Hawk. P. C. 66. Bracton, lib. 3. c. 4.

Homicide, properly so called, is either against a man's own life, (called self-murder, or felo de se), or the life of another. Homicide against the life of another either amounts to felony, or does not. That which amounts not to felony, is either justifiable, and causes no forfeiture at all, or excusable, and causes the forfeiture of the party's goods. 1 Hawk. P. C. 67, 69.

Under this head we shall treat,

1. Of self-murder, or felo de se.
2. Of justifiable homicide.
3. Of excusable homicide.
4. Of manslaughter.
5. Of murder.

1. Of self-murder, or felo de se.

In this, as well as all other felonies, the offender ought to be of the age of discretion, and compos mentis; and therefore, an infant killing himself under the age of discretion, or a lunatic during his lunacy, cannot be a felo de se. 1 Hawk. 67. Crom. 30. a. b. 31. a. H. P. C. 28. Dal. cap. 92. 3 Inst. 54.

Our laws have always had such an abhorrence of this crime, that not only he who kills himself with a deliberate and direct purpose of so doing, but also in some cases he who maliciously attempts to kill another, and in pursuance of such an attempt unwillingly kills himself, shall be adjudged in the eye of the law a felo de se; for wherever death is caused by any act done with a murderous intent, it makes the offender a murderer. 1 Hawk. P. C. 68. cites Dal. cap. 92. 44 E. 3. 4. 45 E. 55. Bro. Car. 12, 14. Dal. cap. 92.

Also vide S. P. C. 16. H. P. C. 28, 29. Pul. 119. b. Crom. 28.

He who kills another upon his desire or command, is in the judgment of the law as much a murderer, as if he had done it merely of his own head, and the person killed is not looked upon as a felo de se, inasmuch as his assent was merely void, being against the law of God and man. 1 Hawk. P. C. 68. cites Keilw. 136. Moor 754.

As to what such an offender, viz. a felo de se, shall forfeit, it seems clear, that he shall forfeit all chattels real or personal which he hath in his own right, and also all chattels real whereof he is possessed either jointly with his wife, or in her right; and also all bonds and other personal things in action, belonging solely to himself; and also all personal things in action, and, as some say, entire chattels in possession to which he was intitled jointly with another, on any account except that of merchandise: But it is said, that he shall forfeit a moiety only of such joint chattels as may be severed, and nothing at all of what he was possessed of as executor or administrator. 1 Hawk. P. C. 68. cites many authorities.

However the blood of a felo de se is not corrupted, nor his lands of inheritance forfeited, nor his wife barred of her dower. 1 Hawk. P. C. 68. Plow. Com. 261. b. 262. a.

Also not any part of the personal estate is vested in the King, before the self-murder is found by some inquiry; and consequently the forfeiture thereof is saved by a pardon of the offence before such finding. 1 Hawk. P. C. 68. 5 Co. 110. b. 3 Inst. 54. 1 Saund. 362. 1 Sid. 150, 162. But if there be no such pardon, the whole is forfeited immediately after such inquiry, at the time such mortal wound was given, and all intermediate alienations are avoided. 1 Hawk. P. C. 68. Plow. Com. 260. H. P. C. 29. 5 Co. 110. And such inquiries ought to be by the coroner super visum corporis, if the body can be found, and an inquiry so taken, as some say, cannot be traversed. 1 Hawk. P. C. 68. H. P. C. 29. 3 Inst. 55.

But if the body cannot be found, so that the coroner, who has authority only super visum corporis, cannot proceed, the inquiry may be by justices of peace, (who by their commission have a general power to enquire of all felonies,) or in the King's Bench, if the felony were committed in the county where the said court sits; and such inquiries are traversable by the executor, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 69. 3 Inst. 55. H. P. C. 29. 2 Lev. 141.

Also all inquiries of this offence being in the nature of indictments, ought particularly and certainly to set forth the circumstances of the fact; and in the conclusion add, that the party in such manner murdered himself. 1 Hawk. 69. 3 Lev. 140. 3 Mod. 100. 2 Lev. 152. Yet if it be full in substance, the coroner may be served with a rule to amend a defect in form. 1 Hawk. 69. 1 Sid. 225, 259. 3 Mod. 101. 1 Keb. 907.

By the rubrick in the Common Prayer, before the burial office, (confirmed by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4.) persons who have laid violent hands upon themselves, shall not have that office used at their interment.

2. Of justifiable homicide.

1. It must be owing to some unavoidable necessity, to which the person who kills another must be reduced, without any manner of fault in himself. 1 Hawk. 69.

2. There must be no malice coloured under pretence of necessity, for wherever a person who kills another, acts in truth upon malice, and takes occasion from the appearance of necessity to execute his revenge, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. 69. 2 Rol. Rep. 120, 121. Keilw. 28. H. P. C. 38. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 4.

3. No one can plead a fact amounting to homicide se defendendo, or by misadventure, but in such a case the defendant must plead Not guilty, and give the special matter in evidence: And it is also agreed, that where a special fact, amounting to justifiable homicide, is found by the jury, the party is to be dismissed, without being obliged to purchase any pardon. &c. 1 Hawk. 69.

Justifiable homicide is either of a public or private nature. That of a public nature is such as is occasioned by the due execution or advancement of public justice. That of a private nature is such as happens in the just defence of a man's person, house, or goods. 1 Hawk. P. C. 70.

As to justifiable homicide in the due execution of public justice, the following rules must be observed.

1. The judgment, by virtue whereof any person is put to death, must be given by one who has jurisdiction in the cause; for otherwise both judge and officer may be guilty of felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. 70. Dal. cap. 98. 10 Co. 75. 22 Ed. 4. 33. a. H. P. C. 35.

2. The judgment must be executed by the lawful officer. Indeed it was formerly held, that any one might as lawfully kill a person attainted of treason or felony, as a wolf or other wild beast; and anciently a person com-

condemned in appeal of death, was delivered to the relations of the deceased in order to be executed by them. 1 Hawk. 70. 1 Inst. 128. b. 2 Aff. pl. 3. S. P. C. 13. a. 11 H. 4. 12. a. Plow. Com. 306. b. 3 Inst. 131.

But at this day, as it seems agreed, if the judge, who gives the sentence of death, and, a fortiori, if any private person execute the same, or if the proper officer himself do without a lawful command, they are guilty of felony. 1 Hawk. 70. 27 Aff. 41. Bro. Appeal, 69.

The execution must be pursuant to, and warranted by the judgment, otherwise it is without authority; and consequently, if a sheriff behead a man where it is no part of the sentence to cut off the head, he is guilty of felony. 1 Hawk. 70. 35 H. 6. 57. b. Bro. Appeal, 5. S. P. C. 13. H. P. C. 36. 272.

Justifiable homicide in the due advancement of public justice, relates either to criminal or civil causes. As to the first, it may be justified in several cases; as if a person having actually committed felony will not suffer himself to be arrested, but stand on his own defence, or fly, so that he cannot possibly be apprehended alive by those who pursue, whether private persons or public officers, with or without a warrant from a magistrate, he may be lawfully slain by them. 1 Hawk. P. C. 70. 22 Aff. 55. Bro. Cor. 87, 89. S. P. C. 13. 3 Inst. 221. Dalt. cap. 98. H. P. C. 36. Crom. 30.

If trespassers in a forest, chase, park or warren, or any inclosed ground wherein deer are kept, will not render themselves to the keepers, upon hue and cry made to stand to the King's peace, and fly from, or defend themselves against them, they may be slain by force of the statute de malefactoribus in parcis, and 4 Will. 4 Mar. cap. 10. 1 Hawk. 71. S. P. C. 13. b. Crom. 30. b. Dyer 326. pl. 3.

Homicide in the advancement of justice in civil causes may also be justified in some cases: As where a sheriff, &c. attempting to make a lawful arrest in a civil action, or to retake one who has been arrested and made his escape, is resisted by the party, and unavoidably kills him in the affray. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. 1 Roll. Rep. 189. H. P. C. 37. 3 Inst. 56. Crom. 24. a. Dalt. cap. 98. And in such case the officer is not bound to give back, but may stand his ground and attack the party. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. H. P. C. 31.

But no private person of his own authority can arrest a man for a civil matter, as he may for felony, &c. 1 Hawk. 71. Crom. 30. b. Neither can the sheriff himself lawfully kill those who barely fly from the execution of any civil process. 1 Hawk. 71. H. P. C. 37.

As to justifiable homicide of a private nature, in the just defence of a man's person, house or goods, it may happen either by the killing of a wrong-doer, or an innocent person in the making of such defence. And first, the killing of a wrong-doer in the making of such defence, may be justified in many cases; as where a man kills one who assaults him in the highway to rob or murder him; or the owner of a house, or any of his servants, or lodgers, &c. kill one who attempts to burn it, or to commit therein murder, robbery, or other felony; or a woman kills one who attempts to ravish her; or a servant coming suddenly and finding his master robbed and slain, falls upon the murderer immediately and kills him; for he does it in the height of his surprise, and under just apprehensions of the like attempt upon himself; but in other circumstances, he could not have justified the killing of such an one, but ought to have apprehended him, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71, 72. 24 H. 8. cap. 5. Dalt. cap. 98.

Neither shall a man in any case justify the killing another by a pretence of necessity, unless he were himself wholly without fault in bringing that necessity upon himself; for if a man, in defence of an injury done by himself, kill any person whatsoever, he is guilty of manslaughter at least; as where divers rioters wrongfully detain a house by force, and kill those who attack it from without, and endeavour to burn it. 1 Hawk. 72. Crom. 37. b. H. P. C. 56.

Neither can a man justify the killing another in defence of his house or goods, or even of his person, from a bare private trespass; and therefore he that kills another, who claiming a title to his house, attempts to enter it by force and shoots at it, (see post Div. 5.) or that breaks open his windows in order to arrest him, or that persists in breaking his hedges after he is forbidden, is guilty of manslaughter; and he who in his own defence kills another that assaults him in his house in the day-time, and plainly appears to intend to beat him only, he is guilty of homicide se defendendo, for which he forfeits his goods, but is pardoned of course; yet it seems, that a private person, and, a fortiori, an officer of justice, who happens unavoidably to kill another endeavouring to defend himself from, or suppress dangerous rioters, may justify the fact, inasmuch as he only does his duty in aid of the public justice. 1 Hawk. 72. H. P. C. 40, 57. Cro. Car. 538. Dalt. cap. 98.

According to the opinion of Mr. Serjeant Hawkins (which we conceive is law) A person, who without provocation is assaulted by another in any place whatsoever, in such a manner as plainly shews an intent to murder him, as by discharging a pistol, or pushing at him with a drawn sword, &c. may justify killing such an assailant, as much as if he had attempted to rob him. 1 Hawk. 72. N. Bendlo 47. 1 And. 41. Crom. 27. b. 28. b. Dalt. cap. 98. S. P. C. 15. a. 3 Inst. 57. Bacon 33. Dalt. 98. For other cases, vide 1 Hawk. 73. Cro. Car. 338. March 5.

3. Of excusable homicide.

Excusable homicide is either per infortunium, or se defendendo. Homicide per infortunium, or by misadventure, is where a man in doing a lawful act, without any intent of hurt, unfortunately chances to kill another; as, where a labourer being at work with a hatchet, the head thereof flies off, and kills one who stands by. 1 Hawk. P. C. 73. 6 Ed. 4. 7. b. Bro. Coro. 59, 148.

Where a third person whips a horse on which a man is riding, whereupon he springs out, and runs over a child and kills him; in which case the rider is guilty of homicide per infortunium, and he who gave the blow, of manslaughter. 1 Hawk. 73. H. P. C. 58, 59.

Where a workman, having first given loud and timely warning to all persons to stand clear, flings down a piece of timber from a private house standing out of the road, and thereby kills one who happens to be underneath: But if any person fling down such a piece of timber idly in play, or even a workman fling it down in the streets of a town, where the danger is apparent in respect of the number of people continually passing by, he is guilty of manslaughter. 1 Hawk. 73. Kelynge 40. Bracl. lib. 3. c. 4. Dalt. cap. 96. H. P. C. 31. Bro. Coro. 229.

Where workmen throw stones, rubbish, or other things, from an house, in the ordinary course of their business, by which a person underneath happens to be killed; if they look out and give timely warning to those below, it will be homicide by misadventure; if without such caution, it will amount to manslaughter at least; it was a lawful act, but done in an improper manner. It is said by some, that if this be done in the streets of London, or other populous towns, it will be manslaughter notwithstanding the caution abovementioned.

But this will admit of some limitation; if it be done early in the morning, when few or no people are stirring, and the ordinary caution is used, it seemeth that the party is excusable. But when the streets are full, that will not suffice; for in the hurry and noise of a crowded street, few people hear the warning, or sufficiently attend to it. Foster's Crown Law 262, 263.

Where a schoolmaster in correcting his scholar, or a father his son, or a master his servant, or an officer in whipping a criminal condemned to such punishment, happens to occasion his death; yet if such persons in their correction, be so barbarous as to exceed all bounds of moderation, and thereby cause the party's death, they are guilty of manslaughter at the least; and if they make use of an instrument improper for correction, and apparently indangering the party's life, as an iron bar, or sword &c. or kick him to the ground, and then stamp on his belly and kill him, they are guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 73. 74. Bratt. lib. 1. cap. 4. H. P. C. 31. Crom. 28. b. Dalt. cap. 96. Keilw. 136. Kelynge 65. See 5 Mod. 287, 288, &c.

Where one lawfully using an innocent diversion, as shooting at butts, or at a bird, &c. by the glancing of an arrow, or such-like accident, kills another. 1 Hawk. 74. Keilw. 108. Bro. Cor. 148. See Kelynge 41.

Where a person happens to kill another in playing a match of foot-ball, wrestling, or such like sports which are attended with no apparent danger of life, and intending only for the trial, exercise and improvement of the strength, courage and activity of the parties. 1 Hawk. 74. Keilw. 108, 136. Crom. 29. a. 11 H. 7. 23. a.

Where one kills another in fighting at barriers or tilting by the King's command, which by the better opinion secures him from being guilty of felony by reason of any such unfortunate accident. 1 Hawk. P. C. 74. 11 H. 7. 23. a. 3 Inst. 160. Keilw. 108, 136.

But if a person kill another by shooting at a deer, &c. in a third person's park, in the doing whereof he is a trespasser; or by shooting of a gun, or throwing stones in a city or highway, or other place where men usually resort, by throwing stones at another wantonly in play, which is a dangerous sport, and has not the least appearance of any good intent; or by doing any other such idle action as cannot but endanger the bodily hurt of some one or other; or by titling or playing at hand-sword without the King's command; or by parrying with naked swords, covered with buttons at the points, or with swords in the scabbards, or such like rash sports, which cannot be used without the manifest hazard of life, he is guilty of manslaughter. 1 Hawk. 74. H. P. C. 31, 32, 58. Con. Hob. 134.

And if a man happen to kill another in the execution of a malicious and deliberate purpose to do him a personal hurt, by wounding or beating him; or in the wilful commission of any unlawful act, which necessarily tends to raise tumults and quarrels, and consequently cannot but be attended with the danger of personal hurt to some one or other; as by committing a riot, robbing a park, &c. he shall be adjudged guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. 74. H. P. C. 52, 57. Kelynge 117.

And a fortiori, he shall come under the same construction, who in the pursuance of a deliberate intention to commit a felony, chances to kill a man, as by shooting at tame fowl with an intent to steal them, &c. for such persons are by no means favoured, and they must at their peril take care of the consequence of their actions; and it is a general rule, that wherever a man intending to commit one felony, happens to commit another, he is as much guilty as if he had intended the felony which he actually commits. 1 Hawk. P. C. 74. 3 Inst. 56. Kelynge 117. H. P. C. 52.

If any one shoot at any wild fowl upon a tree, and the arrow killeth any reasonable creature afar off, without any evil intent in him, this is by misadventure; for it was not unlawful to shoot at the wild fowl: But if he had shot at a cock or a hen, or any tame fowl of another man's, and the arrow by mischance had killed a man; if his intention was to steal the poultry (which must be collected from circumstances,) it will be murder by reason of that felonious intent; but if it was done wantonly, and without that intention, it will be barely manslaughter. Foss. 258, 9.

The rule before laid down supposeth, that the act from which death ensued, was malum in se. For if it was barely malum prohibitum, as shooting at game by a person not qualified by statute-law to keep or use a gun for that purpose; the case of a person offending, will fall under the same rule as that of a qualified man. For the statutes prohibiting the destruction of the game under certain penalties, will not in a question of this kind enhance the accident beyond its intrinsic moment. Foss. 259.

Neither shall he be adjudged guilty of a less crime who kills another, in doing such a wilful act as shews him to be as dangerous as a wild beast, and an enemy to mankind in general; as by going deliberately with a horse used to strike, or discharging a gun among a multitude of people, or throwing a great stone or a piece of timber from a house into a street, through which he knows that many are passing; and it is no excuse that he intended no harm to any one in particular, or that he meant to do it only for sport, or to frighten the people, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 74. H. P. C. 32, 44. 3 Inst. 57. Dalt. cap. 93, 97. 11 H. 7. 23. a. Bro. Cor. 229.

Homicide, se defendendo, or by self-defence, seems to be where one who has no other possible means for preserving his life from one who combats with him on a sudden quarrel, or of defending his person from some who attempts to beat him, (especially if such attempt be upon him in his own house,) kills the person by whom he is reduced to such an inevitable necessity. 1 Hawk. P. C. 74, 75. H. P. C. 40. S. P. C. 15.

And not only he who on an assault retreats to a wall, or some such streight, beyond which he can go no further before he kills the other, is adjudged by the law to act upon unavoidable necessity: But also he who being assaulted in such a manner, and in such a place, that he cannot go back without manifestly endangering his life, kills the other without retreating at all. 1 Hawk. 75. Bro. Cor. 125. 43 Aff. 31. 3 Inst. 56. H. P. C. 41.

And notwithstanding a person, who retreats from an assault to the wall, give the other divers wounds in his retreat, yet if he give him no mortal one till he get thither, and then kill him, he is guilty of homicide se defendendo only. 1 Hawk. 75. H. P. C. 41. Crom. 28. S. P. C. 15. a.

And an officer who kills one that resists him in the execution of his office, and even a private person that kills one who feloniously assaults him in the highway, may justify the fact without ever giving back at all.

Hawk. P. C. 75. H. P. C. 41. 3 Inst. 56. Crom. 28. a.

According to some good opinions, even he who gives another the first blow on a sudden quarrel, if he afterwards do what he can to avoid killing him, is not guilty of felony; yet such a person seems to be too much favoured by this opinion, inasmuch as the necessity to which he is at last reduced, was at the first owing to his own fault. And it is now agreed, that if a man strike another upon malice prepense, and then fly to the wall, and there kill him in his own defence, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. 75. S. P. C. 15. a. Crom. 28. a. Dalt. cap. 98. Kelynge 58. H. P. C. 42.

It seems clear, that neither of these homicides (except as aforesaid) are felonies, because they are not accompanied with a felonious intent, which is necessary in every felony. 1 Hawk. 75. 3 Inst. 56. 2 Inst. 149.

And from hence it seems plainly to follow, that they were never punishable with loss of life: And the same also farther appears from the writ De odio & atia, by virtue whereof, if any person committed for killing another, were found guilty of either of these homicides, and no other crime, he might be bailed; and indeed it seems to be against natural justice to condemn a man to death, for what is owing rather to his misfortune than his fault. 1 Hawk. 75.

It is true indeed, that some of our best authors have argued from the statute of Marlbridge, Ch. 26. which enacts, that murdrum de cætero non adjudicetur, ubi infatum tantummodo adjudicatum est, &c. That before this statute homicides by misadventure, or se defendendo, were adjudged murder, and consequently punished by death. 1 Hawk. 75. 2 Inst. 56. S. P. C. 16.

But to this it may be answered, that murder in those days signified only the private killing of a man, by one who was neither seen nor heard by any witness, for which the offender, if found, was to be tried by ordeal, and if he could not be found, the jury in which the fact was done, was to be amerced sixty-six marks, unless it could be proved that the person killed was an Englishman: otherwise it was presumed he was a Dane or Norman, who in those days were often privately made away away by the English. And it being a doubt whether homicide by misadventure, &c. were to be esteemed murder in this sense, it seems to have been the chief intent of the makers of this statute to settle this question. 1 Hawk. 75. Brañ. 134. b. 135. a. Kelynge 121.

However it is certain, that notwithstanding neither of these offences be felonies, yet a person guilty of them is not bailable by justices of peace, but must be committed till the next coming of the justices of eyre or gaol-delivery. 1 Hawk. 76. H. P. C. 98, 99. 2 Inst. 315. L. cap. 98.

Indeed anciently a person committed for the death of a man, might sue out the writ De odio & atia, which by Magna Charta 16. is grantable without fee; and if thereon, by an inquest taken by the sheriff, he were found to have done the fact by misadventure, or se defendendo, he might be mainprized by twelve men, upon the writ De povenendo in ballium. But such writs and enquiries were taken away by the statute of Gloucester, 9 and 28 Ed. 3. 9. and though perhaps they were again revived by 42 Ed. 3. 1. which makes all statutes contrary to Magna Charta void; yet at this day they seem to be obsolete, and indeed useless, inasmuch as the party may probably be sooner delivered in the usual course, by the coming of the justices of gaol-delivery. 1 Hawk. 76. S. P. C. 77. g. 2 Inst. 43, 315. 9 Co. 56. Co. Bail and Mainprize, c. 10.

It is also agreed, that no one can excuse the killing another, by setting forth in a special plea, that he did it by misadventure, or se defendendo, but that he must plead Not guilty, and give the special matter in evidence. And that wherever a person is found guilty of such homicide, either by a special indictment for the same, or by a verdict setting forth the circumstances of the case on a general indictment of murder or homicide, he shall be discharged out of prison upon bail, and forfeit his goods: But that upon removing the record by certiorari into Chancery, he shall have his pardon of course, without staying for any warrant from the King to that purpose. 1 Hawk. 76. 4 H. 7. 2. a. Keilw. 53. a. 108. b. 2 Inst. 316. S. P. C. 15. b. 16. b. Dalt. cap. 96, 98. F. N. B. 246. C. H.

4. Of manslaughter.

Homicide against the life of another, amounting to felony, is either with or without malice; that which is without malice is called manslaughter, or sometimes chance-medley, by which we understand such killing as happens either on a sudden quarrel, or in the commission of an unlawful act, without any deliberate intention of doing any mischief at all. 1 Hawk. 76. 3 Inst. 55, 57. Dalt. cap. 94. H. P. C. 56, 57.

And from hence it follows, that there can be no accessories to this offence before the fact, because it must be done without premeditation. 1 Hawk. P. C. 76. H. P. C. 217. See division Murder.

There is a particular kind of manslaughter proper to be considered here, from which the benefit of the clergy is taken away by 1 Jac. 1. c. 8. "Where any person shall stab or thrust any person or persons that hath not then any weapon drawn, or that hath not then first stricken, the party which shall so stab or thrust, so as the person or persons so stabbed or thrust, shall thereof die within the space of six months then next following, although it cannot be proved that the same was done of malice forethought."

It is generally holden, that this statute is but declarative of the Common law, and in the construction thereof, the following points have been resolved. 1 Hawk. 77. 1 Bull. 87. Kelynge 55.

1. That wherever a person who happens to kill another, was struck by him in the quarrel before he gave the mortal wound, he is out of the statute, though he himself gave the first blow. 1 Hawk. 77. 1 Jon. 240. See 3 Lev. 266.

2. That he who actually gives the stroke, and not any of those who may be said to do it by construction of law, being present, and aiding and abetting the fact, are within the statute; from whence it follows, That if it cannot be proved by whom the stroke was given, none can be found guilty within the statute. 1 Hawk. 77. H. P. C. 58. Allyn 44.

3. That the killing of a man with a hammer, or such like instrument, which cannot come properly under the words thrust or stab, is not a killing within the statute; but it seems that the discharging a pistol, or throwing a pot, or other dangerous weapon at the party, is within the equity of the words, having a weapon drawn; for penal statutes are construed strictly against the subject, and favourably and equitably for him. 1 Hawk. 77. 1 Jones 432. 3 Lev. 266.

4. That there is no need to lay the conclusion of the indictment contra formam statuti, because the statute makes no new offence, but only takes away the privilege of the clergy from an old one, and leaves it to the judgment of the Common law; from whence it follows, that a person indicted on the statute, may be found guilty of manslaughter generally. Also from the same ground it hath been resolved, That if an indictment lay, and a verdict also find, a fact to be contra formam statuti, which cannot possibly be so, as if A. and B. aided and abetted C. contra formam statuti, yet neither such indictment nor verdict are void, but A. and B. shall be dealt with in the same manner as they should have been, if these words contra formam statuti had been wholly omitted, because the substance of the indictment being found, they may be rejected as senseless and surplus: And, a fortiori, therefore it is certain, that they shall do no hurt to an indictment or verdict containing a fact which may be within the statute. 1 Hawk. 77. H. P. C. 58, 266. Allen 47. Cro. Jac. 283.

5. That as these words, contra formam statuti, do not vitiate an indictment which would be good without them; so also, they will not supply a defect in a vitious one, which does not specially pursue the statute. 1 Hawk. 77. H. P. C. 58.

5. Of murder.

Homicide against the life of another, amounting to felony with malice, is either murder or petit treason. And first of murder, which anciently signified only the private killing of a man, for which, by force of a law introduced by King Canutus for the preservation of his Dans, the town or hundred where the fact was done, was to be amerced to the King, unless they could prove that the person slain were an Englishman, (which proof was called Engleschire), or could procure the offender, &c. And in those days, the open wilful killing of a man through anger or malice, &c. was not called murder, but voluntary homicide. 1 Hawk. 78. Brañ. 134. b. 135. a. Kelynge 121, &c. Brañ. 121. a.

But the law concerning Engleschire having been abolished by 14 Ed. 3. 4. the killing of an Englishman or foreigner through malice prepened, whether committed openly or secretly, was by degrees called murder; and 13 Ric. 2. 1. which restrains the King's pardon in certain cases, does in the preamble, under the general name of murder, include all such homicide as shall not be pardoned without special words; and in the body of the act expresses the same by murder, or killing by await, assault, or malice prepened. And doubtless the makers of 25 H. 8. cap. 1. which excluded all wilful murder of malice prepened from the benefit of the clergy, intended to include open, as well as private, homicide within the word murder. 1 Hawk. 78. S. P. C. 18. b. 19. a.

By murder therefore at this day we understand, the wilful killing of any subject whatsoever, through malice forethought, whether the person slain be an Englishman or foreigner. 1 Hawk. 78.

Not only he who by a wound or blow, or by poisoning, strangling or famishing, &c. directly causes another's death, but also in many cases, he who by wilfully and deliberately doing a thing which apparently endangers another's life, and thereby occasions his death, shall be adjudged to kill him. 1 Hawk. 78. 3 Inst. 48. H. P. C. 53. Palm. 548. Vide examples in 1 Hawk. 78, 78, 79. Crom. 24. b. Pult. 122. a. b. Dalt. cap. 93.

And in some cases a man shall be said, in the judgment of the law, to kill one who is in truth actually killed by another, or by himself; as where one by duress of imprisonment compels a man to accuse an innocent person, who on his evidence is condemn'd and executed; or where one incites a madman to kill himself or another; or where one lays poison with an intent to kill one man, which was afterwards accidentally taken by another, who dies thereof. 1 Haw. P. C. 79. S. P. C. 36. 3 Inst. 91. Dalt. cap. 93. 1 Haw. ch. 1. f. 7. Ploq. Com. 474.

Also he who wilfully neglects to prevent a mischief, which he may, and ought to provide against is, as some have said, in judgment of the law, the actual cause of the damage which ensues; and therefore if a man have an ox or horse, which he knows to be mischievous, by being used to gore or strike at those who came near them, and do not tie them up, but leave them to their liberty, and they afterwards kill a man, according to some opinions, the owner may be indicted, as having himself killed him; and this is agreeable to the Mosaic law. However, as it is agreed by all, such a person is guilty of a very gross misdemeanor. 1 Haw. 79. Fitz. Corone 311. S. P. C. 17. a. Crom. 24. b. Dalt. cap. 93. Pult. 122. b. H. P. C. 53. Exodus. c. 2. v. 29.

Also it is agreed, That no person shall be adjudged by any act whatever to kill another, who doth not die thereof within a year and a day after; in the computation whereof, the whole day on which the hurt was done shall be reckoned the first. 1 Haw. P. C. 79. H. P. C. 55. Pult. 123. a. Dalt. cap. 93. S. P. C. 21. d.

But if a person hurt by another die thereof within a year and a day, it is no excuse for the other, that he might have recovered, if he had not neglected to take care of himself. 1 Haw. 79. 3 Inst. 53. Kelynge 26, 1 Keb. 17.

As to the place where such killing is within the consequence of the law, it seems that the killing of one who is both wounded and dies out of the realm, or wounded out of the realm and dies here, cannot be determined at Common law, because it cannot be tried by a jury of the neighbourhood where the fact was done. But it is agreed, that the death of one who is both wounded and dies beyond sea, and it is said by some, that the death of him who dies here of a wound given there, may be heard and determined before the constable and marshal, according to the Civil law, if the King please to appoint a constable. And it seemeth also to be clear, that such a fact being examined by the privy council, may by force of 33 H. 8. cap. 23. be tried (in relation to the principal offenders, but not as to the accessaries,) before commissioners appointed by the King, in any county of England. 1 Haw. 79. 3 Inst. 48. 2 Inst. 51. Co. Lit. 75. S. P. C. 65. a. Bro. Appeal 153. Cro. Car. 247. 1 And. 195.

A murder at sea was anciently cognizable only by the Civil law, but now by force of 27 H. 8. 4. and 28 H. 8. 15. it may be tried and determined before the King's Commissioners in any county of England, according to the course of the Common law; yet the killing of one who is at land of a wound received at sea, is neither determinable at Common law, nor by force of either of these statutes: but it seems, that it may be tried by the constable and marshal, or before the commissioners appointed in pursuance of the aforesaid statute of 33 H. 8. 23. 1 Haw. 79. 3 Inst. 48, 49. 1 Leon. 270. H. P. C. 54. 3 Inst. 48. But now see 2 Geo. 2. c. 21. Post.

And it is said by some, that the death of one who died in one county, of a wound given in another, is not indictable at all at Common law, because the offence was not complete in either county, and the jury could enquire only of what happened in their own county. But it hath been holden by others, That if the corps were carried into the county where the stroke was given, the whole might be enquired of by a jury of the same county. And it is agreed, that an appeal might be brought in either county, and the fact tried by a jury returned jointly from each. And at this day, by force of 2 & 3 Ed. 6. 24. the whole is triable by a jury of the county wherein the death shall happen, on an indictment found, or appeal brought, in the same county. 1 Haw. 79, 80. 3 Inst. 48, 49. Bro. Cor. 140, 141, 143. Indictm. 13. S. P. C. 90. c. 6 H. 7. 10. a. Finch Law 411. S. P. C. 182. Bro. Appeal 3, 80, 83, 85. 149.

Also by force of 26 H. 8. cap. 6. a murder in Wales may be enquired of in an adjoining English county, but appeals must still be brought in the proper county. 1 Haw. 80. Cro. Car. 247. 1 Jen. 255. 1 Lev. 118. Latch 12, 118.

It is agreed, That the malicious killing of any person, whatsoever nation or religion he be of, or of whatever crime attainted, is murder. 1 Haw. 80. 3 Inst. 50.

And it was anciently holden, That the causing of an abortion by giving a potion to, or striking a woman big with child, was murder: but at this day, it is said to be a great misprision only, and not murder, unless the child be born alive, and die thereof, in which case it seems clearly to be murder, notwithstanding some opinions to the contrary. And in this respect also, the Common law seems to be agreeable to the Mosaic law, which is as to the purpose thus expressed; "If men strive and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her, and yet no mischief follow, he shall be surely punished, according as the woman's husband will lay upon him, and he shall pay as the judges determine; and if any mischief follow, then those shall give life for life." 1 Haw. 80. Brass. 121. S. P. C. 21. Bro. Cor. 91. H. P. C. 53. 3 Inst. 5. 3 Aff. 2. Bro. Cor. 68. Dalt. cap. 93. Exodus. cap. 21. v. 22, 23.

It seems also agreed, that where one counsels a woman to kill her child when it shall be born, who afterwards kills it in pursuance of such advice, he is an accessory to the murder. 1 Haw. 80. Dyer 186. 3 Inst. 51.

As to what killing shall be adjudged of malice prepense or murder; it is to be observed, that any former design of doing mischief may be called malice; and therefore that not such killing only as proceeds from premeditated hatred or revenge against the person killed, but also in many other cases, such as is accompanied with those circumstances that shew the heart to be perversely wicked, is adjudged to be of malice prepense or aforesaid, and consequently murder. 1 Haw. 80. Kelynge 127. Stran. 766.

And according to this notion, it is thought proper to consider, 1. Such murder as is occasioned through any express purpose to do some personal injury to him who is slain in particular; which seems to be most properly called express malice. 2dly, Such as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for some other purpose, and not to do a personal injury to him in particular who is slain, in which case the malice seems to be most properly said to be implied. 1 Haw. 80. Kelynge 129, 130.

As to murder in the first sense, such acts as shew a direct and deliberate intent to kill another, as poisoning, stabbing, and such like, are so clearly murder, that there are not any questions relating thereto worth explaining: but the cases which have borne disputes, have generally happened in the following instances. 1st, In duelling. 2dly, In killing another without any provocation, or but upon a slight one. 3dly, In killing one whom the person killing pretended to hurt in a less degree. 1 Haw. 80.

As to the first instance of this kind, it seems agreed, that wherever two persons in cool blood meet and fight on a precedent quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and cannot help himself by alledging that he was first struck by the deceased; or that he had often declined to meet him, and was prevailed upon to do it by his importunity; or that it was his only intent to vindicate his reputation; or that he meant not to kill, but only to disarm his adversary: For since he deliberately engaged in an act highly unlawful in defiance of the laws, he must at his peril abide the consequences thereof. 1 Haw. 80, 81. 1 Bull. 86, 87. 2 Bull. 147. Crom. 22. b. 1 Rel. Rep. 360. 3 Bull. 174. H. P. C. 48.

From hence it clearly follows, that if two persons quarrel over night, and appoint to fight the next day; or quarrel in the morning, and agree to fight in the afternoon, afternoon, or such a considerable time after, by which, in common intendment, it must be presumed that the blood was cooled, and then they meet and fight, and one kill the other, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 81. 3 Inst. 51. H. P. C. 48. Kelynge 56. 1 Lev. 180.

And wherever it appears from the whole circumstances of the case, that he who kills another on a sudden quarrel was master of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder; as if after the quarrel he fall into other discourse, and talk calmly thereon; or perhaps if he has so much consideration as to say, that the place wherein the quarrel happens, is not convenient for fighting; or that if he should fight at present, he should have the disadvantage by reason of the height of his shoes, &c. 1 Hawk. 81. Kelynge 56. 1 Sid. 177. 1 Lev. 180.

If A. on a quarrel with B. tell him that he will not strike him, but that he will give B. a pot of ale to drink him, and thereupon B. strike, and A. kill him, he is guilty of murder; for he shall not elude the justice of the law by such pretence to cover his malice. 1 Hawk. 81. H. P. C. 48.

In like manner, if B. challenge A. and A. refuse to meet him; but in order to evade the law, tells B. that he shall go the next day to such a town about his business, and accordingly B. meet him the next day in the road to the same town, and assault him, whereupon they fight, and A. kills B. he is, in the opinion of Hawkins, guilty of murder, unless it appear by the whole circumstances that he gave B. such information accidentally, and not with a design to give him an opportunity of fighting. 1 Hawk. 81. Cræ. Crim. 22. b. H. P. C. 48.

And at this day it seems to be settled, That if a man assault another with malice prepense, and after be driven by him to the wall, and kill him there in his own defence, he is guilty of murder in respect of his first intent. 1 Hawk. 81. Crim. 22. b. Dalt. cap. 93. H. P. C. 47. Kelynge 58. Mawbridge's case.

And it hath been adjudged, that even upon a sudden quarrel, if a man be so far provoked by any bare words, or gestures of another, as to make a push at him with a sword, or to strike at him with any other such weapon as manifestly endangers his life, before the other's sword is drawn, and thereupon a fight ensue, and he who made such assault kill the other, he is guilty of murder; because that by assaulting the other in such an outrageous manner, without giving him an opportunity to defend himself, he shewed that he intended not to fight with him, but to kill him; which violent revenge is no more excused by such a slight provocation, than if there had been none at all. 1 Hawk. 81. Crim. 23. a. b. Dalt. cap. 93. Kelynge 61. Mawbridge's case.

But it is said, that if he who draws upon another in a sudden quarrel, make no push at him, till his sword is drawn, and then fight with him, he is guilty of manslaughter only, because that by neglecting the opportunity of killing the other, he was on his guard, and in a condition to defend himself, with like hazard to both; he shewed that his intent was not so much to kill, as to combat with the other, in compliance with those common notions of honour, which prevailing over reason, during the time that a man is under the transports of a sudden passion, so far mitigate his offence in fighting, that it shall not be adjudged to be of malice prepense. 1 Hawk. 81, 82. Kelynge 55, 61, 131. 2 Rol. Rep. 401.

And if two happen to fall out upon a sudden, and presently agree to fight, and each of them fetch a weapon, and go into the field, and there one kill the other, he is guilty of manslaughter only; because he did it in the heat of blood. 1 Hawk. 82. H. P. C. 48. 3 Inst. 51.

And such an indulgence is shewn to the frailties of human nature, that where two persons who have formerly fought on malice, are afterwards to all appearance reconciled, and fight again on a fresh quarrel, it shall not be presumed that they were moved by the old grudge, unless it appear by the whole circumstances of the fact. 1 Hawk. 82. Crim. 23. a. Dalt. cap. 93. H. P. C. 49. 2 Rol. Rep. 300.

But the law so far abhors all duelling in cold blood, that not only the principal who actually kills the other, but also his seconds are guilty of murder, whether they fought or not; and some have gone so far as to hold, that the seconds of the person killed are also equally guilty, in respect of that countenance which they give to their principals in the execution of their purpose, by accompanying them therein, and being ready to bear a part with them: but perhaps the contrary opinion is the more plausible; for it seems too severe a construction to make a man by such reasoning the murderer of his friend, to whom he was so far from intending any mischief, that he was ready to hazard his own life in his quarrel. 1 Hawk. 82. H. P. C. 51. Dalt. cap. 93.

As to the second instance of this kind, viz. such murder as happens in killing another without any provocation, or but upon a slight one; it is to be observed, that wherever it appears that a man killed another, it shall be intended prima facie that he did it maliciously, unless he can make out the contrary, by shewing that he did it on a sudden provocation, &c. 1 Hawk. 82. Kelynge 27.

Also it seems to be agreed, that no breach of a man's word or promise, no trespass either to lands or goods, no affront by bare words or gestures, however false or malicious it may be, and aggravated with the most provoking circumstances, will excuse him from being guilty of murder, who is so far transported thereby, as immediately to attack the person who offends him, in such a manner as manifestly endangers his life, without giving him time to put himself upon his guard, if he kills him in pursuance of such assault, whether the person slain did at all fight in his defence or not; for so base and cruel a revenge cannot have too severe a construction. 1 Hawk. 82. Kelynge 135. 2 Rol. Rep. 460, 461. Kelynge 131. 3 Co. Dalt. cap. 93. Cræ. Crim. 779. Nov. 1744. 1 Sid. 277. 1 Levins. 180. Hob. 121. Con. 1 Jan. 432. a.

But if a person so provoked had beaten the other only in such a manner, that it might plainly appear that he meant not to kill, but only chastise him; or if he had restrained himself till the other had put himself on his guard, and then in fighting with him had killed him, he had been guilty of manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. 82. Kelynge 55, 61, 131.

And of the like offence shall he be adjudged guilty, who seeing two persons fighting together on a private quarrel, whether sudden or malicious, takes part with one of them, and kills the other. 1 Hawk. 82. Kelynge 61, 135. Cræ. Jac. 296. 12 Co. 87.

Neither can he be thought guilty of a greater crime, who finding a man in bed with his wife, or being actually struck by him, or pulled by the nose, or fillipped upon the forehead, immediately kills him; or who happens to kill another in a contention for the wall; or in the defence of his person from an unlawful arrest; or in the defence of his house from those who claiming a title to it, attempt forcibly to enter it, and to that purpose knock at it, &c. or in the defence of his possession of a room in a publick house, from those who attempt to turn him out of it, and thereupon draw their swords upon him; in which case the killing the assailant hath been holden by some to be justifiable: but it is certain, that it can amount to no more than manslaughter. 1 Hawk. 82, 83. H. P. C. 57. 3 Inst. 55. Kelynge 137. H. P. C. 57. Crim. 27. a. Kelynge 51.

Nor was he judged criminal in a higher degree, who seeing his son's nose bloody, and being told by him, that he had been beaten by such a boy, ran three quarters of a mile, and having found the boy, beat him with a small cudgel, whereof he afterwards died. 1 Hawk. 83. H. P. C. 48. Cræ. Jac. 296. 12 Co. 87.

As to the third instance of the kind, viz. such murder as happens in killing one whom the person killing intended to hurt in a less degree, as to which it is to be observed, that wherever a person in cool blood by way of revenge, unlawfully and deliberately beats another in such a manner that he afterwards dies thereof, he is guilty of murder, however unwilling he might have been to have gone so far. 1 Hawk. 83. Kelyne 119. Marwgrudge's case. H. P. C. 49, 50, 51, 52.

Also it seems, that he who upon a sudden provocation executeth his revenge in such a cruel manner, as shews a cool and deliberate intent to do mischief, is guilty of murder, if death ensue; as where the keeper of a park finding a boy stealing wood, tied him to a horse's tail, and bear him, whereupon the horse ran away with, and killed him. 1 Hawk. 83. Cro. Car. 131. 1 Jon. 198.
Palm. 545. H. P. C. 49.

As to the cases where such killing shall be adjudged murder, which happen in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for some other purpose, and not to do a personal injury to him in particular who happens to be slain, they are as follow. And first, Such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the principal intention was to commit another felony; it seems agreed, that wherever a man happens to kill another in the execution of a deliberate purpose to commit any felony, he is guilty of murder; as where a person shooting at tame fowl, with an intent to steal them, accidentally kills a man; or where one sets upon a man to rob him, and kills him in making resistance; or where a person shooting at, or fighting with one man with a design to murder him, misses him, and kills another. 1 Hawk. 83. Kelyne 117. H. P. C. 46, 50.
Dalt. cap. 93. Moore 87.

And not only in such cases, where the very act of a person having such a felonious intent, is the immediate cause of a third person's death, but also where it any way occasionally causes such a misfortune, it makes him guilty of murder; and such was the case of the husband, who gave a poisoned apple to his wife, who eat not enough of it to kill her, but innocently, and against the husband's will and persuasion, gave part of it to a child who died thereof; such also was the case of the wife who mixed rusticane in a potion sent by an apothecary to her husband, which did not kill him, but afterwards killed the apothecary, who to vindicate his reputation tasted it himself, having first stirred it about. Neither is it material in this case, that the stirring of the potion might make the operation of the poison more forcible than otherwise it would have been; for inasmuch as such a murderous intention, which of itself perhaps in strictness might justly be made punishable with death, proves now in the event the cause of the King's losing a subject, it shall be as severely punished as if it had had the intended effect, the missing whereof is not owing to any want of malice, but of power. 1 Hawk. 84. Flow. Com. 474.
9 Co. 91.

But if one happened to be poisoned by ratsbane laid in order to destroy vermine, the person by whom he is so killed, is guilty of homicide per infortunium only, because his intentions were wholly innocent. Ibid.

Also if a third person accidentally happen to be killed by one engaged in a combat with another upon a sudden quarrel, it seems that he who kills him is guilty of manslaughter only; but it hath been adjudged, that if a justice of peace, constable or watchman, or even a private person be killed in the endeavouring to part those whom he sees fighting, the person by whom he is killed, is guilty of murder; and that he cannot excuse himself by alleging that what he did was in a sudden affray in the heat of blood, and through the violence of passion; for he who carries his resentment so high as not only to execute his revenge against those who have affronted him, but even against such as have no otherwise offended him but by doing their duty, and endeavouring to restrain him from breaking through his, shews such an obstinate contempt of the law, that he is no more to be favoured than if he had acted in cool blood. 1 Hawk. 84.
H. P. C. 45, 50. 3 Inst. 52. Dalt. cap. 93. Savil 67.
Kelyne 66. 22 Aff. 71. 4 Co. 40. b. 9 Co. 68. Crom.
25. a. b.

Yet it hath been resolved, that if the third person slain in such a sudden affray, do not give notice for what purpose he comes, by commanding the parties in the King's name to keep the peace, or otherwise manifestly shewing his intention to be not to take part in the quarrel, but to appease it, he who kills him is guilty of manslaughter only, for he might suspect that he came to side with his adversary. 1 Hawk. 84. Kelyne 66.

As to the second instance of this kind, viz. such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, where the principal design is to commit a bare breach of the peace, not intended against the person of him who happens to be slain; it seems clear, that where divers persons resolving generally to resist all opposers in the commission of any such breach of the peace, and to execute it in such a manner as naturally tends to raise turmults and affrays, as by committing a violent disturbance with great numbers of people, hunting in a park, &c. and in so doing happen to kill a man, they are all guilty of murder; for they must at their peril abide the event of their actions, who wilfully engage in such bold disturbances of the publick peace, in open opposition to the defiance of the justice of the nation. 1 Hawk. 84.

Yet where divers rioters, having forcible possession of a house, afterwards killed the person whom they had ejected, as he was endeavouring in the night forcibly to regain the possession, and to fire the house, they were adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, notwithstanding they did the fact in maintenance of a deliberate injury, perhaps for this reason, because the person slain was so much in fault himself. 1 Hawk. 85. Crom. 28. b. H. P. C.
56.

But if in such, or any other quarrel, whether it were sudden or premeditated, a justice of peace, constable or watchman, or even a private person, be slain in endeavouring to keep the peace, and suppress the affray, he who kills him is guilty of murder; for notwithstanding it was not his primary intention to commit a felony, yet inasmuch as he persists in a less offence with so much obstinacy as to go on in it to the hazard of the lives of those who no otherwise offend him, but by doing their duty in maintenance of the law, which therefore affords them its more immediate protection, he seems to be in this respect equally criminal, as if his intention had been to commit a felony. 1 Hawk. 85. H. P. C. 45. Dalt. cap. 93.

68. Crom. 25. See supra.

As to the third instance of this kind, viz. such killing, as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, the principal motive whereof was to assist a third person; it seems clear, that if a master maliciously intending to kill another take his servants with him, without acquainting them with his purpose, and meet his adversary and fight with him, and the servants seeing their master engaged take part with him, and kill the other, they are guilty of manslaughter only, but the master of murder. Pl.
Com. 100, 101. a. Crom. 23. Dalt. cap. 93. H. P. C.
51, 52.

And therefore it follows a fortiori, that if a man's servant or friend, or even a stranger, coming suddenly, see him fighting with another and side with him, and kill the other; or seeing his sword broken send him another, wherewith he kills the other, he is guilty of manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. 85. Crom. 26. b. H. P. C. 57.
Dalt. cap. 94. 1 Roll. Rep. 407, 408. 3 Bulst. 206.
H. P. C. 52.

Yet in this very case, if the person killed were a bailiff, or other officer of justice, resisted by the master, &c. in due execution of his duty, such friend or servant, &c. are guilty of murder, whether they knew the person slain were an officer or not. 1 Hawk. 85. Kelyne 67, 86, 87.

But perhaps it may be objected, that in this last case there seems to be no more malice than in the former;
and such third person being wholly ignorant that the party killed was an officer, seems to be no more in fault than if he had been a private person. 1 Hawk. 85.

To this it may be answered, that all fighting is highly unlawful, and that he who on a sudden seeing persons engaged in it, is so far from endeavouring to part them, as every good subject ought, that he takes part with one side, and fights in the quarrel, without knowing the cause of it, shews a high contempt of the laws, and a readiness to break through them on a small occasion, and must at his peril take heed what he does; and consequently might perhaps in strict justice be adjudged in the foregoing cases to act with malice, which doth not always signify a particular ill-will against the person killed, as appears by many of the above-mentioned cases; and tho' such person be favoured in respect of the suddenness of the occasion where both the quarrel and the persons are private, yet he must not expect such indulgence, where the fight, in which he so rashly engages, was begun in opposition to the justice of the nation, and a person happens to be killed thereby who engaged in maintenance thereof, and on that account is under its more particular care; and it may be justly challenged, that his opposers be made examples to deter others from joining in such unarrangeable quarrels. 1 Hawk. 85, 86. 1 Sid. 160. Noy 50. Plow. Com. 100.

But if a man seeing another arrested and restrained from his liberty, under colour of a preſs-warrant or civil process, &c. by those who in truth have no such authority, happen to kill such trespassers in rescuing the person oppressed, he shall be adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, notwithstanding the injured person submitted to them, and endeavoured not to rescue himself, and the person who rescued him, did not know that he was illegally arrested; for since in the event it appears, that the persons slain were trespassers, covering their violence with a shew of justice, he who kills them is indulged by the law, which in these cases judges by the event, which those who engage in such unlawful actions must abide at their peril. 1 Hawk. 86. Kelynge 66, 137. Crom. 27. u. Dent's case.

As to the fourth instance of this kind, viz. such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the direct design was to escape from an arrest, it seems to be agreed, that whoever kills a sheriff, or any of his officers, in the lawful execution of a civil process, as on arresting a person upon a capias, &c. is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 86. Dalt. cap. 93. H. P. C. 45. Crom. 24. a.

Neither is it any excuse to such a person, that the process was erroneous, (for it is not void by being so,) or that the arrest was in the night, or that the officer did not tell him for what cause he arrested him, and out of what court, (which is not necessary when prevented by the party's resistance); or that the officer did not shew his warrant, which he is not bound to do at all, if he be a bailiff commonly known, nor without a demand, if he be a special one. 9 Co. 66, 68. 9 Cro. Jac. 280. 6 Co. 68. b. 69. a. Cro. Jac. 486.

Yet the killing of an officer in some cases will be manslaughter only; as, where the warrant by which he acts gives him no authority to arrest the party; as where a bailiff arrests J. S. a baronet, who never was knighted, by force of a warrant to arrest J. S. knight. 1 Hawk. 86. Cro. Car. 372. 1 Jon. 346. 12 Co. 49.

Where a good warrant is executed in an unlawful manner; as if a bailiff be killed in breaking open a door or window to arrest a man; or perhaps if he arrest one on a Sunday since 29 Car. 2. cap. 7. by which all such arrests are made unlawful. H. P. C. 46.

As to the fifth instance of this kind, viz. such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the principal purpose was to usurp an illegal authority; it seems clear, that if persons take upon them to put others to death, either by virtue of a new commission wholly unknown to our laws, or by virtue of an unknown jurisdiction, which clearly extends not to cases of this nature; as if the court of Common Pleas cause a man to be executed for treason or felony; or the Court Martial, in time of peace, put a man to death by the martial law, both the judges and officers are guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 86. H. P. C. 46.

But where persons act by virtue of a commission, which, if it were strictly regular, would undoubtedly give them full authority, but happens to be defective only in some point of form, it seems that they are no way criminal.

As to the sixth instance of this kind, viz. such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, where no mischief was intended at all, it is said, that if a person happen to occasion the death of another, in advisedly doing any idle, wanton action, which cannot but be attended with the manifest danger of some other; as by riding with a horse known to be used to kick among a multitude of people, by which he means no more than to divert himself by putting them into a fright, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 87.

Also it has been anciently holden, that if a person not duly authorized to be a physician or surgeon, undertake a cure, and the patient die under his hand, he is guilty of felony; but in as much as the books wherein this opinion is holden, were written before the statute of 23 H. 8. c. 1. which first excluded such felonious killing, as may be called wilful murder of malice prepense, from the benefit of clergy, it may be well questioned, whether such killing shall be said to be of malice prepense, within the intent of that statute; however, it is certainly highly rash and presumptuous for unskilful persons to undertake matters of this nature; and indeed the law cannot be well too severe in this case, in order to deter ignorant people from endeavouring to get a livelihood by such practice, which cannot be followed without the manifest hazard of the lives of those who have to do with them; but surely the charitable endeavours of these gentlemen who study to qualify themselves to give advice of this kind, in order to assist their poor neighbors, can by no means deserve so severe a construction from their happening to fall into some mistakes in their prescriptions, from which the most learned and experienced cannot always be secure. 1 Hawk. 87. 8. P. C. 16. b. Pul. 32. b. Crom. 27. 43 Ed. 3. 33. b. Fitz. Coron. 163. See Dalt. cap. 93.

The principal in murder is ousted of clergy in all cases, and the accessory before is also ousted of clergy in all cases; but the accessory after is in no case ousted of clergy. 2 Hale's H. 344.

By stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. sect. 13. All wilful killing by poisoning of any person, shall be adjudged wilful murder of malice prepensed.

Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 27. sect. 2. If any woman be delivered of an issue, which being born alive should be a bastard, and she endeavours privately, either by drowning, or secret burying thereof, or any other way, so to conceal the death thereof, as that it may not come to light whether it were born alive or not; the said mother shall suffer death as in case of murder, except such mother can make proof by one witness that the child was born dead.

Continued indefinitely by 3 Car. 1. cap. 4. and 16 Car. 1. cap. 4.

Stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 21. Where any person shall be feloniously stricken or poisoned upon the sea, or at any place out of England, and shall die of the same in England; or where any person shall be feloniously stricken or poisoned within England, and shall die of such stroke or poisoning upon the sea, or out of England, an indictment thereof found by jurors of the country in England, in which such death, stroke or poisoning shall happen, whether it be found before any coroner upon view of such dead body, or before justices of peace, or other justices who shall have authority to inquire of murders, shall be as effectual, as well against the principals as the accessories, as if such stroke or poisoning and death, and the offence of such accessories, had happened in the same county: and every such offender shall have the like defences (except challenges for the hundred) as if such stroke or poisoning and death, and the like offence of such accessories, had happened in the same county where such indictment shall be found.

By stat. 25 Geo. 2. cap. 37. sect. 1. All persons found guilty of wilful murder, shall be executed according to law, on the day next but one after sentence passed, unless the same happen to be Sunday, and in that case on the Monday following.

And by the same statute a variety of other provisions are made relative to persons convicted of murder, unnecessary here to particularize; therefore we refer to the act.

At a meeting of the judges to consider of this act, there was some doubt whether hanging in chains might ever be made part of the sentence; but on debate it was agreed by nine judges, that in all cases within the act, the judgment for dissecting and anatomizing only should be part of the sentence: and if it should be thought advisable, the judge might afterwards direct the hanging in chains, by special order to the sheriff, pursuant to the power given by the act. Foster's Crown Law 107.

Hominatio. Domesday, tit. Northampton Sockmanni de Risden, — Idcirco episcopus clamat Hominationem eorum. It signifies the mustering of men; also the doing of homage. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Homine capto in Withernamsum, Is a writ to take him that hath taken any bondman or woman, and led him out of the country, so that he or she cannot be replevied according to law. Reg. Orig. fol. 79. See Withernam.

Homine Eligendo ad custodiendam pecuniam sigilli pro mercatoribus editi, Is a writ directed to a corporation, for the choice of a new person to keep one part of the seal appointed for statutes merchant, when a former is dead, according to the statute of Edw. Burnel. Reg. Orig. 178.

Homine replegiando, Is a writ to bail a man out of prison: in what cases it lies, see F. N. B. fol. 6. Reg. Orig. fol. 77.

It may not be improper to observe, that it lies where a person is in prison, not by special commandment of the King, or his judges, or for any crime or cause irrepleviable, directed to the sheriff to cause him to be replevied: and if the sheriff return on a homine replegiando, that the defendant hath effoined the plaintiff's body, so that he cannot deliver him; then the plaintiff shall have a capias in withernam to take defendant's body, and keep it quousque, &c. Any if the sheriff return non est inventus on that writ against the body, the plaintiff shall have a capias against the defendant's goods, &c. F. N. B. 66. New Nat. Br. 151, 152. Where one man takes away secretly, or keeps in his custody another man against his will, upon oath made thereof, and a petition to the Lord Chancellor, he will grant a writ of replegiari facias, with an alias and pluries, upon which the sheriff returns an elongatus, and thereupon issues out a capias in withernam: and when the party is taken, the sheriff cannot take bail for him; but the court where the writ is returnable may, if they think fit, grant a habeas corpus to the sheriff to bring him into court and bail him, or remand him. 2 Lill. 23.

In a homine replegiando it hath been adjudged, that it doth not differ from a common replevin, on which the sheriff must return a deliberari feci, or an excuse why he doth not: that where he cannot make deliverance, if he return an elongatus, the defendant is not concluded by that return to plead non cepit; and after the return of an elongatus, and a capias in withernam, if the defendant pleads this plea, he shall be bailed, for the withernam is no execution: and after a defendant is bailed upon the capias in withernam, there may be a new withernam against him. 2 Salk. 381. And it was held, that in a homine replegiando after an elongatus returned, if the defendant comes in gratis, and calls for a declaration, and pleads non cepit, he shall not be obliged to give bail; but if he come in upon the return of the capias, he must give bail, and shall not be admitted to it till he call for a declaration, and plead non cepit. Ibid.

The sheriff returned an elongatus in a homine replegiando, and then a capias in withernam went forth; afterwards the defendant having entered an appearance, moved for a superfedeas to the withernam, and offered to plead non cepit; which was opposed, unless he would give bail to deliver the person, in case the issue was found against him: though it was ruled, that if any property had been pleaded in the party, then the defendant ought to give bail to deliver him; but he says he hath not the person, and therefore non cepit is a proper plea, and he shall put in bail to appear de die in diem. 4 Mod. 183. In this case the defendant shall not be compelled to give deliverance; and a superfedeas was granted to the withernam. 5 W. & M.

A homine replegiando cannot be brought either by the wife herself, or by her prochein amy against her husband; and the nature and proceedings in the writ shew it to be so. Pafch. 1718. Ch. Prec. 492.

This writ is now seldom used to deliver a person out of custody, by having the cause enquired into, and bail accepted, if bailable, or the person discharged, without bail, if unlawfully imprisoned, 'tis usual to sue an habeas corpus, out of one of the courts of Westminster, returnable in court, in term time, or before one of the judges in vacation.

Homines, Were a sort of feudatory tenants, who claimed a privilege of having their causes and persons tried only in the court of their lord: and when Gerard de Camvil. anno 5 R. 1. was charged with treason and other misdemeanors, he pleaded that he was Homo Comitum Johannis, &c. and would stand to the law and justice of his court. Parish. Antiq. 152.

Homiplagium, Is used in the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 80. for the maiming a man. Si quis in domo vel curia Regis fecerit homicidium vel homiplagium.

Homo. This Latin word includes both man and woman, in a large or general understanding. 2 Inst. 45.

Houstaile, A home-stall, or mansion-house. As in a charter granted about the 5 Edw. 1. Cowell.

Hond-habend, (from the Sax. hond, hand, and habens, having.) Signifies a circumstance of manifest theft, when one is apprehended with the mainor or mainower, i. e. the thing stolen in his hand. Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 8, 32 & 35. who also uses hand-bereud in the same sense, sc. Latro manifestus. See Hand-habend. So in Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38. Furtum manifestum est ubi aliquis latro deprehensus sit de aliquo latrocinio hand-habund, & backberinde, & infecutus fuerit per aliquam ejus res illa fuerit, quæ dicitur sacborgh, & tunc licet infecutori rem suam petere criminaliter ut furatam.

It also signifies the right which the lord hath of determining this offence in his court.

Honey. All vessels of honey are to be mark'd with the name of the owner, and be of such a content, under penalties; and if any honey fold, be corrupted with any deceitful mixture, the seller shall forfeit the honey, &c. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8.

Honour, Is, besides the general signification, used especially for the more noble sort of feignories, on which other inferior lordships or manors depend, by performance of some customs or services to those who are lords of them; (though antiently honour and baronia signified the same thing.) Uti manerium plurimis gaudet interdum feodis, sed plerumque tenementis, consuetudinibus, serviciis, &c. Ita honor plurima complectitur maneria, plurima feoda militaria, plurima regalia, &c. dictus etiam olim est beneficium seu feodum regale, tentusque semper a rege in capite. Spelm. The manner of creating these honours by act of parliament, may in part be collected out of the statute of 23 Hen. 8. c. 37, 38.

An honour ought to consist of lands, liberties, and franchises. 1 Bul. 197. 2 Rol. 72. l. 48. And it is the most noble feignory. Co. L. 108. a. So one or more manors may be parcel of an honour. 2 Rol. 72. l. 45. So a forest may be appendant to it. 2 Rol. 73. l. 3.

An honour originally shall be created by the King. Co. L. 108. a. Every honour must be holden of the King. R. 1 Bul. 195. And if it be assigned, or granted over to another, it shall not be holden of a subject. For it may be granted by the King to a subject. A man may claim an honour by grant, or by prescription. But the King at this day cannot make an honour by grant, without an act of parliament. R. 1 Bul. 195, 196. Co. 108. a.

There are within the realm 80 honours, viz. the honour of Aquile, Arundel, Abergavenny, Boling, Berkhamsled, Beaulieu, Barnard's Castle, Bullingbroke, Barstable, Bononia, Brecknock, Brember, Bedford, Clare, Croucours, Clun, Christchurch, Cokermouth, Cormayls, Candicut, Carisbrook, Clifford-Castle, Chester, Carmarthen, and Cardigan, Dudley, and Dover-Castle, Eze, and Egremont.

The honour of East and West Greenwich, Gloucester, Greatmoul, Gorwer, Haganes, Huntingdon, Hedingham, Haverenden.

Hawenden-Castle, Hertford, and Halton, Lancaster, Lincoln, Leicester, Leicetot, Hinckley, and Kingston, and Falkingham.

The honour of Montgomery, Mowbray, Middleham, and Maidstone, Nottingham, Newelbn, Oakhampton, and Oxford.

The honour of Plimpton, Peverel, Pickering, Raleigh, Richard's Castle, Skipton, Stafford, Strigal, Tickhill, Tremanton, Totness, Theony, Tamworth.

The honour of Wigmore, Wallingford, Windsor, Wormgay, Whirwelton, Werk, Whitechurch, and Warwick, Webley, and Furbury.

By the stat. of 31 Hen. 8. c. 5. Hampton Court is made an honour.

So, by the Stat. 33 H. 8. 37, 38. Ampthill, and Grafton. And by the Stat. 37 H. 8. 18. Westminster, Kingston on Hull, St. Osyth, and Donnington Castle.

The King granted to a subject a great manor, called an honour, and passed it by the name of an honour; and well. Jenk. 277. pl. 99.

It is illegal to purchase honour, (as a dukedom) for money. Vern. 5. Pasch. 1681. E. of Kingston v. Lady Eliz. Pierepoint.

At this day the Earl of Arundel only hath his Earldom by prescription, the beginning of which is time out of mind, not within the memory of any one; so that his Earldom is the most ancient in the realm. 1 Bull. 196.

Honour-Courts. Are courts held within such honours, mentioned in the Stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 37. And there is a court of honour of the Earl Marshal of England, &c. which determines disputes concerning precedency and points of honour. 2 Hawk. P. C. 11. This court of honour, which is also exercised to do justice to heralds, is a court by prescription, and has a prison belonging to it, called the White Lyon in Southwark. 2 Nelf. 935. See Black. Com. 3 V. 104.

Honourary (or Honorary) Feuds. Are titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son in exclusion of all the rest. Black. Com. 2 V. 56, 215.

Honourary Services. Are those that are incident to the tenure of grand serjeanty, and commonly annexed to some honour. Stat. 12 Car. 2. 29.

Hontfongenethesf. Cum omnibus aliis libertatibus tantummodo hontfongenethesf mibi retento. Charta Wil. Comitis Mathefialci. In Mon. Angl. 1 par. fo. 724. This should have been written hontfongenethesf, and signifies a chief, taken with bondhabend, i. e. having the thing stolen in his hand. Cowell.

Hopron. Signifies a valley in Domesday Book; for too do hope, bawgh and bewgh. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Hops and hop-binds. Penalty on importing or using corrupt hops, 1 Jac. 1. c. 18. Hops imported, what duties to pay. 2 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 4. sect. 10. 9 Ann. cap. 12. Penalty on sophisticating hops, 7 Geo. 2. c. 19. f. 2. Damages to be made good, as by 9 Geo. 1. c. 27. Cutting hop-binds, 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. sect. 4. By Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. f. 6. Unlawfully and maliciously cutting hop-binds is made felony without benefit of clergy.

Hora Aurora. The morning bell, or what we now call the four o'clock bell, was antiently called hora aurea; as our eight o'clock bell, or the bell in the evening was called ignitogium or coverfen. Cowell.

Hozdera. (from the Sax. Hord, Thefaurus.) A treasurer; and hence we have the word Hord or Hoard, as used for treasuring or laying up a thing. Leg. Adelfhan. cap. 2.

Hozderium. A hoard, a treasury, or repository. As in the laws of King Canute, c. 104. Sed suum hozderium, quod dicere possumus thesaurum, & cistam suam, & trage, id est thesaurum suum, debet ipse custodire. Cowell.

Hordeum palmale. Hoc indentura 18thatur, quod Rob. 1. c. 23. unam virgatam terre in Gillingham, redd.

nde quolibet anno ad festum S. Mich. quatuor Buffellos ordeum palmale firmæ juxta melius precium per duos denarios in quarterio, &c. Dat. 43 Ed. 4. penus Alington Paynter 1rm. Doubtless this is meant of beer-barley, which in Norfolk is called sprat-barley, and battledore-barley; and in the marches of Wales cymridge, it being broader in the ear, and more like a band than the common barley, which in old deeds is called hordeum quadragesimale. Cowell.

Hoznebeame pollengens. Are trees so called, that have been usally lopped, and are about twenty years growth, and therefore not tithable. Plowden, fol. 407. Soby's case.

Hoznegeld. Is a compound from the Saxon word hozn, cornu, and geld, solutio, signifying a tax within a forest, to be paid for horned beasts. Crompt. Jurisd. 197. And to be free thereof is a privilege granted by the King unto such as he thinketh good. Idem ibid. & Rastall in his Exposition of Words, Quietum esse de omni collectione in foresta de bestiis cornutis affert. 4 Inst. fol. 369. Et sunt quieti de omnibus geldis, & danegeldis, & walgeldis, & senegeldis, & horngeldis, &c. Diploma H. 3. canonicis & monialibus de Semplingham. Cowell, edit. 1727.

Hozn with hozn, or Hozn under hozn. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or all horned beasts, that are allowed to run together upon the same common. As in the constitution of Robert, Bishop of Durham, 1276. Similiter de decimis quæ de vaccis proveniunt statuendum duximus, quod ubicunque fuerit receptaculum earum, licet in vicinis parochiis hozn with hozn, secundum Anglicam linguam, pascua quærant, illi remaneat tota decima; ubi fuerit domicilium & remanentia. Spelman. To which may be added, that the commoning of cattle horn with hozn, was properly when the inhabitants of several parishes let their common herds run upon the same open spacious common, that lay within the bounds of several parishes; and therefore that there might be no dispute upon the right of tithes, the bishop ordains, that the cows should pay all profit to the minister of the parish where the owner lived, &c. Cowell.

Hoznagium. Is supposed to be the same with horn-geld.

Hoznets. No stranger was to buy any English horns gathered or growing in London, or within twenty-four miles thereof, by the Stat. 4 Ed. 4. c. 8. And none may sell English hozns unwrought to any stranger, or send them beyond sea, on pain of forfeiting double value: the wardens of hozners in London may search all wares, &c. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 14.

Hors de son fee. (Fr. i. e. out of his fee) Is an exception to avoid an action brought for rent or services, &c. issuing out of land, by him that pretends to be the lord; for if the defendant can prove that the land is without the compass of his fee, the action falls. Brooke. In an avowry, a stranger may plead generally hors de son fee; and so may tenant for years: and such stranger to the avowry, being made a party, is at liberty to plead any matter in abatement of it. 9 Rep. 30. 2 Mod. 104. A tenant in fee-simple ought either to disclaim, or plead hors de son fee. 1 Danv. Abr. 655. Vide 9 Rep. Bucknal's case, 22 Hen. 6. 23. Kelw. 73, 14. Aff. pl. 13. 1 Inst. 1. b. 2 Mod. 103, 104. Horse-bread. Inn-keepers shall not make horse-bread. 13 Ric. 2. f. 1. c. 8. 4 Hen. 4. c. 25. 21 Jac. 1. c. 21. Permitted to bake horse-bread, 32 Hen. 8. c. 41.

Horses. were not to be conveyed out of the realm without the King's licence, &c. on pain of forfeiture, by an ancient statute, 11 H. 7. c. 13. Persons having lands of inheritance in parks, &c. are to keep two mares apt to bear foals thirteen hands high; for the increase of the breed of horses, on pain of 40 s. for every month they are wanting; and nor suffer them to be leaped by stoned horses under fourteen hands, on a certain penalty. 27 Hen. 8. c. 6. And for the preservation of a strong breed of horses, stone-horses above two years old are to be fifteen hands high, or they shall not be put into forests or commons, where mares are kept, upon pain of forfeiture; and scabbed or infected horses shall not be put into common fields, under the penalty nalty of 10*s*. leviable by the Lord of the leet. 32 H. 8. c. 13. Stealing of any horse, gelding or mare, is felony without benefit of clergy; but accessories to this offence are not excluded clergy. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 23. And if any horse that is stolen be not sold according to the statute 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7. the owner may take the horse again where ever he finds him, or have action of detinue, &c. To prevent horses being stolen and sold in private places, the 2 & 3 P. & M. provides, that owners of fairs and markets shall appoint toll-takers or book-keepers, who are to enter the names of buyers and sellers of horses, &c. And to alter the property, the horses must be rid or stand in the open fair one hour; and all the parties to the contract must be present with the horse. And by 31 Eliz. cap. 12. Sellers of horses are to procure vouchers of the sale to them; and the names of the buyer, seller and voucher, and price of the horse are to be entered in the toll taker's book, and a note thereof delivered to the buyer; and if any person shall sell a horse without being known to the book-keeper, or bringing a voucher; or if any one shall vouch without knowing the seller; or the book-keeper shall make an entry without knowing either, in either of these cases the sale is void, and a forfeiture is incurred of 5*l*. A horse stolen, the owner according to the direction of the act, may be redeemed and taken by the owner within six months, repaying the buyer what he shall swear he gave for the same. Stat. Ibid.

Horses in hackney coaches to be 14 hands, 9 Ann. c. 23. Sec. 4.

Horses hired. Action of trespass on the case lies for abating a horse hired, by immoderate riding, &c. And a difference has been made in our law betwixt hiring a horse, and borrowing one to go a journey; for in the first case the party may let his servant, &c. upon the horse, but not in the second, 1 Mod. 210.

Horses for the King's Service. None shall take the horse of any person to serve the King without the owner's consent, or sufficient warrant, on pain of imprisonment, &c. Stat. 20 R. 2. c. 5.

Horse-Races. For small sums having encouraged idleness, and impoverished the meaner sort of people; it is ordained, that no person shall run any horse at a race, unless it be his own, nor enter more than one horse for the same plate, upon pain of forfeiting the horse; and no plate is to be run for under 50*l*. on the penalty of 500*l*. Also every horse-race must be begun and ended in the same day, &c. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 19. Sept. 18 Geo. 2. c. 34.

Horses at races to be entered by the owners 13 Geo. 2. c. 19. Horses racing with horses carrying small weights, prohibited. Ib. Horses may run for the value of 50*l*. with any weight and at any place, 18 Geo. 2. c. 34. Sec. 21.

Hosellers, (Fr. Hosellers) Is used for inn-keepers; and in some old books the word hospellers is taken in the same sense. 31 Ed. 3. c. 2. The executors of hosellers are not chargeable for their faults. 1 Keb. 582.

Hospes generalis. A great chamberlain.—Polonius quantum ad hospitium pertinet, omnia indifferenter ad hoc hospitii generalis obediunt, &c. Du Cange.

Hospitality. The reader will not be displeased with the following extract from the learned Dr. Robertson, on this subject.

Speaking of the middle ages, he says, "Among people whose manners are simple, and who are seldom visited by strangers, hospitality is a virtue of the first rank. This duty of hospitality was so necessary in that state of society which took place during the middle ages, that it was not considered as one of those virtues which men may practise or not, according to the temper of their minds, and the generosity of their hearts. Hospitality was enforced by statutes, and those who neglected the duty were liable to punishment." The laws of the Slawi ordained that thenceforward of an inhospitable person should be confiscated and his house burnt. They were even so solicitous for the entertainment of strangers, that they permitted the landlord to steal for the support of his guests." Hist. Emp. Char. V. 1 P. 326.

Hospitallers, (Hospitalarii) Were the knights of a religious order, so called, because they built an hospital at Jerusalem, wherein pilgrims were received. To these Pope Clement the Fifth transferred the templars, which order, by a council held at Vienne in France, he suppressed, for their many and great offences. The institution of their order was first allowed by Pope Gelasius the Second, ann 1118, and confirmed here by parliament, and had many privileges granted them, as immunities from payment of tithes, &c. You shall find their privileges reserved to them by Magna Charta, cap. 37. and you shall see the rights of the King's subjects vindicated from the usurpation of their jurisdiction, by the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 43. Their chief abode is now in Mallia, an island given them by the Emperor Charles the Fifth, after they were driven from Rhodes by Solyman the Magnificent, Emperor of the Turks; and for that they are now called Knights of Mallia. They are mentioned 13 Ed. 1. cap. 43, and 9 Hen. 3. c. 37. The Walsingham in Hist. Ed. 2. and Stow's Annals, Ibid. All the lands and goods of these knights here in England were given to the King, by 32 Hen. 8. c. 34. See Mos. Angl. 2 par. fol. 189.

Hospitals are aggregate, in which the master, or warden and his brethren have the estate of inheritance; or sole, in which the master, &c. only has the estate in him, and the brethren, or sisters, having college, and common seal in them, must consent, or the master alone has the estate not having college, or common seal. Co. L. 342. d.

So hospitals are eligible, donative, or presentative. Ibid.

The master of the hospital, who has college, and common seal, may have a writ of right; for the right, and inheritance is in him. If he has no college, or common seal, he may have a juris utrum. Co. L. 341. b. Sec. 2.

Any person seized of an estate in fee-simple may by deed enrolled in Chancery erect and found an hospital for the sustenance and relief of the poor, to continue for ever; and place such heads, &c. therein as he shall think fit; and such hospital shall be incorporated, and subject to such visitors, &c. as the founder shall nominate; also such corporations have power to take and purchase lands not exceeding 200*l*. per annum, so as the same be not holden of the King, &c. and to make leases for twenty-one years, reserving the accustomed yearly rent; but no hospital is to be erected, unless upon the foundation it be endowed with lands or hereditaments of the clear yearly value of 10*l*. per annum. Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 5.

It has been adjudged upon this Statute, that if lands given to an hospital be at the time of the foundation or endowment of the yearly value of 200*l*. or under, and afterwards they become of greater value by good husbandry, accidents, &c. they shall continue good to be enjoyed by the hospital, although they be above the yearly value of 200*l*. And goods and chattels, (real or personal) may be taken of what value soever. 2 Rep. 712. And if one give his land then worth 10*l*. a year to maintain poor, &c. and the land after comes to be worth 100*l*. a year, it must all of it be employed to increase their maintenance, and none of it may be converted to private use. 3 Rep. 130.

Also if one devise the rent of his land for such uses, it shall be taken largely for 2 devils of the rent then reserved, or afterwards to be reserved upon an improved value. 9 Jac. Such only are to be founders of hospitals within the act 39 Eliz. c. 5. as are seized of any estate in fee, and who give the same at the first foundation of the hospital to the incorporation of the hospital, &c. But if a man as a citizen of London, by will devise that his executors shall pay out 100*l*. in the purchase of lands, &c. and that an hospital shall thereupon be built and incorporated for the sustentation and relief of poor impotent people, and others, who upon the execution purchase land of such a value, and cause the estate to be conveyed to certain persons and their heirs, and build an hospital; if this and the like cases, the persons that have the estate in the lands are by the purview of this Statute to be founders and do all things that the founder is appointed to do. Inst. 724. If one devise so much a year for the poor, &c. leaving assets in goods, this is good, and the executors will be forced to buy as much land, and to assure it to that use. Trin. 15 Cor. And if a devise be to the poor people maintained in the hospital of St. Laurence in Reading, &c. (where the mayor and burgesses capable to take in mortmain, do govern the hospital) albeit the poor not being a corporation, are not capable by that name to take; yet the devise is good, and commissioners appointed to enquire into lands given to hospitals, &c. may order him that hath the land to assure it to the mayor and burgesses for the maintenance of the hospital. 43 Eliz.

A deed of gift to a parish generally, to maintain poor or other charitable use, is not good; but a devise by will is good, and the churchwardens and overseers shall take it in succession; and in London the mayor and commons. 40 Aff. 26. A gift must be to the poor, and not to the aged or impotent of such a parish, without expressing their poverty; for poverty is the principal circumstance to bring the gift within the statute 43 Eliz. Although at Common law a corporation may be of an hospital, that is in potestate of certain persons to be governors of the hospital and not of the persons placed therein: the safest way upon the act 39 Eliz. c. 5. is first to prepare the hospital, and to place the poor therein, and to incorporate the persons therein placed; and after the incorporation to convey the lands, tenements, &c. to the said corporation, by bargain and sale, or otherwise, between the founder of the one part, and the master and brethren, &c. of the other part, in consideration of 5 s. in hand paid by the master of the said hospital, &c. 2 Inst. 724, 725. And the founder cannot erect an hospital for years, lives, or any other limited time; but it must be for ever, according to the stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. which statute for erecting of hospitals is made perpetual by 21 Jac. 1. r. 1. See 10 Rib. 17. 34.

By 39 Eliz. c. 6. and 43 Eliz. c. 4. Commissioners may be awarded to certain persons to enquire of lands or goods given to hospitals; and the Lord Chancellor is empowered to issue commissions to commissioners for enquiring by a jury, of all grants, abuses, breaches of trust, &c. of lands given to charitable uses, who may make orders and decrees concerning the same, and the due application thereof; and the commissioners are to decree, that recompence be made for fraud and breaches of trust, &c. so as their orders and decrees be certified into the Chancery; and the Lord Chancellor shall take order for the execution of the said judgments and decrees; and after certificate may examine into, annul, or alter them agreeable to equity, on just complaint: but this does not extend to lands given to any college or hall in the universities, &c. nor to any hospital over which special governors are appointed by the founders; and it shall not be prejudicial to the jurisdiction of the bishop or ordinary, as to his power of inquiry into and reforming abuses of hospitals, by virtue of the stat. 2 Hen. 5. &c.

These commissioners may order houses to be repaired, by those who receive the rents; see that the lands be let at the utmost rent; and on any tenant's committing waste, by cutting down and sale of timber, they may decree satisfaction, and that the lease shall be void. Hill. 11 Cor. Where money is kept back, and not paid, or paid where it should not, they have power to order the payment of it to the right use: and if money is detained in the hands of executors, &c. any great length of time, they may decree the money to be paid with damages for detaining it. Dale Rep. 123. See 4 Rep. 104.

The hospital of St. Cross near Winchester, and several other large hospitals, were anciently founded by particular persons, or acts of parliament. And King Charles the First granted to the mayor and commons of London the keeping of Bread Street Hospital, and the manors and lands belonging to it. Chas. I. Cha. 1. Altho there is now an hospital in London for foundling children, under the care of governors and governors, who may purchase lands or tenements to the value of 2000 l. a year: and they are to receive as many such children, as they think fit, which may be brought to the hospital, and shall there be bred up and employed, or placed apprentice to any trade, or the sea service, the males till the age of 24, and the females till 21. They may likewise be let out or hired, &c. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 29. and several other hospitals. Hospitalium, (In partem patris) Is a word brought from the Fr. hospital, used for a confused mingling of divers things together, and among the Dutch it signifies flesh cut into pieces, and sadden with herbs or roots; but by a metaphor it is a blending or mixing of lands given in marriage, with other lands in fee falling by descent: as if a man held of thirty acres of land in fee, hath issue only two daughters; and he gives with one of them ten acres in marriage to the man that marries her; and dies seized of the other twenty acres: now she that is thus married, to gain her share of the rest of the land, must put her part given in marriage in hospital, i. e. she must refuse to take the sole profits thereof, and cause her land to be mingled with the other; so that an equal division may be made of the whole between her and her sister, as if none had been given to her; and thus for her ten acres she shall have fifteen, otherwise her sister will have the twenty acres of which her father died seized. Litt. 55. Co. Litt. lib. 3. cap. 12. This seems to be a right of waving a provision, made for a child in a man's life-time, at his death, though as it depends upon frank marriage, and gifts of lands therein, it now seldom happens. But there is a bringing of money into hospital, upon the clauses and intent of the act of parliament for distribution of intestate estates, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. f. 2. Where a certain sum is to be raised, and paid to a daughter for her portion, by a marriage settlement; this has been decreed to be an advancement by the father in his life time, within the meaning of the statute, though future and contingent; and if the daughter would have any further share of her father's personal estate, she must bring this money into hospital; and shall not have both the one and the

the other. Abr. Caf. Eq. 253. See 2 Vern. 638. By the custom of London, there is likewise a term of botchpot, where the children of a freeman are to have an equal share of one third part of his personal estate, after his death. Preced. Cauc. 3.

There is also in the Civil law collatio bonorum answerable to this, whereby if a child advanced by the father, do after his father's decease challenge a child's part with the rest he must call in all that he had formerly received, and then take out an equal share with the others. Cowell. See farther Britton, c. 72. *Litt. House, (Domus) A place of dwelling or habitation, also a family or household. Every man has a right to air and light, in his own house; and therefore if any thing of infectious smell, be laid near the house of another, or his lights be stopped up and darkened, by build-ings, &c. they are nuisances punishable by our laws. 3 Inst. 231. 1 *Danv. The dwelling house of every man, is as his castle; therefore if thieves come to a man's house to rob or kill him, and the owner or his servants kill the thieves in defending him and his house, that is not felony, nor shall he forfeit any thing. 2 Inst. 316. A man ought to use his own house, so as not to damnify his neighbour; and one may compel another to repair his house, in several cases, by the writ de domo reparanda. 1 Salk. Rep. 360. Doors of a house may not be broke open on arrests, unless it be for treason, or felony, &c. H. P. C. 137. Plowd. 5. 5 Rep. 91. Stealing lead, or iron bars, or rails fixed to houses, &c. is felony punishable by transportation, by 4 Geo. cap. 32. House-burning, see Arson.

Several things have been resolved on the subject, as to the protection a man's house affords him, as, 1. That every man's house is as his castle, as well to defend him against injuries as for his repose. 2. Upon recovery in any real action or ejectment, the sheriff may break the house and deliver seisin, &c. to the plaintiff, the writ being habere facias possessionem or possessorem; and after judgment it is not the house of the defendant in right and judgment of the law. 3. In all cases, where the King is party, the sheriff (if no door be open) may break the party's house to take him, or to execute other process of the King, if he cannot otherwise enter; but he ought first to signify the cause of his coming, and request the door to be opened; and this appears by the statute Westm. 1. 17. which is only in affirmance of the Common law; and without default in the owner, the law will not suffer a house to be broken. 4. In all cases, when the door is open, the sheriff may enter and make execution at the suit of any subject, either of body or goods; but otherwise where the door is shut, there he cannot break it to execute process at the suit of a subject. 5. Tho' a house is a castle for the owner himself and his family and his own goods, &c. yet 'tis no protection for a stranger flying thither, or the goods of such an one, to prevent lawful execution; and therefore in such case, after request to enter, and denial, the sheriff may break the house. 5 Rep. 91, a. to 93. a. Mich. 2 Jac. B. R. Semaine's case, alias Semaine v. Gresham.

Housethatch, A compound of house and hatch, i. e. compensatio, signifies allowance, or an allowance of necessary timber out of the Lord's wood, for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. And this belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life: but if he take more than is needful, he may be punished by an action of waste. Housethatch, says Co. on Litt. fol. 41. is twofold, viz. Essecurium edificandi & ardendi. Cowell.

House-breaking, or House-robbing, Is the robbing of a man in some part of his house, or his booth or tent, in any fair or market, and the owner or his wife, children or servants being within the same; for this is felony by 23 Hen. 8. cap. 1. and 3 Ed. 6. cap. 5. House of Correction. Justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, are to make orders for erecting houses of correction, and the maintenance and government of the same; and for the punishment of offenders committed thither. 39 Eliz. cap. 4. In every county of England there shall be a house of correction built at the charge of the county, with conveniences for the setting of people to work, or every justice of peace shall forfeit 5 l. and the justices in sessions are to appoint governors or masters of such houses of correction, and their salaries, &c. which are to be paid quarterly by the treasurer out of the county stock: These governors are to set the persons sent on work, and moderately correct them, by whipping, &c. and to yield a true account every quarter-sessions of persons committed to their custody, and if they suffer any to escape, or neglect their duty, the justices may fine them. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. and 14 Geo. 2. c. 33.

The house of correction is chiefly for the punishing of idle and disorderly persons; parents of bastard children, beggars, servants running away, trespassers, rogues, vagabonds, &c. Poor persons refusing to work are to be there whipped, and set to work and labour: and any person who lives extravagantly, having no visible estate to support himself, may be sent to the house of correction, and set at work there, and may be continued there until he gives the justices satisfaction in respect to his living; but not be whipped. 2 Bulst. 351. Sid. 281. A person ought to be convicted of vagrancy, &c. before he is ordered to be whipped. Ibid. Bridewell is a prison for correction in London, and one may be sent thither. Stat. 27. By the 14 Geo. 2. c. 33. and 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. upon presentment of the grand jury, the justices at sessions may build, or purchase land for building, or enlarge, buy or hire fit houses of correction. And the justices are to take care that the houses of correction be provided with proper materials for relieving, employing and correcting persons sent to the same: And two justices shall visit the same twice or oftner in a year, and examine into the estate and management thereof, and report the same at the sessions. The governor or master of a house of correction misbehaving himself, may be fined or turned out, at the discretion of the justices. Offenders liable to be sent to the house of correction, where the time and manner of their punishment is not expressly limited by law, may be committed until the next sessions, or until discharged by due course of law. See County Rates.

Hue and cry, Hutesium & clamor, Is derived from two French words huer and crier, both signifying to shout or cry aloud. Manwood in his Forest Law, cap. 19. num. 11. saith, that bue in Latin, est vox dolentis, as signifying the complaint of the party, and cry is the pursuit of the felon upon the highway upon that complaint; for if the party robbed, or any in the company of one robbed or murdered, come to the constable of the next town, and will him to raise the bue and cry, that is, make the complaint known, and follow the pursuit after the offender, describing the party, and shewing as near as he can which way he went; the constable ought forthwith to call upon the parish for aid in seeking the felon, and if he be not found there, then to give the next constable notice, and the next, until the offender be apprehended, or at least until he be thus pursued unto the sea side. Of this Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5. Smith de Rep. Anglor. lib. 2. cap. 20. and the stat. 13 Edw. 1. of Winchester, cap. 3 & 28 Ed. 3. 11. & 27 Eliz. 13. The Normans had such pursuit with a cry after offenders, which they called Clamour de barre, whereof you may read the Grand Customary, cap. 54. And it may probably be derived from barrier, flagitare. Hue is used alone in stat. 4 Ed. 1. §. 2. In the ancient records this is called Hutesium & clamor. See Coke's 2 Inst. fol. 172.

But the clamor de barre was not a pursuit after offenders, but a challenge of any thing to be his own after this manner, viz. He who demanded the thing did with a loud voice, before many witnesses, affirm it to be his proper goods, and demanded restitution. This the Scots call hutesium; and Skene de verb. signif. verb. Hutesium, saith, it is reduced from the French oyer, i. e. audire, (or rather oyer,) being a cry used before a proclamation; the manner of their bue and cry he thus describeth; If a robbery be done, a horn is blown, and an out-cry made, after which, if the party fly away, and doth not yield himself to the King's bailiff, he may lawfully be slain, and hanged upon the next gallows.

Of this bue and cry, see Crompt. Just. of Peace, fol. 160. and in Rot. Claus. 30. H. 3. m. 5. we find a command to the King's treasurer, to take the city of London into the King's hands, because the citizens did not, secundum legem & consuetudinem Regni, raise the bue and cry for the death of Guido de Arette and others who were slain. Corwell. See Vociferatia.

Hue and cry, is also defined the pursuit of an offender from town to town till he be taken, which all that are present when a felony is committed, or a dangerous wound given, are by the Common law, as well as by the statute, bound to raise against the offenders who escape, on pain of fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 116, 117. 2 Inst. 172. Dalt. Justice, cap. 28, 109. Fitz. Coron. 395. Cro. Eliz. 654.

The raising of bue and cry is enjoined by the Common law, which may be called a raising of it at the suit of the King, as well as by several acts of parliament, which may be called a raising of it at the suit of a private person, inasmuch as those statutes make the hundred answerable to the party robbed, if they neglect to pursue the bue and cry, and apprehend the robbers. 3 New Abr. 61.

As to bue and cry at Common law, it seems to be clearly agreed, that a private person who hath been robbed, or who knows that a felony hath been committed, is not only authorized to levy bue and cry, but is also bound to do it under pain of fine and imprisonment. 2 Inst. 172. 3 Inst. 116. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 464.

From hence it follows, that although it is a good course, as Lord Hale says, to have a precept or warrant from a justice of peace for raising bue and cry, yet it is neither of absolute necessity, nor sometimes convenient, for the felons may escape before the justice can be found; also bue and cry was part of the law before the statute of 1 Ed. 3. cap. 16. which first instituted justices of the peace. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 99.

It is incumbent upon constables to pursue bue and cry when called upon, and they are severely punishable if they neglect it: and it prevents many inconveniences if they be there; for it gives a greater authority to their pursuit, and enables the pursuants, in his assistance, to plead the general issue upon the statutes 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 12. without being driven to special pleading: therefore, to prevent inconveniences which may happen by unruliness, it is most advisable that the constable be called: yet upon a robbery, or other felony committed, bue and cry may be raised by the country in the absence of the constable; and in this there is no inconvenience, for if bue and cry be raised without cause, they that raise it are punishable by fine and imprisonment. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 99, 100.

The regular method of levying bue and cry, is for the party to go to the constable of the next town, and declare the fact, and describe the offender, and the way he is gone; whereupon the constable ought immediately, whether it be night or day, to raise his own town, and make search for the offender; and upon the not finding him, to send the like notice, with the utmost expedition to the constables of all the neighbouring towns, who ought in like manner to search for the offender, and also to give notice to their neighbouring constables, and they to the next, till the offender be found. 3 Inst. 116. Dalt. Justice, cap. 28. Crompt. 178. 2 Hawk. P. C. 75.

The constable is not only to make search in his own vill, but is also to raise all the neighbouring vills, who are all to pursue the bue and cry with horsemen as well as footmen until the offender be taken. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 101. In case of bue and cry once raised and levied upon supposal of a felony committed, tho' in truth there was no felony committed; yet those who pursue bue and cry may arrest, and proceed as if a felony had been really committed. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 101. 5 H. 5. a. 21 H. 7. 28. a. per Rede. 2 Ed. 4. 8 & 9. 29 Ed. 3. 39. 2 Inst. 173. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 102.

If bue and cry be raised against a person certain for felony tho' possibly he is innocent, yet the constables, and those that follow the bue and cry, may arrest and imprison him in the common gaol, or carry him to a justice of the peace 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 102.

If the person pursued by bue and cry be in a house, and the doors are shut, and refused to be opened upon demand of the constable, and notice given of his business, he may break open the doors; and this he may do in any case where he may arrest, tho' it be only a suspicion of felony for it is for the King and Commonwealth, and therefore: virtual non omittas is in the case; and the same law is upon a dangerous wound given, and a bue and cry levied upon the offender. 7 Ed. 3. 16. b. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 102.

It seems in this case, that if he cannot be otherwise taken, he may be killed, and the necessity excuseth the constable. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 102.

Upon bue and cry levied against any person, or where any bue and cry comes to a constable, whether the person be certain or uncertain, the constable may search in suspected places within his vill, for the apprehending of the felons. Dalt. cap. 28. 2 Ed. 4. 8. b. Crompt. de Pa. 178. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103.

But though he may search suspected places or houses: yet his entry must be per ostia aperta, for he cannot break open doors barely to search, unless the person against whom the bue and cry is levied be there, and then it is true he may; therefore in case of such a search, the breaking open the door is at his peril, viz. justifiable

He be there; but it must be always remembered, that in case of breaking open a door, there must be first a notice given to them within of his business, and a demand of entrance, and a refusal, before doors can be broken. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103

If the bue and cry be not against a person certain, but by description of his stature, person, clothes, horse, &c. the bue and cry doth justify the constable, or other person, following it, in apprehending the person so described, whether innocent or guilty, for that is his warrant; it is a kind of process that the law allows, (not usual in other cases) viz. to arrest a person by description. Ibid.

But if the bue and cry be upon a robbery, burglary, manslaughter or other felony committed; but the person that did the fact is neither known nor described by person, clothes or the like; yet such a bue and cry is good, as hath been said, and must be pursued, tho' no person certain be named or described. Ibid.

And therefore in this case, all that can be done is, for those who pursue the bue and cry, to take such persons as they have probable cause to suspect; as for instance, Such persons as are vagrants, that cannot give an account where they live, whence they are, or such suspicious persons as come late into their inn or lodgings, and give no reasonable account where they had been, and the like. 2 Ed. 4. 8. l. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103.

There can be no doubt but that both by the Common law, as also by the several statutes which injoin the levying of bue and cry, they who neglect to levy one, (whether officers of justice, or others) or who neglect to pursue it when rightly levied, are punishable by indictment, and may be fined and imprisoned for such neglect. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 104.

By the stat. 8 Geo. 2. 16. Every constable, to whom notice is given or left at his house of a robbery, &c. and every constable of the hundred, or constable, &c. in any town, parish, &c. within the hundred, on notice from the party robbed or otherwise, shall with all expedition make bue and cry after the felon, &c. on pain of 5 l. for neglect, a moiety to the King, a moiety to him that sues in six months, to be recovered with full costs.

If there be judgment against the hundred, it may be levied against the inhabitants of the same hundred by feri facias. So it may be levied upon any one, who has lands in his possession within the hundred, tho' he has no house, nor lodging there; for he is an inhabitant. R. 2 Saund. 423. Upon a lessee, or purchaser after the robbery committed. R. Noy 155. So it may be levied upon one or two of the inhabitants. But if a man come to inhabit in an hundred after a robbery done, he shall not be charged. R. Hutt. 125. Cont. per Barkley, Mar. pl. 28. So, if the whole debt be levied upon one or two of the hundred, by the stat. 27 El. 13. on complaint to two justices of peace of the county (quorum unus) in or near the hundred, they may assess rateably all the towns, &c. within the same hundred, or in the liberties within the same, for the relief of him against whom the plaintiff took execution; and the constable of each town, &c. may rateably assess the said sum on every inhabitant, and if he refuse to pay, levy it by distress and sale, &c.

And by the same statute, The hundred, where default of fresh suit on bue and cry was made, shall answer half the damages recovered against the hundred in which the robbery was committed, to be recovered by debt, &c. at the suit of the clerk of the peace.

By the stat. 8 Geo. 2. 16. After judgment against the hundred, no process shall be served on the high constable or any inhabitant, but the sheriff on receipt of the writ of execution shall shew it gratis to two justices of the peace in or near the hundred, who shall speedily cause an assessment to be levied pursuant to the stat. 27 El. 13. and also for the necessary expences of the high constable above his costs and damages recovered, of which, on notice from the two justices, he shall give an account and proof on oath to their satisfaction, having first caused his attorney's bill to be taxed.

The sheriff shall pay the money levied to the parties without fee, and indorse the day of receiving the writ of execution, and not to be called upon for a return till sixty days after. And v. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46.

And the like assessment shall be in case the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue, or have a verdict or judgment on demurrer against him, if by insolvency of the plaintiff or his sureties, he cannot be reimbursed on the bond of 100 l. penalty; and the money levied shall be paid to the justices for the high constable in ten days after it is levied.

And the justices may limit a time not exceeding thirty days for levying such assessment; and the officer appointed refusing or neglecting to levy and pay the money, &c. in such time forfeits double the sum.

See the statutes 27 Eliz. c. 13. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. And 22 Geo. 2. c. 24. Also vide 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. s. 116. No receiver general of the land-tax or his agents, can sue the hundred for a robbery, unless the persons carrying the money be three in company.

And see the law under this title of bue and cry, well and largely treated of in the New Abr. 3 V. 61, &c.

The general doctrine as to actions is as follows. Where a robbery is done on the highway, in the day-time, of any day except Sunday, the hundred where committed is answerable for it: but notice is to be given of it, with convenient speed, to some of the inhabitants of the next village, to the intent that they may make bue and cry for the apprehending of the robbers, or no action will lie against the hundred: and if any of the robbers are taken within forty days, and convicted, the hundred shall be excused.

By a late statute, no process is to be served against the hundred, &c. for a robbery committed, but on the high constable, who shall give notice of it in one of the principal market-towns, &c. and then enter an appearance, and defend the action, v. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. By the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 24. No person shall recover on any of the statutes of bue and cry, above 200 l. unless the person or persons so robbed shall at the time of such robbery be together in company, and be in number two at the least, to attest the truth of his or their being so robbed. If he that is robbed, after bue and cry, makes no further pursuit after the robbers, action lies against the hundred. 4 Leon. 180. The party robbed is not bound to pursue the robbers himself, or to lend his horse for that purpose; but still has his remedy against the hundred, if they are not taken: tho' if any of them are taken, either within forty days after the robbery, or before the plaintiff recovers, the hundred is discharged. Sid. 11. It has been held, that an action lies against the hundred for a robbery in the day-time, although not in the King's highway, but in a private way. Hill. 1 Ann. 1 Mod. 221. But not for a robbery in the morning, before it is light; and yet where it is before sun-rising, or after sun-set, if it be so light that a man's face may be known, it well lies. 7 Rep. 6. Cro. Jac. 106. If a party be robbed in the night-time, when persons are at rest, the hundred is not chargeable: and where a person is seized by day-light, but robbed in the night, he is without remedy. 3 Leon. 350. Though where robbers forced a coach out of the way, in the day-time, and afterwards robbed it in the night, this was held a robbery in the day, and that action lay against the hundred. 1 Sid. 263. When a man is robbed on a Sunday, on which day persons are supposed to be at church, and none ought to travel, the hundred is not liable. 27 Eliz. But where a robbery is done on a Sunday, tho' the hundred is not chargeable, bue and cry shall be made by stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. And if a person be robbed going to church in a country town or village, on a Sunday, which is a religious duty required by law, it has been lately held an action lies against the hundred; but not if one be robbed on that day in other travelling for pleasure, &c. which is prohibited by statute. 6 Geo. 1. C. B. per King, chief justice.

And it was formerly ruled by three judges on the statute of Winton, where a man was robbed on a Sunday, in time of divine service, and made bue and cry, that the hundred should be charged; for many persons are necessitated to travel on this day; as physicians, &c. 2 Cro. 496. 2 Rel. 59. Godb. 280. See 2 Nels. Abr. 937, 938. If a person be robbed in a house, where he is presumed to be at safety by his own care, the hundred is not chargeable: A robbery must be an open robbery, that the country may take notice of it, to make the hundred answerable.

7 Rep. 6. A man is set upon and assaulted by robbers in one hundred, and carried into a wood, &c. in another hundred, near the highway, and there robbed, the action shall be brought against the hundred where the robbery was done, as particularly expressed in the statute, and not the hundred where the man was taken or assaulted; because the assault is not the efficient cause of the robbery, as a stroke is in case of murder. Hill. 1 Ann. B. R. 2 Salk. 614. But where goods are taken from a man in one hundred, and opened in another, where they are first taken or seized, they are stolen, and the robbery is committed. 2 Lill. Abr. 27. If a servant is robbed of his master's money, he may sue the hundred on the statute of Winton of hue and cry; or the master may bring the action, and the man making oath of the robbery, and that he knew none of the robbers, is sufficient without the oath of the master. Goldf. 24. Cro. Car. 26, 37, 336. Where a servant is robbed, he must be examined and sworn; but if the master be present, it is a robbery of him, Shew. 241. 1 Leon. 323. If a quaker be robbed, or a man's servant being a quaker, and either refuse to take the oath of the robbery, and that he did not know any of the robbers, the hundred is not answerable; for the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 13. was made to prevent combination between persons robbed and the robbers. 2 Salk. 613. But the master's oath where the servant is a quaker, or otherwise, and being robbed in his presence, will maintain the action in his own name, Carib. 146. And a plaintiff had judgment on his oath, though his servant that was robbed with him knew one of the robbers. When a carrier is robbed of another man's goods, he or the owner may sue the hundred; but the carrier is to give notice, and make oath, &c. though the owner of the goods brings the action. 2 Saund. 380.

If an action against the hundred be discontinued, on a new action brought, there must be a new oath taken within forty days before the last action brought. Sid. 139. In action upon the statute of hue and cry, the declaration is good, though the plaintiff doth not say, that the justice of peace who took the oath lived prope locum where the robbery was committed. Mich. 6 W. 3. And oath was made before a justice of peace of the county where the robbery was done, in a place of another neighbouring county; and it was held good. Cro. Car. 211. If a justice of peace refuse to examine a person robbed, and to take his oath, action on the statute lies against the justice. 1 Leon. 323. It is safe to say the plaintiff gave notice at such a place, near the place where the robbery was done; and though that place where notice is given be in another hundred or county, yet it is good enough; for a stranger may not know the confines of the hundred or county. Cro. Car. 41, 379. 3 Salk. 184. If there be a mistake of the parish in the declaration where the robbery was, if it be laid in the right hundred, it is well enough. 2 Leon. 212. And though the party puts more in his declaration than he can prove, for so much as he can prove it shall be good. Cro. Jac. 348. Upon a trial in these cases, the party must file his original, and be sure to have a true copy thereof, and witnesses to prove it; and he must also have the affidavit or oath, and a witness to prove the taking it. 2 Lill. Abr. 25. In these actions, poor persons in a hundred, and servants, are good witnesses for the hundred; but not those householders who are worth any thing. 1 Mod. 73. And as proof cannot be otherwise for the plaintiff, he is allowed to be a witness in his own cause.

Hundred, (hundredum centuria) Is a part of a shire so called, either because of old each hundred found 100 benefactors of the King's peace, or a hundred able men for his wars. But more probably 'tis so called, because it was composed of an hundred families. P. s. truv. Brompton tells us, that an hundred contains centum villas; and Giraldus Cambrensis writes, that the Isle of Man hath 343 villas. But in these places the word villa must be taken for a country family; for it cannot mean a village, because there are not above 40 villages in that island. So where Mr. Lambard tells us, that an hundred is so called, à numero centum hominum, it must be understood of an hundred men, who are heads or chiefs of so many families. These were first ordained by King Alfred, the 29th King of the West-Saxons: Alarodus Rex, (says Lambard, verbo Centuria), ubi cum Guthruno Daw sedus inerat, prudentissimum illud olim a Teithone Moiss datum secutus consilium, Angliam primis in satrapias, centurias, & decurias, partiti sunt. Satrapiam, shire, a securian, (quod partiri significat), nominavit centuriam, hundred, & decuriam, toothing five tiegmantal, i. e. Decemvirale collegium appellavit; atque isdem nominibus vel hodie vocantur, &c. This dividing counties into hundreds, for better government, King Alfred brought from Germany: For there centa, or centena, is a jurisdiction over an hundred towns. See Black. Com. 1 V. 115, &c.

This is the original of hundreds, which still retain the name, but their jurisdiction is devolved to the county-court, some few excepted, which have been by privilege annexed to the crown, or granted to some great subject, and so remain still in the nature of a franchise. This has been ever since the Stat. 14 Ed. 3. f. 1. cap. 9. whereby these hundred-courts, formerly farmed out by the sheriff to other men, were all, or the most part, reduced to the county-court, and so remain at present. But now, by hundred-courts, we understand several franchises, wherein the sheriff has nothing to do by his ordinary authority, except they of the hundred refuse to do their office. See West. part 1. Symbol. lib. 2. f. 9. 228. Ad hundredum post Pascha, & ad proximum hundredum post festum St. Mich. Mon. Angl. 2 par. f. 293. a.

An hundred is to have jurisdiction or power to administer justice in 100 vills, or of 100 men, or of 100 parishes, Br. Court Baron, pl. 8. cites 8 H. 7. 3. per Rede.

Every ward in London is an hundred in a county, and every parish in London is a vill in an hundred. 9 Rep. 66. b.

Hundreds were either parcel of the counties, and there the sheriffs did constitute bailiffs, (viz. those hundreds which were anciently parcel of the farm of the sheriffs, that the statute 2 Ed. 3. cap. 12. speaks of); or else they were such as were granted out, which the lord of the hundred sometimes held at farm, and sometimes in fee, called hundreds in fee, liberties of hundreds, franchises of hundreds. Per Hale Ch. B. Vent. 405. Hill. 22 & 23 Car. 2. in the case of Atkins v. Clare.

In the time of King Alfred the kingdom was in gross, and then divided into counties and hundreds, and all persons then came within one hundred or other; and then the King's relations had the government of them, and therefore they were called Consanguinei; and so are the Earls, Lord-lieutenants, &c. at this day; but when the office became troublesome, there were obtained Vicecomes, which name remains to this day, and the others continue to be called Consanguinei, but have no power in the county, having having only the honorary name of Earls or Comites of such or such a county, &c. For the better government of these counties, the Viccomites had two courts; but out of those the King granted petty leets and courts-baron; but the turn of the sheriff had yet a superintendant power, they being derived out of the sheriff's turn, as in Dyer 13.

The King afterwards granted away some hundreds in fee-simple, and some franchises, and the last excluded the King utterly, but the hundreds granted in fee were not wholly exempt. On this arose some confusion, and the parliament hereon took notice, that the execution of justice was by this much interrupted, and therefore came the statute of Linc. 9 Ed. 2. stat. 2. That sheriffs should be sufficient persons, and have lands in the county, and so be able to answer both the King and country, and that bailiffs and farmers of hundreds should be sufficient men. And at this time hundreds were grantable for years.

Then came the statute of 2 Ed. 3. cap. 4 & 5. That sheriffs should continue but for one year. But this took not away the whole inconvenience; for the crown still granted away bailiwicks and hundreds, for lives, at rents at such excessive dear rates, that made them endeavour to make up their money by unlawful means; and therefore came the statute of 2 Ed. 3. cap. 12. and 14 Ed. 3. cap. 9. By the first it was enacted, That all hundreds and wapentakes granted by the King shall be annexed to the county, and not severed. And by the other statute, that all should be annexed, and the sheriff should have power to put in bailiffs, for which he will answer, and no more should be granted for the future; and one reason of this was, because the King granted away hundreds, and abated not the sheriff's farm. Arg. 2 Show. 98, 99. Pajeb. 32 Car. 2. *B. Hundred-Court, Is only a larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred instead of a manor. The free suitors are here the judges, and the steward the register, as in the case of a court-baron. It is not a court of record, and it resembles a court-baron in all points, except that in point of territory it is of a greater jurisdiction. According to Blackstone, its institution was probably co-eval with that of hundreds themselves, introduced, though not invented, by Alfred, being derived from the polity of the ancient Germans. See Black. Com. V. 1. Introd. f. 45. and 3 V. 34. 4 V. 408.

Writs of venire facias for trial of any action in the courts at Westminster, shall be awarded of the body of the proper county where the issue is triable.

Hunger. According to the present doctrine, hunger will not justify stealing food, to relieve a present necessity. 1 Hal. P. C. 54. Black. Com. 4 V. 31. And the doctrine seems just, as (on conviction) a judge may respite, and a merciful King pardon. The ancient doctrine, (that it would justify) if now in force, might open a door to many villanies. And in this commercial state, those who can labour need not fear starving. Those that cannot, and who are poor, the laws have made a provision for.

Hunting, of game and prey, see Game and Deer-sealers.

The 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. gives full costs against an inferior tradesman, apprentice, or other dissolute person convicted of a trespass in hawking, hunting, fishing or fowling in another's land. Upon this statute it hath been adjudged, that if a person be an inferior tradesman, as a clothier for instance, it matters not what qualification he may have in point of estate; but, if he be guilty of such trespass, he shall be liable to pay full costs. L. Ray. 149. Black. Com. 3 V. 215.

Notwithstanding all the game laws, and the various qualifications pointed out by statutes, which imply a power for persons so qualified to hunt, according to Blackstone, "No man but he who has a chase, or free-warren, by grant from the crown, or prescription, which supposes one, can justify hunting or sporting upon another man's soil, nor indeed, in thorough strictness of Common law, either hunting or sporting at all." 2 V. 416. Persons so hunting are liable to actions of trespass, by the possessors of the land. 2 V. 418. and to the same purport, 4 V. 174.

By 1 Hen. 7. c. 7. Unlawful hunting, in any legal forest, park or warren, not being the King's property, by night, or with painted faces, declared to be felony. And by 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. Appearing armed with faces blacked, or disguised, to hunt, wound, kill, or steal deer, to rob a warren, or steal fish, is felony, without benefit of clergy. See Black. Com. 4 V. 144.

Hurdle, A sledge or hurdle used to draw traitors to execution. Black. Com. 4 V. 92, 370.

Hurderferst, A domestick, or one of the family, from the Sax. hyred, familia, and fest, firmus. Bis in anno convenient in hundredum suum quicunque liberi tam hurderferst quam solgarii ad dignoscend. si decantæ plenæ sint. Leg. H. 1. c. 8.

Hurst, Hyrt, Hert, Are derived from the Sax. hyrst, i. e. a wood or grove of trees. There are many places in Kent, Suffex, and Hampshire, which begin and end with this syllable; and the reason may be, because the great wood called Andreswald extended through those counties. Cowell.

Hurst-Castle, Is so called, because situated near the woods. So Hurslega is a woody place; and probably from thence is derived Hursley, now Hurley, a village in Berkshire. Cowell.

ferent corn; as hybernagium was applied to wheat and rye, which we still call winter-corn; and tremagium to barley-oats, &c. which we term summer corn: this word is likewise writ ibernagium and thornagium. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 73. sect. 18.

Hypotheca, In the Civil law, was where the possession of the thing pledged remained with the debtor. Inst. l. 4. t. 6. f. 7. Black. Com. 2 V. 159.

To Hypothecate, A ship, (from the Lat. hypotheca, a pledge) Is to pawn the same for necessities; and a master may hypothecate either ship or goods for relief when in distress at sea; for he represents the traders as well as owners: and in whose hands soever a ship or goods hypothecated come, they are liable. 1 Salk. 34. 2 Lil. Abr. 195.

By the Common law, (by which property is to be tried,) the master of the ship could not impawn the ship; for he has no property either general or special; nor is such power given to him by the constituting him master; but the defendant's counsel said, that by the Civil law the master may in case of necessity, and when he has no other means to provide necessities for her. And Hobart J. held clearly, that the admiralty law is, that if the ship be in danger at sea, or wants necessities, so as the voyage may be defeated, the master, in such case of necessity, may impawn for money, &c. to relieve such extremities by employing the money so; for he is trusted with the ship and voyage, and so may reasonably be thought to have the power implicitly given him, rather than see the whole lost. Hob. 11, 12. Bridgman's case.

A. being in a ship on the sea, B. who was in it, and was reputed an agent and factor, borrows 100 l. of A. upon bottomage (that is, when the money is paid on the keel of the ship, and the ship obliged to payment of it, and if it be not paid at the time, &c. that he that lends the money shall have the ship); and it was allowed to be a good and necessary custom by all; and it was agreed, that if the master, factor, purser, or he that is reputed owner of the ship, borrows money in such a manner for the necessities of a ship, that binds the owner of the ship, although the money be not so employed, and the owner has his remedy against him that he so put in trust. And 'tis not a good allegation to have a prohibition, to say that the property was not in him that took such bottomage. Noy 95. Scarborough v. Lyrius.

'Tis said the master may hypothecate, tho' the agreement be made and the money lent at land. Benzen v. Jeffries. 1 L. Ray. 152. See Black. Com. 2 V. 159.

Justitiation of Marriage, Is one of the first and principal matrimonial causes; as, when one of the parties boasts or gives out that he or she is married to the other, whereby a common reputation of their marriage may ensue. On this ground the party injured may libel the other in the Spiritual Court; and unless the defendant undertakes and makes out a proof of the actual marriage, he or she is enjoined perpetual silence upon that head which is the only remedy the Ecclesiastical Court can give for this injury. Black. Com. 3 V. 93.

But if two persons are not married, and the one say with respect to the other, that he or she is her, or his husband, or wife, or any thing implying a marriage whereby whereby the other loses his or her marriage with a third person, or is otherwise actually damaged, we conceive an action will lie for the special damage; as in other cases of words, not actionable in themselves, but rendered actionable, by the damage which ensues.

Identitate nominis, Is a writ that lies for him who is taken and arrested in any personal action, and committed to prison for another man of the same name; in such case he may have this writ directed to the sheriff, which is in nature of a commission to inquire, whether he be the same person against whom the action was brought; and if not, then to discharge him. Reg. Orig. 194. *F. N. Ideots and Lunaticks.

Here we shall consider,

- I. What persons are esteemed such, so as to come within the protection of the law.
- II. How they are to be found such.
- III. Who hath an interest in, and jurisdiction over them, of appointing proper curators and committees, and their power and duty.
- IV. How far their want of understanding shall be said to be prejudicial to them in civil respects.
- V. How far the want of understanding will excuse in criminal cases.
- VI. How far their acts are good, void, or voidable.
- VII. How they are to sue and defend.

I. What persons are esteemed ideots and lunaticks, so as to come within the protection of the law.

Idiot is a Greek word properly signifying a private man, who has no publick office. Among the Latins it is taken for illiteratus, imperitus, and in our law for non compos mentis, or a natural fool. The words of the statute 17 Ed. 2. c. 9. are Rex habebit custodiam terrarum factorum naturalium, whereby it appears he must be a natural fool, that is, a fool a nativitate: for if he was once wise, or become a fool by chance or misfortune, the King shall not have the custody of him. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 9. F. N. B. fol. 232. If one have understanding to measure a yard of cloth, number twenty, rightly name the days of the week, or to beget a child, he shall not be counted an ideot or natural fool, by the laws of the realm. See 4 Rep. Beverley's case. Cowell.

The more general description of a person, who, from his want of reason and understanding, comes within the protection of the law, is that of non compos mentis. Co. Lit. 246. 4 Co. 124. Skin. 177.

There are, (says my Lord Coke,) four kinds of men who may be said to be non compos: 1. An ideot, who is non compos from his nativity. 2. One made such by sickness. 3. Lunatick, qui aliquando gaudet lucidis intervallis, who is non compos only for the time that he wants understanding. 4. One that is drunk; which last is so far from coming within the protection of the law, that his drunkenness is an aggravation of whatever he does amiss. Co. Lit. 247. 4 Co. 124. See 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 30 to 37. and Peer Williams, 3 V. 130. and tit. Drunkenness.

1. An ideot is a fool or madman from his nativity, and one who never has any lucid intervals; therefore the King has the protection of him and his estate, during his life, without rendering any account; because it cannot be presumed that he will be ever capable of taking care of himself or his affairs: And such a one is described a person that cannot number twenty, tell the days of the week, does not know his father or mother, his own age, &c. But these are mentioned as instances only; for ideot, or not, being a question of fact, must be tried by jury or inspection. Dyer 25. Moor 4 pl. 11. Bro. Ideots. F. N. B. 233.

But tho' an ideot must be so a nativitate, yet if by inquiry it be found, that A. is an ideot not having any lucid intervals per spatium ullo annorum, this is a sufficient ficient finding; for the inquisition having found the party an idiot, the adding spatium octo annorum is surplusage, and shall be rejected. 3 Mod. 43, 44. 2 Sboru. 171. Skin. 5, 177. S. C. Producers and Lady Frazier.

2. One made such by sickness, which my Lord Hale calls Dementia accidentalis vel adventitia, and which he again distinguishes into a total and a partial insanity, from its being more or less violent, is such a madness as excuseth in criminal cases; and tho' the party also in every thing else be intitled to the same protection with an idiot; and tho' his disorder seems permanent and fixed, yet as he had once reason and understanding, and as the law sees no impossibility but what he may be restored to them again, it makes the King only a trustee for the benefit of such a one, without giving him any profit or interest in his estate. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 30.

3. A lunatick; this is also Dementia accidentalis vel adventitia, and takes its name from the great influence which the moon has in all disorders of the brain; and tho' such a one hath intervals of reason, yet during his phrenzy he is intitled to the same indulgence as to his acts, and stands in the same degree with one whose disorder is fixed and permanent. 4 Co. 125. Co. Lit. 247. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 31.

4. One made mad by drunkenness, which is called Dementia effectata; and tho', as has been said, such a person be not intitled to the protection of the law, yet if a person by the unskilfulness of his physician, or by the contrivance of his enemies, eat or drink such a thing as causeth phrenzy, this puts him in the same condition with any other phrenzy, and equally excuseth him; also if by one or more such practices an habitual or fixed phrenzy be caused, tho' this madness was contracted by the vice and will of the party, yet this habitual and fixed phrenzy thereby caused puts the man in the same condition, as if the same was contracted involuntarily at first. Plow. 19. a. Crom. Justice 29. a. Co. Lit. 247. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 32.

But tho' this subject of madness may be spun out to a greater length, and branched into several kinds and degrees, yet it appears that the prevailing distinction herein in law is between idocy and lunacy; the first a fatuity a naturalitate, vel dementia naturalis, which excuseth the party as to his acts, and intitles the King to the receipt of the rents and profits of his estate during his life, without being obliged to render any account for the same; the other accidental or adventitious madness, which, whether permanent and fixed, or with lucid intervals, goes under the general name of lunacy, and equally excuseth with idocy, as to acts done during the phrenzy; but herein they differ, that in the latter case the King, as has been said, is only a trustee for the lunatick, and accountable to him, if he happens to be restored to his understanding, or to his representatives, if it happen otherwise. 3 New Abr. 80. 4 Co. 125. a.

II. How idiots and lunaticks are to be found such.

Every person of the age of discretion is in law presumed to be of sound mind and memory, unless the contrary appear; and this rule holds as well in civil as criminal cases. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 33.

The trial of idocy, madness or lunacy in civil cases, and in order to the commitment or custody of the person and his estate, which belongs to the King, either to his own use and benefit, as in case of idocy, or to the use of the party, in case of accidental madness or lunacy, is by writ or commission to the sheriff or escheator, or particular commissioners both by their own inspection and by inquisition to inquire, and return their inquisition into the Chancery; and thereupon a grant or commitment of the party and his estate ensues: And in case the party or his friends find themselves injured by the finding him a lunatick or idiot, a special writ may issue to bring the party before the Chancellor, or before the King, to be inspected; and if, on examination, it appear the party is no idiot, the whole commission and office shall be discharged without any traverse or monstrans de droit. 9 Co. 31. a. 4 Co. 126. And for this writ of idiotia inquirendo, see Fitz. N. B. 232, 3.

Also the party found an idiot or lunatick may traverse the inquisition, as may any other person having a title to the land, and therefore it is said, that by the statute 18 Hen. 6. c. 6. there ought to be a month's time between the return of the inquisition and the grant of the custody and lands, in order for the parties to come in and tender such traverse. Skin. 178.

If by inquisition a person be found a lunatick, and the custody granted to J. S. and the party thus found bring a scire facias to set aside the inquisition, the committee of the lunatick cannot plead nor join issue in such scire facias; for he can have no interest in the estate of the lunatick, being only in the nature of a bailiff to the King, and therefore his duty is to inform the King's Attorney General of the nature of the affair, who is the proper person to contest the matter in behalf of the King. 2 Sid. 124. Susan Thorn. v. Corwards.

As to idocy, lunacy or madness, which excuses in capital cases, it is not necessary that it was found by inquisition that the party was a madman, idiot, or lunatick, previous to the commitment of the fact; for if he was actually mad at the time of the fact committed, this shall excuse; and this regularly is to be tried by an inquest of office to be returned by the sheriff of the county wherein the court sits for the trial of the offence; and if it be found that he was actually mad, he shall be discharged without any other trial; but if they find that the party only feigns himself mad, and he refuses to answer or plead, he shall be dealt with as one who stands mute. 26 Aff. pl. 27. Bro. Cor. 101. 1 And. 107, 154. Sav. 50, 1 Harwk. P. C. 2. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 35.

Also in case a man in a frenzy happen by some oversight, or by means of the gaoler, to plead to his indictment, and is put upon his trial, and it appears to the court upon his trial that he is mad, the judge in discretion may discharge the jury of him, and remit him to gaol to be tried after the recovery of his understanding, especially in case any doubt appear upon the evidence touching the guilt of the fact, and this in favorem vite; and if there be no colour of evidence to prove him guilty, or if there be a pregnant evidence to prove his insanity at the time of the fact committed, then, upon the same favour of life and liberty, it is fit it should be proceeded in the trial, in order to his acquittal and enlargement. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 33, 36.

So if a person during his insanity commits a capital offence, and recovers his understanding, and being indicted and arraigned for the same, pleads Not guilty, he ought to be acquitted; for, by reason of his incapacity, he cannot act felleo animo. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 36.

III. Who hath an interest in, and jurisdiction over them, of appointing proper curators and committees, and their power and duty.

It seems to be agreed at this day, that the King as pater patriæ hath the protection of all his subjects, and that in a more peculiar manner he is to take care of all those who, by reason of their imbecillity and want of understanding, are incapable of taking care of themselves; this, in some books, is called a prerogative in the crown, and in others a regium munus, or duty which the King owes to his subjects in return to their subjection and allegiance to him. Stann. Prærog. cap. 9. fol. 33. 2 Inst. 14. 4 Co. 126. a. Dyer 25.

Lord Coke is of opinion, that by the Common law the King had no prerogative in the custody of an idiot's lands, but that the same belonged to the lords of whom the lands were holden, and that the same was given to the King by some act of parliament after the making of Magna Charta, and before the statute de prærogativa Regis 17 Ed. 1. cap. 9. In 4 Co. Bowerley's case, he says, that this prerogative was by the Common law, and that the statute de prærogativa Regis is only declarative thereof. 2 Inst. 14. 4 Co. 126.

But however that may be, now, by the statute de prærogativa Regis, or 17 Ed. 2. cap. 9. it is enacted, that the King shall have the custody of the lands of natural fools, taking the profits of them, without waste or destruction, struction, and shall find them their necessaries, of whose fees forever the lands be holden; and after the death of such ideots, he shall render it to the right heirs, so that such ideots shall not alien, nor their heirs be disinherited.

And by cap. 10. of the said statute, "The King shall provide when any (that before time hath had his wit and memory) happen to fail of his wit, and there are many per lucida intervalla, that their lands and tenements shall be safely kept without waste and destruction, and that they and their household shall live and be maintained competently with the profits of the same, and the residue, besides their sustentation, shall be kept to their use, to be delivered unto them when they come to right mind; so that such lands and tenements shall in no wise be aliened, and the King shall take nothing to his own use; and if the party die in such estate, then the residue shall be distributed for his soul, by the advice of the ordinary."

This distinction, established by this statute, between the King's interest in the lands of an ideot and lunatick, is laid down and admitted in all the books which speak of this matter; and on this foundation it hath been resolved, that the King may grant the custody of an ideot and his lands to a person, his heirs and executors, and that he had the same interest such a one as he had in his ward by the Common law. Bro. Idiot, 4, 5. Dyer 25. Moor 4. pl. 12. 1 And. 23. 4 Co. 127. Co. Lit. 247.

But though a lunatick is by commission to be under the care of the publick, and such committee is to be appointed for him by the Lord Chancellor, whose acts are subject to the controul and correction of the court of Chancery; yet such a one, whether so appointed, or whether he of his own head take upon him the care and management of the estate of a lunatick, is but in nature of a bailiff or trustee for him, and accountable to him, his executors or administrators. 4 Co. 127. 2 Chan. Ca. 239.

And as the committees of a lunatick have no interest, but an estate during pleasure, it has been ruled, that they cannot make leases, nor any ways incumber the lunatick's estate, without a special order from the court of Chancery, where the profits are not sufficient to maintain the lunatick. 1 Vern. 262. Foster v. Merchant.

Also where a lunatick, before he became such, made a mortgage of good part of his estate for 50*l.* and the committee transferred this mortgage, and took up 3 or 400*l.* more upon it; and it was held by my Lord Keeper, that the mortgage should stand but a security for the 50*l.* only. 1 Vern. 262, 263.

And though the King, as has been said, has the sole direction and management of ideots, &c. yet a private person may confine a friend who is mad, and bind and beat him, &c. in such a manner as is proper in such circumstances. 2 Roll. Abr. 546.

And also by the 12 Ann. cap. 23. reciting, that whereas there are sometimes in parishes, towns and places, persons of little or no estate, who by lunacy, or otherwise, are furiously mad, and dangerous to be permitted to go abroad, and by the laws in being the justices of peace and officers have not authority to restrain and confine them, it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful for any two justices of the peace, where such lunatick or mad person shall be found, by warrant under their hands and seals, directed to the constables, churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, town or place, or some of them, to cause such person to be apprehended and kept safely locked up in such place within the county where such parish or town shall lie, as such justices shall, under their hands and seals, direct and appoint; and (if such justices find it necessary) to be there chained, if the last legal settlement of such person shall be in any parish, town or place within such county; and if such settlement shall not be there, then such person shall be sent to the place of his or her last legal settlement, as vagrants by this act are directed to be sent, (whipping excepted) and shall be kept safely locked up or chained, as aforesaid; and the charges of keeping and maintaining such person during such restraint, which shall be for and during such time only, as such lunacy or madness shall continue,) shall be satisfied and paid by order of two or more justices of the peace for the county, town or place where such settlement shall lie, out of the estate of such person, if such person hath an estate to pay and satisfy the same, over and above what shall be sufficient to maintain his wife and children if he hath any; and if he hath not such an estate, then the charges of the keeping and maintaining such person, during such restraint, shall be satisfied and paid by such ways and means as the poor of such parish, town or place, are by the laws in being to be provided for."

"Provided, that this act, or any thing contained therein, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to restrain or abridge the prerogative of the Queen, or the power or authority of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Commissioners of the Great Seal for the time being, or of the Chancellor, or Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster for the time being, or of the Chamberlain or Vice-Chamberlain of the County Palatine of Chester for the time being, touching or concerning the premises."

IV. How far their want of understanding shall be said to be prejudicial to them in civil respects.

An ideot, or person non compos, may inherit, because the law, in compassion of their natural infirmities, preumes them capable of property. Co. Lit. 2, 8.

Also an ideot, or person of non-sane memory, may purchase, because it is intended for their benefit; and if after recovery of their memory they agree thereto, they cannot avoid it; but if they die during their lunacy, their heirs may avoid it, for they shall not be subject to the contracts of persons who want capacity to contract; so if after their memory recovered, the lunatick, or person non compos, die without agreement to the purchase, their heirs may avoid it. Co. Lit. 2. 2 Vent. 203.

If an ideot or lunatick marry, and die, his wife shall be endowed; for this works no forfeiture at all, and the King has only the custody of the inheritance in one case, and the power of providing for him and his family in the other; but in both cases the freehold and inheritance is in the ideot or lunatick; and therefore if lands descend to an ideot or lunatick after marriage, and the King, on office found, takes those lands into his custody, or grants them over to another, as committee, in the usual manner; yet this seems no reason why the husband should not be tenant by the curtesy, or the wife endowed, since their title does not begin to any purpose till the death of the husband or wife, when the King's title is at an end. Co. Lit. 31. a. 4 Co. 124, 125. Yet see Plow. 263. b. 1 Vern. 10.

A lunatick shall be tenant by the curtesy, and shall have dower; so tho' a woman, being a lunatick, kill her husband, or any other, yet she shall be endowed, because this cannot be felony in her, who was deprived of her understanding by the act of God. Perk. 365.

If a person non compos be disseised, and a descent cast, this, it is said, takes away his entry, but not the entry of the heir; for regularly the non compos in this case cannot alledge the disability in himself, because he cannot be supposed conscious of it, nor is he allowed ever, at any time, to alledge it, for when he is once non compos, there is no certain time when he can be adjudged to recover that disability, unless where he is legally committed, and then the acts during his lunacy will be set aside and discharged, and afterwards the commission superdeded; for in no other way can the non compos be legally restored to his right, and to his capacity of acting. Lit. sect. 405. Co. Lit. 247.

A person non compos, being lord of a copyhold manor, may make grants of copyhold estates, for such estates do not take their perfection from any power or interest in the lord, but from the custom of the manor, by which they have been demised and demisable time out of mind. 4 Co. 23. b. Co. Copyholder 79, 107.

Ideots and lunaticks are both by the Civil law, and likewise by the Common law, incapable of being executors or administrators; for these disabilities render them not only incapable of executing the trust reposed in them, but also by their insanity, and want of understanding, they they are incapable of determining whether they will take upon them the execution of the trust or not. Godolph. Orph. Leg. 86.

Therefore it hath been agreed, that if an executor become non compos, that the spiritual court may, (on account of this natural disability,) commit administration to another. 1 Salk. 36.

An idiot or person non compos, being robbed, shall be bound by a sale of his goods in a market overt. 2 Inst. 713. Vide last clause, in Div. V.

V. How far the want of understanding will excuse in criminal cases.

It is laid down as a general rule, that idiots and lunatics, being by reason of their natural disabilities incapable of judging between good and evil, are punishable by no criminal prosecution whatsoever. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2.

And therefore a person, who loses his memory by sickness, infirmity, or accident, and kills himself, is no felo de se. 3 Inst. 54.

So if a man give himself a mortal stroke while he is non compos, and recovers his understanding, and then dies, he is not felo de se; for tho' the death compleat the homicide, the act must be that which makes the offence. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 412.

But it is not every melancholy or hypochondriacal distemper that denominates a man non compos, for there are few who commit this offence, but are under such infirmities; but it must be such an alienation of mind that renders them to be madmen, or frantick, or destitute of the use of reason. ibid.

And as a person non compos cannot be a felo de se by killing himself; so neither can he be guilty of homicide in killing another, nor of petit treason; also if one who is committed for a capital offence become non compos before conviction, he shall not be arraigned; and if after conviction, he shall not be executed. ib. 30. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2.

It seems to have been anciently holden, (in respect of that high regard which the law has for the safety of the King's person,) that a madman might be punished as a traitor for killing, or offering to kill the King; but this is now contradicted by better and later opinions. Fitz. Coron. 351. Regist. 309. 4 Co. 124. b. 1 Roll. Rep. 324.

The great difficulty in these cases is, to determine where a person shall be said to be so far deprived of his sense and memory, as not to have any of his actions imputed to him; or where, notwithstanding some defects of this kind, he still appears to have so much reason and understanding as will make him accountable for his actions, which Lord Hale distinguishes between, and calls by the name of Total and partial insanity; and tho' it be difficult to define the indivisible line that divides perfect and partial insanity, yet, says he, it must rest upon circumstances, duly to be weighed and considered both by the judge and jury, lest on the one side there be a kind of inhumanity towards the defects of human nature, or on the other side too great an indulgence given to great crimes; and the best measure he can think of is this: Such a person, as labouring under melancholy distempers, hath yet ordinarily as great understanding as a child of fourteen years commonly hath, is such a person as may be guilty of treason or felony. 1 Hale Hist. P. C. 30.

It hath been already observed, that he who is guilty of any crime whatsoever thro' his voluntary drunkenness shall be punished for it as much as if he had been sober. Vide supra.

Also he who incites a madman to do a murder, or other crime, is a principal offender, and as much punishable as if he had done it himself. Keilw. 53. Dalt. cap. 95. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2.

And here we must observe a difference the law make between civil suits that are terminated in compensationem damne illati, and criminal suits or prosecutions, that are ad pœnam & in vindictam criminis commissi; and therefore it is clearly agreed, that if one who wants discretion commits a trespass against the person or possession of another, he shall be compelled in a civil action to give satisfaction for the damage. 2 Roll. Abr. 547. Hob. 134. Co. Lit. 247. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2. 1 Hal. Hist. 15, 16, 38.

VI. How far their acts are good, void, or voidable.

We must first distinguish between acts done by idiots and lunatics in pais, and in a court of record; that as to those solemnly acknowledged in a court of record, as fines and recoveries, and the uses declared on them, they are good, and can neither be avoided by themselves nor their representatives; for it is to be presumed, that had they been under these disabilities, the judges would not have admitted them to make these acknowledgments. 4 Co. 124. 2 And. 145. Co. Lit. 247.

Therefore if a person non compos acknowledges a fine, it shall stand against him and his heirs, for tho' the judges ought not to admit of a fine from a madman under that disability, yet when it is once received, it shall never be reversed, because the record and judgment of the court being the highest evidence that can be, the law presumes the conuzor at that time capable of contracting; and therefore the credit of it is not to be contested, nor the record avoided by any averment against the truth of it. 4 Co. 124. 2 Inst. 483. Bro. tit. Fines 75. Co. Lit. 247.

So in case of a fine levied by an idiot, it shall stand against him and his heirs; for no averment of ideocy can vacate the fine; nor will an office, finding him an idiot a natiuitate, be sufficient to reverse the fine, for that were to lessen the credit of judgments in courts of record, by trying them by other rules than themselves. 2 And. 193. 4 Co. 124.

As to acts done by them in pais, they are distinguished into void and voidable, tho' as to themselves, they are regularly unavoidable, because no man is allowed to disable himself, for the insecurity that may arise in contracts from counterfeited madness and folly; besides, if the excuse were real, it would be repugnant that the party should know or remember what he did; but their heirs and executors may avoid such acts in pais, by pleading the disability; because if they can prove it, it must be presumed real, since nobody can be thought to counterfeit it, when he can expect no benefit from it himself. 4 Co. 124-5. Beverley's case. Bro. tit. Fait 62. F. N. B. 202. Cro. Eliz. 398.

If an idiot or lunatick enter into recognizance, or acknowledge a statute, neither they themselves, nor their heirs nor executors can avoid them; for these are securities of a higher nature than specialties and obligations, which yet they themselves cannot avoid, and being matters of record, and equivalent to judgments of the superior courts, neither they themselves, their heirs nor executors, can avoid them. 4 Co. 124. a. 10 Co. 42. b. 2 Inst. 493. Bro. Fait lur. 14.

If parceners of non-sane memory make partition, unless it be equal, it shall only bind the parties themselves, but not their issue: And the reason it binds the parties themselves is the same that all other contracts bind them, viz. because no man is admitted to stultify himself: And the reason their issue may avoid such partition is the same likewise for which they may avoid all other contracts made by such ancestors during their insanity, viz. because they may be admitted to shew the incapacity of their ancestors, and so avoid all acts done by them during that time, Co. Lit. 166. a.

Altho', as hath been observed, according to the strict rules of law no person is allowed to stultify himself, yet it seems that even at law, the contracts of idiots and lunatics, after office found, and the party legally committed, are void, and it must be at the peril of him who deals with such a one; and that if afterwards the commission of lunacy be superseded or discharged, the non compos shall be restored to his legal right: But this, it seems, must be at the suit and application of his committee. 4 Co. 125.

Also there are frequent instances in equity, where not only idiots and lunatics, who come within the protection of the law, but also persons of weak understandings have been relieved, when they appeared to have been imposed upon in their dealings and unreasonable purchases, and securities obtained from them set aside in their favour. But for this see 1 Chan. Ca. 113, 153. 1 Vern. 155. 2 Vern. 189, 414, 678. and see tit. Agreements, also vide Abr. Eq. 279. Ridler v. Ridler.

Idiots and lunatics, during their lunacy, are incapable of making any will or testament; as are also persons grown childish by reason of extreme old age; so one actually drunk, if he be so drunk as to have lost the use of his reason: But tho' a person who wants understanding cannot make a will, yet the rule herein is not to be taken from his not being able to measure an ell of cloth, tell twenty, or the like; but whether he has sense enough to dispose of his estate with understanding. Swinb. 71. Godolph. Orph. Leg. 25.

But every person making a will is presumed to be of sound understanding, until the contrary be proved; so that the onus probandi lies on the other side: If the testator used to have fits and lucid intervals, and it cannot appear whether the will be made in the lucid intervals, if there be no argument of folly in the will; nay, tho' the testator had no lucid intervals, yet if it can be proved that he was mad at the time of making the will, if the will be a sensible, orderly will, it shall stand; (sed qu. if contested) but the least word of folly in such a will, overthrows it: on the other hand, if one be a very idiot and make a good sensible will, yet the will shall not stand good. Swinb. 72. Godolph. 25. Dyer 203. 8 Co. 147.

If a person of sound memory makes his will, and afterwards becomes non compos, this is no revocation of the will; yet a bill will not lie in the life-time of the non compos, to establish the testimony of the witness in perpetuum rei memoriam to such a will. Godolph. 26. 4 Co. 126. 1 Vern. 105.

By the stat. 4 Geo. 2. cap. 10. it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for any person being idiot, lunatick or non compos mentis, or for the committee of such person in his, her or their name, by the direction of the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, or the Lord Keeper, or Commissioners of the Great Seal for the time being, signified by an order made upon hearing all parties concerned, on the petition of the person for whom such person being idiot, lunatick or non compos mentis, shall be seized or possessed in trust, or of the mortgagor, or of the person intitled to the monies secured by or upon any lands, &c. whereof any such person being idiot, lunatick or non compos mentis, is or are, or shall be seized or possessed by way of mortgage, or of the person intitled to the redemption, to convey and assure any such lands, tenements or hereditaments in such manner as the Lord Chancellor, &c. shall by such order so to be obtained direct to any other person, such conveyance so to be had and made, shall be as good and effectual in law, to all intents and purposes, as if the said person being idiot, lunatick, or non compos mentis, was at the time of making such conveyance of sane mind, memory and understanding, and not idiot, lunatick or non compos mentis, or had by him, her or themselves executed the same."

And it is further enacted, That all and every such person, being idiot, &c. and only trustee or mortgagee as aforesaid, or the committee of such person being idiot, lunatick or non compos mentis, and only such trustee or mortgagee as aforesaid, shall and may be impowered and compelled, by such order so as aforesaid to be obtained, to make such conveyance or assurance as aforesaid, in like manner as trustees or mortgagees of sane memory are compellable to convey, surrender or assign their trust-estate or mortgages.

VII. How they are to sue and defend.

When an idiot doth sue or defend he shall not appear by guardian, prochein amy or attorney, but he must be ever in proper person. Co. Lit. 135. b. F. N. B. 27. The statute of Westm. 2. cap. 15. extends not to an idiot. 2 Inst. 390.

But otherwise of him who becomes non compos mentis; for he shall appear by guardian, if within age, or by attorney if of full age. 4 Co. 124. Palmer 529. Et vid. 2 Saund. 335

If a trespass be committed in the lands of a lunatick who is legally committed, the committee cannot bring an action of trespass; but this must be brought in the name of the lunatick. 2 Sid. 125.

If a lunatick be sued, he must have a committee assigned to him to defend the suit. 1 Vern. 106.

Idiotia inquirendo vel Examinando, Is a writ to examine whether a person be an idiot. The King having the protection of his subjects, and the government of their lands who are naturally defective in their understanding; for this purpose the writ de idiota inquirendo, &c. is issued, directed to the sheriff to call before him the party suspected of idioty, and to examine him and inquire by a jury of twelve men, who are to be on their oaths, whether the party is an idiot, or not, viz. If he be of sufficient understanding and discretion to manage his estate, or not so; and if from his birth he hath been a perfect idiot, by reason whereof the custody of his lands and tenements ought to belong to the King; or if by any misfortune, he hath fallen into such infirmity, &c. and by what, &c. and of his age, and lands, and who holds them, &c. and when the inquisition is taken, the sheriff is to certify it into the Chancery: And the party may be afterwards examined by the Lord Chancellor, &c. F. N. B. 232. Reg. Orig. 267. 9 Rep. 31.

Ides, (Idus) With the ancient Romans, were eight days in every month, so called; being the eight days immediately after the Nones. In the months of March, May, July and October, these eight days begin at the eighth day of the month, and continue to the fifteenth day: In other months they begin at the sixth day, and last to the thirteenth. But it is observable, that only the last day is called Ides, the first of these days is the eighth Ides, the second day the seventh, the third the sixth, i. e. the eighth, seventh, or sixth day before the Ides; and so it is of the rest of the days; wherefore when we speak of the Ides of any month in general, it is to be taken for the fifteenth or thirteenth of the month mentioned. See Calends.

Idleness. Idle and disorderly persons liable to be imprisoned in the house of correction for one month, per 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. which vide, and Black. Com. 4 V. 169, 170.

Idoneum se facere, idoneare se, To purge himself by oath of a crime of which he is accused. Leg. H. 1. cap. 15. where the word idoneus is taken for innocent. But he is said in our law to be idoneus homo, who hath these three things, honesty, knowledge, and ability; and if an officer, &c. be not idoneus he may be discharged. 8 Rep. 41. See Presentation.

Jejunum, (Purgatio per jejunium.) 'Tis mentioned in Leg. Canuti, cap. 7. apud Brompton, viz. Cum sociis se purget vel jejunum ineat, si opus est, Et applicetur ad cornu, Et fiat voluntas Dei.

Jeman, Sometimes used for yeomen. Cowell.

Jesfalle, Is compounded of the Fr. Jay faille, i. e. Ego lapsus sum, and signifies an oversight in pleading or other law proceedings. It is when the parties to any suit have gone so far that they have joined issue, which shall be tried, or is tried by a jury or inquest, and this pleading or issue is so badly pleaded or joined, that it will be error if they proceed; then some of the parties may by their counsel shew it to the court, as well after verdict given and before judgment, as before the jury are charged; the shewing of which defects by the counsel was often, when the jury came into court to try the issue, by saying, This inquest ye ought not to take; and if after verdict, by saying, To judgment you ought not to go, &c. Therefore for avoiding the frequent delays in suits by such suggestions, several statutes have been made. Terms de Ley.

In an assumpsit, the defendant pleads Not guilty, and thereupon issue is joined, and found for the plaintiff; he shall have judgment, tho' it is an improper issue in this action; for as there is a deceit alledged, Not guilty is an answer thereto, and it is but an issue misjoined, which is aided by statute. Cro. Eliz. 407. If in debt upon a single bill, the defendant pleads payment, without an acquittance, and issue is joined and found for the plaintiff; tho' the payment without acquittance is no plea to a single bill, he shall have judgment, because the issue was joined upon an affirmative and a negative, and a verdict for the plaintiff. Mich. 37 & 38 Eliz. 5 Rep. 43.

Of the statutes of jeofails.

An ill plea and issue may be aided by the statute of jeofails, after a verdict: and if an issue joined be uncertain and confused, a verdict will help it. Cro. Car. 316. Hob. 113. The statutes likewise help when there is no original; and where there is no bill upon the file, it is aided after verdict by statute: but when there is an original, which is ill, that is not aided. Cro. Jac. 185, 480. Cro. Car. 282. The statute of jeofails, 16 & 17 Car. 2. helps a mis-trial in a proper county; but not where the county is mistaken. 1 Mod. 24. And these are the statutes of jeofails, which help errors and defects by mis-pleading in records, process, mis-prisons of clerks, &c. By 32 H. 8. c. 30. it is enacted, "That if the jury have once passed upon the issue, though afterwards there be found a jeofaile in the proceedings, yet judgment shall be given according to the verdict." The 18 Eliz. c. 14. ordains, that after verdict given in any court of record, there shall be no stay of judgment, or reversal for want of form in a writ, count, plaint, &c. or for want of any writ original or judicial; or by reason of insufficient returns of sheriffs, &c. But this is not to extend to appeals of felony, indictments, &c. By the 21 J. c. 1. c. 13. "if a verdict shall be given in any court of record, the judgment shall not be stayed or reversed for variance in form between the original writ or bill and the declaration, &c. or for want of averment of the party's being living, so as the person is proved to be in life; or for that the venire facias is in part mis-awarded; for mis-nomer of jurors, if proved to be the persons returned; want of return of writs, so as a panel of jurors be returned and annexed to the writs; or for that the return officer's name is not set to the return, if proof can be made that the writ was returned by such officer, &c."

The stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. enacts, that judgment shall not be stayed or reversed after verdict in the courts of record at Westminster, &c. for default in form; or for that there are not pledges to prosecute upon the return of the original writ, or because the name of the sheriff is not returned upon it; for default of alledging the bringing into court of any bond, bill or deed, or of alledging or bringing in letters testamentary, or of administration; or for the omission of vi & armis, or contra pacem; mistaking the Christian name or surname of either party, or the sum of money, day, month or year, &c. in any declaration or pleading, being rightly named in any record, &c. preceding; nor for want of the averment of hoc paratus est verificare, or for not alledging prom patet per recordum; for that there is no right venire, if the cause was tried by a jury of the proper county or place; nor any judgment after verdict, by confession, cognovit actionem, &c. shall be reversed for want of misericordia or capitatur, or by reason that either of them are entered, the one for the other, &c. But all such defects, not being against the right of the matter of the suit, or whereby the issue or trial are altered, shall be amended by the judges: tho' not in suits of appeal of felony, indictments, informations on penal statutes, which are excepted out of the act. The 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 4. made this act perpetual.

By 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. all the statutes of jeofails shall extend to judgments entered by confession, nil dicit, or non sum informatus in any court of record; and no such judgment shall be reversed, nor any judgment or writ of inquiry of damages thereon shall be stayed for any defect which would have been aided by those statutes, if a verdict had been given; so as there be an original writ filed, &c. The 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. ordains, that after verdict given, judgment shall not be stayed or reversed for defect in form or substance, in any bill or writ, or for variance therein, from the declaration or any other proceedings See Error. And Black. Com. 3 V. 406. 4 V. 369, 432. Note, An action for a false return of a member of parliament on the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. for double damages is remedial, tho' founded on a law that is penal, so within the statutes of jeofails. Wilf. Rep. par. 1. fo. 125. See many cases where a bad original is considered as none, and aided by the statutes of jeofails; so a bad plaint in an inferior court is aided after verdict, and considered as none, if it varies from the declaration. Annals 367.

Jersey and Guernsey, Islands, laws relating to. Vide Iste. And Black. Com. 1 V. 106.

Jesse, A large brass candlestick, with many sconces, hanging down in the middle of a church or choir; which invention was first called jesse, from the similitude of the branches of those of the Arbor Jesse: and this useful ornament of churches was first brought over into this kingdom by Hugh de Flory, Abbot of St. Austin's in Canterbury, about the year 1100. Chron. Will. Thorn. 1796.

Jetsam, Jetson, and Jotson; (from the French jetter, ejicere,) Is any thing thrown out of a ship, being in the danger of wreck, and by the waves driven to the shore. See Flotsam, and 5 Co. Rep. 103. And Black. Com. 1 V. 292. 3 V. 106.

Jesuits, The society of Jesuits was instituted by Ignatio Loyola, a Biscayan gentleman.—The most political and best regulated of all the monastic orders, and from which mankind have derived more advantages, and received greater hurt, than from any other of these religious fraternities. Robert. Hist. Emp. Char. V. 2 V. 134, 135, &c. Born in the King's dominions and ordained by the pretended jurisdiction of Rome, remaining in England, or coming from beyond sea into this kingdom, and not submitting to some bishop or justice of peace within three days, and taking the oaths, are guilty of high treason; and receivers, aiders and harbourers of them, are guilty of felony. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 2. Persons knowing priests, Jesuits, &c. and not discovering them to a justice of peace, shall be fined and imprisoned. 22 Car. 2. And see 27 El. c. 2.

Jews, (Judei) In former times the Jews and all their goods were at the disposal of the chief lord where they lived; who had an absolute property in them; and they might not remove to another Lord without his leave: and we read that King Henry 3. sold the Jews for a certain term of years to Earl Richard his brother. They were distinguished from the Christians in their lives, and at their deaths; for they wore a badge on their outward garments, in the shape of a table, and were fined if they went abroad without such badges, and they were never buried within the walls of any city, but without the same, and anciently not permitted to burial in the country. Matt. Paris. 521, 606, &c. There were particular judges and laws by which their causes and contracts were decided, and there was a court of justice assigned for the Jews. 4 Inst. 254. A Jew may be witness by our laws, being sworn on the Old Testament. But by our ancient books, Jews, Hereticks, &c. are adjudged out of the statutes allowing benefit of clergy. 2 Haruk. P. C. 338. But this doctrine we apprehend is now exploded.

The 53 Hen. 3. is called provisiones de judaismo; and by the statute 18 Ed. 1. the King had a fifteenth granted him pro expulsione Judaeorum. In the 16th year of Edw. 1. all the Jews in England were imprisoned; but they redeemed themselves for a vast sum of money: notwithstanding which anno 19. of that King, he banished them all. Stow's Surv. Lond. b. 3. p. 54. And they remained in banishment 364 years; till Oliver Cromwell restored them to their trade and worship here. See stat. 1 Ann. c. 30. concerning Jewish parents refusing maintenance to a protestant child; and 10 Geo. 1. c. 4. by which Jews may take the oaths to the government, &c. Stat. anno 26 Geo 2. c. 26. an act was made to permit persons professing the Jewish religion, to be naturalized by parliament; but the very next year, the legislature thought proper to repeal it. 27 Geo. 2. c. 1.

Alterations of the abjuration oath in favour of Jews, to be naturalized in America, 13 Geo. 2. c. 7. sect. 3.

A plaintiff had leave given him by the court to alter the Vifue from London to Middlesex, because all the sittings in London were on a Saturday, and his witness was a Jew, and would not appear that day. 2 Mod. 271. Mich. 29 Car. 2. C. B. in case of Barker v. Warren.

A Jew brought an action, and the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff is a Jew, and that all Jews are perpetual enemies regis & religionis; judgment fi actio. But per cur. A Jew may recover as well as a villain, and the plea is but in disability so long as the King shall prohibit them to trade; and judgment for the plaintiff. L. P. R. 4. cites Mich. 36 Car. 2. B. R.

A Jew was ordered to swear his answer upon the Pentateuch, and that the plaintiff's clerk should be present to see him sworn. Mich. 1684. Vern. R. 263. Anon.

The Jews are here by an implied licence, but on a proclamation of banishment, 'tis like a determination of let- lers of safe conduct to an alien enemy, that was here by virtue of such letters before, &c. Arg. 2 Show. 371. in case of the East-India Company v. Sands.

Vide Judaism, and Wm's Rep. 524. Hill. 1718. Vincent v. Fernandez. And Black. Com. 1 V. 375, 449. 4 V. 365.

Jewels. All diamonds and other jewels may be im- ported or exported without paying any custom duty, &c. But not to make void duties granted the East-India com- pany, for jewels brought from places in their limits. Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 7. See Jocalia.

Msungia, The finest white bread, formerly called cocked bread. Corwell.

Ignis Judicium, Purgation by fire, or the old judicial fiery trial. Id. See Ordeal.

Ignoramus, (i. e. We are ignorant) Is used by the grand jury impanelled on the inquisition of criminal causes when they reject the evidence as too weak or defective to make good the presentment against a person so as to put him on the trial, in which case they write this word on the bill of indictment; the effect whereof is, that all farther inquiry and proceedings against that party, for that fault wherewith he is charged, is thereby stopped, and he is delivered without further answer. 3 Inst. 30. i. e. for that time. For, if better evidence can be procured, (or partiality in the jury is suspected) a new bill of in- dictment may be preferred, at another sessions, &c.

Ignorance, (Ignorantia) Which is want of knowledge of the law, shall not excuse any man from the penalty of it. Every person is bound at his peril to take notice what the law of the realm is; and ignorance of it, though it be invincible, where a man affirms that he hath done all that in him lies to know the law, will not excuse him. Doct. & Stud. 1. 46. (This may be considered as an argument in favour of the position, that jurors are judges of the law, as well as of the fact.) And an infant of the age of discretion shall be punished for crimes, though he be ignorant of the law; but infants of tender age, have ignorance by nature to excuse them; so persons non compos have ignorance by the hand of God. Stud. Compan. 83, 84. Though ignorance of the law excuseth not, ignorance of the fact doth: as if a person buy a horse or other thing in open market, of one that had no property therein, and not knowing but he had right; in that case he hath good title, and the ignorance shall excuse him. Doct. & Stud. 309. But if the party bought the horse out of the market; or knew the seller had no right, the buying in open mar- ket, would not have excused. Ibid. 5 Rep. 83. Also where a man is to enter into land, or seize goods, &c. he must see that what he does be rightly done, or his igno- rance shall be no excuse. Wood's Inst. 608. See Black. Com. 4 V. 27.

Ikenild-Street, Is one of the four famous ways that the Romans made in England, called Stratum Icenorum, because it took beginning ab Icenis, which were the people that inhabited Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridgeshire. Camb. Brit. f. 343. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 12. See Watling- Street.

Islet, By contraction ight, signifies a little island. Blount.
